Illicitum Collegium (an illegal corporation).

Illocable, incapable of being placed out or hired.—Bailey.

Illud, quod aliàs licitum non est, necessitas facit licitum; et necessitas inducit privilegium quoad jura privata. Bac. Max.—(That which is otherwise not permitted, necessity permits; and necessity makes a privilege as to private rights.)

Illud, quod alteri unitur, extinguitur, neque amplius per se vacare licet. Godolph Rep.

Can. 169.—(That which is united to another is extinguished, nor can it be any more independent.)

Illusory Appointment Act, 1 Wm. IV. c. 46. This statute enacts that no appointment made after its passing (July 16, 1830), in exercise of a power to appoint property real or personal among several objects, shall be invalid, or impeached in Equity on the ground that an unsubstantial, illusory, or nominal share only was thereby appointed, or left unappointed, to devolve upon any one or more of the objects of such power; but that the appointment shall be valid in Equity as at Law. See, too, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 37.

Illustrious, the prefix to the title of a prince of the blood.

Iman, Imam, or Imaum, a Mohammedan prince having supreme spiritual as well as temporal power; a regular priest of the mosque.

Imbargo. See EMBARGO.

Imbasing of money, mixing the species with an alloy below the standard of sterling.—1 Hale's P. C. 102.

Imbezzle. See EMBEZZLE.

Imbracery. See EMBRACERY.

Imbrocus, a brook, gutter, or water-passage.—Corvel.

Immaterial averment, an unnecessary statement. See Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 193. And see IMPERTINENCE.

Immaterial issue, an issue upon a point or ground which will not decide the action.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 95—98, 127. See ISSUE.

Immediate execution. See EXECUTION.

Immemorial usage, a practice which has existed time out of mind; custom; prescription. See MEMORY, TIME OF LEGAL.

Immoral contracts, contracts founded upon considerations contra bonos mores, are void. Ex turpi contractu non oritur actio. But where a contract, founded upon an immoral consideration, has been executed, neither Law nor Equity will interfere to set it aside, if both parties have been equally in fault, for in pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis.

Yet, a sealed contract, made in consideration of past seduction or cohabitation, can be enforced; not because it is binding in honour and conscience, for such a reason is not sufficient, but because a specialty imports a consideration, which, unless illegal, both parties are estopped from denying. A covenant to pay money in consideration of future cohabitation is void, though under seal.—1 Vern. 483; 2 Wils. 339.

Immoveable, not to be forced from its place, the characteristic of things real or land.

Immunity, exemption.

Impalare, to put in a pound.—Du Cange.

Impanel, or Impannel, the writing and entering of the names of a jury in a parchment schedule by the sheriff.

Impargamentum, the right of impounding the cattle.

Imparl, to have license to settle a litigation amicably, to obtain delay for adjustment.

Imparlance [fr. licentia loquendi, Lat.], time to plead; also when a Court gives a party leave to answer or plead at another time, without the assent of the other party. Abolished by r. 31 T. T. 1853. And see 2 Wm. IV. c. 39.

Imparsonnee, a clergyman inducted into a benefice. See INDUCTION.

Impatronization, the act of putting into full possession of a benefice.

Impeachment, a prosecution by the House of Commons before the House of Lords of a commoner for treason, or other high crimes and misdemeanours, or of a peer for any crime.

Impeachment by the House of Commons is a proceeding of great importance, involving the exercise of the highest judicial powers of parliament; and though in modern times it has rarely been resorted to, in former periods of our history it was of frequent occurrence. The last memorable cases are those of Warren Hastings, in 1788, and Lord Melville, in 1805.

As to the mode of proceeding see May's Parliamentary Practice.

Impeachment of waste. See ABSQUE IMPETITIONE VASTI.

Impechiare, to impeach, to accuse, or prosecute for felony or treason.

Impediatus. See EXPEDITATE.

Impediens, a defendant or deforciant.

Impedimentum dirimens, 'cause or impediment' to marriage, which is not removed by the actual solemnization of the rite, but continues in force and makes the marriage null and void (opposed to impedimentum impediens). See Sanchez de matrimonio, Lib. 7, Disputatio, 6.

Imperfect obligations, moral duties, such as charity, gratitude, etc., which cannot be enforced by law.

Imperfect trust, an executory trust, which see; and see EXECUTED TRUST.

Imperial. Pertaining to the empire or government; e.g., a matter is said to be of imperial, as distinguished from local, concern.

Imperii majestas est tutelæ salus. Co. Litt. 64.—(The majesty of the empire is the safety of its protection.)

Imperitia culpe annumeratur. Jur. Civ.—(Want of skill is reckoned as a fault.)

Imperitia est maxima mechanicorum poena.

11 Co. 54.—(Unskilfulness is the greatest fault of mechanics.)

Imperium, right to command, an attribute of executive power.

Impersonalitas non concludit nec ligat. Co. Litt. 352 b.—(Impersonality neither concludes nor binds.)

Impertinence, where the pleadings in Chancery were encumbered with long recitals, or with lengthy, unnecessary, and immaterial digressions, as where a deed was stated, which was not prayed to be set forth, in hæc verba. The practice of excepting to bills, answers, etc., for impertinence was some time ago abolished. But the Court might, upon application, direct the costs occasioned by any impertinent matter in any proceeding to be paid by the party introducing it.—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 17. The application to be made for the costs of any impertinent matter introduced into any bill, answer, or other proceeding required to be made at the time when the Court disposed of the costs of the cause or matter, and not at any other time.—Consol. Ord. 1860, xl. r. 11. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 2, it is provided that the statements which are substituted for the former pleadings at Law and in Equity, shall be as brief as the nature of the case will admit, and that the Court in adjusting the costs of the action shall inquire at the instance of any party into any unnecessary prolixity, and order the costs occasioned by such prolixity to be borne by the party chargeable with the same.—See PLEADING.

Impescatus, impeached or accused.—Jacob.

Impetitus. See IMPEACHMENT.

Impetration, acquiring anything by request and prayer.—Cowel. See 38 Eliz.

Impier, umpire, which see.

Impierment, impairing or prejudicing.—Jacob.

Impignoration, the act of pawning or putting to pledge.

Implead, to sue or prosecute.

Implicata [Ital.]. In order to avoid the risk of making fruitless voyages, merchants have been in the habit of receiving small adventures, on freight at so much per cent., to which they are entitled at all events, even if the adventure be lost.—Merc. Law.

Implication, a necessary or possible inference, of something not directly declared.

Implied condition. See CONDITION.

Implied contract. See CONTRACT.

Implied trusts. An implied trust arises generally from an equitable construction put upon the facts, conduct, or situation of parties.

Implied trusts have been distinguished into two classes: (1) those depending upon the presumed intent of the parties, as where property is delivered by one to another to be handed over to a third person, the receiver holds it upon an implied trust in favour of such third person; (2) those not depending upon such intention, but arising by operation of law, in cases of fraud, or notice of an adverse equity.

A trust of this kind arises wherever the estate is converted by the trustee from one species of property into another; for if the property, in its original form, were invested with a trust, the cestui que trust's interests cannot be affected by any change of that form; and whether the conversion be in pursuance or in breach of the trustee's duty, is immaterial; for an abuse of trust cannot confer any right on the party abusing it, or on those who claim in privity with him.

Implied use. See RESULTING USE.

Implied warranty. See WARRANTY.

Importation, the bringing goods and merchandize into this country from other nations.

Imports, goods or produce brought into a country from abroad.

Imposition, tax, contribution.

Impossibility. If a man contract to do a thing which is absolutely impossible, such contract will not bind him; but where the contract is to do a thing which is possible in itself, but which becomes impossible, will be liable for the breach. See Addison or Chitty on Contracts.

Impossibilium nulla obligatio est. D. 50, 17, 185.—(There is no obligation to do impossible things.) See IMPOSSIBILITY.

Impost [fr. impôt, Fr.; impositum, Lat.], any tax or tribute imposed by authority; particularly a tax or duty laid by Government on goods imported.

Impotence, or Impotency, physical inability of a man or woman to perform the act of sexual intercourse. A marriage is void if, at the time of the celebration, either of the parties to it is incurably impotent, and may be declared void by a decree in a suit of nullity of marriage. See NULLITY OF MARRIAGE.

Impotentiam, propter, Property, a qualified property, which may subsist in animals feræ nature, on account of their inability, as where hawks, herons, or other birds, build in a person's trees, or coney, etc., make their nests or burrows in a person's land, and have young there, such person has a qualified property in them till they can fly or run away, and then such property expires.—2 Steph. Com., bk. ii., ch. i.

Impound (v. a.), to place a suspected document in the custody of the law, when it is produced at a trial. By the 'Bills of Exchange Act, 1855' (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67), s. 4, a judge may order a bill or note sought to be proceeded upon, to be forthwith impounded. Also see next Title.

Impounding cattle, etc., placing cattle, etc., after they have been distrained, in a safe place for custody.—11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 10; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, s. 5.

Imprescriptible rights, such as a person may use or not, at pleasure, since they cannot be lost to him by the claims of another founded on prescription.

Impression. See PRIME IMPRESSIONIS.

Impressing men, compelling persons to serve in the navy. This practice is allowed at common law (see ex parte Fox, 5 T. R. 277), and was extensively followed until 1815, when it began to be gradually abandoned for the recruiting by voluntary enlistment, which has now entirely displaced it. The practice is still clearly legal, and is recognised impliedly by 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 24, which, however, provides that no person shall be detained in the royal navy, against his consent, for a longer period than five years, except in case of emergency. See also 16 & 17 Vict. c. 69, which, perhaps, has the effect of limiting the liability to serve to seafaring men.

Imprest money, money paid on enlisting soldiers or sailors.

Impretialibilis, invaluable.—Mat. Paris.

Imprimatur, a license to print or publish.

Imprimery, a print or impression.—Jacob.

Imprimis (in the first place).

Imprisii, adherents or accomplices.—M. Par. 127.

Imprisonment, the restraint of a person's liberty under the custody of another. It extends to confinement not only in a gaol, but in a house, or stocks, or to holding a man in the street, etc.; for in all these cases the person so restrained is said to be a prisoner, so long as he has not his liberty freely to go about his business, as at other times.—Co. Litt. 253. By the Debtors' Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, imprisonment for 'making default in payment of a sum of money,' has been abolished except in certain cases, of which the more important are, default in payment of a penalty, not in respect of contract, default in payment of sums recoverable before a justice of the peace, and default by trustees or solicitors after order to pay; but in such cases the duration of imprisonment is not to exceed one year. The act, however, gives any court a power of committal on default of payment when the party has the means of paying, and, if the court be an inferior one, when the debt does not exceed 50*l.*, but no such committal is to operate as a satisfaction or extinguishment of the debt (s. 5). As to Ireland, see the 35 & 36 Vict. c. 57.

Impristi, those who side with or take the part of another, either in his defence or otherwise.

Improbation, the disproving or setting aside of deeds and writings ex facie probative on the ground of falsehood or forgery.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Improper feuds, derivative feuds; as, for instance, those that were originally bartered and sold to the feudatory for a price, or were held upon base or less honourable services, or upon a rent in lieu of military service, or were themselves alienable, without mutual license, or descended indifferently to males or females.

Impropriation, the act of employing the revenues of a church-living to a layman's use. See APPROPRIATION and LAY IMPROPRIATOR.

Improvement Act District. Defined by the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 4, as 'any area subject to the jurisdiction of any commissioners, trustees, or other persons invested by any local act with powers of town government and rating.'

Improvement of Land. The Improvement of Lands Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 114, enumerates (sect. 9) as 'improvements' within the act the following:—(1) Drainage; (2) Irrigation and Warping; (3) Embanking from the sea, etc.; (4) Inclosing, and re-division of fields; (5) Reclamation; (6) Making roads, tramways, railways, and canals; (7) Clearing; (8) Erection and improvement of cottages and farm buildings; (9) Planting for shelter; (10) Construction of mills, etc., etc.; (11) Construction of landing places; and allows tenants for life to charge the cost of such improvements upon the fee of a settled estate with the sanction of the Inclosure Commissioners, after notice to persons in remainder, and certain specification and surveys;—the sanction of the Commissioners to be given 'if they find (sect. 25) that the improvements would effect a permanent increase of the yearly value of the lands proposed to be improved.'

The Settled Land Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, s. 25, greatly extends the powers of a tenant for life to make improvements by allowing him to sell the settled land, and execute improvements being for the benefit of the settled land, out of the 'capital trust money' realized by the sale. The improvements authorized being those mentioned in the Improvement of Lands Act, with considerable additions.

Mansion-houses, by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 84, works for supply of sewage for agricultural purposes by Public Health Act, 1875, 38 & 39

Vict. c. 55, s. 31; and reservoirs, by 40 & 41 Vict. c. 31, s. 5, are also 'improvements' within the Improvements of Lands Act, 1864. See also DRAINAGE.

Improvement of Towns. The Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34, 'comprises in one act sundry provisions usually contained in' special acts of parliament theretofore passed 'for paving, draining, cleansing, lighting, and improving towns and populous districts, and that as well for avoiding the necessity for repeating such provisions in each of the several acts relating to such towns or districts as for ensuring greater uniformity in the provisions themselves.'

Of this act, sections 64—83, which relate to the naming of streets, and numbering of houses, to the improving the line of streets, and removal of obstructions, to the securing or demolition of ruinous buildings, and to the taking precaution during the erection of works; and sections 125—131, which relate to slaughter houses, are incorporated with the Public Health Act, 1875, by ss. 160, 169, of that act. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

Improvement, Unexhausted, Compensation to Tenant for. The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 92,—which applies only to those agricultural or pastoral tenancies of two acres or more, created after 14th February, 1876, from which the operation of the act is not excluded, and to those tenancies from year to year current at that date from which the operation of the act was not excluded by writing before the 15th of April, 1876,—ensures compensation to tenants, upon quitting their holdings, for certain improvements executed upon their holdings during occupation. The improvements are divided into three classes, according as they are (1) permanent or 'first-class' improvements, e.g., 'drainage,' 'laying down permanent pasture'; (2) durable or 'second-class improvements,' e.g., 'boning,' 'liming,' or 'marling' of land; or (3) temporary or 'third-class' improvements, which are 'application to land of purchased 'artificial or other purchased manure,' and 'consumption on the holding by cattle, sheep, or pigs of cake or other feeding stuff not produced on the holding.' The compensation is only due so far as the improvement is 'unexhausted,' and the act fixes for first-class improvements twenty years, for second-class improvements seven years, and for third-class improvements two years as the period after which the improvements are to be conclusively deemed exhausted. Compensation is irrecoverable for a first-class improvement, unless the tenant had obtained the written consent of the landlord, and for a second-class improvement unless the tenant had given to the landlord previous written notice of his intention to execute it.

The operation of the statute has been excluded by landlords in most cases.

In some parts of England and Wales 'customs of the country' (see a list of them, Woodfall L. & T., 12th ed., at p. 739), more or less liberal, but founded on no definite principle, ensure compensation to the tenant, on quitting his holding, for improvements executed thereon during his occupation. Such compensation is in theory payable by the landlord in every case, but is in practice generally paid by a succeeding tenant. It is clear law, however, that the outgoing tenant has an absolute right to be paid by the landlord, and not merely a right conditional upon there being an incoming tenant (Faviell v. Gaskoin, 7 Ex. 273).

Unless the Agricultural Holdings Act applies, or an applicable custom of the country can be proved to exist, a tenant, on quitting his holding, has no right to any compensation whatsoever for any improvements whatsoever.

Impruimentum, the improvement of land.

Impruiare, to improve land.—Cowel.

Impunitas continuatur affectum tribuit delinquendi. 4 Co. 45.—(Impunity confirms the disposition to commit crime.)

Impunitas semper ad deteriora invitat. 5 Co. 109.—(Impunity always invites to greater crimes.)

Imputatio [Lat.], legal liability.—Civ. Law.

In ceditis lapis male positus non est removens. 11 Co. 69.—(A stone badly placed in buildings is not to be removed.)

In equali jure melior est conditio possidentis. Plow. 296.—(In equal right the condition of the possessor is best.)—Br. Max., 5th ed., 713.

Inalienable, not transferable.

In alio loco [Lat.] (in another place).

In altâ prodicione nullus potest esse accessorius sed principalis solummodo. 3 Inst. 138.—(In high treason no one can be an accessory, but only principal.)

In alternatis electio est debitoris. (In alternatives the debtor has the election.)

In ambigua voce legis ea potius accipienda est significatio quæ vitio caret, præsertim cum etiam voluntas legis ex hoc colligi possit. D. 1, 3, 19; Bac. Max. reg. 3.—(In an ambiguous expression of law, that signification is to be preferred which is consonant with equity, especially when the spirit of the law can be collected from that.)

In ambiguis casibus semper præsumitur pro rege. (In doubtful cases the presumption is in favour of the king.)

In ambiguis orationibus maxime sententia spectanda est ejus qui eas protulisset. D. 50, 17, 96.—(In ambiguous expressions the intention of the person using them is chiefly to be regarded.)

In Angliâ non est interregnum. Jenk. Cent. 205.—(In England there is no interregnum.)

In arbitrium judicis. (At the pleasure of the judge.)

In articulo mortis [Lat.] (at the point of death).

In atrocioribus delictis punitur affectus licet non sequatur effectus. 2 Roll. Rep. 82.—(In more atrocious crimes the intent is punished, though an effect does not follow.)

Inauguration, the act of inducting into office with solemnity, as the coronation of the sovereign, or the consecration of a prelate.

In auter, or autre, droit (in another's right).

In banco, or banc, Sittings. See BANC.

Inbound Common, an unenclosed common, marked out, however, by boundaries.

Incastellare, to make a building serve as a castle.—Jacob.

In casu extreme necessitatis omnia sunt communia. H. P. C. 54.—(In cases of extreme necessity, everything is in common.)

Incaustum, or Encaustum, ink.—Fleta. l. 2, c. xxvii., p. 5.

Incendiary. See ARSON.

Incerta pro nullis habentur. Dav. 33.—(Things uncertain are reckoned as nothing.)

Incerta quantitas vitiat actum. 1 Roll. Rep. 465.—(An uncertain quantity vitiates the act.)

Incest, carnal knowledge of persons within the Levitical degrees of kindred, at one time a capital offence (4 Bl. Com. 65); but afterwards left to the action of the spiritual courts.—4 Steph. Com.

Inchartare, to give, or grant, and assure anything by a written instrument.—Mat. Par.

In chief. See EXAMINATION.

Inch of candle, a mode of sale at one time in use among merchants. A notice is first given upon the Exchange, or other public place, as to the time of sale; the goods to be sold are divided into lots, printed papers of which, and the conditions of sale, are published; when the sale takes place, a small piece of candle, about an inch long, is kept burning, and the last bidder, when the candle goes out, is entitled to the lot or parcel for which he bids.

Inchoate, begun, but not completed. By the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 20, 'a simple signature on a blank stamped paper,' delivered by the signer in order that it may be converted into a bill, 'operates as a prima facie authority to fill it up as a complete bill for any amount the stamp will cover, using the signature for that of the drawer, or the acceptor, or an indorser.'

Incident, a thing necessarily depending upon, appertaining to, or following another that is more worthy, as rent is incident to a reversion; and as a court-baron is incident to a manor.

Incipitur (it is begun). This was the technical commencement of a declaration, demurrer-book, judgment, etc.

Incised wounds, wounds inflicted with a sharp point or edge.

Incivile est, nisi totâ sententiâ inspectâ, de aliquâ parte judicare. Hob. 171.—(It is improper to judge of any part unless the whole sentence be examined.)

Incivism, unfriendliness to the state or government of which one is a citizen.

In claris non est locus conjecturis. (In things obvious there is no room for conjecture.)

Inclausa, a home-close, or inclosure near a house.

Inclosure Acts, 41 Geo. III. c. 109; 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 23; 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 115; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 31; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118 (the principal act); 9 & 10 Vict. c. 70; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 111; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 99; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 83; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 53; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 79; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 97; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 31; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 43; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 94; 26 & 27 Vict. cc. 18, 39; 27 Vict. c. 1; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 66; 28 Vict. c. 39; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 122; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 89; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 19. See Cooke on Inclosures; Chitty's Statutes, vol. iii., tit. 'Inclosure.'

Inclosure Commissioners, officers appointed under Inclosure Acts.

Inclusio unius est exclusio alterius. (The inclusion of one is the exclusion of another.)

Income tax, a tax of so much in the pound of income. The acts on this subject are very numerous. See Chitty's Statutes, vol. v., tit. 'Property Tax.'

In commendam. See COMMENDAM.

Incommodum non solvit argumentum.—(An inconvenience does not destroy an argument.) See ARGUMENTUM AB INCONVENIENTI.

In conjunctivis oportet utramque partem esse veram. Wing. 13.—(In things conjunctive each part ought to be true.)

In consimili casu, consimile debet esse remedium. Hard. 65.—(In similar cases the remedy should be similar.)

In consuetudinibus non diuturnitas temporis sed soliditas rationis est consideranda. Co. Litt. 141.—(In customs, not the length of time, but the strength of the reason, should be considered.)

Incontinency, unlawful indulgence of the sexual passion.

In contractibus, benigna; in testamentis, benignior; in restitutionibus, benignissima interpretatio facienda est. Co. Litt. 112.—(In contracts the interpretation is to be liberal; in wills more liberal; in restitutions, most liberal.)

In contractibus tacite insunt quæ sunt moris et consuetudinis. (Those things which are of manner and custom are tacitly imported into contracts.)

In conventionibus contrahentium voluntas potius quam verba spectari placuit. Br. Max., 5th ed., 551.—(In agreements, the intention of the parties, rather than the words actually used, should be regarded.)

Incopolitus, a proctor or vicar.

Incorporate. (1) To declare that another document shall be taken as part of the document in which the declaration is made as much as if it were set out at length therein; (2) To establish as a corporation by grant from the Crown or Act of Parliament.

Incorporated Law Society, constituted registrar of attorneys and solicitors.—6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 21. See SOLICITOR OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Incorporation, the formation of a legal or political body, with the quality of perpetual existence and succession, unless limited by the act of incorporation.

Incorporeal chattels, incorporeal rights incident to chattels, e.g., patent rights and copyrights.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 9.

Incorporeal hereditament. See HEREDITAMENT.

Increase, Affidavit of. Affidavit of payment of increased costs, produced on taxation. 'Of the costs of the pleadings, and the office fees of the proceedings, in the cause down to trial the record will in general sufficiently inform the taxing master; but the amount of the costs of the trial, including the evidence and the subpoenaing of and payment to witnesses, counsel, and court fees, must be supported by affidavit, commonly called the Affidavit of Increase.'—Gray on Costs, p. 496. For forms of Affidavit, see Chitty's Forms, and Scott on Costs.

Incrementum, increase or improvement, opposed to decrementum or abatement.

Incroachment [fr. accroachment, Fr., a grasping], an unlawful gaining upon the right or possession of another.

Incumbent [fr. incumbo, Lat., to attend diligently], a clergyman in possession of an ecclesiastical benefice. As to their resignation with pension in certain cases, see 34 & 35 Vict. c. 44. And as to the Public Worship Regulation Act (37 & 38 Vict. c. 85), by which provision is made for the better administration of the laws 'relating to the Microfilm performance of public worship according to the use of the Church of England,' see PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT, 1874.

Incumbrance, a claim, lien, or liability attached to property; as a mortgage, a registered judgment, etc.

Incurramentum, the liability to a fine, penalty, or amerciament.—Cowel.

In custodia legis [Lat.] (in the keeping of the law), a term used of goods which, from having been already seized by the sheriff under an execution, or are otherwise in the custody of the law, are exempt from distress for rent; but by 8 Anne c. 14, the sheriff may not take such goods in execution unless the party at whose suit the execution issued pay to the landlord his arrears of rent not exceeding one year's rent. If the goods are seized under a County Court warrant, a special procedure is provided by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 75, under which the landlord's claim is satisfied up to 'the rent of four weeks where the tenement is let by the week, the rent of two terms of payment where the tenement is let for any other term less than a year, and the rent of one year in any other case.'

Indebitatus assumpsit [Lat.] (being indebted he undertook), that species of the action of assumpsit in which the plaintiff first alleged a debt, and then a promise in consideration of the debt. The promise laid was generally implied. All actions on the indebitatus counts were afterwards; both in form and substance, actions of debt. They have now ceased to exist as technical forms of action, since the alterations made by the Judicature Acts. See PLEADING.

Indecent Assault. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 52, 62.

Indecent exposure, an indictable offence at common law. Exposure of the person in or in view of any public street or place of resort, with intent to insult any female, is also an offence under the 'Vagrant Act' (5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 5). As to the punishment (fine or imprisonment), see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29.

Indecent prints or books. The sale, or obtaining, or procuring of such prints, with intent to sell, is a misdemeanour. The 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, gives summary powers for the searching of houses, etc., in which obscene books, etc., are suspected to be kept, and for the seizure and destruction of such books, etc.

Indecimable, not titheable.

Inde data leges ne fortior omnia posset. Dav. 36.—(The laws are made lest the stronger should be altogether uncontrolled.)

Indefeasible, not to be made void.

Indefensus, unanswered, in pleading.

Indefinite payment, where a debtor owes several debts to a creditor, and makes a payment, without specifying to which of the debts it is to be applied. See APPROPRIATION OF PAYMENTS.

Indemnity, a writing to secure one from all danger and damage that may ensue from an act or omission. An act of indemnity used to be passed in every session of parliament for the relief of those who had neglected to take the necessary oaths of office, etc. (see, e.g., 30 & 31 Vict. c. 88, s. 1); but such act is rendered unnecessary by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 72, s. 16.

By the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 31, every deed, will, or other instrument creating a trust expressly or by implication, shall, without prejudice to the clauses actually contained therein, be deemed to contain a clause for the indemnity of trustees to the effect therein specified. As to indemnity between sureties, see GUARANTEE. And see Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XVI., rr. 17, 18.

Indenization, the act of making free, or of naturalizing.

Indenture, a deed indented between two or more parties, so called because duplicates of every deed inter partes were once written on one skin. The skin was cut in half irregularly or with a jagged edge: so when the duplicates were produced in Court they were seen to belong to one another by fitting into one another. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 5, it is provided, that a deed purporting to be an indenture shall have the effect of an indenture though not actually indented.

Index animi sermo. (Speech is the exposition of the mind.)

India. In 1876, by 39 Vict. c. 6, Queen Victoria was empowered to add to the style of the Crown, with a view of recognising the transfer of the Government of India, and assumed the style in India, of 'Empress of India.'

Indian bishops. See COLONIAL CLERGY, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 77, s. 13.

Indicatif, an abolished writ by which a prosecution was in some cases removed from a court-christian to the Queen's Bench.—Encyc. Lond.

Indicavit (he has proclaimed), a writ of prohibition that lies for a patron of a church, whose clerk is sued in the spiritual court by another clerk for tithes which amount to a fourth part of the profits of the advowson, when the suit belongs to the Common Law Courts, by West. II. c. 5, 13 Edw. I. st. 4. The patron of the defendant is allowed this writ, as he is likely to be prejudiced in his church and advowson, if the plaintiff recover in the spiritual court.—Reg. Orig. 55.

Indicia [Lat.], signs, marks.

Indicted, charged in an indictment with a criminal offence. See INDICTMENT.

Indictee, a person indicted.

Indictio, an indictment.

Indiction, Cycle of, a mode of computing time by the space of fifteen years, instituted by Constantine the Great; originally the period for the payment of certain taxes. Some of the charters of King Edgar and Henry III. are dated by indictions.

Indictment [fr. indico, Lat., to show], a written accusation against one or more persons, of a crime of a public nature, preferred to and presented upon oath by a grand jury. It lies against all persons (except those under incapacity, as lunatics, etc.) who actually commit or who procure and assist in the commission of crimes, or who knowingly harbour an offender; for each, in contemplation of law, is guilty and liable to punishment according to the part which he takes in the perpetration of the offence. It consists of three principal parts—the commencement (or caption), statement, and conclusion. The caption is no part of an indictment; it is merely the style of the Court where it is preferred, which is prefixed by way of preamble, when the record is made up, or when it is returned to a certiorari. The statement must be certain as to the party indicted, and as to the person against whom the offence was committed, and also as to time and place, facts, circumstances, and intent. It must be positive, and neither double nor repugnant. There is, in general, no time limited for preferring an indictment, but by several statutes certain limitations for certain offences are fixed. If an indictment be defective, it will be quashed.—2 Hawk. c. xxv., s. 4; Arch. Crim. Plead.

An indictment for perjury, subornation of perjury, conspiracy, obtaining money or other property by false pretences, keeping a gambling house, keeping a disorderly house, and any indecent assault, cannot be preferred without previous authorization. See 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17.

Indictment, in the Scotch law, is the form of process by which a criminal is brought to trial at the instance of the Lord Advocate. Where a private party is a principal prosecutor, he brings his charge in what is termed the form of criminal letters.

Indictment de felony est contra pacem domini regis, coronam et dignitatem suam, in genere et non in individuo; quia in Angliâ non est interregnum. Jenk. Cent. 205.—(Indictment for felony is against the peace of our lord the king, his crown and dignity in general, and not against his individual person; because in England there is no interregnum.)

Indictor, he who indicts another for an offence.

Indirect evidence, proof of collateral circumstances, from which a fact in controversy, not directly attested by witnesses or documents, may be inferred. It is also called circumstantial and presumptive evidence. See Taylor or Best on Evidence.

Indistanter, forthwith; without delay.

In disjunctivis sufficit alteram partem esse veram. Wing. 13.—(In things disjunctive, it suffices should either part be true.)

Indivisum, that which is held in common, without partition.

Indorsee, the person to whom a bill of exchange, promissory note, bill of lading, etc., is assigned by indorsement, giving him a right to sue thereon.

Indorsement [fr. in, Lat., upon, and dorsum, a back], anything written or printed upon the back of a deed or writing. The requisites of a valid indorsement of a bill of exchange, promissory note, or cheque, are laid down by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 32, the principal requisites being that the indorsement must be written on the bill itself (except in the case of an 'allonge' or copy) in a country where 'copies' are recognized) and signed by the indorser, his simple signature, without additional words, being sufficient; that it be an indorsement of the entire bill; and that where there are two or more indorsements, each is deemed to have been made in the order in which it appears on the bill, cheque, or note, until the contrary is proved.

Indorsement of Address. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. IV., it is provided that the solicitor of a plaintiff suing by a solicitor shall indorse upon every writ of summons the address of the plaintiff, and also his own name or firm and place of business, and also, if his place of business shall be more than three miles from Temple Bar, another proper place, to be called his address for service, which shall not be more than three miles from Temple Bar, where writs, notices, etc., may be left for him; and that if he be agent of another solicitor, he shall add the name or firm and place of business of the principal solicitor. See SUMMONS.

Indorsement of Claim. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. II., r. 1, every writ of Summons in the High Court must be indorsed with a statement of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief or remedy required. And by Ord. III. it is further provided that the indorsement of claim shall be made on every writ of summons before it is issued (r. 1). See further LEAVE to DEFEND.

Indorser, he who indorses, i.e., being the payee or holder, writes his name on the back of a bill of exchange, etc.

Indowment. See ENDOWMENT.

In dubio hæc legis constructio quam verba ostendunt. Jur. Civ.—(In a doubtful point, the construction which the words point out is the construction of the law.)

Inducement, an allegation of a motive; an incitement to a thing; the introductory part of a pleading.

Induciæ legales, the days between the citation of a defendant and the day of appearance.

Induciare, to prorogue, postpone, respite.

Induction [fr. inductio, Lat., a leading into], the giving a parson possession of his church.

A clerk is not complete incumbent until induction, which is performed by a mandate from the bishop to the archdeacon, or if the church be exempt from archidiaconal jurisdiction, to the chancellor or commissary, or if it be a peculiar, to the dean or judge, who usually issues a precept to another clergyman to perform it for him.

The person who inducts takes the hand of the clerk, and lays it on the ring, key, or latch of the church-door, or wall of the church, or delivers a clod, turf, or twig of the glebe, and gives corporal possession of the church, saying:—

'By virtue of this mandate I induct you into the real, actual, and corporal possession of the church of [Stow], with all rights, profits, and appurtenances thereto belonging.'

The inductor then opens the doors, puts the clerk into the church, and tolls the bell to make his induction known. After which he endorses a certificate of the induction on the mandate.

Induction is the investiture of the temporal part of the benefice or the corporal seisin, as institution is of the spiritual. A clerk thus presented is in full possession of the temporalities, and is persona impersonata or parson imparsoned.

The oaths and subscriptions taken before induction were altered by the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 122, and now the incumbent on induction must declare—

That he assents to the Thirty-nine Articles and the Book of Common Prayer, and of the ordering of bishops, priests, and deacons, and believes the doctrine of the Established Church to be agreeable to the Word of God; and that he will use the form prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, and none other save as prescribed by lawful authority; and

That he has in no way made a contract, simoniacal to his knowledge, for the living, and will not perform any promise of that kind, made by others;

And he must take the oath of allegiance to the Queen. See 28 & 29 Vict. c. 122, and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 72.

Indulgence, in the Roman Catholic Church a remission of the punishment due to sins, granted by the pope or church, and supposed to save the sinner from purgatory. Its abuse led to the Reformation in Germany.

Indulto, a dispensation granted by the pope to do or obtain something contrary to the common law.

Indument, endowment.

Industrial Schools. Schools (established by voluntary contribution) in which industrial training is provided, and in which children are lodged, clothed, and fed, as well as taught. They are regulated by the Industrial Schools Act, 1866, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 118, as amended by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 21, which provides for their being inspected and 'certified.' If certified, children under fourteen found begging, etc., may be sent to them by order of two justices or a magistrate. School Boards may contribute to the expenses of such schools by s. 27 of the Education Act, 1870.

Industrial Exhibitions Act (28 & 29 Vict. c. 3), for the protection of inventions and designs exhibited at industrial exhibitions.

Industrial and Provident Societies. The statutes regulating these societies, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 87; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 117; and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 80, are consolidated by the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 45, which by s. 6 provides for the registration of societies 'for carrying on any labour, trade, or handicraft, including the buying or selling of land, of which no member shall claim an interest in the funds exceeding 200l.' By registration certain privileges defined by s. 11 are acquired. The most important of these are: limited liability of members, exemption from income tax, membership of minors, and binding authority of rules. By 43 Vict. c. 8 the exemption from income tax is repealed in case the society sells to non-members. Compare the article FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

Industriam, per, a qualified property in animals feræ nature may be acquired per industriam, i.e., by a man's reclaiming and making them tame by art, industry, and education; or by so confining them within his own immediate power that they cannot escape and use their natural liberty.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 5.

In eo, quod plus sit, semper inest et minus. D. 50, 17, 110.—(The greater always includes the less.)

In esse (actually existing), distinguished from in posse, which means, that which is not, but may be. A child before birth is in posse; after birth, in esse.

In esse potest donationi, modus, conditio, sive causa; ut, modus est; si, conditio; quia, causa. Dyer, 138.—(In a gift there may be a manner, condition, or cause; ut, introduces a manner; si, condition; quia, a cause.)

Inewardus, a guard, a watchman.—Domesday.

In extenso, from beginning to end, leaving out nothing.

In extremis, at the last gasp:

In faciendo (in doing or infeasance).

In facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. Co. Litt. 78.—(In an action which addresses itself to good and bad, the law looks more to the good than to the bad.)

Infalstatus, a capital punishment inflicted on the sands or sea-shore.—Sed. qu. See Ralph de Hengham, Summa Parva, cap. 3, and Selden's notes thereon.

Infamy, public disgrace; total loss of character. This does not now incapacitate from giving evidence.—7 & 8 Vict. c. 85, s. 1.

Infangenthef, a privilege of lords of certain manors to judge any thief taken within their fee.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Infant [fr. infans, Lat., one who cannot speak], a person under twenty-one years of age, whose acts are in many cases either void or voidable. See AGE.

At Common Law, the contracts of infants are divided into three classes:—1st. Those which are absolutely void: such as are positively injurious to the interests of the infant, and can only operate to his prejudice; as a surety-bond, or a release to his guardian.

2nd. Those which are only voidable: such as are beneficial to him, which he may affirm or avoid when he comes of age; as a conveyance of lands, a promissory note, an account stated.

3rd. Those which are binding ab initio, and need no ratification: such as contracts for the public service, articles of apprenticeship, executed contracts of marriage, representative acts as executor or trustee, contracts for necessities.—Story on Contracts, 21.

By 'The Infants Relief Act, 1874' (37 & 38 Vict. c. 62), it is enacted that, 'all contracts whether by specialty or by simple contract henceforth entered into by infants for the repayment of money lent, or to be lent, or for goods supplied, or to be supplied (other than contracts for necessaries), and all accounts stated with infants shall be absolutely void; provided always that this enactment shall not invalidate any contract into which an infant may by any existing or future statute, or by the rules of common law or equity, enter, except such as now by law are voidable.' Section 2 provides that 'no action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon any promise made after full age to pay any debt contracted during infancy, or upon any ratification made after full age of any promise or contract made during infancy, whether there shall or shall not be any new consideration for such promise or ratification after full age.'

All conveyances by an infant are voidable by him or his heirs, on attaining majority, but an infant at the age of fifteen may make a valid feoffment of gavelkind lands, which he has by descent; yet it must be by way of sale, and not by mortgage; and an infant, at any age, may present to a church. As to conveyances and transfers of estates and funds vested in trustees and mortgagees, etc., being infants, see 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60. Leases made by infants are also voidable, on attaining majority. By 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 65, ss. 16, 17, infants are empowered to grant renewals of leases under the direction of the Court of Chancery, and that Court is authorized to direct leases of land belonging to infants, when it is to the benefit of the estate. By custom, infants seised of lands in socage may, at the age of fifteen, make leases for years, which shall bind them after majority. Leases made to infants are voidable; but the election to avoid must be made within a reasonable time after full age.

An infant is liable for torts committed by him unless the tort has arisen out of a contract. As to the criminal liability of infants, see AGE, ante.

An infant cannot prosecute an action, either in person or by attorney; he must sue by next friend (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XVI., r. 8), in the manner formerly practised in the Court of Chancery (as to which see 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed.); such friend was usually the nearest relation not interested in the matter in question, and was appointed by the Court. As to the service of a writ of summons where the defendant is an infant, see Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. IX., r. 4, and as to proceedings when such a defendant has not appeared, see Ibid., Ord. XIII., r. 1. An infant can appear and defend by guardian ad litem only (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XVI., r. 8). See also 2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1244.

The general superintendence and protective jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery over the persons and property of infants, is a delegation of the rights and duties of the Crown—the universal guardian of infants, and is retained for the Chancery Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34). This Court interferes:—

1st. In the appointment and removal of guardians. It will appoint a suitable guardian where there is none other, or none other who will or can act; but the infant must have property. Such a guardian is treated as an officer of the Court, and held responsible to it. Whenever sufficient cause is shown, the Court will remove a guardian, no matter how and by whom appointed. Guardians are also assisted by the Court in their duty. 2nd. In the suitable maintenance and education of an infant, having a due regard to the rank, the future expectations, and the intended profession and employment, and the property of the infant, the Court usually confines itself within the limits of the income of the property; but where the property is small, and more means are necessary for the due maintenance of the infant, the Court will sometimes allow the capital to be broken in upon. 3rd. In the management and disposition of the property, by exercising a vigilant care over the conduct of guardians as to the change of property, making it in all cases advisable for them to act under the strict guidance of the Court, in the duties of their fiduciary office. 4th. As to marriage. If any one marry a ward of Court without the sanction of the Court, even with the guardian's consent, he is guilty of contempt, though ignorant that she was a ward, and will be committed to prison until he consents to such a settlement of the property as the Court directs.—2 Story's Eq. 516. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 26, trustees are empowered to apply the income of the property of infants for their maintenance, and by ss. 41—43 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, the Settled Estates Act, 1877 (see SETTLED ESTATES), is applied to infant ownerships, the management of an estate and the application of income during minority are provided for, if the estate was settled after the commencement of that act.

As to the right to the custody of infants, see 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54 (now repealed by 36 Vict. c. 12); 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 35; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4; and the 36 Vict. c. 12, which empowered the Court of Chancery to order that a mother may have access to and custody of infants under sixteen years of age.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (10), it is provided that in questions relating to the custody and education of infants, the rules of equity shall prevail.

Infants Marriage Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43. By virtue of this act every infant (if a male of twenty, or if a female of seventeen years, s. 4), upon or in contemplation of marriage, may, with the sanction of the Chancery Division of the High Court, make a valid settlement or contract for a settlement of property.

Infant Life Protection Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 38. By this act provision is made for regulating the receiving of infants for hire for the purpose of nursing or maintenance.

Infanticide, the killing of a child after it is born. The felonious destruction of the fœtus in utero is more properly called fœticide, or criminal abortion.

In every case in which an infant is found dead, and its death becomes the subject of judicial investigation, the great questions which present themselves for inquiry are:—

- (1) What is the age of the child?
- (2) Was the child born alive?
- (3) If born alive, how long had it lived?
- (4) If born alive, by what means did it die?

If it be proved that its death was owing to violence, it is then to be ascertained who the murderer of it is. If suspicion fall upon the mother, it is to be determined—

(1) Whether she has been delivered of a child? and,

(2) Whether the signs of a delivery correspond as to time, etc., with the appearances developed in the child?

There are two ways in which a child may be born alive. (1) The cord may be pulsate, showing that it is alive, yet it may not respire. (2) It may be born and respire.

When a child is born alive, but has not yet respired, its condition is like that of the fœtus in utero. It lives merely because the fœtal circulation is still going on. In this case none of the organs undergo any change. The case of a child who is born alive and respire, is tested by respiration. The proofs of this test are deduced from the changes which take place in the system as soon as respiration commences.

See this subject fully discussed in Taylor's Med. Jur. c. xxxviii. et seq.; and Guy's Foren. Med. 118 et seq.

In favorabilibus, magis attenditur quod prodest quam quod nocet. Bacon.—(In things favoured, what does good is more regarded than what does harm.)

In favorem libertatis, vel vitæ [Lat.] (in favour of liberty or life.)

Infectious disorders. It is an indictable offence to expose in a public frequented highway a person suffering from an infectious disorder.—R. v. Vantandillo, 4 M. & S. 73. As to precautions against the spread of the plague, see 6 Geo. IV. c. 78; the cholera, see 2 Wm. IV. c. 10, continued by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 75, but now expired. The Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), contains various provisions calculated to prevent the spread of infectious diseases. See sections 80—89, and sections 120—139. See also CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS.

Infeoffment, the act or instrument of feoffment, or investiture, synonymous with sasine, the instrument of possession.—Scotch Term.

Inferior courts. They are the court baron, the hundred-court, the borough civil court, the county-court; and also all courts of a special jurisdiction; but the county courts are by far the most important of them. By 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, s. 28, it is provided that no action capable of being brought in a county court shall hereafter be brought or maintained in any hundred or other inferior court not being a court of record. See further 'The Borough and Local Courts of Record Act, 1872' (35 & 36 Vict. c. 86); and as to the jurisdiction of such courts, and the rules of procedure in force therein, see also the Judicature Act, 1873, ss. 88—90, and COUNTY COURTS.

The Inferior Courts Judgments Extension Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 31, following the procedure of the Judgments Extension Act, 1868, which applies to superior courts only, renders, to a certain extent, judgment obtained in Inferior Courts in England, Scotland, and Ireland respectively, effectual in any other part of the United Kingdom; but the working of the act is very much cramped by the provision of s. 10, that the act is not to apply against any person domiciled in the three countries respectively unless the whole cause of action arose and the summons was personally served upon the defendant within the district of the inferior court in which the action is brought.

Inféudation, the placing in possession of a freehold estate; also the granting of tithes to mere laymen.

In fitione juris semper æquitas existit. 11 Co. 51.—(In the fiction of law there is always equity.) See this maxim illustrated in Broom's Max., 5th ed., 127.

Infidel, one who does not accept the Christian religion.

In fieri [Lat.] (in course of accomplishment).

Infilt, or Insocna, violence committed on a person by one inhabiting the same dwelling.

Infinitum in jure reprobatum. 9 Co. 45.—(Infinity is reprehensible in law.)

In formâ pauperis ((in the character of a pauper). Every poor person, who may have cause of action, is entitled by 11 Hen. VII. c. 12, which is in affirmance of the common law, to have writs according to the nature of the case, without paying the fees thereon, and the judges may assign him counsel and solicitor, who act gratis. The party applying must swear that he is not worth 5*l.* excepting his wearing apparel and the matter involved in the cause. This discretionary indulgence was confined to plaintiffs at common law, but extended to defences in prosecutions, and by Courts of Equity to defences generally—a liberality which would seem by virtue of the Judicature Acts to be within the reach of all the branches of the High Court equally.

No person can sue in formâ pauperis unless the case be laid before counsel, and his opinion thereon, with an affidavit of the party or his solicitor, that the same case contains a full and true statement of all the material facts, be produced before the Court or judge to whom the application is made; and no fees are payable to counsel and solicitor, nor any official of the Court, by reason of a verdict for such pauper exceeding five pounds.—121 r. H. T. 1853. Where a pauper omits to proceed to trial he may be called upon to show cause why he should not pay costs (though not dispaupered), and proceedings may be stayed until the costs are paid.—122 r. A person admitted to sue in formâ pauperis is not entitled to costs from the opposite party, unless by order of the Court or a judge.—28 r. T. T. 1853.

In Equity a pauper under the circumstances above stated has been admitted to sue, and also to be sued, in formâ pauperis.—1 Dan. Ch. Prac., 4th ed., 37—45.

A person desirous of prosecuting a suit in formâ pauperis, in the Divorce or Probate Courts, proceeded mutatis mutandis as in the common law courts.—21 & 22 Vict. c. 85, s. 54; Orders 42, 43, 44; Prob. Rules, Con. Bus. 23, 24.

The effect of s. 21 of the Judicature Act, 1875, is to retain the former procedure in reference to suing in formâ pauperis, as it is not inconsistent with the Judicature Acts or the new Rules.

Informal, deficient in legal form.

Informality, want of legal form.

Information, an accusation, or complaint; also, communicated knowledge.

Information in Chancery. Where a suit was instituted on behalf of the Crown or Government, or of those of whom it has the custody by virtue of its prerogative (such as idiots and lunatics), or whose rights are under its particular protection (such as the objects of a public charity), the matter of complaint was offered to the Court by way of information by the attorney or solicitor-general, and not by way of petition. When a suit immediately concerned the Crown or Government alone, the proceeding was purely by way of information, but where it did not do so immediately, a relator was appointed, who was answerable for costs, etc.; and if he were interested in the matter, in connection with the Crown or Government, the proceeding was then by information and bill. Informations differed from bills in little more than name and form; and the same rules were substantially applicable to each.—Story's Eq. Plead. 5; 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 4th ed., 2, 8, 288. The procedure is now by ordinary action in the High Court. (See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. I., r. 1).

A Crown information (which was filed in the Court of Exchequer while that Court existed) is a suit for recovering money or other chattels, or for obtaining satisfaction, in damages, for any personal wrong committed in the lands or other possessions of the Crown. It is instituted to redress private wrongs, while criminal informations are resorted to to punish public wrongs, or heinous misdemeanours. See EX OFFICIO INFORMATIONS; and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104. The most usual Exchequer informations are in cases of intrusion, for trespasses on Crown lands; debt, for Crown moneys due upon breaches of penal statutes; and, in rem, when any goods are supposed to become the property of the Crown, no one claiming them, as treasure-trove, wrecks, waifs, and estrays.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 669, 690. This information would seem to be retained, as it is not a proceeding for which an action is substituted by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. I., r. 1. See also Ibid., r. 3.

Informations before a justice of the peace against a person alleged to have committed an offence punishable on summary conviction, must be laid within six months, and need not be in writing, or on oath unless some act of parliament [i.e., the act under which the particular offence is punishable] otherwise require, and must be for one offence only, and not for two or more offences.—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, ss. 1, 10, 11.

As to criminal informations, see that title. And see also QUO WARRANTO.

Informatus non sum (I am not informed, or, I have no instructions).

Informers, a person who prosecutes those who break any law or penal statute; also an approver. See QUI TAM, APPROVER.

Infortunium, homicide per, where a man doing a lawful act, without intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another. See HOMICIDE.

Infra, this word occurring by itself in a book refers the reader to a subsequent part of the book, like post.

Infra annum luctûs (within the year of mourning.) The phrase is used in reference to the marriage of a widow within a year after her husband's death, which was prohibited by the civil law.

Ingenuitas, liberty given to a servant by manumission.—Leg. H. 1, c. 89.

Ingenuitas regni, the commonalty of the kingdom.—Cowel.

In gremio legis [Lat.] (in the bosom or protection of the law).

Ingress, Egress, and Regress, free entry into, going forth of, and returning from a place.

Ingressu, an abolished writ of entry. It was also called præcipe quod reddat.—Cowel.

Ingressus, the relief which an heir at full age paid to the head lord for entering upon the fee, etc.—Blount.

Ingross. See GROSS.

Ingrossator magni rotuli, clerk of the pipe; a former Exchequer officer.

Ingrossing, writing the fair copy of a deed or instrument for the formal execution of it by the parties thereto. See ENGROSSING.

Inhabitant, a dweller or householder in any place.

In hæc verba, in these very words.

In hæredes non solent transire actiones quæ pœnales ex maleficio sunt. 2 Inst. 442.—(Penal actions, arising from anything of a criminal nature, do not pass to heirs.)

Inheritance, a perpetual or continuing right to an estate, invested in a person and his heirs. See CANONS OF INHERITANCE; ESTATE.

Inhibition. An ancient synonym for PROHIBITION, which see.

In the ecclesiastical law, the command of a bishop or ecclesiastical judge, that a clergyman shall cease from taking any duty. See, e.g., Sequestration Act, 1871, s. 5; Dale's case, 6 Q. B. D. 376.

In the Scotch law (1) A writ whereby the debtor or party inhibited is prohibited from contracting any debt which may become a burden on his heritable property. See 31 & 32 Vict. c. 156, and sched. Q. Q. (2) A writ prohibiting and discharging all persons from giving credit to a man's wife.—Bell's Law Dictionary.

In his quæ de jure communi omnibus conceduntur, consuetudo alicujus patriæ vel loci non est alleganda. 11 Co. 85.—(In those things which by common right are conceded to all, the custom of a particular district or place is not to be alleged.)

Inhoc, or Inhoke [fr. in, within, and hoks, a corner], and corner or part of a common field ploughed up and sowed with oats, etc., and sometimes fenced in with a dry hedge, when the rest of the field lies fallow.—Kenn. Glos.

In invidiam, to excite a prejudice.

Iniquum est aliquem rei suæ esse judicem. In propriâ causâ nemo judex sit. 12 Co. 13.—(It is unjust for any one to be judge in his own case. No one should be a judge in his own cause.) See Dimes v. G. J. C. Co., 3 H. L. C. 759.

Initialia testimonii. In former times, before examining a witness in chief, in Scotland, he was first examined as to his disposition towards the parties, whether he bore ill-will to either of them, or had been prompted what to say, or had received any bribe. It is somewhat similar to our voir dire, which see.

Initials, the first letters of names. By 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 12, in all actions upon bills of exchange, promissory notes, or other written instruments, any of the parties to which are designated by the initial letter or letters, or some contraction of the Christian or first name or names, it shall be sufficient to designate such persons by the same initial letter or letters, or contraction of the Christian or first name or names, instead of stating them in full. A single letter, if a vowel, has, on special demurrer, been assumed to be a Christian name, but not if a consonant.—18 L. J. (C. P.), 88, 281.

Initiate, tenant by courtesy, the husband is so called, when a child is born—capable of inheriting the land subject to his courtesy.

In invitum [Lat.], against an unwilling party.

In judicio non creditur nisi juratis. Cro. Car. 64.—(In a trial, credence is given only to those who are sworn.)

Injunction. This was the Court of Chancery's discretionary process of preventive and remedial justice; an interdictory writ, whereby a person is required to refrain from doing a specified meditated wrong, the wrong, however, not amounting to a crime. It was either (1) provisional or temporary until the coming in of the defendant's answer, or until the hearing of the cause, or until the chief clerk had made his certificate—which was subdivided into (a) common, granted on default, and (b) special, granted upon particular grounds; or (2) perpetual, i.e., forming part of a decree made at a hearing upon the merits whereby the defendant was perpetually inhibited from the assertion of a right, or perpetually restrained from the commission of an act, contrary to equity and good conscience. See, for more detailed information, Kerr on Injunctions; 2 Daniell's Chan. Prac., 5th ed., 1462—1536.

A common injunction had for its object the staying of a suitor from his civil proceedings at common law. As to the principle of the doctrine on which it was granted, and a summary of the mischief which it was designed to prevent, see Re the Royal British Bank, 17 C. K. 1856, 5 W. R. 61; and 2 Wh. and Tud. L. C., 4th ed., 601. The cases there collected will still be of importance, inasmuch as, although by a section to be afterwards cited injunctions of this nature are abolished, yet a somewhat similar process is provided to protect persons from being unjustly harassed by judicial proceedings.

The injunction might, upon a proper case being presented to the court, be granted at any stage of the proceedings at law. Thus an injunction would be granted to stay trial; after verdict to stay judgment; after judgment to stay execution; after execution to stay the money in the hands of the sheriff, in a case of a fi. fa., or to stay the delivery of possession, in case of a writ of ha. fa. po.

By s. 24, subs. (5), of the Judicature Act, 1873, however, it is enacted that no proceeding in the High Court of Justice, or before the Court of Appeal, shall be restrained by injunction; but every matter of equity on which an injunction against the prosecution of any such cause or proceeding might have been obtained, if the Act had not passed, may be relied on by way of defence thereto, it being provided, however, that the Court may direct a 'stay of proceedings.'

Proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts will be restrained upon special application wherever those Courts attempt to enforce a trust, or anything in the nature of a trust.

The injunction above referred to was called common when it was obtained upon an ex parte case supported by affidavit, defendant not having appeared to or answered the bill; all other injunctions were called special.

As to nuisances. Amongst public nuisances, restrainable either upon information or at suit of a private person, immediately grieved by them, may be enumerated obstructions to highways and bridges, public rivers and harbours, and everything that renders the enjoyment of life and property hazardous and uncomfortable. In the case of a private nuisance, there must be such an injury as from its nature is not susceptible of being compensated by damages, or such as from its continuance or permanent mischief must occasion a constantly recurring grievance which cannot be otherwise adequately prevented than by an injunction; as where the injury is irreparable, or where injury to health or trade, destruction of the means of subsistence, or permanent ruin to property, may ensue, e.g., from the obstruction of ancient lights of a dwelling-house, blocking up of water courses, diversion of streams from mills, the back flowage on mills, pulling down of the banks of rivers, and exposing adjacent lands to inundation, or neighbouring mills to destruction, etc.

The piracy of a copyright, or the invasion of a patent can be restrained, and the Court will direct an account of the books printed, and the profits made by the infringer.

A special injunction may be obtained to restrain the following acts:—The publication of letters, for the writer of a letter has a joint property in it with the person to whom it is addressed, the receiver having only a special property in it; the publication of a libel; the improper use by one man of the trade-marks or name of another person; the disclosure of secrets, acquired in the course of a confidential employment; the alienation of property; the negotiation of bills of exchange and promissory notes, obtained by fraud or collusion; the unjust transfer of stock; the receipt of dividends; the sale of specific chattels; the vexatious alienation of real property pendente lite; the sale of trust property; the sale of equitable property of wives by husbands; the improper presentation to a benefice; the appointing of a minister to a dissenting chapel; the endorsement of a registry or the sailing of a ship; the breach of covenants; to protect a ward of Court from removal, marriage, or improper influence; the unconscientious setting up of a legal title; a partner intermeddling with the partnership effects, as by accepting or negotiating bills in the name of the partnership for his own private purposes, or from attempting unjustly to dissolve the partnership; a solicitor attempting to give up one party in order to act for another party in a suit.

The 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, empowered the Court of Chancery to award damages to an injured party, even in addition to or in substitution for an injunction.

The legislature empowered the superior courts at common law to grant injunctions in certain cases by the following statutes:—

The Patent Law Amendment Act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 42, enacts, that in any action in any of the superior courts of record at Westminster and in Dublin for the infringement of letters patent, the court in which such action is pending may, if then sitting, or if not sitting, a judge of such court on the application of the plaintiff or defendant, may make an order for an injunction, inspection, or account, and give such direction respecting such action, injunction, inspection, and account, and the proceedings therein, as is fit.

This section gave the courts of common law the same power with respect to injunction, inspection, and account as the Court of Chancery. The Queen's Bench, upon application after verdict and damages recovered, refused to order an account of goods sold, in infringement of a patent previously to the bringing of the action, as the damages, though nominal in amount, must be taken to cover all loss previously incurred by the plaintiff; but made an order for an account of profits accruing after the action was brought, and for payment of the amount to the plaintiff.

The Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, empowered the Court of Common Pleas, on summary application, to enjoin railway or canal companies impeding or delaying the facility of receiving or forwarding traffic. This jurisdiction has, by the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48), s. 6, been transferred to the Commissioners appointed under that Act.

By the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125), in all cases of breach of contract or other injury, where an action had been brought, a writ of injunction might be claimed against the repetition of such breach of contract or other injury, or the committal of any breach of contract or injury of a like kind, arising out of the same contract, or relating to the same property or right; and the plaintiff might in the same action include a claim for damages or other redress (s. 79); and in case of disobedience such writ of injunction might be enforced by attachment by the Court, or by a judge (s. 81).

As to the mode of enforcing writs of injunction against corporations, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 33.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, subs. 8, it is provided that an injunction may be granted by an interlocutory Order of the Court 'in all cases in which it shall appear to the Court to be just or convenient that such order should be made.'

Innings, lands recovered from the sea; when rendered profitable they are termed gainage lands.—Cowel.

Innkeepers, proprietors of common inns for the accommodation of travellers in general.

All persons are deemed innkeepers who keep houses where a traveller is furnished, for profit, with everything which he has occasion for whilst on his way. They are bound to take in all travellers and wayfaring persons, and to entertain them, if they can accommodate them, at a reasonable charge, provided they behave themselves properly, etc.; and they have a lien upon the goods of their guests for board and lodging, etc.; but may not detain their persons or seize their clothing in actual wear. By the common law, innkeepers are bound to take not merely ordinary care but uncommon care of the goods, money, and baggage of their guests; and they are responsible for the acts of their servants and domestics, as well as for the acts of other guests. (Cayle's case, 8 Rep. 32, and 1 Smith L. C.) But the liability of innkeepers at the common law having been found to press hardly upon them, the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 41 (as to which see Spice v. Bacon, 2 Q. B. D. 463), provided that no innkeeper should be liable to make good to any guest any loss or injury to goods or property brought to his inn not being a horse or other live animal, or any carriage, to a greater amount than the sum of 30*l.*, except—

1. Where such goods have been stolen, lost, or injured, through the default or neglect of the innkeeper or his servants.

2. Where such goods have been deposited for safe custody with the innkeeper.

And it has been further provided by the Innkeepers' Act, 1878, 41 Vict. c. 38, that, in addition to his right of lien, the innkeeper may, after six weeks, sell by public auction all goods (advertised at least one month beforehand), horses, etc., left with him by a person leaving the inn in his debt.

Innocent conveyances, a covenant to stand seised; a bargain and sale; and release; so called, because since they convey the actual possession by construction of law only, they do not confer a larger estate, in property, than the person conveying possesses, and therefore, if a greater interest be conveyed by these deeds than a person has, they are only void pro tanto, for the excess. But a feoffment was a tortious conveyance, and therefore, under such circumstances, would have been void altogether, and produced a forfeiture. But by the 4th section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, a feoffment made after October 1, 1845, shall not have any tortious operation. It is, therefore, an innocent conveyance. See Phillips v. Phillips, 8 Jurist (N. S.), 145.

Innominate contracts, those which had no particular names, as permutation and trans-action.—Civ. Law.

Innonia, an inclosure.—Spelm.

In notis, in the notes.

Innotescimus [fr. innotesco, Lat., to make known], a kind of letters patent.—Jacob.

Innovation, an exchange of one obligation for another, so as to make the second come in place of the first.

In novo casu, novum remedium apponendum est. 2 Inst. 3.—(A new remedy is to be applied to a new case.)

Innoxiate, to purge one of a fault and make him innocent.—Leg. Ethelred. c. 10.

Inns of Chancery, so called because anciently inhabited by such clerks as chiefly studied the framing of writs, which regularly belonged to the cursitors, who were officers of the Court of Chancery. There are nine of them, Clement's, Clifford's, and Lyon's Inn, Furnival's, Thavies, and Symond's Inn, New Inn, and Barnard's and Staples' Inn. These were formerly preparatory colleges for students, and many entered them before they were admitted into the Inns of Court. They consist chiefly of solicitors, and possess corporate property, hall, chambers, etc., but perform no public functions like the Inns of Court. See 3 Rep. Pref. 18.

Inns of Court. There are four of them, exercising the right of admitting persons to practise at the bar—the Inner Temple, the Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn.—2 Reeves, 360; 3 Rep. Pref. 18. No means of obtaining that rank exists, but that of becoming enrolled as a student in one or other of these inns, and afterwards applying to its benchers for a call to the bar.

The Inns of Court have agreed on certain 'Consolidated Regulations,' as to the admission of students, the calling of students to the bar, etc. The last Regulations issued were agreed to in April, 1873.

Admission of Students.

(1) Every person, not otherwise disqualified, who has passed a public examination at any university within the British dominions, is at once admitted as a student to any Inn of Court, without passing a preliminary examination, but subject to Rule 7.

(2) Every other person must first satisfactorily pass an examination in the English and Latin languages, and English history. But the board of examiners [Rule 4] have power to report any special circumstances to the masters of the bench of the inn, of which any person may desire to be admitted as a student, and the masters of the bench of such inn have power to relax or dispense with this regulation, in whole or in part, in any case in which they may think the special circumstances so reported, or otherwise ascertained by the bench justify a departure from this regulation.

(3) The examination is conducted by a joint board, appointed by the four Inns of Court. (4) Each inn appoints four examiners, and the Council of Legal Education has power to allot remuneration to the examiners. (5) The examiners attend according to a rota fixed by themselves; two to be a quorum. (6) Meetings of the examiners of students to be admitted, are held at least once in every week during each term, and once in the week before each term, and at such other times as shall be appointed by the examiners. But no examiner shall attend, unless two days' notice is given to the secretary by at least one candidate wishing to be examined.

(7) No attorney at law, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch Courts, proctor, notary public, clerk in Chancery, Parliamentary agent, or agent to any court original or appellate, clerk to any justice of the peace, or person acting in any of these capacities, and no clerk to any barrister, conveyancer, special pleader, equity draftsman, attorney, solicitor, writer to the signet, or writer of the Scotch courts, proctor, notary public, parliamentary agent, or agent in any court original or appellate, clerk in Chancery, clerk of the peace, clerk to any justice of the peace, or to any officer in any court of law or equity, or person acting in the capacity of any such clerk, can be admitted as a student until such person cease to act in any of those capacities; and has taken his name off the rolls of any court on which it may be entered.

(8 & 9) A form of application for admission recognising the above conditions is to be signed by the candidate, and a certificate of the candidate's respectability annexed to the application must be signed by two barristers, and the application has to be approved by the treasurer. On application to be admitted the sum of one guinea is paid for the form of admission; and the sum so paid forms part of the common fund. [Rule 68].

Keeping Terms.

(10) Students of the inns who at the time are members of any of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, Durham, the Queen's University in Ireland, St. Andrew's, Aberdeen, Glasgow, or Edinburgh, may keep terms by dining in the halls of their respective societies any three days in each term. (11) Such as are not members of any of the said universities keep terms by dining in the halls of their respective inns of court any six days in each term. (12) No day's attendance in hall shall count for keeping term, unless the student is present at the grace before dinner, and until the grace after dinner, unless the Treasurer, during dinner, shall permit the student to leave earlier.

Calling to the Bar.

(13) Every student must be twenty-one before being called to the bar.

(14) Every student must keep twelve terms before being called to the bar, unless any term or terms shall have been dispensed with under Rule 20 or 64. By Reg. 15 special provisions are made with reference to students admitted while previous Regulations were in force but not yet called to the bar. (16) Students admitted after the 31st December, 1871, must pass a Public Examination for the purpose of ascertaining their fitness to be called to the bar, and obtain certificates accordingly. (17) The student's name and description must have been screened in the Hall, Benchers' Room, and Treasurer's or Steward's Office, of the Inn of which he is a student, fourteen days in Term before such call. (18) The name and description of every such student must have been sent to the other Inns, and screened for the same space of time in their respective Halls, Benchers' Rooms, and Treasurers' or Stewards' Offices. (19) No call to the Bar shall take place except during a Law Term; and such call shall be made on the same day by each of the Inns, namely, on the sixteenth day of each law term, unless such day shall happen to be Sunday, and in such case on the Monday after. (20) Four terms and no more, under any circumstances, may be dispensed with in favour of students admitted before the 1st January, 1873, and who have come from India, or the Colonies, with a view to return to residence there, and it is not expedient to dispense with any terms for such students except on the following conditions, viz.:—

1. That students from India do satisfactorily pass an examination in Hindu and Mahommedan law, and Indian penal code, the code of criminal procedure, the code of civil procedure, the Indian Succession Act, and in such other codes and acts as may from time to time become law in British India; and, in addition to such examination, do pass such examinations, and abide by all such rules and regulations as are applicable to students admitted before the 1st January, 1873, seeking a pass certificate, by examination, for call to the bar.

2. That students from the Colonies do pass such an examination as shall be required by the Council of Legal Education, regard being had by the Council to such rules and regulations as were in force before the 1st day of January, 1873, in order to obtain a certificate of honour.

3. Provided that each of the four Inns of Court be at liberty to dispense with the above conditions in such very special circumstances as they may think fit, and that such circumstances be stated in the certificate of call to the bar given to every such student. The Benchers of each Inn, subject to the foregoing limitations, being guided, in the dispensation of terms, by the circumstances of each particular case.

Certificates to practise under the Bar.

(21) No student is allowed to take out a certificate to practise under the bar without the special permission of the Masters of the Bench of his Inn, and no such permission is granted to any student unless he shall be qualified to be called to the bar, and the regulations, as to screening names in the halls, benchers' rooms, and treasurers' or stewards' offices, applicable to students desirous of being called to the bar, shall be applicable to students desirous of practising under the bar. Such permission is granted for one year only, but may be renewed annually.

Council of Legal Education.

(22) The Council of Legal Education consists of twenty benchers, five being nominated by each Inn, four forming a quorum. The members remain in office for two years. To this Council is entrusted the power and duty of superintending the education and examination of students. (23) The Council have power to grant dispensations to students admitted before the 1st day of January, 1872, who shall have been prevented by any reasonable cause from attendance on lectures or classes.

The Committee of Education and Examination.

(24) A permanent committee of eight members is appointed by the Council, called the Committee of Education and Examination, of whom three are a quorum. Two members of such committee, selected by the committee, go out of office at the end of two years from the 11th of January, 1873, and to be selected in like manner, shall go out at the end of every succeeding two years. No member going out is re-eligible until he has been at least one year out of office. (25) The committee, subject to the control of the Council, superintend and direct the education and examination of students, and all matters of detail in respect thereto, and report annually to the Council.

Subjects for Instruction.

(26) Students are provided with the means of education in the general principles of law, and in the law as practically administered in this country, and for the purpose of such education, systematic instruction is given in the following subjects, viz. :—

Jurisprudence;
International law—Public and Private;
Roman Civil Law;
Constitutional Law and Legal History;
Common Law;
Equity;
The Law of Real and Personal Property; and Criminal Law.

Mode of Instruction.

(27) The Educational year is divided into three terms, one commencing on the 1st of November and ending on the 22nd of December, the second commencing on the 11th of January and ending on the 30th of March, and the third commencing on the 15th of April and ending on the 31st of July, subject to a deduction of the days intervening between the end of Easter and the beginning of Trinity Term. (28) Instruction is given by means of lectures and private classes, but the attendance of students at such lectures and classes is not compulsory. (29) The lectures and the instruction to private classes are not necessarily given by the same person, but professors appointed to deliver lectures may, if willing so to do, and the Council think fit, also give instruction to private classes. (30) The Council appoint four professors, viz. :—

- i. One of Jurisprudence, to give instruction in the subjects numbered i., ii., and iii. in Clause 50 of these regulations.
- ii. One of Common Law, to give instruction in the subjects numbered iv. and vii. in Clause 50 of these regulations, and in the Law of Evidence.
- iii. One of Equity.
- iv. One of the Law of Real and Personal Property.

(31) The Council appoint as many tutors as shall from time to time be deemed necessary to give instructions to private classes. (32) The professors and tutors shall hold office at the pleasure of the Council, and shall, as a general rule, be continued in office for a period of three years, but not for a longer period, unless re-elected. (33) Previously to any appointment or re-election of a professor or tutor, due notice is given, by advertisement or otherwise, inviting candidates. (34) Each of the professors of Common Law, of Equity, and of the Law of Real and Personal Property, in every educational term, deliver lectures to two classes of students, one elementary and the other a more advanced class. (35) To secure systematic instruction, the scheme of the lectures to be given by each professor is submitted to, and approved by, the Committee of Education and Examination. (36) At the private classes, instruction is given to students in a more detailed and personal form than can be supplied by lectures, and also advice and direction for the conduct of their professional studies. (37) The Council may, from time to time, make arrangements for the delivery of occasional lectures or courses of lectures on any legal subject by any person other than the professors and tutors. (38) Students, in addition to availing themselves of the means of instruction provided by these regulations, are recommended to attend in the chambers of a barrister or pleader for the purpose of studying the practice of the law; but such attendance shall not be compulsory. Rules 39—42 provide for the remuneration of the professors and tutors; and Rule 43 for the appointment of a professor of Hindu and Mahomedan law, and the laws in force in British India.

Payments by Students.

(44) Each student pays on admission a sum of five guineas, which entitles him to attend the lectures of all the professors; and on payment of five guineas per annum, he becomes entitled to attend all the private classes (except the private class of the professor on Hindu and Mahomedan law and the laws in force in British India). Each student is entitled to attend the private class of the last-mentioned professor on payment of one guinea per annum.

The Examiners.

Rules 45—49 provide for the appointment by the Council of a board of six examiners.

The Examinations.

(50) The subjects for examination shall be the following:—

- i. Jurisprudence, including International Law, Public and Private;
- ii. The Roman Civil Law;
- iii. Constitutional Law and Legal History;
- iv. Common Law;
- v. Equity;
- vi. The Law of Real and Personal Property;
- vii. Criminal Law.

(51) Students admitted after the 31st December, 1872, must pass a satisfactory examination in the following subjects, viz., 1st, Roman Civil Law; 2ndly, The Law of Real and Personal Property; and 3rdly, Common Law and Equity; and (52) must have kept nine terms before being examined, but the examination in Roman Civil Law may be passed at any time after keeping four terms. (53) The Council may accept a Degree in Law granted by any university within the British dominions as an equivalent for the examination in any of the subjects mentioned in rule 51, other than common law and equity. (54) There are four examinations in every year, one before each law term. At two of such examinations, viz., at those to be held next before Hilary and Trinity terms, there is an examination for studentships and honours. (55) The honours list contains two classes, in both of which the list shall be alphabetical. The examination for honours is in the subjects mentioned in clause 50, and no student is entitled to be placed in either class unless he has passed a satisfactory examination in all the subjects mentioned in clause 51.

(56) As an encouragement to students to study Jurisprudence and Roman Civil Law, twelve studentships of one hundred guineas each have been established, and divided equally into two classes; the 1st class of studentships to continue for two years, and to be open for competition to any student as to whom not more than four terms shall have elapsed since he kept his first term; and the 2nd class to continue for one year only, and to be open for competition to any student not then already entitled to a studentship, as to whom not less than four and not more than eight terms shall have elapsed since he kept his first term; two of each class of such studentships to be awarded by the Council, on the recommendation of the committee, after every examination before Hilary and Trinity terms respectively, to the two students of each set of competitors who shall have passed the best examination in both jurisprudence and Roman Civil Law. But the committee is not obliged to recommend any studentship to be awarded if the result of the examination be such as, in their opinion, not to justify such recommendation. See further rules 57—59, inclusive. (60) The examiners submit their examination papers to the committee for approval; and the standard required for each class in studentships and honours and for pass certificates, and the number of marks to be attributed to each paper is also submitted to the committee for approval. (61) Previous to each examination notice is given of the books and branches of subjects in which students will be required to pass. (62) The examinations are conducted partly in writing and partly viva voce. (63) One examiner at least is present during the whole time of the examination in writing. (64) The Board of Examiners after each examination report the result thereof to the committee, who submit to the Council the names of those students (if any) who are in their opinion entitled to receive certificates under Rule 51 or to obtain studentships or honours; and the Inn of Court to which any student placed in the first class of honours belongs may, if desired, dispense with any number of terms, not exceeding two, which may remain to be kept by such student previously to his being called to the bar. (65) At every call to the bar those students who have obtained honours take rank in seniority over all other students called on the same day. See further Rules 66 and 67.

Common Fund.

(68) The four Inns of Court continue their annual contributions of three hundred and sixty pounds each towards constituting the Common Fund, to which are added the several fees for forms of admission, and for attending lectures; and also the several sums of five guineas for each student, paid by the Inns of Court respectively, as additional contributions, pursuant to the report of the committee of the four Inns of Court, dated 6th December, 1871; and any further money which may, from time to time, be required to enable the Common Fund to meet the charges on it in any year, is contributed by the four Inns of Court at the end of such year, rateably and in proportion to the number of students belonging to the four Inns respectively, who in that year have been called to the bar, or have for the first time obtained permission to practise under the bar.

Each of the inns is possessed of considerable property, consisting mostly of chambers, which are let, by preference, and almost exclusively, to members of the inns. The property is managed by the benchers of the inn, who consist mostly of the Queen's Counsel, each of whom, on election by the existing benchers, usually becomes a bencher immediately on his appointment. Members of Serjeants' Inn did not remain members of an Inn of Court.

Innuendo [fr. innuo, Lat., to nod], a word used in statements of claims, indictments, and other pleadings, to ascertain a person or thing which was named before, or to connect an expression with a certain person; to say, he (innuendo, i.e., meaning the plaintiff) did so and so.—4 Rep. 17.

In odium spoliatoris omnia presumuntur.

1 Vern. 19.—(All things are presumed against a despoiler.)

Inofficious testament, a will not in accordance with the testator's natural affection and moral duties.—Williams on Executors.

In omnibus pœnalibus judiciis et ætati et imprudentie succurritur. D. 50, 17, 108.—

(In all penal sentences age and imprudence should be borne in mind.)

In omnibus quidem, maxime tamen in jure, æquitas spectanda sit. D. 50, 17, 90.—(In everything, but especially in law, equity is to be regarded.)

In omni re nascitur res quæ ipsam rem terminat. 2 Inst. 15.—(In everything a thing is born which destroys that thing itself.)

Inops consilii (wanting advice).

Inordinatus, an intestate.

In pacato solo, in a country which is at peace.

In pari causâ possessor potior haberi debet. D. 50, 17, 128, s. 1.—(In an equal cause he who has the possession should be preferred.)

In pari delicto, potior est conditio possidentis. (In equal fault, the condition of the possessor is the more favourable.) Where both parties are equally in the wrong, the defendant holds the stronger ground. The law will take notice of an illegal transaction, to defeat a suit, not to maintain one.

In pari materiâ, in an analogous case or position.

Inpeny, and Outpeny, customary payments on alienation of tenants, etc.—Spelman.

In person. A party, plaintiff, or defendant who sues out a writ or other process, or appears to conduct his case in court himself, instead of through solicitor or counsel, is said to act and appear in person. Any suitor, but one suing in forma pauperis, may do this.

In personam. All civil actions are either in personam or in rem; actions in personam are those which seek recovery of damages, etc. See IN REM.

In pleno lumine, in public; in common knowledge; in the light of day.

In pœnalibus causis benignius interpretandum est. D. 50, 17, 155, s. 1.—(In penal causes the interpretation ought to be the more favourable.)

In posse (in a state of possibility).

In preparatoriis ad judicium favetur actori. 2 Inst. 57.—(In things preceding judgment the plaintiff is favoured.)

In præsentî (at the present time).

In presentia majoris cessat potentia minoris. Jenk. Cent. 214.—(In the presence of the major the power of the minor ceases.) See Br. Max., 5th ed., 111.

In promptu, in readiness, at hand.

In propria personâ (in one's own proper person).

Inquest, judicial inquiry.

Inquest, Coroner's. See CORONER.

Inquest of office, an inquiry made by the king's (or queen's) officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ sent to them for that purpose, or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the king to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. In order to avoid the possession of the Crown acquired by the finding of such office, the subject may have his petition of right, monstrans de droit, or traverse, as the case may be.—3 Steph. Com. See also 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, s. 15, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104, s. 52.

Inquilinus, the hirer of a house.—Civil Law.

Inquirendo, an authority given to some official person to institute an inquiry concerning the Crown's interests.

Inquiry, Court of, frequently appointed by the Army authorities to ascertain the propriety of resorting to ulterior proceedings against a person charged before it. The evidence is unsworn. The person charged (if the report of the Court be against him), has no legal right to a court-martial, nor can he obtain any redress from a Court of law; the Crown may at any time, without reason assigned, dispense with the services of any person in the army.

Inquiry. The Writ of Inquiry is a judicial process addressed to the sheriff of the county in which the venue is laid, stating the former proceedings in the action, and 'because it is unknown what damages the plaintiff has sustained,' commanding the sheriff that, by the oath of twelve men of his county, he diligently inquire into the same, and return the inquisition into court. This writ is necessary after an interlocutory judgment, the defendant having let judgment go by default, to ascertain the quantum of damages.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XIII., r. 6, it is provided that 'Where the defendant fails to appear and the plaintiff's claim is for detention of goods and damages, or either of them, interlocutory judgment may be entered, and a writ of inquiry shall issue to assess the value of the goods and the damages, or the damages only, as the case may be. But the Court or a judge may order that, instead of a writ of inquiry, the value and amount of damages, or either of them, shall be ascertained in any way in which any question arising in an action may be tried. And by Ord. XXIX., rules 4—8, the plaintiff may in such cases pursue a similar course where the defendant makes default in pleading. Among the modes in which a question arising in an action may be tried, is that by an official or special referee (Ord. XXVI., r. 2). By Ord. XXXIII., the Court or a judge may at any stage of the proceedings in a cause or matter, direct any necessary inquiries or accounts to be made or taken, notwithstanding that it may appear that there is some special or further relief sought for, or some special issue to be tried as to which it may be proper that the cause or matter should proceed in the ordinary manner. Inquiries may be made in district registries (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 66).

Inquisitio post mortem (inquest after death).

Inquisition, inquiry, inquest.

Inquisitor, any officer, as a sheriff, coroner, etc., having power to inquire into certain matters.

In quo quis delinquit, in eo de jure est puniendus. Co. Litt. 233.—(One who fails to perform the duties of his office ought to be punished in that office.)

In re (in the matter of). An expression used in intituling matters other than actions, in which there is not any plaintiff and defendant, especially in the Court of Bankruptcy.

In rebus manifestis errat qui auctoritates legum allegat; quia perspicua vera non sunt probanda. 5 Co. 67.—(In things manifest, he errs who cites legal authorities, because obvious truths need not be proved.)

In rebus quæ sunt favorabilia animæ, quamvis sunt damnosa rebus, fiat aliquando extensio statuti. 10 Co. 101.—(In things that are favourable to the spirit, though injurious to things, an extension of a statute should sometimes be made.)

In re dubia magis inficiatio quam affirmatio intelligenda. Godb. 37.—(In a doubtful case, the negative is rather to be understood than the affirmative.)

In rem. Civil actions are divided into actions in rem and actions in personam. A judgment in rem is a judgment pronounced on the status of some particular subject-matter. Such are actions for the condemnation of a ship in the Court of Admiralty; suits of nullity of marriage, etc., etc. See IN PERSONAM.

In reipublicâ maxime conservanda sunt jura belli. 2 Inst. 58.—(The laws of war are especially to be preserved in the state.)

In restitutionem, non in penam hæres succedit. 2 Inst. 198.—(The heir succeeds to the restitution, not to the penalty.)

In restitutionibus benignissima interpretatio facienda est. Co. Litt. 112.—(The most benignant interpretation is to be made in restitutions.)

Inrolment [fr. irrotilatio, Lat.]. See ENROLMENT.

Insanity. See IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

Inscriptiones, written instruments by which anything was granted.

Insetenta, an inditch, or grave in a ditch.

Insidiatores viarum, way-layers.

Insignia, ensigns or arms.

Insiliarius, an evil counsellor.

Insilium, evil advice or counsel.

In simili materiâ, dealing with the same or a kindred subject-matter.

Insimul computasset (he accounted together), a writ or action of account which lay for things uncertain. Obsolete.

Insimul tenuit, a species of the abolished writ of formedon, brought against a stranger by a co-partner on the ancestor's possession.

Insinuatio, registration amongst the public records.—Civ. Law.

In solido, in the whole, applied to a joint contract.

Insolvency, the state of one who has not property sufficient for the full payment of his debts. An insolvent as distinguished from a bankrupt, was an insolvent who was not a trader; for originally only a trader could be made bankrupt, in the sense of obtaining an absolute discharge from his debts, while the future estate of an insolvent remained liable for his debts, even after his discharge. The acts from time to time in operation for the relief of insolvent debtors were the 53 Geo. III. c. 102; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 23—120; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 127; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 102; and 'The Bankruptcy Act, 1861' (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), s. 230. By the 'Bankruptcy Repeal and Insolvent Court Act, 1869' (32 & 33 Vict. c. 83), all the enactments on this subject theretofore existing were repealed, and provision was made for winding up and terminating all matters pending under the acts for the relief of insolvent debtors. See BANKRUPT.

In specie, in its own form and essence, not in the form of an equivalent; in coin, as distinguished from paper money.

Inspector, a prosecutor or adversary.

Inspection, examination.

Trial by Inspection was resorted to when, for the greater expedition of a cause, some point or issue, being either the principal question, or one arising collaterally out of it, and being evidently the object of sense, was decided by the judges of the Court upon the evidence of their own senses. Obsolete.

Inspection of written documents. It was provided by the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, that in any action or other proceeding the Court or a judge might on application by either party compel the opposite party to allow the party making the application to inspect all documents in the custody or under the control of such opposite party relating to such action or other legal proceeding, and if necessary to take examined copies of the same, or to procure the same to be duly stamped. Even prior to this act the Court would in certain cases in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction order inspection of specific documents.

As to inspection of documents in Equity, see Smi. Ch. Pr. 528. And as to inspection in the Admiralty Court, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, ss. 17, 18.

As to the inspection of records, public books, and documents, and the rolls of a manor, see 2 Ch. Arch. Pr., 1432.

The Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXI., rules 14—18, provides certain rules of practice with regard to inspection of documents, the effect of which is that either party is prima facie as a matter of right entitled to inspect (after notice) documents referred to in the pleadings or affidavits of the other, and may, by leave of a judge, and upon an affidavit, inspect other documents in possession of the other.

As to inspection by jury of real of personal property, see C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 58, and see VIEW. The Court or a judge may order inspection of any property which is the subject of an action, on the application of any party to such action (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XLII., r. 3); and as to inspection in an action for the infringement of a patent, see 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 42.

Inspection, Deed of. See INSPECTORSHIP.

Inspector, an overseer. There are Government Inspectors of alkali works, of schools, of factories, of mines, and of railways.

Inspectorship, Deed of, an instrument entered into between an insolvent debtor and his creditors, appointing one or more person or persons to inspect and oversee the winding up of such insolvent's affairs on behalf of the creditors. See COMPOSITION; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, ss. 125, 127.

Inspeximus (we have inspected), the first word of an ancient charter, or a royal grant. An exemplification of the inrolment of a charter or of letters patent is so called.—Co. Litt. 225 b; Page's case, 5 Rep. 52.

Installation, the ceremony of inducting or investing with any charge, office, or rank, as the placing a bishop into his see, a dean or prebendary into his stall or seat, or a knight into his order.

Instalment, a portion of a debt. When a debt is divided into two or more parts, payable at different times, each part is called an instalment, and the debt is said to be payable by instalments. It is a frequent condition in bonds, warrants of attorney, etc. Also, the giving possession of an ecclesiastical dignity, it is correlative to a rector or vicar's induction to a benefice.

Instance Court of Admiralty. See ADMIRALTY.

Instantan, immediate; at once.

Trial instantan was had where a prisoner between attainder and execution pleaded that he was not the same who was attainted.

When a party is ordered to plead instantan he must plead the same day.

Instar dentium [Lat.] (like teeth). See INDENTURE.

In statu quo (in the condition in which it was). See STATUS QUO.

Instaurum, a stock of cattle.

In stipulationibus cum queritur quid actum sit verba contra stipulatorem interpretanda sunt. D. 45, 1, 38, s. 18.—In the construction of agreements words are interpreted against the person using them; thus the construction of the stipulatio is against the stipulator, and the construction of the promissio against the promissor. Consult Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 599 et seq.

Institor, a consignee or factor; one who superintends the business of a store or shop.

Institorial power, the charge given to a clerk to manage a shop or store.—1 Bell's Com. by McLaren, 506, 507.

Institute, a commentary, a treatise. Also, in Scotland, a person to whom an estate is first given by destination or limitation.

Institutes of Lord Coke, four volumes by Lord Coke, published A.D. 1628. The first is an extensive comment upon a treatise on tenures, compiled by Littleton, a Judge of the Common Pleas, temp. Edward IV. This comment is a rich mine of valuable common law learning, collected and heaped together from the ancient reports and year-books, but greatly defective in method. It is usually cited by the name of Co. Litt., or as 1 Inst. The second volume is a comment upon old acts of parliament, without systematic order; the third a more methodical treatise of the pleas of the Crown; and the fourth an account of the several species of courts. These are cited as 2, 3, or 4 Inst., without any author's name.

Institution, used in four senses:—(1) Laws, rites, and ceremonies enjoined by authority, as permanent rules of conduct or of government. (2) Putting a clerk into possession of a spiritual benefice, previous to which the oaths against simony and of allegiance and supremacy are to be taken. It is a conveyance or commitment of the cure of souls by the bishop to the incumbent, whereby the benefice becomes filled. The clerk kneels before the ordinary or commissary having a deputation for that purpose, whilst he reads the institution out of a written instrument, drawn for this purpose with the episcopal seal appended, which the clerk holds in his hand during the ceremony.

The act of presentation gives the clerk a right ad rem; institution gives him a right in re; he becomes parson as to the spirituality, may celebrate divine service, enter on the parsonage house and glebe, and take the profits of the benefice; though he cannot grant, or let, or claim a freehold in them, or bring an action for them till induction.

Institution being given to a clerk, a particular entry of it should be made in the register of the ordinary, not only that such a clerk received institution on such a day, and year, but if the clerk were presented, at whose presentation, and whether in his own right or in another's and if collated or presented by the Crown, then whether jure pleno or per lapsum temporis. Such entries should be carefully preserved, for the letters of institution may be destroyed or lost, and the patron's title may suffer, for want of evidence upon whose presentation institution was given.—Mirehouse on Advow., p. 187. See REFUSING TO INSTITUTE A CLERK. (3) A society for promoting any public object, as a charitable or benevolent institution. (4) In the civil law, the appointment of a debtor as heir, i.e., to carry on the legal existence, the persona of the testator.

Institutiones. It was the object of Justinian to comprise in his Code and Digest, or Pandects, a complete body of law. But these works were not adapted to the purposes of elementary instruction, and the writings of the ancient jurists were no longer allowed to have any authority, except so far as they had been incorporated in the Digest.—Smi. Dict. of Antiq. It was, therefore, necessary to prepare an elementary treatise, and the Institutes were published a month before the Pandects, A.D. 529, and designed as an elementary introduction to legal study (legum cunabula). The work was divided into four books, subdivided into titles.

The institutes are the elements of the Roman law, and were composed, at the command of the Emperor Justinian, by Trebonian, Dorotheus, and Theophilus, who took them from the writings of the ancient lawyers, and chiefly from those of Gaius, especially from his Institutes and his books called Aureorum (i.e., of important matters).

The Institutes are divided into four books, each book into several titles, and each title into several parts—the first of which is called Principium, and those which follow paragraphs. The first book of the Institute has third thirty, and the fourth eighteen; in all ninety-one titles. First, it is to be observed that the division is triple—Persons, Things, and Actions, under which the subject-matter of the four books of the Institutes is comprised. The first book treats of the rights of Persons; the second, third, and five first titles of the fourth, of Things; and Actions are the subjects treated of from the sixth title of the fourth book to the end. The first book treats of Persons, but it is from Title III. only; for the first two, which are by way of introduction, explain Justice, Law, and Right; the meaning of the Right or State of Persons follows in two divisions, which complete the remaining part of the first book.

According to the chief Division of Persons treated of from Title III. to VIII. of the first books, men are either Free or Slaves. The condition of all slaves is the same, but it is not so with freemen, of whom some are free by birth, others by emancipation.

The second Division of Persons begins at Title VIII. of the first book, and is explained in the following titles of that book. It is of independent persons, and of such as are under the power of another. The power of masters over their slaves, and of fathers over their children, is first treated of; after which is shown the manner of acquiring paternal power, viz., by marriage, legitimation, and adoption, and how that power may be lost.

Title XIII. to the end of the first book treats of Pupils, or such as have Tutors; of Minors, or such as have Curators appointed to them; and lastly, of persons who are of age, and masters of their own actions.

In Title XX. matters relating to Curators, and in the last three of this book, three things, common to Tutors and Curators, are treated of. These are, the security they are obliged to give to indemnify pupils and minors; the lawful causes exempting persons from being tutors or curators, and those for which they may be deprived of their offices.

Things are treated of in Title I. of the second book to Title VI. of the fourth, under three heads—their divisions, the way of acquiring them, and the means by which they become due to us. The divisions are principally two; by the first, things are divided into those which belong to individuals and those which do not; by the second they are corporeal or incorporeal. The property in things is acquired either by Natural Law or by Civil Law.

Title II. explains the second Division of Things, which are either corporeal or incorporeal; and here real or personal services, as being incorporeal things, are treated of. The modes of acquisition introduced by the Civil Law follow; and the property of Things, according to the Civil Law, acquired either by particular or universal title.

Title VI. treats of Usucaption or just Usurpation, and the conditions which it requires, and Title VII. of Donations; Titles VIII. and IX. of those who have the power of alienation, and of those through whom property may be acquired.

Title III. shows how a Testament made in the form prescribed by law, and not invalidated, may be carried into execution, which is done by the heir accepting the succession.

Fiduciary Bequests are treated of in Titles XXIII. and XXIV.

Testamentary Successions, which take place before all others, are explained in the last fifteen titles of the second book.

Title I. of the third book, and those that follow, treat of Legal Successions, admissible only in default of Testamentary.

Title V. treats of the Succession to Intestates, to which the cognati, or female side, were admitted by the Prætorian equity, according to the degree of cognation.

The Title, in conclusion, treats of those who were excluded from this Prætorian succession, because allied to the deceased only by a servile relation.

The succession of Freemen is the subject of Title VII., and the assignment of Freemen that of Title VIII.

After disposing of the question of Succession, which by the Civil Law is the first mode of acquiring property by universal title, the other five modes which followed, by the Prætorian succession, are called bonorum possessio; acquisition by abrogation; the adjudication of the goods of a deceased person, in order to make the enfranchisement of slaves effectual; and the two abrogated successions, per bonorum venditionem and ex Senatus-Consulto Claudiano. Titles IX.—XII.

We then come to the last point relating to Things, viz.: Obligations, being the means whereby things accrue to us. The principal division of them is into two kinds. Civil, or those constituted by the laws, or at least recognised by the Civil Law, and Prætorian, or those which the prætor has established by his own authority, also called honorary. There is a further division of obligations into four kinds, for they arise (1) ex contractu; (2) quasi ex contractu; (3) ex maleficio; (4) quasi ex maleficio—Title XIII., 1 & 2. First it is shown what an Obligation is, and the causes producing a mixed Obligation—that is, partly natural and partly civil, as a contract, quasi-contract, crime, or offence.

Contracts made by words are called Stipulations, the general principles of which are first explained, in order to arrive at the chief divisions of that kind of contract. The first division is of the Stipulation made between the person who demands and him that promises, and of that made between several who stipulate or promise together.

The second is of the Stipulation made by free persons or slaves.

The third is of Stipulations that are called judicial, prætorian, common, or conventional.

The fourth is of Stipulations called equitable (utiles), or good in law, and of Stipulations which are inutiles.

The fifth is of Principal and Accessory Stipulations, called sureties or cautions.

Title XXII. treats of Written Contracts. The five following Titles explain contracts made by the sole consent of the contracting persons, which are the contracts of purchase, of hire, of partnership, and of mandate.

Title XXVIII. treats of Quasi-Contracts; the next shows how Obligations are to be acquired; and the last in what manner they may be extinguished. Having spoken of Obligations which arise from contracts or quasi-contracts, the first five titles of the fourth book treat of obligations arising out of faults and quasi faults—delicta or quasi delicta. The rest of the book from Title VI. or Title XVI., is devoted to the treatment of Actions. It begins with the definition of an Action, which is followed by several divisions explained in Title VI.; according to the chief and principal of which, Actions are either real, personal, or mixed. The second is of Actions derived from the Civil Law, and such as have their foundations in Prætorian equity. The third is of Actions by which the plaintiff seeks to recover a thing belonging or due to him, and of those by which the punishment of the offender only is aimed at, and of such actions by which both are intended. The fourth division is of actions by which the plaintiff sues for the single, double, treble, or quadruple value of the thing he would recover. The fifth is of Actions of good faith, strict law, and arbitrary.

The sixth is of Actions in which the total of what is due is sued for, and in which the defendant is either not sued for the whole, or in consequence of which he is condemned to pay only so much as his circumstances will allow.

After these divisions of Actions are explained, Title VII. treats of certain Prætorian Actions which are liable to and which proceed from contracts made by slaves or children under power, or else by persons to whom they have committed the management of their affairs.

Title VIII. speaks of Actions that may be brought against a master for an error committed by his slave.

Title IX. of Actions to which the owner is liable for the hurt or damage done by a beast.

Title X. directs what persons are to be employed in carrying on lawsuits.

Title XI. treats of the security required of the parties to a suit, or such as appear for them.

Title XII. sets forth the nature of temporary or perpetual Actions, and what Actions the law affords to or against heirs; which those are which lie in their favour, and not against them; and lastly, those which are neither allowed for nor against them.

Title XIII. treats of Exceptions, and Title XIV. of Replications.

Title XV. of Injunctions, or Actions to put the party injured into possession.

Title XVI. declares the Penalty against such as commence vexatious suits.

Title XVII. prescribes Rules to be observed by judges in the several suits brought before them.

And Title XVIII., the last, shows what were the Roman public prosecutions which every one had free liberty to institute, and of which the penalties were established by the laws called Judiciorum Publicorum Leges.

The Institutes are quoted in the same manner as the Code and Pandects, with the letter I. or Inst.; thus, § si adversus 12, I. De Nuptiis, is nothing more than the twelfth paragraph of the Title De Nuptiis, which, on reference to the index, will be found to be the tenth of the first book. This is usually now cited I. I., 10, 12.—1 Colqu. R. C. L. s. 61; Sand. Just., 5th ed.

INSTRUCT (v.a.), to convey information as a client to a solicitor, or as a solicitor to a counsel; to authorize one to appear as advocate.

INSTRUMENT [instrumentum, Lat., fr. instruo, to prepare or provide], a formal legal writing, e.g., a record, charter, deed, or agreement.

INSTRUMENTA, writings not under seal.

IN SUBSIDIUM (in aid).

INSUCKEN MULTURES, a quantity of corn paid by those who are thriled to a mill. See THRILAGE.

INSUFFICIENCY, an answer in Chancery was said to be insufficient when it did not specifically reply to the specific charges in the bill.

If a plaintiff conceived an answer to be insufficient, he might take exceptions to it in writing, stating the parts of the bill which he alleged were not answered, and praying that the defendant might in such respect file a further and full answer to the bill. Scandal and impertinence in an answer must have been disposed of before its sufficiency could be considered. See INTERROGATORIES.

For the former practice, see Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., i. 701—716, and ii. 1413.

Insuper, debiting or charging a person in an account.—Exchequer term. See an example of its use in Taxes Management Act, 1880, 43 & 44 Vict. c. 19, s. 112.

Insurance, the act of providing against a possible loss, by entering into a contract with one who is willing to give assurance, that is, to bind himself to make good such loss, should it occur. In this contract, the chances of benefit are equal to the insurer and the insured. The first actually pays a certain sum, and the latter undertakes to pay a larger, if an accident should happen. The one renders his property secure; the other receives money with the probability that it is clear gain. The instrument by which the contract is made is called a policy; the stipulated consideration a premium. It is generally made to provide either against risks at sea, or losses by fire, or death, or death or injury by accident.

Insurances are effected sometimes by companies or societies, and sometimes by individuals, the risk being in either case diffused amongst a number of persons. Companies formed for carrying on this business have generally a large subscribed, but uncalled capital, so as to enable them to raise large sums to make good extraordinary losses.

(I.) The practice of marine insurance is older than insurance against fire and upon lives.

While all fire and life insurances are made at the risk of companies, which include within themselves the requisites of security, wealth, and numbers, a large proportion of marine insurances is made at the risk of individuals called underwriters.

Until 1824, all firms and companies, with the exception of the two chartered companies—the Royal Exchange and London—were prohibited from taking marine insurances. The prohibition was then removed and the business of marine insurance was placed on the same footing as other business. There are now in London the two old chartered companies, the Royal Exchange and London; two established upon the passing of the act of 1824; the Alliance and the Indemnity Mutual; the Marine, established in 1836; and the General Maritime and Neptune in 1839; and many others since.

The underwriters meet in a subscription room at Lloyd's. The joint affairs of the subscribers to these rooms are managed by a committee chosen by the subscribers. Agents (who are commonly styled Lloyd's agents) are appointed in all the principal ports of the world, who forward regularly to Lloyd's accounts of the departures of ships from and arrivals at such ports, as well as of losses and other casualties; and, in general, all such information as may be supposed of importance towards guiding the judgments of the underwriters. These accounts are regularly filed, and are accessible to all the subscribers. The principal arrivals and losses are besides posted in two books, placed in two conspicuous parts of the room; and also in another book, which is placed in an adjoining room, for the use of the public at large.

The rooms are open from 10 a.m. till 5 p.m.; but the most considerable part of the business is transacted between one and four.

Merchants and shipowners who manage their own insurance business procure blank policies, which they fill up to meet the case, and submit them to underwriters, by whom they are subscribed or rejected. Each policy is handed about in this way until the amount required is complete. Merchants and shipowners also give orders to insurance-brokers, who undertake and are responsible for the business of insuring; and to them likewise are transmitted the orders for insurance from the outports and manufacturing towns.

The common form of policy is that in schedule E. to 30 Vict. c. 23.

Besides individual underwriters and companies, there are associations formed by shipowners, who agree, each entering his ships for a certain amount, to divide the losses sustained by any of them. These are institutions of long standing, but, since the alteration of the law in 1824, appear to be on the decline. Their formation originated in a two-fold reason:—1st, that the underwriters charged premiums more than commensurate with the risk; and, 2ndly, that they did not afford adequate protection.

The losses against which a merchant or shipowner is not protected by an insurance in this country, are the following:—

- (1) Acts of our own Government.
- (2) Breaches of the revenue laws.
- (3) Breaches of the law of nations.
- (4) Consequences of deviation.
- (5) All losses arising from unseaworthiness. Unseaworthiness may be caused in various ways, such as want of repair, want of stores, want of provisions, want of nautical instruments, insufficiency of hands to navigate the vessel, or incompetency of the master.
- (6) All loss arising from unusual protraction of the voyage.
- (7) All loss to which the shipowner is liable when his vessel does damage to others.
- (8) Average clause.

Average is a name applied to a certain description of loss, to which the merchant and shipowner are liable. There are two kinds of average—general and particular :

(a) General average comprehends all loss arising out of a voluntary sacrifice of a part of either vessel or cargo, made by the captain for the benefit of the whole. If a captain throw part of his cargo overboard, cut loose an anchor and cable, or cut away his masts, the loss is distributed over the value of the ship and cargo as general average.

(b) Particular average comprehends all loss occasioned to ship, freight, and cargo, which is not of so serious a nature as to debar them from reaching their port of destination, and when the damage to the ship is not so extensive as to render her not worth repairing.

Losses where the goods are saved, but in such a state as to be unfit to forward to their destination, and where the ship is rendered unfit to repair, are called 'partial or salvage loss.' The leading distinction between particular average and salvage loss, is, that in the first, the property insured remains the property of the assured; the damage sustained being made good by the insurer; in the second the property is abandoned to the insurer, and the value insured claimed from him, he retaining the property so abandoned. See CONSTRUCTIVE TOTAL LOSS.

All the elements of general average may be classed under four heads :—(1) Sacrifice of part of the ship and stores. (2) Sacrifice of part of the cargo and freight. (3) Remuneration of service required for general preservation. (4) Expense of raising money to replace what has been sacrificed, and to remunerate services. See Arnould on Marine Insurance.

(II.) Insurance against fire is a contract of indemnity (see Darrell v. Tibbits, 5 C. P. D. 560), by which the insurer, in consideration of a certain premium received by him in a gross sum or by annual payments, undertakes to indemnify against all loss or damage to houses or other buildings, stock, goods, and merchandise, by fire during a specified period.

Insurances against fire are hardly ever made by individuals, but almost always by corporations or joint-stock companies; of which there are several in all the considerable towns throughout the empire.

The conditions on which the different offices insure are contained in the proposals printed on the back of the policies, and it is in most instances expressly conditioned that they undertake to pay the loss, not exceeding the sum insured, 'according to the exact tenor of their printed proposals.'

Sometimes no one office will insure to the amount required; and in such a case it is done by different offices. To prevent frauds by insuring the full value in various offices, there is, in the proposals issued, an article requiring notice of any other insurance upon the same houses or goods, that the same may be specified and allowed by indorsement, so that each office may bear its proportion of loss; and, unless such notice is given, the insurance is void.

The risk commences in general from the signing of the policy, unless there be some other time specified. Policies of insurances may be annual or for a term of years at an annual premium; and it is usual for the office, by way of indulgence, to allow fifteen days after the expiration of each year for the payment of the premium for the next year; and provided the premium be paid within that time, the insured is considered as within the protection of the office.

Insurances are generally divided into common, hazardous, and doubly hazardous.

(a) Common insurances.—(1) Buildings covered with slates, etc., and built with brick or stone, etc., and wherein no hazardous trade or manufacture is carried on, or hazardous goods deposited. (2) Goods in buildings as above described, such as household goods, plate, etc. The premium upon these, with certain exceptions, is 1s. 6d. per cent. per annum.

(β) Hazardous insurances.—(1) Buildings of timber or plaster, or not wholly separated by partition-walls of brick or stone, or not covered with slates, etc., and thatched barns having no chimney, but in which hazardous goods are deposited, etc. (2) Ships and craft, with their contents (lime barges, with their contents, alone excepted). At 2s. 6d. per cent. per annum, with certain exceptions.

(γ) Doubly hazardous insurances.—(1) Thatched buildings having chimneys, etc., and hazardous buildings in which hazardous goods are deposited, etc. (2) All hazardous goods deposited in hazardous buildings and in thatched buildings having no chimney, nor adjoining to any building having a chimney. At 4s. 6d. per cent. per annum, with certain exceptions.

The stamp duty of 1s. 6d. formerly payable in respect of insurances against fire has been abolished by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 121, s. 12.

As to relief against forfeiture for not insuring against fire according to covenants in a lease, see FORFEITURE.

(III.) There are three classes of life insurance companies. The first class consists of corporations or joint-stock companies, who undertake to pay fixed sums upon the death of the individuals insuring with them; the profits made by such companies being wholly divided among the proprietors. Of this class are the Royal Exchange, Globe, etc. The second class are also corporations or joint-stock companies with proprietary bodies; but instead of undertaking to pay specified sums upon the death of the insured, they allow the latter to participate to a certain extent in the profits of the business. The mode is not the same in all; in some the principle on which the allotment is made is not disclosed. The Rock, Sun, Alliance, Guardian, Atlas, etc., belong to this mixed class. The third species of company is that which is formed on the basis of mutual insurance. In this there is no proprietary body distinct from the assured: the latter share among themselves the whole profits of the concern, after deducting the expenses of management. The Equitable Society, the Amicable, the Norwich Life, etc., belong to this class.

To hinder gambling transactions upon life insurance, it was enacted by 14 Geo. III. c. 48, that no insurance should be made by any person on the life of any person, or any other event wherein the person for whom the policy should be made, shall have no interest, or by way of wager; and that every insurance made contrary to that act should be void. As to abatement of income-tax in respect to insurance on lives, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 91, continued by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 5.

By the 'Life Assurance Companies' Act, 1870' (33 & 34 Vict. c. 61), many important provisions have been introduced for the regulation of life assurance companies, requiring inter alia that every company shall prepare a yearly statement of its revenue and of its balance-sheet according to prescribed forms, and shall cause certain periodical investigations to be made into its affairs, and prepare and furnish to shareholders and policy holders certain periodical statements of its business, etc. See an amending act, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 58, again amended by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 41.

By the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 11, where a married man or woman insures his or her life for the expressed benefit of his or her wife, husband, or children, the policy moneys are not subject to his or her debts, unless an intent to defraud creditors be proved.

The 30 & 31 Vict. c. 144, enables assignees of life policies to sue in their own names; and the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 86, gives a similar power to the assignees of marine policies. In either case the assignment may be made by indorsement. See also the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, which in certain cases entitles the assignees of a chose in action to the legal right in such chose in action.

Intakers, receivers of stolen goods.

Integer. See RES INTEGRA.

Intendent, a person who has the charge, direction, and management, of some office or department.

Intendment, the true meaning.

Intentio, a count.—Bract.

Intentio ceca mala. 2 Buls. 179.—(A hidden intention is bad.)

Intentio inservire debet legibus, non leges intentioni. Co. Litt. 314.—(Intention ought to be subservient to the laws; not the laws to the intention.)

Intentio mea imponit nomen operi meo. Hob. 123.—(My intent gives a name to my act.)

Intentione, a writ that lay against him who entered into lands after the death of a tenant in dower, or for life, etc., and held out to him in reversion or remainder.—F. N. B. 203.

Inter alia (amongst other things).

Inter canem et lupum (between the dog and the wolf), twilight; called also mock shadow, daylight's-gate, and betwixt hawk and buzzard.—Cowel.

Intercedere, to become bound for another's debt.—Civ. Law.

Intercommoning, where the commons of two manors lie together, and the inhabitants of both have time out of mind depastured their cattle promiscuously in each. See COMMON.

Interdict, Interdiction, an ecclesiastical censure prohibiting the administration of divine ceremonies, either to particular persons or in particular places, or both. This severe censure has been long disused. In the civil law interdicts were certain formales by which the process ordered or forbade something to be done; they were chiefly employed in disputes as to possession, or quasi possession, and were nearly equivalent to our writ of injunction. For a division of them, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 480. Also in Scotch law, an injunction.

Interdiction of fire and water [interdictio ignis et aquae, Lat.], banishment by an order that no man should supply the person banished with fire or water, the two necessities of life.

Interesse termini, an executory interest, being a right of entry which a lessee acquires in land by virtue of a demise. It cannot, before entry, be enlarged by a release from the lessor (except the term be created by an assurance under the Statute of Uses, which does not require an entry), because the lessee has no actual estate; yet such a release would extinguish the rent and also the interesse termini. The lessee can assign this interest, but it will not merge in the freehold subsequently acquired.

Interest, money paid or allowed for the loan or use of some other sum, lent at a fixed rate. The sum lent is called the principal, the interest is called the rate per cent., and the principal and interest added together is called the amount. It is distinguished into simple and compound. (1) Simple interest is that which is paid for the principal or sum lent, at a certain rate or allowance made by law, or agreement of parties. (2) Compound interest is when the arrears of interest of one year are added to the principal, and the interest for the following year is calculated on that accumulation. By 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 28, interest, at a rate not exceeding the current rate, may be recovered if and as a jury think fit upon debts payable at a certain time or otherwise, if such debts be payable by virtue of some written instrument, at a certain time, or, if payable otherwise, then from the time when demand of payment shall have been made in writing, with a notice that interest will be claimed until payment. By s. 29, interest may in like manner also be recovered in actions for taking away goods, or on policies of assurance. Judgments carry interest at four per cent. (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 17). By the 'Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870' (33 & 34 Vict. c. 28, s. 17), the taxing officer may allow interest on moneys disbursed by a solicitor for his client, and on moneys of the client in the hands of the solicitor, and improperly retained by him.

See also USURY.

2. A chattel-real, as a lease for years, or a future estate (1 Inst. 46), or indeed any estate, right, or title in realty.—1 Inst. 345.

Interest reipublice ne maleficia remaneant impunita. Jenk. Cent. 31; Wing. 140.—(It is the concern of the State that evil deeds do not go unpunished.)

Interest reipublice supreme hominum testamenta rata haberi. Co. Litt. 236 b.—(It is the concern of the State that last wills should be given effect to.)

Interest reipublice ut sit finis litium. Co. Litt. 303.—(It concerns the State that there be an end of lawsuits.) See LIMITATION.

Interest suit. An action in the Probate Branch of the High Court of Justice, in which the question in dispute is as to which party is entitled to a grant of letters of administration of the estate of a deceased person. For the forms of pleading in such an action, see Jud. Act, 1875, App. C., No. 17.

Interest upon interest, compound interest.

Interested witness, a witness is not excluded from giving evidence by reason of his interest in the matter in question.—6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1. See INCOMPETENT WITNESS.

Interim order, one made in the meantime, and until something is done.

Interlineation, the insertion of any matter in a written instrument after it is engrossed or executed. A deed may be avoided by interlineation, unless a memorandum be made thereof at the time of the execution or attestation. If there be any interlineation or erasure in the jurat of an affidavit, that affidavit cannot be read, unless authenticated by initials of officer, etc.—R. S. C., Ord. XXXVII., Rule 3 g.

Interlocutory. An interlocutory order or judgment is that which is made or given during the progress of an action, and does not finally determine it; e.g., an order for inspection or production of documents, and a motion for such an order is termed an interlocutory motion. For rules as to interlocutory orders in proceedings in the Supreme Court, see Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LII.

Interloper [fr. inter, Lat., between, and loopen, to run], a person who intercepts the trade of others.

International law, the law of nations, strictly so called, was in a great measure unknown to antiquity, and is the slow growth of modern times, under the combined influence of Christianity and commerce. When the Roman empire was destroyed, the Christian world was divided into many independent sovereignties, acknowledging no common head and connected by no uniform civil polity. The invasions of the barbarians of the north, the establishment of the feudal system in the middle ages, and the military spirit and enterprise cherished by the crusades, struck down all regular commerce, and surrendered all private rights and contracts to mere despotic power. It was not until the revival of commerce on the shores of the Mediterranean, and the revival of letters and the study of the civil law by the discovery of the Pandects, had given an increased enterprise to maritime navigation, and a subsequent importance to maritime contracts, that anything like a system of international justice began to be developed. It first assumed the modest form of commercial usage; it was next promulgated under the more imposing authority of royal ordinances; and it finally became, by silent adoption, a generally connected system, founded upon natural convenience, and asserted by the general comity of the commercial nations of Europe. The system, thus introduced for the purposes of commerce, has gradually extended itself to other objects, as the intercourse of nations has become more free and frequent. New rules, resting on the basis of general convenience and enlarged sense of national duty, have from time to time been promulgated by jurists, and supported by courts of justice, by a course of judicial reasoning, which has to a certain extent commanded respect and obedience, without the aid, either of municipal statutes, or of royal ordinances, or of international treaties.

It is plain that the laws of one country can have no intrinsic force, proprio vigore, except within the territorial limits and jurisdiction of that country. They can bind only its own subjects, and others who are within its jurisdictional limits; and the latter only while they remain therein. No other nation, or its subjects, are bound to yield the slightest obedience to those laws. Whatever extra-territorial force they are to have is the result, not of any original power to extend them abroad, but of that respect which, from motives of public policy, other nations are disposed to yield to them, giving them effect, as the phrase is, sub mutue vicissitudinis obtentu, with a wise and liberal regard to common convenience and mutual benefits and necessities.

The first and most general maxim stated in international jurisprudence, is that every nation possesses an exclusive sovereignty and jurisdiction in its own territory.

Another maxim is, that no state or nation can, by its laws, directly affect or bind property out of its own territory, or persons not resident therein, natural-born subjects or others. This is a natural consequence of the first proposition.

From these two maxims flows a third, that whatever force the laws of one country have in another, depends solely upon the municipal laws of the latter.

Huberus has laid down that all persons who are found within the limits of a government, whether their residence is permanent or temporary, are to be deemed subjects thereof: and that the rulers of every empire, from comity, admit that the laws of every people, in force within its own limits, ought to have the same force everywhere, so far as they do not prejudice the powers or rights of other governments, or of their citizens. Internuncio, or Internunciatus, a messenger between two parties; also, the pope's representative in other countries.

Interpellation, a citation or summons.

Interpolate, to insert words in a complete document.

Interpolation, the act of interpolating; the words interpolated.

Interpleader Act, 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 58. This statute comprehends two classes of persons:—(1) Persons generally.

After reciting that 'it often happens that a person sued at law for the recovery of money or goods, wherein he has no interest, and which are also claimed of him by some third party, has no means of relieving himself from such adverse claims but by a suit in equity against the plaintiff and such third party, usually called a bill of interpleader, which is attended with expense and delay,' this statute enacts that upon application made on behalf of any defendant in any action of assumpsit, debt, detinue or trover, after declaration and before plea, by affidavit or otherwise, showing that such defendant does not claim any interest in the subject matter of the suit, but that the right thereto is claimed, or supposed to belong to some third party, who has sued, or is expected to sue, for the same; and that such defendant does not in any manner collude with such third party, but is ready to bring into court the subject matter of the action; the court or any judge thereof may make rules or orders calling upon such third party to appear and to state the nature and particulars of his claim, and maintain or relinquish his claim, and upon such rule or order to hear the allegations of such third party and of the plaintiff, and in the meantime to stay the proceedings in such action; and finally may order such third party to make himself defendant in the same or some other action, or to proceed to trial on a feigned issue (see FEIGNED ISSUE); and also may direct which shall be plaintiff or defendant, or with the consent of the plaintiff and such third party, may dispose of the merits of their claims in a summary manner, and make such other rules and orders as to costs, etc., as may be just (s. 1).

The judgment in any such action or issue so directed, and the summary decision, shall be conclusive against the parties (s. 2).

If such third person shall not appear upon such rule or order to maintain or relinquish his claim being duly served, or shall neglect to comply with any rule or order to be made after appearance, the court or a judge may declare such third party, and all persons claiming under him, barred from prosecuting his claim against the original defendant (saving the right of such third party against the plaintiff), and may make such order between defendant and plaintiff, as to costs, etc., as may be just (s. 3). See also ss. 4—7, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, ss. 12—18.

This act did not take away the remedy by bill of interpleader; and if proceedings in equity had been instituted, the court would not afterwards interfere.

(2) Sheriffs and other officers.

The act, after reciting that difficulties sometimes arise in the execution of process, by reason of claims made by assignees of bankrupts, etc., not the parties against whom process has issued, whereby sheriffs are exposed to actions, enacts, that when any such claim shall be made to any goods taken or intended to be taken, in execution, or to the proceeds thereof, it shall and may be lawful to and for the court from which such process issued, upon application of such sheriff, made before or after the return, and before or after action brought against such sheriff, to call before them, by rule of court, the party issuing process, and the party claiming, and thereupon to exercise all powers or authorities contained in the sections already set out, and make such rules and decisions as shall be just, and the costs of all such proceedings shall be in the discretion of the court (s. 6). The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, gives to any judge all the powers given to the court by the above act.

Interpleader Acts: The statutes are incorporated into the Judicature Acts, by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. I., r. 2, which provides that, with respect to interpleader, the procedure and practice now used by courts of law under the Interpleader Acts, 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 58, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, 'shall apply to all actions and all the divisions of the High Court of Justice, and the application by a defendant shall be made at any time after being served with a writ of summons, and before delivering a defence.'

As to appeals in interpleader cases from the county court; see 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 86.

Interpleader, Bill of. See last article.

Interpretare et concordare leges legibus est optimus interpretandi modus. 8 Co. 169.—(To interpret and to reconcile the laws to laws is the best mode of interpretation.)

Interpretatio fienda est ut res magis valeat quam pereat. Jenk. Cent. 198.—(Such an interpretation is to be adopted, that the thing may rather stand than fall.)

Interpretatio talis in ambiguis semper fienda est, ut evitetur inconveniens et absurdum. 4 Inst. 328.—(In doubtful matters, such an interpretation is to be made that inconvenience and absurdity may be avoided.)

Interpretation clause, a section of an act of parliament which defines the meaning of certain words occurring frequently in the other sections.

Interpreters, persons sworn at a trial to interpret the evidence of a foreigner or a deaf and dumb person to the court.

Interregnum, the time during which a throne is vacant in elective kingdoms; for in such as are hereditary, as in England, there can be no interregnum, the sovereign, in his artificial capacity, never dying.

Interrogatories, written questions, addressed on behalf of one party to a cause, before the trial thereof, to the other party, who is bound to answer them in writing upon oath.

In the Courts of Equity either party could from very early times interrogate the other. In the Courts of law, this power was first given by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, s. 51, which, however, only allowed it to be exercised by leave of the court or a judge. The Judicature Act, Ord. XXXVI., dispensed with this leave, but allowed the interrogated party to apply to have interrogatories struck out, on the ground of irrelevancy or on other grounds.

As to the grounds on which an interrogatory might be objected to at Common Law, see Day's C. L. P. Acts.

And as to exceptions or demurrers to interrogatories in Chancery, see Dan. Ch. Prac., 5th ed. See further DISCOVERY.

By an Order in Council dated the 18th November, 1867, the provisions of the C. L. P. Act, 1854, in regard to interrogatories, were extended to the county courts.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVII., r. 1, the Court or a Judge may order that any witness, whose attendance in Court ought for some sufficient cause to be dispensed with, be examined by interrogatories or otherwise before a Commissioner or Examiner. See further as to the examination of witnesses before trial and of witnesses in the colonies or in India, and elsewhere abroad, by interrogatories, 13 Geo. III. c. 63, and 1 Wm. IV. c. 22, and 2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed.

In terrorem (by way of terrifying). Where a condition which the law will not carry out is attached to a gift or a legacy, as where a legacy is left to a single woman on condition that she will not marry, this condition is said to be in terrorem only, and void.

Interruptio multiplex non tollit prescriptionem semel obtentam. 2 Inst. 654.—(Frequent interruption does not take away a prescription once secured.)

Interruption, a term applied in Scotch law to the step requisite by law to stop the running of the period of limitation.—Bell's Dict.

Intervention. A third person not originally a party to a suit, but claiming an interest in the matter, may interpose at any stage of the suit, in defence of his own interest, whenever affected, either as to person or property. This is called intervention, and was peculiar to the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts. It is now practised in actions or suits in the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division of the High Court. An intervenor must take the cause as he finds it at the time of his intervention, and can only do what he might have done had he been a party in the first instance; but the court may relax this rule under special circumstances.

In Probate actions, any person not named in the writ may intervene and appear in the action as heretofore on filing an affidavit showing how he is interested in the estate of the deceased (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XII., r. 16). And, in an admiralty action in rem any person not named in the writ may intervene and appear as heretofore on filing an affidavit showing that he is interested in the res under arrest, or in the fund in the registry (Ibid., r. 17). As to actions for the recovery of land, see Ibid., r. 18.

By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 7, the Queen's proctor, or any other person, may intervene in any suit for the dissolution of marriage, on the ground that the parties have been guilty of collusion, or that material facts have been suppressed. By 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32, s. 3, no decree nisi for a divorce can be made absolute, until after six months from the pronouncing thereof. The 36 Vict. c. 31, extends to proceedings for nullity of marriage the provisions of these two sections.

In testamentis plenius testatoris intentionem scrutamur. 3 Buls. 103.—(In wills we more especially seek out the intention of the testator.)

In testamentis plenius voluntates testantium interpretantur. D. 50, 17, 12.—(In wills the intention of testators is more especially regarded): 'that is to say,' says Mr. Broom (Max., 5th ed., p. 568), 'a will will receive a more liberal construction than its strict meaning, if alone considered, would permit.'

In testamentis ratio tacita non debet considerari sed verba solum spectari debent, adeo per divinationem mentis a verbis recedere durum est. (In wills, an unexpressed meaning ought not to be considered, but the words alone ought to be looked to; so hard is it to recede from the words by guessing at the intention.)

Intestate, one who has left no will. Swinburne, Godolphin, and others of the earlier writers on the subject, apply the term to one who dies leaving a will, but not appointing an executor; the term testament being formerly applied only to a will which appointed an executor. See Swinburne, pt. 1, s. 1; and 1 Williams on Executors, 6. See DISTRIBUTION and ADMINISTRATOR.

Intestatus decedit, qui aut omnino testamentum non fecit; aut non jure fecit; aut id quod fecerat ruptum irritumve factum est; aut nemo ex eo hæres exstitit. Civil Law.—(A person dies intestate who either has made no testament at all, or has made one not legally valid; or if the testament he has made be revoked, or made useless; or if no one becomes heir under it.)

As to the grant of administration to the widows and children of intestates through the registrars of County Courts, see 36 & 37 Vict. c. 52, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 27; and as to similar proceedings in Scotland, see 38 & 39 Vict. c. 41.

Intol and Uttol, toll or custom paid for things imported or exported.

In totidem verbis (in so many words).

In toto, altogether.

In toto et pars continetur. D. 50, 17, 113.—(In the whole a part is also contained.)

Intoxicating liquors. The sale of intoxicating liquors by retail is regulated by numerous statutes, of which the principal are the Licensing Act, 1828, 9 Geo. IV. c. 61; the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 27; the Licensing Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 94; the Licensing Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 49; and the Beer Dealers Retail Licenses Amendment Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 34. The effect of these statutes is shortly as follows:—

1. Two licenses are in every case (except where the sale is to be in theatres or on packet-boats, or of methylated spirits or spruce, or by the holders of wholesale spirit or wine licenses) required; one from the justices of the peace, and one from the inland revenue, the first discretionary, and the second obtainable as of right on production of the justices' license. The justices' license is grantable only at a 'general annual licensing meeting,' held in every division of a county, and in every borough having a separate commission of the peace, in March in Middlesex and Surrey, and between the 20th August and the 14th September elsewhere.

2. The licenses are either (a) general, authorizing the sale of any kind of liquor to be drunk either on or off the premises where sold, or (b) particular, authorizing the sale of only wine or beer or spirits, as the case may be, to be drunk on and off, or only off the premises where sold, as the case may be. The general license is commonly called an 'ale-house license' or a 'public-house license.'

3. Each license is expressed to be for one year only.

4. A 'new license,' i.e., a license in respect of premises not theretofore licensed for the sale of liquor to be drunk on the premises, requires confirmation by a second body of justices, from whose refusal to confirm there is no appeal.

5. A license granted by way of renewal requires no such confirmation. From a refusal to grant it there is an appeal to quarter sessions. Holders of certain wine and beer licenses first granted before 1869 (before which year wine and beer might be sold without a justices' license) have special privileges, it being expressly enacted by s. 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, that no renewal of such licenses may be refused except on the ground of the applicants not producing satisfactory evidence of good character, etc.

6. The holders of licenses are subject to very strict police regulations. Their houses must be closed at certain hours; and may be entered by the police at any time. They are subject to penalties for permitting drunkenness or gaming, for harbouring constables or prostitutes, and other offences. In some cases the convicting justices may 'record' a conviction on the offender's license, and a third conviction after two recorded convictions entails forfeiture of the license.

In transitu (during the passage). See STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

Intrare marisecum, to drain a marsh or low ground, and convert it into herbage or pasture.

Intrinsecum servitium, common and ordinary duties with the lord's court.—Kenn. Gloss.

Intromission, the assuming possession and management of property belonging to another, either on legal grounds or without any authority, which latter is termed vicious intromission.—Scotch Law.

Intruder. See INTRUSION.

Intrusion, the entry of a stranger after a particular estate of freehold is determined before him in reversion or remainder. Where a tenant for life dies seised of certain lands or tenements, and a stranger enters thereon after such death of the tenant, and before any entry of him in remainder or reversion, such stranger is called an intruder.

The writ of entry on intrusion is abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. See ABATEMENT.

Intrusion, Information of. See INFORMATION.

Inure, to take effect.—Cowel.

Inutilis labor, et sine fructu, non est effectus legis. Co. Litt. 127.—(Useless labour, and without fruit, is not the effect of law.)

In vacuo, without object; without concomitants, or coherence.

Inviadare, to pledge or mortgage lands.

In vadio (in gage; in pledge).

Invasiones, the inquisition of serjeanties and knights' fees.—Cowel.

Invecta et illata. This term, in questions of hypothec and thirlage, applies to the articles brought within the tenement or within the thirl. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Invention, Title by, the mode of acquiring an ownership in patent-rights and copyrights. See COPYRIGHT and LETTERS PATENT.

Inventiones, treasure-trove.—Cowel.

Inventory, a list or schedule, containing a true description of goods and chattels, or furniture, etc., made upon a sale, or by an executor of his testator's effects, or by an administrator of those of the intestate. See EXECUTOR.

In ventre sa mère (in his mother's womb). See UNBORN CHILD.

In verbis non verba sed res et ratio quaerenda est. Jenk. Cent. 132.—(In [the construction of] words, not the mere words, but the thing and the meaning are to be inquired after.)

Inveritare, to make proof of a thing.—Jacob.

Invest, to give possession, or lay out money. When a trustee, executor, or administrator is not expressly forbidden to invest in real securities in the United Kingdom, or stock of the Bank of England or Ireland, or East Indian Stock, such trustee, etc., may invest therein, and not be liable for breach of trust.—22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 32.

Investiture, the open delivery of seisin or possession.

In viridi observantiâ, present to the minds of men, and in full force and operation.

Invito beneficium non datur. D. 50, 17, 69.—(A benefit is not conferred on one who is unwilling to receive it) that is to say, no one can be compelled to accept a benefit. See Broom's Max., 5th ed., 699.

Invito domino [Lat.] (without the assent of the lord or owner).

In vocibus videndum non à quo sed ad quid sumatur. Ellesm. Postn. 62.—(In discourses it is to be seen not from what, but to what, it is advanced.)

Invoice [perhaps corrupted fr. envoyez, Fr., send], a written account of the particulars of goods sent or shipped to a purchaser, factor, etc., with the value, or prices, or charges annexed.

Iota, the minutest quantity possible. Iota is the smallest Greek letter. The word 'jot' is derived therefrom.

I O U, a written acknowledgment of a debt, so called because it commences with those letters, which custom has substituted for the words, I owe you, because they have the same sound. It ordinarily runs thus :

'To Mr. A. B., I O U Twenty Pounds. C. D. January 1st, 1863.'

If in the above form, it requires no stamp, being neither receipt, agreement, nor promissory note. If it contains a promise to pay the money, it must be stamped as a promissory note, or, as an agreement, if it contain terms of agreement, the subject of which is of the value of 5*l*. It should be addressed to the creditor by name, but that is not essential to its validity. It is evidence of an account stated with the creditor, if named; if he is not named, it is prima facie evidence of an account stated with the person producing it. It is not negotiable.

Ipse dixit (he himself said it, Lat.), a bare assertion resting on the authority of an individual.

Ipse leges cupiunt ut jure regantur. Co. Litt. 174.—(The laws themselves require that they should be governed by right.)

Ipsa facto (by the very act itself). A censure of excommunication in the Ecclesiastical Court, immediately incurred for divers offences, after lawful trial.

Ire ad largum (to go at large; to escape; to be set at liberty).

Ireland, was a distinct kingdom until the 1st of January, 1801, when the 'United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland' was formed.—39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 67; 40 Geo. III. c. 38. See SCOTLAND AND IRELAND.

Irish Church Disestablishment Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 42, amended by 35 & 36 Vict. cc. 13, 90; see, too, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 42.

Irish Constabulary. See 37 & 38 Vict. c. 80; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 74; and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 44. There are numerous earlier acts, for a list of which see Biddle's Table of References to the Public General Acts.

Irish Judgment. A judgment of the High Court of Justice in Ireland is enforceable after registration of a certificate thereof by the High Court of Justice in England, under the Judgments Extension Act, 1869, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 64, and a judgment of an inferior Court in Ireland is similarly enforceable by an English County Court under the Inferior Courts Judgments Extension Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 31.

Irish Land Acts. 'The Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870,' 33 & 34 Vict. c. 46 (amended by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 32), and 'The Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881,' 44 & 45 Vict. c. 49. By the Act of 1870, provision is made for giving the tenant compensation for improvements, and for 'disturbance,' etc. By the Act of 1881, the Act of 1870 is amended in favour of the tenant, and provision is made for the sale by a tenant of his holding, and for fixing the amount of rent by a Court.

Irregularity, disorder, going out of rule; also an impediment to taking holy orders.

As to irregularities at common law, see 2 Chit. Arch. Prac., and in Equity, Sm. Ch. Pr. 168; and see the Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LIX., by which non-compliance with rules subjects proceedings to be set aside as irregular.

Irrepleviable, or Irreplevisable, that which cannot be replevied or delivered on sureties.

Irrevocable, incapable of being revoked; powers of appointment are sometimes executed so as to be irrevocable (see POWERS OF APPOINTMENT); no will is ever irrevocable.

Irritancy, the becoming void; forfeiture.

Irritant clause, a provision by which certain prohibited acts specified in a deed are, if committed, declared to be null and void. A resolutive clause dissolves and puts an end to the right of a proprietor on his committing the acts so declared void.—Scotch Law.

Is qui cognoscit. (He who acknowledges, i.e., a cognisor.)

Isle of Man. See MAN, ISLE OF.

Issint [Nor. Fr.], thus, so.

Issuable plea, a plea on which a plaintiff may take issue, and go to trial upon the merits. See now STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Issuable terms. Hilary and Trinity were so called because in them issues were made up for the assizes. But for town causes, all the four terms were issuable. The division of the legal year into terms is now abolished, so far as relates to the administration of justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 26).

Issue [fr. exitus, Lat.], used in several senses:—(1) The legitimate offspring of parents. The word issue in a will is either a word of purchase or of limitation, as will best answer the intention of the testator, though in the case of a deed it is universally taken as a word of purchase.—2 Fonbl. Eq. 69.

(2) The profits arising from lands or tenements, amerciaments, or fines.

(3) Event, consequence, evacuation, sending forth.

(4) The point in question, at the conclusion of the pleadings between contending parties in an action, when one side affirms, and the other denies. As to the former practice at common law, see 1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 306, 916; and as to the former issues from Chancery, see Sm. Ch. Pr. 787.

Digitized by Microfilm provided by the present rules of pleading that, subject to the rule that each party must deal specifically with each allegation of fact in any claim made by his opponent, of which he does not admit the truth, the plaintiff by his reply may join issue on the defence, and each party in his pleading, if any, subsequent to reply, may join issue upon the previous pleading, and such joinder of issue shall operate as a denial of every material allegation, not specially admitted, in the pleading upon which issue is joined (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., rr. 20, 21). By Ord. XXVI. a judge may direct preparation of issues, and settle them if the parties differ; but this Order has seldom, if ever, been acted upon. See PLEADING.

Issue roll, to enter issues joined upon, abolished by rules in 4 Wm. IV.

Ita semper fiat relatio ut valeat dispositio. 6 Rep. 76.—(Let the interpretation be always such that the disposition may prevail.)

Ita utere tuo ut alienum non ledas. (Use your own property and your own rights in such a way that you will not hurt your neighbour, or prevent him from enjoying his.)

Jacens [lying in abeyance].

Jack-Ketch [supposed to be fr. John Ketch, a noted hangman in 1682, of whom his wife said that any bungler might put a man to death, but only her husband knew how to make a gentleman die sweetly], a vulgar name for a hangman.

Jacobus, a gold coin worth 24s., so called from James I., who was king when it was struck.—Encyc. Lond.

Jactitation [fr. jactito, Lat., to boast], a false pretension to marriage.—Canon. Law.

The suit of jactitation of marriage (jactitationis matrimonii causa), which is not known to modern practice, may still be brought in the Divorce Court by the express terms of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 6, when a person falsely boasts that he or she is married to another whereby a reputation of their marriage may ensue. The party injured sues for the purpose of having perpetual silence enjoined upon the unjustifiable boaster.

Jactivus, lost by default; tossed away.

Jactus, or Jactura mercium (a throwing away of goods), jetsam, which see.

Jaghire, Jaghur, Jagir (literally, the place of taking). An assignment to an individual of the government share of the produce of a portion of land. There were two species of jaghires; one, personal, for the use of the grantee; another, in trust for some public service, most commonly the maintenance of troops.—Indian.

Jail [fr. geôle, Fr.], a prison or gaol.

Jeofail [corruption of j'ai, failli, Fr., I have failed], an oversight in pleading or other law proceedings. After verdict the mistakes and omissions in pleadings, misjoining of issue, discontinuance, misawarding of jury process, etc., were in certain circumstances rectified by various statutes called the Statutes of Jeofails. See AMENDMENT.

Jerguer, or Jerquer, an officer of the custom-house, who superintends the waiters.—Phillips.

Jervis's Acts, 11 & 12 Vict. cc. 42, 43, 44, regulating (1) the commitment by justices of persons accused of indictable offences; (2) the summary conviction by justices of persons charged with trivial offences; and (3) the bringing of actions against justices, so called because they were prepared and passed through Parliament by Chief Justice Jervis, then Attorney-General, in 1848.

Jesse. A large brass candlestick, usually hung in the middle of a church or choir.—Cowel.

Jetsam, Jettison, or Jetson [fr. jeter, Fr.], goods or other things which having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 76; and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 499, 500; and FLOTSAM.

Jeux de Bourse, speculating in the public funds, stock-jobbing.—French phrase.

Jews. Several statutes have been passed during the present reign respecting the Jews. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 52, giving them relief as to municipal offices; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59, removing disabilities in regard to religious opinions; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 58, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, ss. 21, 22, as to their marriages; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48, s. 5, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 63, as to their making declarations as a qualification for office; and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 49, empowering either House of Parliament by resolution to allow them to omit the words 'upon the true faith of a Christian' from the form of oath then required to be taken by members of Parliament. The 'Promissory Oaths Act, 1868' (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), has since prescribed a form of oath containing no reference to the faith of a Christian, and the 'Promissory Oaths Act, 1871' (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), repeals 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 49, except s. 4, which provides that the official patronage of a professing Jew shall devolve on the Archbishop of Canterbury. By s. 3 of 21 & 22 Vict. c. 49, nothing in that act contained was to extend to enable professing Jews to hold the office of Lord Chancellor.

Jobber, one who buys or sells for a speedy profit by re-sale or re-purchase, especially on the Stock Exchange.

Jocalia, jewels, paraphernalia.—Cowel.

Joclet, a little manor or farm.—Cowel.

Jocus partitus, an election between two proposals.—Bract., l. 4, tr. 1, c. 32.

John Doe, the name which was usually given to the fictitious lessee of the plaintiff in the mixed action of ejectment: he was sometimes called Goodtitle. See EJECTMENT. So the Romans had their fictitious personages in law proceedings, as Titius, Seius.—Jur. Sat. iv. 13.

Joinder of causes of action, coupling two or more matters in the same suit or proceeding.

Under the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 41, causes of action of whatever kind, provided they were by and against the same parties, and in the same rights, might be joined in the same suit; but this did not extend to replevin or ejectment; and where two or more of the causes of action so joined were local, and arose in different counties, the venue might be laid in either of such counties, but the Court or a judge had power to prevent the trial of different causes of action together, if such trial would be inexpedient, and in such case such court or judge might order separate records to be made up, and separate trials to be had.—Steph. on Plead., 7th ed., 325—6. The joinder in one bill in Equity of distinct and independent matters which was termed multifariousness was a ground of objection to the bill. See MULTIFARIOUSNESS.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Order XVII., it is provided that the plaintiff may bring in the same action and the same statement of claim several causes of action, subject to various powers of the court or a judge to order separate trials.

Joinder in pleading, accepting the issue, and mode of trial tendered, either by demurrer, error, or issue in fact, by the opposite party. See now Issue.

Joinder of parties. See PARTIES.

Joint, combined; shared amongst many; in the same possession.

Joint fiat, a fiat which was issued against two or more trading partners. Abolished. See FIAT.

Joint-heir, a co-heir.

Joint-stock Banks, joint-stock companies for the purpose of banking. They are regulated, according to the date of their incorporation, by charter, or by 7 Geo. IV. c. 46; 7 & 8 Vict. cc. 32 and 113; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 45 (in Scotland and Ireland); 20 & 21 Vict. c. 49; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 32; or by 'The Joint-stock Companies Act, 1862,' 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, which latter act makes registration under it compulsory in the case of a partnership consisting of more than ten persons. It is believed that the liability of the shareholders in chartered banks is in most if not in all cases limited to some amount fixed by the charter, generally twice the amount of their shares. Under the Companies Act, 1862, the liability may be either limited or unlimited, and most banks registered under that Act were unlimited until 1880, when many took advantage of the Companies Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 76, to register anew as limited. That Act, however, repealing and replacing s. 182 of the Companies Act, 1862, provides for unlimited liability in respect of bank-notes. The sale and purchase of shares in joint-stock banking companies is regulated by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 29, which, in order to prevent speculative transactions, requires that the numbers of the shares shall be distinguished in the contract of sale, which is otherwise to be void; but it is believed that this enactment, which, although making it a misdemeanour to insert false numbers, imposes no penalty for not inserting the numbers at all, is not regarded (see LEEMAN'S ACT) on the Stock Exchange. See Thring's Law of Joint-Stock Companies; Smith's Mercantile Law; and JOINT-STOCK COMPANY.

Joint-stock Company, an association of a large number of persons united together for the common purpose of carrying on a trade or some useful enterprise capable of yielding profit. The common property of the members, applicable to the purposes of the company, is called its joint-stock, and hence the name. The capital is generally divided into equal shares. Each member holds one or more, and in proportion to the number participates in the profits. The succession of members is kept up by transfer, or by transmission of the shares of deceased members. The management of the affairs of the company is vested in certain members called directors; and the general body of shareholders, beyond exercising a control over the acts of the directors upon special occasions, take no active part in the concerns of the company. Originally joint-stock companies were formed by an instrument called a Deed of Settlement, by which the constitution of the company and the conduct of its affairs were regulated. The courts of law and equity considered companies so formed as ordinary partnerships, and the rights and liabilities of the members inter se, and as towards the public, were determined upon the principles applicable to an ordinary partnership.

This doctrine led to inconvenience. Upon the rule that one partner cannot maintain an action against a co-partner, it was held that the directors could not sue the shareholders for calls, and upon the rule that a general account must be taken before one partner can be compelled to pay money to another, the whole of the affairs of the company had to be thrown into Chancery before a call could be recovered. Moreover, courts of equity declined to entertain suits for determining disputes between members unless the company consented to a dissolution, and this was rendered impracticable by the necessity of making all the members parties to it. Again, no action lay against a debtor of the company unless all the shareholders were plaintiffs. This led joint-stock companies in many cases to obtain a private act of parliament, or royal patent giving them some of the privileges of corporations. Several attempts were made by the legislature to deal with the subject; see 16 Geo. IV. c. 91; 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 94; 1 Vict. c. 73; but these proving insufficient to meet the case, in 1844 was passed 'An Act for the Registration and Incorporation of Joint-stock Companies,' 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, now repealed. This was followed by others amending it, and giving facilities for the winding-up of joint-stock companies (see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, Schedule III., pt. 1).

All prior acts are repealed by 'The Companies Act, 1862' (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), the statute by which (as amended by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 131 and other acts) joint-stock companies are now regulated. The 4th section enacts that no company, association, or partnership, consisting of more than ten persons, shall thereafter be formed for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking, unless registered as a company under the act, or formed in pursuance of some other act, or of letters patent; and no company, association, or partnership, consisting of more than twenty persons, shall be formed for carrying on any business for the acquisition of gain, unless registered under the act 'or formed in pursuance of some other act, or of letters patent, or a company working mines within the Stannaries,' and the 6th section that any seven or more persons associated for a lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association, and complying with the requisitions for registration, form an incorporated company with or without limited liability.—Consult The works of Buckley or Thring.

Joint-Tenancy. This tenancy is created where the same interest in real or personal property is, by the act of the party, passed by the same matter of conveyance or claim in solido, and not as merchandise, or for purposes of speculation, to two or more persons in the same right, either simply, or by construction or operation of law jointly, with a jus accrescendi, that is, a gradual concentration of property from more to fewer, by the accession of the part of him or them that die to the survivors or survivor, till it passes to a single hand, and the joint-tenancy ceases.

This jus accrescendi holds place as well in equity as at law. Equitable estates, therefore, are subject to joint-tenancy, and its properties. The trust as well as the term passes to the survivor; and if the estate of two joint-tenants is assigned in trust for them, or such a trust is raised by implication, the equitable interest follows the nature of the former legal estate.

The courts of law and equity disfavour this mode of holding property beneficially.

During the feudal rigour, however, and when assurances were simple, joint-tenancy was found to be most useful. It was adopted to prevent dower and courtesy attaching. It avoided wardship, primer seisin, and other feudal imposts of the same description; for the title by the survivorship is paramount. A conveyance was made to the father and son, or to several co-trustees, of whom the interested owner was one, and a descent was thus avoided. By the Dower Act (3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 105), no title of dower affects a joint estate, whether legal or equitable.

Anciently, joint-tenancy was favoured, because it did not induce fractions of estates.

And now, for the purpose of limitations even it is much more accommodating than a tenancy in common, unless cross-remainders are expressed or implied. The law itself adopts it sometimes, as in the cases of executors, assignees in bankruptcy, and others, though they differ in some respects from simple joint-tenants.

There may be a joint-tenancy for life, or in fee, or in remainder, but not in tail, unless the donees, being male and female, may lawfully marry; for if not, the donees possess estates for life only, with several inheritances in tail. An estate cannot be granted to two or more jointly and severally, for severally is repugnant, and they take as joint-tenants.

When an estate is granted to two or more persons without any modifying and disjunctive words, they take, according to the common law rule, as joint-tenants. For example, if an estate be granted to A. and B. for their lives, they become joint-tenants of the freehold; if to A. and B. and their heirs, they are then joint-tenants of the fee. While equity recognizes this rule, yet it has laid down many exceptions to it, amongst the most important of which are the following:—

(3) When partners in trade purchase property for the partnership concern, equity treats them as tenants in common, holding the survivor to be trustee of the legal estate for the personal representatives of the deceased partner as to his share. Wares, merchandise, and stock in trade belonging to partners, survive to the representatives of the deceased partner. The lex mercatoria excludes the jus accrescendi for the benefit of commerce, which is pro bono publico, the maxim being jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet.

A joint-tenancy, being created by the convention of parties, must arise out of the same deed, will, or claim, for there must exist a unity of title between them which must be by purchase, and not by mere operation of law, and the estate must vest in them at one and the same time; for a joint-tenancy must subsist ab initio; an estate cannot become a joint-tenancy by the happening of any circumstances ex post facto. The same interest must be given to the parties, for one joint-tenant cannot have one estate in the property as for life, and the other another as for years; and they must hold it by the same undivided possession, for each has an undivided moiety of the whole, and not the whole of an undivided moiety, though since the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, s. 12, the possession of one joint tenant is no longer to be deemed the possession of the other or others.

Joint-tenants being seised per my et per tout, or, as Coke says, totum conjunctim et nihil per se separatim, enjoy a survivorship (jus accrescendi) which is held to be as good as a right by descent, the title of the survivor being paramount. It is a continuation of the estate by the survivorship of the tenants, the estate passing among the joint-owners without any perceptible degree of transition but the diminution of the number of persons to enjoy it. The last survivor takes the whole, as if the estate had originally been given to him only, unless any of his companions have conveyed away his own share in his lifetime, which, of course, each can do; so a partial alienation is a severance pro tanto, for alienatio rei præfertur juri accrescendi.

The right of survivorship is necessarily reciprocal: for otherwise there would be different degrees of interest in the same estate, which is inconsistent with the nature of joint-tenancy. A body corporate, therefore, whose existence has no natural termination, cannot be joint-tenant with a natural person; and as survivorship is necessarily included in joint-tenancy, two corporations cannot be joint-tenants together, or both being considered by the law as of perpetual duration, it is impossible for one to survive the other.

If joint-tenants join in a conveyance, each transfers but his own part. The freehold in joint-tenants is so entire that they cannot grant, nor bargain and sell, nor surrender or devise to each other, much less exchange with or enfeoff one another. No right of dower or curtesy attaches to this estate, for the jus accrescendi is preferred to all charges and incumbrances which do not amount to at least a partial alienation of the share of a lease; and a devise by a joint-tenant, during the existence of the joint-tenancy, is void. The maxim is, jus accrescendi præfertur ultimæ voluntati necnon oneribus. By the Wills Act, a general devise passes after-acquired property; lands, acquired jure accrescendi, will consequently pass.

A curious question sometimes arises as to what is the law in case it cannot be proved which of two or more joint-tenants is the survivor. By the Roman law the relative strength of the parties, presumable from age and sex, was adopted as the criterion for asserting the priority of right. And the Code Napoleon has adopted the same principal. By our courts, however, this rule is not considered applicable. See Wing v. Angrave, 8 H. L. C. 183.

In joint-tenancy all emblements go to the survivor. Judgment and crown-debts against a deceased joint-tenant do not affect the estate in the hands of the survivor; but if a joint-tenant alien so as to sever the jointure, or if he become the survivor or sole owner by release, prior judgments against him become available charges on the property.

The severance and destruction of this estate may be effected in several ways, as—

(1) By a voluntary deed of partition among the tenants agreeing to hold the property in severalty, for this is a disunion of their possession, and they have then but a separate interest in the several parts of the land, and the jus accrescendi is gone.

(2) By alienation without partition, as to one joint-tenant either releasing his share to the other, or conveying it away to a third person, for this is a destruction of the unity of title. A covenant to sell by a joint-tenant severs the estate in equity, provided it can be specifically performed, but not at law.

(3) By accession of interest, either by one joint-tenant purchasing the interest of the others, or by his acquiring the whole estate by survivorship, whereby the unity of interest is dissolved.

(4) By a decree in the Chancery Division of the High Court (see Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34 (3)). In an action brought by one joint-tenant, a commission issues to divide the land, and when this has been returned, the Court directs a compulsory partition, and orders the execution of reciprocal transfers. See PARTITION.

Jointress, or Jointuress, she who has an estate settled upon her by her husband, to hold during her life, at least provided she survive him.

Jointure, strictly, a joint estate limited to husband and wife; now understood to be a sole estate limited to the wife. To a legal jointure these five things are requisite:—

(1) The provision for the wife must take effect in possession or profit immediately after her husband's death. (2) It must be for her own life at least, and not pour autre vie, or for any term of years, or for any smaller estate. But the widow will be bound by the acceptance of a precarious interest if she were adult at the time she agreed to the jointure. (3) It must be made to herself, and no other in trust for her. (4) It must be made in satisfaction of the whole, and not of part of her dower. (5) It must be either expressed or averred to be in satisfaction of dower. It may be made either before or after marriage; if made after marriage she may waive it, and claim her dower, unless it be provided by act of parliament.

The Statute of Jointures, 11 Hen. VII. c. 20, is repealed by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, s. 17, except as to lands, comprised in settlements made before the passing of this act. See DOWER; and 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10.

Jokelet [fr. yokelet], a little farm such as requires a small yoke of oxen to till it.

Joncaria, or Juncaria [fr. jonc, Fr., a rush], land, where rushes grow.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Journal, a day-book, or diary of transactions used by merchants, mariners, tradesmen, etc., in their business.

Journals of Parliament, minutes of proceedings in parliament which are matters quasi of record. As to proof of these, see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 3; and Tayl. on Evid., s. 1474.

Journey-hoppers, regrators of yarn.—8 Hen. VI. c. 5.

Journeyman [fr. journée, Fr., a day's work], a workman hired by the day, or other given time.

Journey's accounts, the shortest possible time between an abatement of one writ and the issuing of another. Obsolete.—6 Rep. 10.

Judaismus, the religion of the Jews; also usury; also the dwelling-places of the Jews.

Judex ad quem, a judge to whom an appeal is made.

Judex a quo, a judge from whom an appeal is made.

Signatur cum nocens absolvitur.

(The judge is condemned, when a guilty person escapes punishment.)

Judex non potest esse testis in propria causa. 4 Inst. 272.—(A judge cannot be a witness to his own cause.)

Judex non potest injuriam sibi datam punire. 12 Co. 113.—(A judge cannot punish an injury done to himself.)

Judge [fr. juge, Fr.; judex, Lat.], one invested with authority to determine any cause or question in a court of judicature.

To secure the dignity and political independence of the judges of the Supreme Court, it is enacted by s. 5 of the Jud: Act, 1875, repeating in effect 12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2, and 1 Geo. III. c. 23, that the judges of the Supreme Court (with the exception of the Lord Chancellor, who goes out with the Ministry) shall hold their offices during good behaviour (prior to 12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2, they held office during the pleasure of the Crown), subject to a power of removal by the Crown on an address by both Houses of Parliament. They may not sit in the House of Commons.

The County Court judges are appointed under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 16; as to their pensions, see 15 & 16 Vict. c. 54, s. 16; their number is limited to 60, by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 74.

No action lies against a judge for anything said or done in his judicial capacity; but if a judge act without jurisdiction, he may be made to answer for the consequences of his acts.—Scott v. Stansfield, L. R. 3 Ex. 220. If a judge has a personal interest in the action, he is incapacitated from officiating, on the principle that Nemo debet esse judex in propria sua persona. See Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 3 H. L. Ca. 759; but this incapacity, where it arises from an interest as one of several ratepayers only, is abolished by 40 Vict. c. 11.

Judge Advocate, Judge Advocate-General. All general military courts-martial are attended by either the judge advocate-general, an officer appointed by letters patent under the Great Seal; by a judge advocate appointed by commission under the sign manual; by a deputy judge advocate acting by deputation, either special or general, under the hand and seal of the judge advocate-general; or by a person appointed by general officers commanding the forces abroad, to execute the office of judge advocate. The duties of an officiating judge advocate at a court-martial are to provide accommodation for the court, to administer the oaths to the members of the court and to the witnesses, to summon the witnesses, to make a minute of the proceedings, and to advise the court on points of law, of custom, and of form, and so far to assist the prisoner, as to elicit a full statement of the facts material to the defence. The proceedings of general courts-martial held at home are transmitted by the officiating judge advocate to the judge advocate-general, to be laid before the Crown, with a statement, by the officiating judge advocate, of any circumstances which in his opinion may affect the legality of the decision. The proceedings of courts-martial held abroad are also transmitted to the judge advocate-general, and preserved in his office. See Clode on Military Law.

In the navy, when a court-martial has been ordered, the person nominated president appoints an officiating judge advocate, in the absence of a judge advocate or his deputy. His duties are nearly the same as those of the officiating judge advocate on military courts-martial. See Thring's Criminal Law of the Navy; and Naval Regulations and Instructions, chap. xi.; and see NAVAL DISCIPLINE ACT.

Judge Ordinary, the judge of the Court for Divorce.

Judge, a Cheshire juryman.—Jacob.

Judges' Chambers. See CHAMBERS, JUDGES'.

Judges Salaries' Act, 1872. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 51.

Judgment [fr. jugement, Fr.], judicial determination; decision of a court.

Under the former practice of the Superior Courts, this term was usually applied only to the Common Law Courts, the term 'decree' being in general use in the Court of Chancery. The expression 'Judgment,' however, is now used generally, except in matrimonial causes, the term 'Judgment' including 'decree' (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 100).

The several species of judgments are either:—

(a) Interlocutory, given in the midst of a cause, upon some plea, proceeding, or default which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the action. See INQUIRY, SUMMONSES, and ORDERS; and the various titles of the subjects of such judgment, as MANDAMUS, INJUNCTION, etc.

(β) Final, putting an end to the action by an award of redress to one party, or discharge of the other, as the case may be.

By the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 120, a plaintiff or defendant having obtained a verdict, in a cause tried out of term, was entitled to issue execution in fourteen days, unless the judge who tried the cause, or some other judge, or the court, ordered execution to issue earlier or later, with or without terms. And by r. 57, H. T. 1853, when a plaintiff or defendant obtained a verdict in term, or in case a plaintiff was non-suited at the trial in or out of term, judgment might be signed and execution issued thereon in fourteen days, unless the judge, etc., ordered execution earlier or later, etc. By r. 55, H. T. 1853, no rule for judgment was necessary; and after the return of a writ of inquiry, judgment might be signed four days after the return. See now EXECUTION. A party might be prevented from signing judgment by his opponent moving to set the verdict or non-suit aside, to enter a non-suit or in arrest of judgment. The unsuccessful party might also move for judgment non obstante veredicto; or for a re-pleader; or trial de novo.

All judgments, whether interlocutory or final, are entered of record of the day of the month and year when signed, and have no relation to any other day. But the Court or a judge may order judgment to be entered nunc pro tunc. As a general rule the practice, in regard to judgment under the Judicature Acts, is assimilated to that in use in the Court of Chancery, where a decree was delivered on motion. It is provided by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XL., r. 1, that except where by the Act or rules it is provided that judgment may be obtained in any other manner, the judgment of the Court shall be obtained on motion for judgment.

The entry of judgment is provided for by Ord. XLI., which provides that every judgment shall be entered by the proper officer in the book to be kept for the purpose.

In the above rules as to motion for judgment mention is made of cases otherwise provided for in the Act or rules; the principal cases so otherwise provided for are—

(1) For default of appearance. See APPEARANCE.

(2) For default of Pleading. See PLEADING.

(3) On Confession of Defence. See that title.

(4) On taking money out of Court. See PAYMENT INTO COURT.

(5) On non-appearance of the Plaintiff at the Trial. In this case the defendant, if he has no counter-claim, shall be entitled to judgment dismissing the action (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 19), but this may be set aside by the Court or a judge upon such terms as may seem fit upon an application made either at the assizes or in Middlesex, within six days after trial (Ibid., r. 20).

(6) By direction of the judge at the trial. See Ord. XXXVI., r. 22 a et seq.

As to judgments affecting lands, etc., see 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 13, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112. By s. 19 of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, judgments do not affect lands as to purchasers, mortgagees, or creditors, until they have been registered.

The 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, after reciting that it is desirable that further protection shall be afforded to purchasers against judgments, crown-debts, and lis pendens, enacts, 'that no judgment shall hereafter (June 4th, 1839) be docketed under 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20, but that all such dockets shall be finally closed immediately after the passing of this act, without prejudice to the operation of any judgment already docketed and entered under the said recited act, except so far as any such judgment may be effected by the provisions hereinafter contained' (s. 1).

The 4th section makes judgments, though registered under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, or 2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, void after five years from registration, as against purchasers, mortgagees, and creditors, unless a fresh registry be made within five years before the execution of the conveyance, settlement, mortgage, lease, or other deed or instrument vesting or transferring the legal or equitable right, title, estate, or interest in or to any such purchaser or mortgagee for valuable consideration, or as to creditors, within five years before the right of such creditors accrued, and so toties quoties at the expiration of every succeeding five years. The re-entry fee is one shilling. See 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15, ss. 5, 6, 13. (By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 22, this provision as to registry is extended to Crown debts.)

As against purchasers, and mortgagees without notice of any such judgments, decrees, or orders, rules or orders as aforesaid, none of such judgments, decrees, or orders, rules or orders, shall bind or affect any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein, further or otherwise or more extensively in any respect, although duly registered, than a judgment of one of the superior courts aforesaid would have bound such purchaser or mortgagee before the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, where it had been duly docketed according to the law then in force (2 & 3 Vict. c. 11, s. 8).

By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, writs of execution of judgments must be registered as therein mentioned. By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, no judgment, statute, or recognizance is to affect land until the land has been delivered in execution by writ of elegit or other lawful authority, and such writ registered as prescribed by the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38. The judgment-creditor is thereupon entitled to a summary order for sale from the Court of Chancery, and notice must be given to any other creditor whose judgment is a charge on the land.

In order to bind lands in Middlesex or Yorkshire, it is necessary to file a memorial of the judgment in the registry-office of such counties respectively; until this is done the lands will not be affected or bound by the judgment.

As to registering judgments of the Palatine Courts to bind lands in the Counties Palatine, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 15.

The release from a judgment of part of any hereditaments charged therewith shall not affect the validity of the judgment as to the hereditaments remaining unreleased, or as to any other property not specifically released, without prejudice, nevertheless, to the rights of all persons interested in the hereditaments or property remaining unreleased, and not concurring in or confirming the release (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 11).

As to the entry of satisfaction on Crown debts and on judgments, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 115.

As to judgments becoming a charge on public stock and shares in companies by order of a judge, the 14th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, enacts, that if any person against whom any judgment shall have been entered up in any of Her Majesty's superior courts at Westminster shall have any Government stock, funds, or annuities, or any stock or shares of or in any public company in England (whether incorporated or not), standing in his name in his own right, or in the name of any person in trust for him, a judge of the superior courts, on the application of any judgment-creditor, may order that such stock, funds, or annuities, or shares, or such of them or such part thereof respectively as he think fit, stand charged with the payment of the amount for which judgment has been recovered, and interest; such order entitles the judgment-creditor to all remedies he would have been entitled to if such charge had been made in his favour by the judgment-debtor; but no proceedings shall be taken to have the benefit of such charge until six calendar months from the order.

In order to prevent any person against whom judgment has been obtained from transferring, receiving, or disposing of any stock, funds, annuities, or shares thereby authorized to be charged for the benefit of the judgment-creditor under a judge's order, by s. 15, 'every judge's order charging Government stock, funds, or annuities, or stock or shares in any public company, shall be made in the first instance ex parte and without notice to the judgment-debtor, and shall be an order to show cause; and such order, if any Government stock, etc., standing in the name of the judgment-debtor in his own right, or in the name of any person in trust for him, is to be affected thereby, shall restrain the Bank of England from permitting a transfer of such stock until such order be made absolute or discharged; and if any stock or shares of or in any public company standing in the name of the judgment-debtor in his own right or in the name of any person in trust for him, is or are to be affected by any such order, shall restrain such company from permitting a transfer thereof; and if such person shall permit any such transfer to be made, he shall be liable to the judgment-creditor for the value of the property, or such part thereof as may be sufficient to satisfy his judgment; and no disposition of the judgment debtor in the meantime shall be valid as against the judgment-creditor; and unless the judgment-debtor shall, within a time to be mentioned in such order, show to a judge of the superior courts cause to the contrary, the order shall, after proof of notice to the judgment-debtor, be made absolute; but the judge shall, upon the application of the judgment-debtor, or any person interested, have full power to discharge or vary the order, and to award such costs upon such application as he may think fit.'

A creditor who caused his debtor to be taken or charged in execution thereby relinquished all claim to any charge or security to which he might be entitled under these acts (s. 16). By s. 17, every judgment debt carries interest at the rate of 4 per cent. Now by the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, imprisonment for debt has been abolished except in the cases specified in s. 4. See IMPRISONMENT.

Where there are cross judgments in the same, or different actions in the same or different courts between parties substantially the same, the one may be set off against the other. This may be effected by applying to the Court or Division in which the opposite party has obtained judgment for a rule to show cause why satisfaction should not be entered on the roll, on the applicant's acknowledging satisfaction for the same amount in his judgment, or vice versa if the applicant's judgment be less, the other party's solicitor having first satisfied his lien upon the judgment for costs in that particular case.

In an action against an executor or administrator, suggesting a deceitavit, the judgment against the defendant shall be de bonis propriis, and so if he set up a defence which he knows to be false, and also if he be made liable and charged as assignee; but otherwise the judgment would be de bonis testatoris.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

As to the judgment in replevin. See REPLEVIN.

Judgment in scire facias is the same as in ordinary cases. See REVIVOR.

In criminal cases, judgment, unless any matter be offered in arrest thereof, follows upon conviction, being the pronouncing of that punishment which is expressly ordained by law.—4 Bl. Com. c. xxix.

Judgment-debtor. One against whom a judgment ordering him to pay a sum of money stands unsatisfied. He may, by order of the Court or a judge, be orally examined by the judgment creditors as to debts owing to him by third parties, and be compelled to produce books and documents, with a view to attaching any debts due to him (Jud. Act, Ord. XLV., r. 1). See ATTACHMENT OF DEBTS.

Judgment-debtor Summons. Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, ss. 76—85, these summonses might be issued against both traders and non-traders, and in default of payment of, or security or agreed composition for the debt, the debtors might be adjudicated bankrupt. This Act was repealed by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 83, s. 20. The 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, however (Bankruptcy Act, 1869), provides (s. 7) for the granting of a 'debtor's summons,' at the instance of creditors, and in the event of failure to pay or compound, a petition for adjudication may be presented, unless in the events provided for by the section. See DEBTOR SUMMONS.

Judgment summonses. As to commitment upon the same in the county court, see COMMITMENT.

Judgments Extension Act, 1868. By this Act (31 & 32 Vict. c. 54) the judgments of the superior courts of either England, Scotland, or Ireland, may be enforced as judgments in either of the other two countries upon registration (in a prescribed manner) of certificates thereof, in the country in which such judgments are sought to be enforced. The principle of this Act was in 1882 extended to Inferior Courts. See INFERIOR COURTS.

Judicandum est legibus non exemplis. 4 Co. 33.—(We are to judge by the laws, not by examples.)

Judicatores terrarum, persons in the county palatine of Chester, who, on a writ of error, were to consider of the judgment given there, and reform it, otherwise they forfeited 100*l.* to the Crown by custom.—Jenk. Cent. 71.

Judicature Acts, 1873, 1875, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77. See SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Judices non tenentur exprimere causam sententiae suae. Jenk. Cent. 75.—(Judges are not bound to explain the reason of their sentence.)

Judices pedanei, judges chosen by the litigants.—Civ. Law.

Judicial Acts. Numerous statutes give summary power to justices of the peace, and declare that certain acts shall only be valid if done by two magistrates. If it be only a ministerial act, it is not requisite that the two magistrates should be together at the time of doing the act; if it be judicial, they must.

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, a tribunal established by 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 92; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 41; and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 38, for the disposal of appeals from Colonial and Ecclesiastical Courts, from the Court of Admiralty, and from certain orders in lunacy. See also 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 30; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 85; and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 24, ss. 22, 23. By the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 91, provision was made for the appointment of four additional members of the Judicial Committee. No one was qualified for appointment under that Act who was not, or had not been, a judge, of the Superior Courts at Westminster, or a chief justice of the High Court in Calcutta, Madras, or Bombay.

A portion of the jurisdiction of this Court, viz., in appeals from the Court of Admiralty or orders in lunacy, was taken away by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 18, and given to the Court of Appeal. See APPEALS. It is the practice of the judicial committee to hear only two counsel on each side.

Judicial discretion. Such matters in the course of a trial as are to be decided summarily by the judge, and cannot be questioned afterwards are said to be within his jurisdiction. Various matters incidental to the conduct of a cause before trial, are also by statute left in the discretion of the Court, or a judge at chambers. Discretion is thus defined by Coke, in Rooke's Case, 40 Eliz.: 'Discretion is a science or understanding, to discern between falsity and truth, between wrong and right, between shadows and substance, between equity and colourable glosses and pretences, and not to do according to their wills and private affections; for, as one saith, talīs discretio discretionem confundit.' Coke also quotes the maxim, Discretio est scire per legem quid sit justum, 10 Co. 140.

Judicial documents, proceedings relating to litigation. They are divided into: (1) judgments, decrees, and verdicts; (2) depositions, examinations, and inquisitions taken in the course of a legal process; (3) writs, warrants, pleadings, etc., which are incident to any judicial proceedings.—See 1 Stark. Evid. 252.

Judicial Oath, the oath to be taken 'as soon as may be after acceptance of office' by the Judges of the Supreme Court, and by justices of the peace for counties and boroughs. An affirmation may be substituted by every person for the time being by law permitted to make affirmation instead of oath. See Promissory Oaths Act, ss. 4, 11, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72).

Judicial separation, grantable either to husband or wife on the ground of adultery, cruelty, or desertion without cause for two years and upwards.—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 16; also by justices, under 41 Vict. c. 19, to wife, on conviction of husband of aggravated assault.

Judicial writs, writs issuing from the court in which proceedings are commenced under its seal, and tested in the name of its chief judge, as distinguished from original writs, which issued out of the Court of Chancery.

Judicia posteriora sunt in lege fortiora. 8 Co. 97.—(The later decisions are the stronger in law.)

Judicia sunt tanquam juris dicta, et pro veritate accipiuntur. 2 Inst. 537.—(Judgments are, as it were, the words of the law, and are received as truth.)

Judiciis posterioribus fides est adhibenda. 13 Co. 14.—(Credit is to be taken to the later decisions.)

Judicis est judicare secundum allegata et probata. Dyer, 12.—(It is the duty of a judge to decide according to facts alleged and proved.)

Judicis est jus dicere non dare. Lofft. 42.—(It is for the judge to administer, not to make laws.)

Judicium a non suo judice datum nullius est momenti. 10 Rep. 70.—(A judgment given by one who is not the proper judge is of no force.)

Judicium Dei (judgment of God), a term applied by our ancestors to the now prohibited trials of secret crimes; as those by arms and single combat; or by ordeals, as by fire or red-hot ploughshares, or by boiling water; which were founded on the belief that God would work a miracle rather than suffer innocence to perish.—Encyc. Lond.

Judicium redditur in invitum. Co. Litt. 248 b.—(Judgment is given against one, whether he will or not.)

Judicium semper pro veritate accipitur. 2 Inst. 380.—(Judgment is always taken for truth.)

Judicium parium, the judgment of one's peers. See JURY.

Jugulator, a cut-throat or murderer.—Cowel.

Jugum terræ, a yoke of land, containing half a plough-land.—Domesday; Co. Litt. 5 a.

Juncare, to strew rushes.—Pat. 14 Edw. I.

Juncaria. See JONCARIA.

Junta, or Junto [Ital.], a select council for taking cognizance of affairs of great consequence requiring secrecy; a cabal or faction.

Jura eodem modo destruuntur quo construuntur. (Laws are abrogated by the same means as those by which they are made.)

Jura nature sunt immutabilia. (The laws of nature are unchangeable.)

Jura personarum (the rights of persons).

Jura publica anteferenda privatis. Co. Litt. 130.—(Public rights are to be preferred to private.)

Jura publica ex privato promiscue decidi non debent. Co. Litt. 181 b.—(Public rights ought not to be promiscuously determined in analogy to a private right.)

Juramenta corporalia, corporal oaths.

Jurare est Deum in testem vocare, et est actus divini cultus. 3 Inst. 165.—(To swear is to call God to witness, and is an act of religion.)

Jura regalia, royal rights; royal prerogatives. See 1 Bl. Com. 241 et seq.; Bac. Abr. Prerogative. As to these rights in the county of Durham, see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 45.

Jura rerum (the rights which a person may acquire in things).

Jura sanguinis nullo jure civili dirimi possunt. D. 50, 17, 8; Bac. Max. reg. 11.—(The rights of blood cannot be destroyed by any civil right.)

Jura summa imperii (the supreme rights of dominion).

Jurat, the memorandum of the time, place, and person before whom an affidavit is sworn. As to erasure or interlineation, see INTERLINEATION.

Jurata, the jury-clause in a Nisi Prius record. The entry jurata ponitur in respectu, is abolished.—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 104.

Juration, the act of swearing; the administration of an oath.

Jurator, a juror.

Juratores sunt judices facti. Jenk. Cent. 61.—(Jurors are the judges of fact.)

Juratory caution, in Scotch Law, a description of caution (security) sometimes offered in a suspension or advocacy where the complainant is not in circumstances to offer any better.—Bell's Dict.

Jurats, officers in the nature of aldermen, sworn for the government of many corporations. The twelve assistants of the bailiff in Jersey are called jurats.

Jure divino (by divine right).

Jure emphyteutico (by the law of rents and services).

Jure nature æquum est neminem cum alterius detrimento et injuriâ fieri locupletiores. D. 50, 17, 206.—(By the law of nature it is not just that any one should be enriched by the detriment or injury of another.)

Juridical, acting in the distribution of justice.

Juridical days, days in court on which the laws are administered.

Jurisconsulti, or Jurisprudentes, men who studied the forms and, in time, the principles of civil law, and expounded them for the benefit of their friends and dependants. See Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Jurisdiction, legal authority; extent of power; declaration of the law. There are three sorts of inferior jurisdictions: (1) To hold pleas, which is the lowest, in which case a person may either sue there or in the Queen's Courts. (2) The cognizance of pleas, by which an exclusive right is vested in the lord of a franchise to hold pleas in matters arising within his jurisdiction. (3) An ex-empt jurisdiction, as where the Crown grants to some city that its inhabitants shall be sued within such city, and not elsewhere.—3 Salk. 79.

Juris et de jure (of law and from law). A conclusive presumption, which cannot be rebutted, is called a presumption juris et de jure.

Jurisinceptor, a student of the civil law.

Jurisprudence, the science of law, especially of Roman law.

Jurisprudentia est divinarum atque humanarum rerum notitia, justi atque injusti scientia. Just. Inst., 1, 1, 1.—(Jurisprudence is the knowledge of things divine and human; the science of the right and the wrong.)—Sand. Just., 5th ed., 5.

Jurist, a civil lawyer, a civilian.

Juris utrum, an abolished writ which lay for the parson of a church whose predecessor had alienated the lands and tenements thereof.—F. N. B. 48.

Jurnedum, a day's travelling.

Juror, one who serves on a jury.

Juror's Book, a list of persons qualified to serve on juries.

Jury [fr. jurata, Lat.; juré, Fr.], a company of men sworn to deliver a verdict upon evidence delivered to them touching the issue.

Trial by jury may be traced to the earliest Anglo-Saxon times. One of the judicial customs of the Saxons was, that a man might be cleared of an accusation of certain crimes, if an appointed number of persons (juratores, or more properly compurgatores), came forward and swore to a verdictum, that they believed him innocent. It is remarkable that for accusations of any consequence among the Saxons on the continent, twelve juratores were the number required for an acquittal. Similar customs may be observed in the laws of Athens and Rome, where δικασται and judices answer to jurors, and of the continental Angli and Frisones, though the number of jurors varied.

See as to the introduction and growth of trial by jury in England Forsyth's History of Trial by Jury.

The property qualification of jurors is fixed, by 6 Geo. IV. c. 50, s. 1, for common jurors, at 10*l.* a year freehold, or 20*l.* a year leasehold, or assessment to the poor-rate or house-duty for a house of 30*l.* a year in Middlesex and 20*l.* a year in other counties; the qualification for a special juror, by s. 31 of the same Act, and the Jurors' Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 6, is having these property qualifications and being also legally entitled to be called an esquire, or being a person of higher degree, or being a banker or merchant, or occupying a house of a certain rateable value.

By the Act of 1870 also, aliens domiciled here for ten years or upwards may be jurors if otherwise qualified (s. 8); convicts (unless after pardon) and outlaws are disqualified (s. 10). For the various classes of persons exempted from serving on juries, see the schedule to the act, which includes peers, members of parliament; judges; clergymen, Roman Catholic priests, ministers of any congregation of Protestant dissenters, and of Jews whose place of meeting is duly registered, provided they follow no secular occupation except that of a schoolmaster; serjeants, barristers-at-law, certificated conveyancers, and special pleaders, if actually practising; members of the society of doctors of law, and advocates, if actually practising; attorneys, solicitors, and proctors, if actually practising and having taken out their annual certificates, and their managing clerks, and notaries public in actual practice; officers of courts of law and equity; and very many others (see the schedule).

If any man summoned on a jury shall not attend or answer to his name; or if he or any talesman be present, but do not appear, or wilfully withdraw himself, the court shall fine him as it thinks fit, and in the case of a viewer not less than 10*l.* unless some excuse be proved; or, upon such default, at the execution of a writ of inquiry, the under-sheriff, etc., may set a fine not exceeding 5*l.*

The Judicature Act, 1875, s. 20, provides that nothing in that Act or the first schedule thereto or in any rules of Court to be made under that Act shall affect the law relating to jurymen or juries. And trial by jury is continued by Ord. XXXVI., r. 2.

In civil causes a jury may be either common or special. In criminal causes there are both the grand and petit jury. See GRAND JURY; SPECIAL JURY; and Juries Acts, 1862 and 1870, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 107, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77.

There is no remuneration for common jurors: s. 23 of the Act of 1870, which fixed a remuneration of ten shillings a day for common jurors, and a guinea a day for special jurors, was repealed by 34 Vict. c. 2. Special jurors get a guinea a cause by s. 34 of 6 Geo. IV. c. 50.

A coroner's jury and grand jury may consist of any number more than eleven. Generally they consist of twenty-three. Juries in all criminal trials and civil trials in the superior courts, and in writs of inquiry, consist of twelve men, neither more nor less. Juries in county courts consist of five.—9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 73. Unanimity is not required from a grand jury or a coroner's jury: the verdict of twelve men, which is in fact the jury of a majority, is sufficient.

By the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 14 (Naturalization Act), s. 5, an alien is no longer entitled to be tried by a jury de medietate lingue.

Jury-box, the place in court where the jury sit.

Jury-man, one who is impaneled on a jury.

Jury process, the writ for the summoning of a jury. They were the distringas juratores, or habeas corpora juratorum, and the venire juratores facias, now abolished. A jury is summoned by precept. See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77.

Jury-woman, or Jury of Matrons. Women are impaneled as a jury in two cases only: (1) upon a writ de ventre inspiciendo, which see; (2) where a female prisoner is condemned to be executed, and pleads pregnancy, as a ground to postpone the completion of the sentence until after her confinement. Upon this a jury of matrons, or discreet women, inquire into the plea; should they bring in their verdict that the prisoner is enceinte, the execution is stayed until the birth of the child, after which, as a general rule, the Crown commutes the punishment.

Jus, law, right, equity, authority, and rule.

A Roman 'magistratus' generally did not investigate the facts in dispute in such matters as were brought before him; he appointed a judex for that purpose, and gave him instructions. Accordingly, the whole procedure was expressed by the two phrases Jus and Judicium; of which the former comprehended all that took place before the magistratus (in jure), and the latter all that took place before the judex (in judicio). Originally, even the magistratus was called judex, as, for instance, the consul and prætor (Liv. iii. 55); and under the empire the term judex often designated the præses.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

All law (jus) is distributed into two parts, —Jus Gentium and Jus Civile—and the whole body of law peculiar to any state is its Jus Civile (Cic. de Orat. i. 44). The Roman law, therefore, which is peculiar to the Roman state, is its Jus Civile, sometimes called Jus Civile Romanorum, but more frequently designated by the term Jus Civile only, by which is meant the Jus Civile of the Romans.

The Jus Gentium is viewed by Gaius as springing out of the Naturalis Ratio, common to all mankind, which is still more clearly expressed in another passage (i. 89), where he uses the expression 'omnium civitatum jus,' as equivalent to the Jus Gentium, and as founded on the Naturalis Ratio.

The Naturale Jus and the Jus Gentium are therefore identical. Cicero (Off. iii. 5) opposes Natura to Leges, where he explains Natura by the term Jus Civile, and makes Leges equivalent to Jus Civile.

In the partitions (c. 37), he also divides Jus into Natura and Lex.

There is a threefold division of Jus made by Ulpian and others, which is as follows:—Jus Civile; Jus Gentium, or that which is common to all mankind; and Jus Naturale, which is common to man and beasts. The foundation of this division seems to have been a theory of the progress of mankind from what is commonly termed a state of nature; first, to a state of society, and then to a condition of independent states. This division had, however, no practical application, and must be viewed merely as a curious theory.

The Jus Civile of the Romans is divided into two parts—Jus Civile in the narrower sense; and Jus Pontificium, or the law of religion. This opposition is sometimes expressed by the words Jus and Fas (fas et jura sinunt.—Virg. Georg. i. 269); and the law of things not pertaining to religion, and of things pertaining to it, are also respectively opposed to one another by the terms Res Juris Humani et Divini (Instit. ii. tit. 1).

The terms Jus Scriptum and Non Scriptum, as explained in the Institutes (i. tit. 2), comprehended the whole of the Jus Civile; for it was all either Scriptum or Non Scriptum, whatever other divisions there might be (Ulp. Dig. 1 tit. 1, s. 6). Jus Scriptum comprehended everything, except that 'quod usus approbavit.' This division of Jus Scriptum and Non Scriptum does not appear in Gaius. It was borrowed from the Greek writers, and seems to have little or no practical application among the Romans.

There is another division of the matter of law which appears among the Roman jurists, viz., the Law of Persons, the Law of Things, which is expressed by the phrase 'jus quod ad res pertinet'; and the Law of Actions,

'jus quod ad actiones pertinet' (Gaius, i. 8).—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Jus Accrescendi (the right of survivorship). See JOINT TENANCY.

Jus accrescendi inter mercatores locum non habet, pro beneficio commercii. Co. Litt. 182.—(The right of survivorship does not exist among merchants, for the benefit of commerce.)

Jus accrescendi præfertur oneribus. Co. Litt. 185.—(The right of survivorship is preferred to incumbrances.)

Jus accrescendi præfertur ultimæ voluntati. Co. Litt. 185 b.—(The right of survivorship is preferred to the last will.)

Jus ad rem, an inchoate and imperfect right; such as a parson promoted to a living acquires by nomination and institution.

Jus æsneciæ, the right of primogeniture.

Jus albinatus, the droit d'aubaine, which see.

Jus Anglorum, the laws and customs of the West Saxons, in the time of the Heptarchy, by which the people were for a long time governed, and which were preferred before all others.

Jus Civile, the interpretation of the laws of the Twelve Tables, and now of the whole system of the Roman laws.

Jus civitatus, the freedom of the city of Rome. It differs from Jus Quiritium, which comprehended all the privileges of a free native of Rome. The difference is much the same as between denization and naturalization with us.

Jus Commune, the common law.

Jus constitui oportet in his quæ ut plurimum accidunt non quæ ex inopinato. D. 1, 3, 3.—(Laws ought to be made with a view to those cases which happen most frequently, and not to those which are of rare or accidental occurrence.)—Broom's Max., 5th ed., 43.

Jus Coronæ, the right of the Crown.

Jus curialitatis Angliæ, the courtesy of England, which see.

Jus deliberandi, the right which an heir has in Scotch law, of deliberating for a certain time whether he will represent his predecessor. See ANNUS DELIBERANDI.

Jus devolutum, the right of the church of presenting a minister to a vacant parish, in case the patron shall neglect to exercise his right within the time limited by law.

Jus disponendi, the right of disposition; the right of disposition by will; the right to call upon a trustee to execute conveyances of the legal estate, as the cæstui que trust directs.—Lewin on Trusts, 595.

Jus dividendi [Med. Lat.], the right of disposing of realty by will.—Du C.

Jus duplicatum, the right of possession as well as the right of property of a thing.

Jus ex injuriâ non oritur. See Broom's Max., 5th ed., 738.—(A right cannot arise to any one out of his own wrong.)

Jus feciale, the law of nations.—Roman Law.

Jus fiduciarium, a trust.

Jus fodiendi, a right of digging.

Jus gentium, the law of nations.

Jus gladii, the right of the sword; the power of life and death.

Jus habendi, the right to be put in actual possession of property.—Lewin on Trusts, 585.

Jus habendi et retinendi, a right to have and to retain the profits, tithes, and offerings, etc., of a rectory or parsonage.

Jus hæreditatis, the right of inheritance. See DESCENT.

Jus honorarium, the body of Roman law, which was made up of edicts of the supreme magistrate, particularly the prætors.

Jus imaginis, the right of using pictures and statues of ancestors among the Romans. It had some resemblance to the right of bearing a coat of arms amongst us.

Jus in personam, a right which gives its possessor a power to oblige another person to give or procure, to do or not to do, something.

Jus in re, a complete and full right; a real right, or a right to have a thing, to the exclusion of all other men.

Jus jurandi forma verbis differt, re convenit; hunc enim sensum habere debet, ut Deus invocetur. Grotius, l. 2, c. xiii., s. 10.—(The form of taking an oath differs in language, agrees in meaning; for it ought to have this sense, that the Deity is invoked.) See OATH.

Jus liberorum, a privilege granted to such persons in ancient Rome as had three children, by which they were exempted from all troublesome offices.

Jus mariti, the right to his wife's moveable estate which a husband acquires by virtue of the marriage. But see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Jus merum, pure or mere right.

Jus naturale est quod apud omnes homines eandem habet potentiam. 7 Co. 12.—(Natural right is that which has the same force among all men.)

Jus non patitur ut idem bis solvatur. (Law does not suffer that the same thing be twice paid.)

Jus Papirianum, the laws of Romulus, Numa, and other kings of Rome, collected by Sextus Papirius, who lived in the time of Tarquin the Proud.

Jus pascendi, the right of grazing.

Jus patronatus, a commission granted by a bishop to some persons, usually his Chancellor and others, of competent learning, to inquire who is the rightful patron of a church.

Jus possessionis, a right of possession.

Jus postliminii [Lat., fr. post, after, and limen, the threshold], the right in virtue of which persons and things taken by an enemy are restored to their former state on their coming again into the power of the nation to which they belonged, persons being re-established in their former rights, and things being restored to the original owner. See Vattel by Chitt. 391; Smith's Dict. of Antiq. 782.

Jus prætorium, the discretion of the prætor in Roman law, as distinguished from the leges or standing law.—See CIVIL LAW.

Jus precarium, a precarious or courteous right for which the remedy was only by entreaty or request.

Jus presentationis, a right of presenting.

Jus privatum, the civil or municipal law of Rome.

Jus publicum et privatum quod ex naturalibus præceptis aut gentium aut civilibus est collectum; et quod in jure scripto jus appellatur, id in lege Angliæ rectum esse dicitur. Co. Litt. 1858.—(Public and private law is that which is collected from natural principles, either of nations or in states; and that which in written law is called jus, in the law of England is said to be right.)

Jus publicum privatorum pactis mutari non potest. (A public right cannot be altered by the agreements of private persons.)

Jus recuperandi, intrandi, etc., a right of recovering and entering land, etc.

Jus relicte, the right of a widow in her deceased husband's personalty; if there be children, she is entitled to a third of it; if there be none, to a half.

Jus respicit æquitatem. Co. Litt. 24.—(Law has regard to equity.)

Jus superveniens auctori accrescit successori.—(A right growing to a possessor accrues to the successor.)

Jus tertii, the right of a third person, e.g., to attach money belonging to his debtor, etc., in the hands of another person. In Scotch law when a party in an action maintains a plea which he has neither title nor interest to maintain, he may be met by the plea that it is jus tertii in him to maintain such a plea.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Jus testamentorum pertinet ordinario. 4 H. 7, 13 b.—(The right of testaments belongs to the ordinary.)

Jus triplex est; proprietatis, possessionis, et possibilitatis.—(Right is threefold; of property, of possession, and of possibility.)

Jus venandi et piscandi (the right of hunting and fishing).

Jus vendit quod usus approbavit. Ellesm. Postn. 35.—(The law dispenses what use has approved.)

Justa, a certain measure of liquor, being as much as was sufficient to drink at once.—Mon. Angl. t. 1, 149.

Justice [fr. justitia, Lat.], the virtue by which we give to every man what is his due, opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates, or commutative, respecting common transactions among men.

Justice, High Court of. See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE.

Justicements, all things appertaining to justice.

Justicer, administrator of justice.

Justices, officers deputed by the Crown to administer justice and do right by way of judgment. The judges of the supreme court are called justices, but the word is usually applied to petty magistrates who sit to administer summary justice in minor matters, and who are commonly called justices of the peace. They were first appointed in 1327 by 1 Ed. III. st. 2, c. 16, and are now appointed by the Queen's special commission under the Great Seal, the form of which was settled by all the judges in 1590, and continues, with little alteration, to this day. This appoints them all, jointly and severally, to keep the peace in the county named; and any two or more of them to inquire of and determine felonies and other misdemeanours in such county committed, in which number some particular justices, or one of them, are directed to be always included, and no business done without their presence, the words of the commission running thus:—Quorum aliquem vestrum, A., B., C., D., etc., unum esse volumus, whence the justices so named were usually called justices of the quorum; but the modern practice is to include all the justices in the quorum clause (Stone's Justice, 8th ed., by Pritchard, p. 4). A justice named in the Commission is not at liberty to act, until he has taken the oath of qualification as to sufficiency of estates, and also the Oath of Allegiance and Judicial Oath in the form respectively prescribed by the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 82), and the Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), s. 2. These justices ('stipendiary magistrates' excepted) act gratuitously, receiving neither salary nor fees.

By the 18 Geo. II. c. 20, every justice for a county must have an estate of freehold, copyhold, or customary tenure, in fee, for life, or a given term, of the yearly value of 100*l.* or a reversion or remainder expectant upon such lease as in the act mentioned, with reserved rents of the clear yearly value of 300*l.* per annum; but two years' occupation of a dwelling house of not less than 100*l.* annual value will of itself give a qualification by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 54. By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 33, no practising attorney or solicitor was capable of being a county justice; but this disqualification was removed by 34 Vict. c. 18 so far as regards a county where the business is not carried on.

Borough Justices (in addition to the mayor and ex-mayor, who are justices ex-officio in every borough) are appointed by the Crown in boroughs having a separate commission of the peace. They must reside, while acting, in or within seven miles of the borough, or occupy property therein, but they need not be burgesses, or have such qualification by estate as is required for a justice of the county.—Mun. Corp. Act, 1882, ss. 155—7.

The office subsists during the Crown's pleasure, and is determinable (1) by demise of the Crown; (2) by express writ under the great seal; (3) by writ of supersedeas; (4) by a new commission; (5) by accession to the office of sheriff, during the year of the shrievalty.

The duties of a justice of the peace are of a most varied and onerous character. They are of four principal kinds: (1) To commit offenders to trial before a judge and jury, upon being satisfied that there is a prima facie case against them. This power is chiefly regulated by 'Jervis' Act' (No. 1), 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. (2) To convict and punish summarily. This procedure is chiefly regulated by 'Jervis' Act' (No. 2), 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, and the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, while the power itself is given by the particular statute dealing with the subject matter of the offence. (3) To grant licenses to sell intoxicating liquors by retail, or deal in game, etc. (4) To act, if County Justices, as Judges at Quarter Sessions, where their chairman presides and tries indictments with a jury, and such justices as attend the Quarter Sessions sit as a Court of Appeal from the decisions of justices in petty sessions.

As to the review by the High Court of the decisions of justices on a case stated, see 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 26; 42 & 43 Vict. c. 59, s. 33; and Jud. Act, 1873, s. 45.

Consult Burn's Justice; Stone's Petty Sessions Practice; Leeming and Cross's Quarter Sessions Practice, and Pritchard's Quarter Sessions.

Justices of Appeal, the title borne by the ordinary judges of the Court of Appeal, under Jud. Act, 1875, s. 4, until the Jud. Act, 1877, 40 Vict. c. 9, by s. 4, gave them the style of 'Lords Justices of Appeal.'

Justices, Lords, of Appeal. See LORDS JUSTICES.

Justice-seat, the principal court of the forest.

Justiceship, rank or office of a justice.

Justiciable, proper to be examined in courts of justice.

Justiciar, an officer instituted by William the Conqueror; a lord chief justice.

Justiciarii, tanquam justi in concreto, justiciarii de banco dicti, nunquam judices de banco. Co. Litt. 71 b.—(Justices, from 'justi in concreto,' called justices of the bench, never judges of the bench.)

Justiciary, Chief, an office of high importance in our early history. He presided in the King's Court and in the Exchequer, and his authority extended over all other courts. He was ex officio regent of the kingdom in the king's absence. Writs ran in his name and were tested by him. The last who filled the office and bore the title of Capitalis Justitiarius Angliæ was Philip Basset, temp. Hen. III.

Justiciary, High Court of, the supreme criminal court of Scotland, composed of five of the lords of session together with the lord justice-general and justice-clerk; of whom the lord justice-general, and in his absence the lord justice-clerk, is president. Its jurisdiction extends to the whole of Scotland. It has also the power of revising the sentences of all the Scottish inferior criminal courts, and from it there is no appeal whatever.

Justiciatus, judicature; prerogative.

Justices, a writ directed to the sheriff in some special cases, by virtue of which he might hold plea of debt in his county court for a large sum; whereas, by his ordinary power, he was limited to sums under 40*s.*—F. N. B. 117; 3 Bl. Com. 36.

As the sheriff could not, by this process, or the judgment to be obtained thereupon, arrest the defendant's body, but only take his goods; and as the cause might be removed at the defendant's pleasure into the superior courts, this process fell into desuetude.

Justifiable homicide, the killing of a human creature, without incurring any legal guilt. It is of various kinds:—

(1) The due execution of public justice, in putting a malefactor to death who has forfeited his life by the laws of his country.

(2) It may be committed for the advancement of public justice, as in the following instances:—(a) Wherean officer or his assistant in the due execution of his office, either in a criminal or civil case, arrests, or attempts to arrest, a person who resists, and who is killed in the struggle. (β) In case of a riot or rebellious assembly, officers endeavouring to disperse the mob are justified in killing them, both at common law and by the Riot Act, 1 Geo. I. c. 5. (γ) Where the prisoners in a gaol assault the gaoler or officer, and he in his defence kills any of them, it is justifiable, for the sake of preventing an escape. (δ) Where an officer or his assistant, in the due execution of his office, arrests, or attempts to arrest, a person for felony, or a dangerous wound given, and he having notice thereof, flies and is killed by such officer or assistant in pursuit. (ε) Where, upon such offence as last described, a private person, in whose sight it has been committed, arrests or endeavours to arrest the offender, and kills him in resistance, or flight, under similar circumstances.

(3) Where committed for the prevention of any forcible or atrocious crime, but not if the crime is unaccompanied by force.

(4) When two persons being shipwrecked, get on the same plank, but finding it not able to save them both, one of them thrusts the other from it, whereby he is drowned. This is justifiable upon the great universal principle of self-preservation.—4 Steph. Com.

Justification, a maintaining or showing a sufficient reason in court why the defendant did what he is called upon to answer, particularly in an action of libel; a defence of justification is a defence showing the libel to be true, or in an action of assault showing the violence to have been necessary. See Steph. on Plead., 7th ed., 184.

Justificators, a kind of compurgators, or those who by oath justified the innocence or oaths of others, as in the case of WAGER OF LAW.

Justifying bail, proving the sufficiency of bail or sureties in point of property, etc. See BAIL.

Justifying security. Administrators in certain cases are required by the Court of Probate to give justifying security, i.e., the sureties to the administration bond must, in an affidavit, swear that they are, after the payment of their debts, worth a sum specified. Justifying security is required by the Court according to the circumstances of each case, subject to the rule, that whenever administration is granted in default of the appearance of persons cited, but not personally served with the citation, or for the use and benefit of a person of unsound mind, unless it is granted to a committee appointed by the Court of Chancery, justifying security must be given.—1 Williams on Executors.

Justinianist, a civilian; one who studies the civil law.

Justitia, a statute law, or ordinance. Also a jurisdiction, or the office of a judge.

Justitia debet esse LIBERA, quia nihil iniquius vendi justitiā; PLENA, quia justitia non debet claudicare; et CELERIS, quia dilatio est quedam negatio. 2 Inst. 56.—(Justice ought to be unbought, because nothing is more hateful than venal justice; full, for justice ought not to halt; and quick, for delay is a kind of denial.)

Justitia est duplex; viz. severè puniens et verè preveniens. 3 Inst. Epil.—(Justice is double; punishing severely, and truly preventing.)

Justitia est virtus excellens et Altissimo complacens. 4 Inst. 58.—(Justice is excellent virtue, and pleasing to the Most High.)

Justitiā firmatur solium. 3 Inst. 140.—(By justice the throne is established.)

Justitia nemini neganda est. Jenk. Cent. 178.—(Justice is to be denied to none.)

Justitia non est neganda, non differenda. Jenk. Cent. 93.—(Justice is neither to be denied nor delayed.) See MAGNA CHARTA.

Justitia non novit patrem nec matrem, solam veritatem spectat justitia. 1 Bulst. 199.—(Justice neither knows father nor mother; justice regards truth alone.)

Justitia piepoudrous, speedy justice.—Bract., 333 b.

Justitium facere, to hold a plea of anything.

Justitium, a ceasing from the prosecution of law, and exercising justice in places judicial.—Cowel.

Justs, or Jousts, exercises between martial men and persons of honour, with spears, on horseback; different from tournaments, which were military exercises between many men in troops.—24 Hen. VIII. c. 13.

Juvenile offenders, summary trial and punishment of. See ss. 10 & 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, which repeals and replaces 10 & 11 Vict. c. 82, and other enactments, and allows children under 12 and 'young persons' under 14 to be summarily tried for certain indictable offences, instead of being committed for trial by jury. See also INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS AND REFORMATORY SCHOOLS.

Juvena, an ancient name of Ireland.

Juxta formam statuti (according to the form of the statute).

K.

Kabani, a person who, in oriental states, supplies the place of our notary public. All obligations, to be valid, are drawn by him; and he is also the public weigh-master: and everything of consequence ought to be weighed before him.—Encyc. Lond.

Kabooleat, properly Kabuliyat, 'a written agreement, especially one signifying assent, as the counterpart of a revenue lease, or the document in which a payer of revenue, whether to the Government, the Zamindar, or the farmer, expresses his consent to pay the amount assessed upon his land' (Wilson's Indian Glossary).—Indian.

Kaia, a key, quay, or wharf.—Old Records.

Kaiage, or Kaiagium, a wharfage-due.

Kain, poultry, etc., renderable by a vassal to his superior.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Kalendæ, rural chapters, or conventions of the rural deans and parochial clergy, which were formerly held on the calends of every month; hence the name.—Paroch. Antiq. 604.

Kalendar [now spelled calendar], an account of time.

Kalends. See CALENDs.

Kentref [Brit.], the division of a county; a hundred in Wales. See CANTRED.

Karitè, the best beer in a religious house. See CARITAS.

Karle, a churl.—Domesday.

Karrata fœni (a cart-load of hay).

Kay, a quay, or key.

Kazy, a Mahometan judge or magistrate in the East Indies, appointed originally by the court at Delhi, to administer justice according to their written law; under the British authorities their judicial functions ceased, and their duties were confined to the preparation and attestation of deeds, and the superintendence and legalization of marriage and other ceremonies among the Mahometans.—Indian.

Keating's (Sir H. S.) Act (for summary procedure on bills of exchange), 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67. The practice under this Act was continued under the new rules (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. II., r. 6), but abolished by the Rules of April 1880.

Kebbar or Culler, the refuse sheep drawn out of a flock.—Cooper's Thesaur.

Keelage, a privilege to demand money for the bottom of ships resting in a port or harbour.—Termes de la Ley.

Keelhaul, or Keelrake, to drag a person under the keel of a ship by means of ropes from the yardarms—a punishment formerly practised in the navy.—Encyc. Lond.

Keels, vessels for the carriage of coals.—Jac.

Keeper of the Forest, the chief warden of the forest, who has the superintendence over all the other officers, etc.—Manwood, p. i., p. 156.

Keeper of the Great Seal, Lord, a judicial officer, who used to be appointed in lieu of the Lord Chancellor.—5 Eliz. c. 18.

Keeper of the Privy Seal, now called the Lord Privy Seal, through whose hands all charters, etc., pass, before they come to the Great Seal. The office of Lord Privy Seal is always held by a Cabinet Minister.

Keeper of the Queen's Prison. This officer is appointed by the Secretary of State for the Home Department during pleasure.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, s. 22; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 7, s. 4; and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 60.

Keeper of the Touch, the Master of the Assay in the mint.—12 H. 6, c. 14.

Keepers of the Liberty of England. See CUSTODES LIBERTATIS, etc.

Keeping the peace, Security for. A recognisance or obligation to the Crown, taken in some court, or by some judicial officer, whereby a person acknowledges himself to be indebted to the Crown in a certain sum, with condition to be void and of none effect if he shall appear in court on such a day, and in the meantime shall keep the peace either generally towards the sovereign and all her liege people, or particularly towards the person who craves the security; or with condition so to keep the peace for a certain period, not dependent on any appearance in court.

If the condition of such recognisance be broken, the recognisance becomes forfeited or absolute; and the person and his sureties become the Crown's debtors, for the sums in which they are respectively bound.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 290.

Keeping house, confining oneself within the privacy of home to defeat creditors; an act of bankruptcy.—32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 6, para. 3.

Kennelworth edict (dictum sive edictum de Kennelworth). An edict or award between Henry III. and those who had been in arms against him; so called because made at Kenelworth Castle in Warwickshire, anno 51 Hen. III. A.D. 1266. It contained a composition of those who had forfeited their estates in that rebellion, which composition was five years' rent of the estates forfeited.—Hale's Hist. p. 10, n. (d).

Kennington Park. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 29, and PARK.

Kentlage, a permanent ballast, consisting usually of pigs of iron, cast in a particular form, or other weighty material, which, on account of its superior cleanliness, and the small space occupied by it, is frequently preferred to ordinary ballast.—Abbott on Shipping, 5.

Kerhere, a customary cart-way; also, a commutation for a customary carriage-duty.—Covel.

Kernellatus, fortified or embattled.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Kernes, idlers, vagabonds.

Keyus, a guardian, warden, or keeper.—Mon. Angl., tom. 2, p. 71.

Khalsa, pure, unmixed. An office of government in which the business of the revenue department was transacted under the Mahometan Government, and during the early period of British rule. Khalsa lands are lands the revenue of which is paid into the Exchequer.—Indian.

Khiraj, tax, tribute, land-tax.—Ibid.

Kidder, an engrosser of corn to enhance its price.—Ainsworth.

Kiddle, Kidel, or Kedel [fr. kidellus, Lat.], a dam or open wear in a river, with a loop or narrow cut in it, accommodated for the laying of wheels or other engines to catch fish.—2 Inst. 38.

Kidnapping [fr. kind, Dut., a child, and nap, to steal], the forcible abduction or stealing away of a man, woman, or child from their own country, and sending them into another. It is an offence punishable at the common law by fine and imprisonment.—4 Bl. Com. 219.

By the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 56, whosoever shall unlawfully, either by force or fraud, lead, or take away, or decoy, or entice away, or detain any child under fourteen years, with intent to deprive any parent, guardian, or other person having the lawful care or charge of such child, of possession, or with intent to steal any article upon its person, and whoever shall, with such intent, receive or harbour any child, knowing it to have been so led, etc., is guilty of felony, and may be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years, or imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and if a male, under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping. But no person who has claimed a right to the possession of the child, or shall be the mother, or has claimed to be the father of an illegitimate child, shall be liable to be prosecuted on account of getting possession of the child, or taking it out of the possession of any having the lawful charge thereof.

See also Kidnapping Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 19, for the prevention and punishment of criminal outrages upon natives of the islands in the Pacific Ocean.

Kilderkin, a measure of 18 gallons.

Kilketh, an ancient servile payment made by tenants in husbandry.—Cowel.

Kill, an Irish word, signifying a church or cemetery, which is used as a prefix to the names of many places in Ireland.—Encyc. Lond.

Killagium, keelage, which see.

Killyth-stallion, a custom by which lords of manors were bound to provide a stallion for the use of their tenants' mares.—Spelm.

Kin, or Kindred [fr. cynren, Sax.], relation by blood.

There are two degrees of either kindred; the one in the lineal or direct line ascending or descending, and the other in the collateral or indirect line.

The reckoning of degrees of kindred or relationship is as follows:

I. LINEAL.

(a)	Consanguinity.	(1) Ascending.	Father, mother, grandfather, grandmother, great grandfather, great grandmother; and so on, ad infinitum .
		(2) Descending.	Son, daughter, grandson, grand daughter, and so on, ad infinitum .
(b)	Affinity.	(1) Ascending.	Father-in-law, mother-in-law, or step-father, step-mother.
		(2) Descending.	Son-in-law, daughter-in-law, or step-son, step-daughter.

II. COLLATERAL.

(a)	Consanguinity.	Brother, sister, brother's children, sister's children, uncle, aunt, etc.
(b)	Affinity.	Brother's wife, sister's husband, uncle's wife, aunt's husband, etc.

The right of representation of kindred for the purposes of distribution of personalty, in the descending line, reaches beyond the great grand-children of the same parents; but in the collateral line it is not allowed to reach beyond brothers' and sisters' children. Our law agrees in its computation with the civil law, in computing who are entitled to administration and distribution of the personal property of intestates:

There are several rules to know the degrees of kindred; in the ascending line, take the son and add the father, and it is one degree ascending; then add the grandfather, and it is a second degree; a person added to a person in the line of consanguinity making a degree; if there are many persons, take away one, and you have the number of degrees, as if there be four persons, it is the third degree; if five, the fourth, etc.; so that the father, son, and grandchild, in the descending line, though three persons make but two degrees. To know in what degree of kindred the sons of two brothers stand, begin with the grandfather, and descend to one brother, the father of one of the sons, which is one degree; then descend to his son, the ancestor's grandson, which is a second degree; and then descend again from the grandfather to the other brother, father of the other of the sons, which is one degree, and descend to his son, etc., which is a second degree: thus reckoning the person from whom the computation is made, it appears there are two degrees and that the sons of two brothers are distant from each other two degrees; for in what degree either of them is distant from the common stock, the person from whom the computation is made, they are distant between themselves, in the same degree; and in every line the person must be reckoned from whom the computation is made. If the kindred are not equally distant from the common stock, then in what degree the most remote is distant, in the same degree they are distant between themselves, and so the line of the most remote makes the degree.—Wood's Inst. 48.

Kin-bote, compensation for the murder of a kinsman.—Old Saxon Law.

Kindred, relations by blood. See KIN.

King [a contraction of the Teutonic word cuning, or cyning], the name of sovereign dignity.

Bacon uses the word in the feminine gender. He says, 'Ferdinand and Isabella, Kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors.' See QUEEN.

King-craft, the art of governing.

King-geld, a royal aid; an escuage.

King's Bench. See QUEEN'S BENCH.

King's Bench Prison, now called the Queen's Prison.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 22; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 7; and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 60.

Kings-at-Arms. The principal herald of England was of old designated king of the heralds, a title which seems to have been exchanged for king-at-arms about the reign of Henry IV. The kings-at-arms at present existing in England are three: Garter, Clarenceux, and Norroy, besides Bath, who is not a member of the college. Scotland is placed under an officer called Lyon King-at-Arms, and Ireland is the province of one named Ulster.

King's books. They contain the Valor Beneficiorum, i.e., value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment, according to which valuation, the first fruits and tenths are collected and paid, and the clergy rated. This value was certified by certain commissioners, pursuant to 26 Hen. VIII. c. 3, confirmed by 1 Eliz. c. 4.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii. 533, and iii. 421.

King's silver, the money which was paid to the king, in the Court of Common Pleas, for a license granted to a man to levy a fine of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, to another person; and this must have been compounded, according to the value of the land, in the alienation office, before the fine would have passed.—2 Inst. 511. See FINE.

King's stores. See PUBLIC STORES.

King's widow, a widow of the king's tenant-in-chief, who was obliged to take oath in Chancery that she would not marry without the king's leave.

Kingdom, the territories subject to a monarch, either king or queen.

Kinsfolk, relations; those who are of the same family.

Kinsman, a man of the same race or family.

Kinswoman, a female relation.

Kintal, or Kintle [fr. centum, Lat.], a hundred pounds in weight. See QUINTAL.

Kintledge, a ship's ballast. See KENTLAGE.

Kipper-time, the space of time between the 3rd of May and the Epiphany, in which fishing for salmon in the Thames, between Gravesend and Henley-on-Thames, was forbidden.—Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. III.

Kirby's Quest, an ancient record remaining with the remembrancer of the Exchequer, so called from its being the inquest of John de Kirby, treasurer to King Edward I.

Kirk [fr. cyree, Sax.; κυριακή, Gk.], a church.

Kirk-note or Kirk-mote, a meeting of parishioners on church affairs.

Kirk-officer, the beadle of a church in Scotland.

Kirk-session, a parochial church court in Scotland, consisting of the ministers and elders of each parish.

Kist, stated payment, instalment of rent.—Indian.

Kleptomania [fr. κλέπτω, Gk., to steal; and μανία, frenzy], insanity in the form of an irresistible propensity to steal. Consult Taylor's Med. Jur.

Knaveship, a portion of grain given to a mill-servant from tenants who were bound to grind their grain at such mill. See THIRLAGE.

Knight, a title of honour next to baronets, entitling the person on whom it is conferred to be styled sir, and his wife lady. A knight is now made by the sovereign touching him with a sword as he kneels, and saying 'Rise, Sir——'—Encyc. Lond.

Knightencourt, a court which used to be held twice a year by the Bishop of Hereford.

Knightenguild, an ancient guild or society formed by King Edgar.

Knighthood, the character or dignity of a knight. The union of chivalry with the feudal system, and the decay of both, gave rise to knight-service and the compulsion of landowners to become knights, or pay a fine, but by 16 Car. I. c. 20, no man can be compelled to take the Order of Knighthood. See Sir N. H. Nicholas' History of the Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire.

Knight-marshal, an officer in the royal household who has jurisdiction and cognizance of offences committed within the household and verge, and of all contracts made therein—a member of the household being one of the parties.

Knight-service, formerly the most universal and most honourable species of tenure, being entirely military; a feudal tenure. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24. See TENURE.

Knights bachelors [fr. bas chevalier, Fr.], the most ancient though lowest order of knighthood.—1 Bl. Com. 404. See BAS-CHEVALIERS.

Knights Banneret [milites vexillarii, Lat.], those created by the sovereign in person on the field of battle. They rank, generally, after Knights of the Garter.—1 Bl. Com. 403.

Knights of St. Michael and St. George, an order instituted in 1818.

Knights of the Bath [milites balnei, Lat.], an order instituted by Hen. IV., and revived by George I. They are so called from the ceremony formerly observed of bathing the night before their creation.—Dugd. Antiq. of Warw. 531.

Knights of the Chamber [milites camere, Lat.], those created in the sovereign's chamber in time of peace, not in the field.—2 Inst. 666.

Knights' fee [feodum militare, Lat.], twelve plough-lands, the value of which was 20*l.* per annum (2 Inst. 596). Selden contends that it was as much as the king was pleased to grant upon condition of having the service of a knight.—Tit. of Hon. p. ii. c. v., ss. 17, 26. See TENURE.

Knights of the Garter [equites garterii, vel periscelidis, Lat.], otherwise called Knights of the Order of St. George. This order was founded by Richard I., and improved by Edward III. A.D. 1344. They form the highest order of knights.

Knights of St. Patrick, instituted in Ireland by George III. A.D. 1763. They have no rank in England.

Knights of the post, hiring witnesses.

Knights of the shire, members of parliament representing counties or shires, in contradistinction to citizens or burghers, who represent boroughs or corporations. A knight of the shire is so called, because, as the terms of the writ for election still require, it was formerly necessary that he should be a knight. This restriction was coeval with the tenure of knight-service, when every man who received a knight's fee immediately of the Crown, was constrained to be a knight; but at present any person may be chosen to fill the office who is not an alien. The money qualification is abolished by 21 Vict. c. 26.

Knights of the Thistle. This order is said to have been instituted by Achaius, King of Scotland, A.D. 819. The better opinion, however, is that it was instituted by James V. in 1534, was revived by James VII. (James II. of England) in 1687, and re-established by Queen Anne in 1703. See Nicholas' History of the Orders of Knighthood of the British Empire. They have no rank in England.

Knopa, a knob, nob, bosse, knot.

Knot (nautical term), a division of the log-line, which answers to half a minute as a mile does to an hour—the 120th part of a mile. So a ship going eight miles in the hour, she is said to go eight knots.

Know-men, or just-fast-men, the Lollards in England.

Koran, or Alcoran, the Mohammedan book of faith. It contains both ecclesiastical and secular laws.

Kut-Kubala, a mortgage-deed or deed of conditional sale, being one of the customary deeds or instruments of security in India as declared by regulation of 1806, which regulates the legal proceedings to be taken to enforce such a security. It is also called Byebil-wuffa. See a form 8 W. Rep. 29.

Kymortha [Welsh], waster, rhymer, minstrel, or other vagabond who makes assemblies and collections.—Barr. on Stat. 360.

Kyst, Kysta, or Kyste [Sax.], a chest or coffin.

Kyth [fr. cognatus, Lat.], kin or kindred.

L.

Label [fr. labellum, Lat.], anything appended to a larger writing, as a codicil; a narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writ, in order to hold the appending seal. It is also a term of heraldry.

Labina, watery land.—Old Records.

Laborariis, an ancient writ against persons who refused to serve and do labour, and who had no means of living; or against such as, having served in the winter, refused to serve in the summer.—Reg. Orig. 189.

Labour, Hard, this punishment is said to have been introduced by 5 Anne c. 6, and is frequently added to the sentence of imprisonment; the Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861 and other penal statutes commonly authorizing imprisonment 'with or without hard labour' as the judge may think fit. For regulations as to hard labour in prisons, see Rules 34—37 of the Prison Act, 1865.

Labourers, servants in husbandry or manufactures, not living intra mœnia. Various acts of parliament, all obsolete, but some still unrepealed (see, e.g., 5 Eliz. c. 4), have vested in the justices of the peace the power of compelling persons not having any visible livelihood to go out to service in husbandry, or in certain specific trades, for the promotion of honest industry. See further MASTER AND SERVANT.

Labourers' Dwellings. Four sets of enactments provide for the erection and maintenance of healthy 'labourers' dwellings.'

(1) The Labouring Classes Lodging Houses and Dwelling Houses Acts, 1851, 1866, and 1867 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 34; 29 Vict. c. 28; and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 28). These acts may be 'adopted' by the town council of a borough, and other local authorities. Upon the adoption of the acts, corporate land may be appropriated and lodging houses erected thereon, or money may be borrowed by the local authorities for the purposes of erecting such houses on other land.

(2) The Artisans and Labourers Dwellings Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 130, amended by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 64, and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 54. Under this act town councils and other urban sanitary authorities have power to direct the demolition or improvement of separate dwellings unfit for human habitation, and the building and maintaining of better dwellings in lieu thereof.

(3) The Artisans and Labourers Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 36, amended by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 63, and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 54. Under this act, which applies only to places having a population of 25,000 and upwards, a town council or other urban sanitary authority may frame schemes for the improvement of a body of houses, courts, or alleys, within particular areas. The schemes require the confirmation of the Local Government Board, the Metropolitan Board of Works, or a Secretary of State according as the improvements are to be effected in the country or in London.

(4) The Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 111. By this enactment, which reproduces the repealed 'Working Men's Dwellings Act, 1874,' a municipal corporation may, with the approval of the Treasury, convert corporate land into sites for working men's dwellings, i.e., 'buildings suitable for the habitation of persons employed in manual labour, and their families,' and grant leases for that purpose for 999 years, or any shorter term, of any parts of the corporate land.

Labourers, Statute of, 31 Ed. III. c. 7 (repealed as long obsolete by Statute Law Revision Act, 1863), whereby justices of the peace had power to regulate the rate of wages, which had risen to an abnormal height, owing to the scarcity of labour arising out of the 'Black Death.' See Lumley v. Gye, 2 E. & B. 216, per Coleridge, J.

Lac, Lak, Lakh, or Lauk, in Indian computation 100,000. The value of a lac of rupees is about 10,000*l.* sterling.

Lace, a measure of land equal to one pole. This term is widely used in Cornwall.

Lacerta, a fathom.—Old Records.

La Chambre des Esteilles, the Star-Chamber.—Law French.

Laches [fr. lâcher, Fr., to loosen], slackness, negligence in pursuing a legal remedy, whereby the party forfeits the benefit upon the principle Vigilantibus ac non dormientibus jura subveniunt, which see.

In the Sovereign there can be no negligence or laches. Nullum tempus occurrit regi was the maxim; and no delay in resorting to his remedy was held to bar the king's right. It followed, not only that the civil claims of the Crown received no prejudice by the lapse of time, but that prosecutions for felonies or misdemeanours (always brought in the Sovereign's name) might be commenced at any time after the offence. This is, in general, still law; but by statute it has been largely qualified; by 9 Geo. III. c. 16, the Crown is barred from its civil right in suits relating to land by the lapse of sixty years; by 32 Geo. III. c. 58, in informations for usurping corporate offices or franchises by the lapse of six years; and by 7 Wm. III. c. 3, an indictment for treason (except for an attempt to assassinate the Sovereign) must be found within three years after the act of treason.

Lacta, a defect in the weight of money.

Lacuna, a ditch or dyke; a furrow for a drain; a blank in writing.—Old Records.

Lada, purgation, exculpation. There were three kinds:—(1) That wherein the accused cleared himself by his own oath, supported by the oaths of his consacramentals (compurgators), according to the number of which the lada was said to be either simple or threefold; (2) Ordeal; (3) Corsned. See CORSNED BREAD.

Also, a service which consisted in supplying the lord with beasts of burthen; or, as defined by Roquefort: Service qu'un vassal devoit à son seigneur, et qui consistoit à faire quelques voyages par ses bêtes de somme.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Lada [fr. lathian, Sax.], a lath, or inferior court of justice; also a course of water; or a broad-way.

Lade, or Lode, the mouth of a river.

Laden in bulk, freighted with a cargo which is neither in casks, boxes, bales, nor cases, but lies loose in the hold, being defended from wet or moisture by a number of mats and a quantity of dunnage. Cargoes of corn, salt, etc., are usually so shipped. See now 38 & 39 Vict. c. 88, s. 3.

Lading. See BILL OF LADING.

Lady, fr. hæf dig, Sax., loaf-day, which words have in time been contracted into the present appellation. It was the fashion for the lady of the manor, once a week or oftener, to distribute to her poor neighbours, with her own hands, a certain quantity of bread. The title is borne by the wives of knights, and of all degrees above them, except the wives of bishops; but see DAME.

Lady-court, the court of a lady of the manor.

Lady-day, the 25th of March in every year, being the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin, and one of the usual quarterly days for the payment of rent, etc. Lady-day, under the old style, was April 6th.

Lady's Friend, an officer of the House of Commons, whose duty it was to take care that a husband, who sued for a divorce, made a suitable provision for his divorced wife, if the House of Lords had not provided for it.

Lædorum, reproach.—Girald. Camb. c. 14.

Læsæ majestatis, Crimen, the crime of treason.—Glanville, l. 1, c. ii.

Læsio ultra dimidium vel enormis, the injury sustained by one of the parties to an onerous contract when he had been overreached by the other to the extent of more than one-half of the value of the subject matter, e.g., when a vendor had not received half the value of property sold, or the purchaser had paid more than double value.—Colq. Rom. Civ. Law, s. 2094.

Læsione fidei, Suits pro, proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts for spiritual offences against conscience, for non-payment of debts, or breaches of civil contracts. By entertaining them the clergy attempted to turn the Spiritual Courts into tribunals for the administration of equity; but these suits were prohibited by the Constitutions of Clarendon.—10 Hen. II. c. 15.

Læt [fr. litus, lidas, letus], one of a class between servile and free.—Palgrave, i. 354.

Lætere Jerusalem, Easter offerings, so called from these words in the hymn of the day. They are also denominated quadragesimalia.

Læthe, or Lathe, a division or district peculiar to the county of Kent.—Spelm.

Lafordswic [fr. hlaforð, Sax., lord, and swic, betrayal], a betraying of one's lord or master.

Laga, law.—Old Term.

Lagan [fr. ligan, Sax.], goods tied to a buoy and sunk in the sea; also a right which the chief lord of the fee had to take goods cast on shore by the violence of the sea.—Bract. l. 3, c. ii.; 5 Co. Rep. 106 b.

Lage-day, a day of open court; the day of the county-court.—Cowel.

Lage-man, a juror.—Cowel.

Lagen, a measure of six sextarii.—Fleta, l. 2, c. viii.

Lagh [fr. laga, Sax.], law. Obsolete.

Laghslite, a breach of law; a punishment for breaking the law.—Cowel.

Lagon. See LAGAN.

Lagotrophy [fr. λαγός, Gk., a hare; and τρέφω, to nourish], a warren of hares.—Encyc. Lond.

Lagu, law; also used to express the territory or district in which a particular law was in force, as Denalagu, Mercna lagu, etc.—See Præfatio ad Wilk. L. Anglo-Sax. 16.

Lahman, or Lagemannus, an old word for a lawyer.—Domesday I. 189.

Lah-slit, a mulct for offences committed by the Danes.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Laia, a roadway in a wood.—Mon. Angl. t. 1, p. 483.

Laic [fr. λαός, Gk., people], one who is not in holy orders, or not engaged in the ministry of religion.

Lairwite, or Lecherwite, a fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of some manors.—4 Inst. 206.

Laity [fr. λαός, Gk., people], the people as distinguished from the clergy. See LAYMAN.

Lambard's Archaionomia, a work printed in 1563, containing the Anglo-Saxon laws, those of William the Conqueror, and of Henry I.

Lambard's Eirenarcha, a work upon the office of a justice of peace, which having gone through two editions, one in 1579, the other in 1581, was reprinted in English in 1599.

Lambeth degrees. Degrees conferred by the Archbishop of Canterbury. See CANTERBURY, ARCHBISHOP OF.

Lame duck, a person unable to meet his engagements.—Stock Exchange cant term.

Lammas [said to be derived from a custom by which the tenants of the Archbishop of York were obliged, at the time of mass, on the 1st of August, to bring a live lamb to the altar. In Scotland they are said to wean lambs on this day. It may be corrupted from latter-math. Others derive it from a Saxon word, signifying loaf-mass, because on that day our forefathers made an offering of bread composed of new wheat], the gule or 1st of August, and the second of the four cross quarter-days of the year.—Encyc. Lond.; Wheat. Com. Pr.

Lammas lands. Lands over which there is a right of pasturage by persons other than the owner, from about Lammas, or reaping time, until sowing time. See 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, s. 13, as to commutation of tithe thereon, and see Baylis v. Tyssen Amhurst, 6 Ch. D. 500.

Lancaster, a county of England erected into a palatine in the reign of Edward III., and granted by him to his son John for life, that he should have jura regalia and a king-like power to pardon treasons, outlawries, etc., and make justices of the peace and justices of assize within the county, and all processes and indictments to be in his name. It is now vested in the Crown. See COUNTY PALATINE, and DUCHY COURT OF LANCASTER.

Lanceti, vassals who were obliged to work for their lord one day in the week, from Michaelmas to autumn, either with fork, spade, or flail, at the lord's option.—Spelm.

Land [fr. terra, Lat., fr. terendo, because it is ploughed], in its restrained sense, means soil, but in its legal acceptance it is a generic term, comprehending every species of ground or earth, as meadows, pastures, woods, moors, waters, marshes, furze, and heath; it includes also messuages (i.e., dwelling-houses with some adjacent land assigned to the use of them, usually called a curtilage), tofts (i.e., places where houses formerly stood), crofts (derived from the old English word craft, meaning handy-craft, because such grounds are usually manured by the skilful hand of the owner; they are small enclosures for pasture, etc., adjoining to dwelling-houses), mills, castles, and other buildings, for with the conveyance of the land, the structures upon it pass also. And besides an indefinite extent upwards, it extends downwards to the globe's centre, hence the maxim:—Cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cælum et ad inferos, or more curtly expressed, Cujus est solum ejus est altum.

Water, by a solecism, is held to be a species of land; e.g., in order to recover possession of a pool or rivulet of water, the action must be brought for the land, e.g., ten acres of land covered with water, and not for the water only.

Land, Recovery of. See EJECTMENT.

Land Commissioners, the title, by the Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 48, of the commissioners formerly called 'The Copyhold Inclosure and Tithe Commissioners.' By s. 26 of that act, a certificate of these commissioners that an 'improvement' within that act has been effected is, in the absence of an Order of the Court, an authority to trustees to pay for the improvement out of 'capital money,' and by s. 28 a tenant for life must maintain and repair an 'improvement' at his own expense during such period if any as the commissioners by certificate in any case prescribe.

Land Revenues of the Crown. The greatest part of these have been from time to time granted by successive sovereigns to lords of manors and others, who now, for the most part, hold the prerogative rights of estrays, waifs, etc., as their own absolute property. These grants having greatly impoverished the patrimony of the Crown, an act was passed in the reign of Queen Anne, whereby it was declared that all future grants or leases by the Crown for any longer term than thirty-one years, or three lives, should be void.—1 Anne st. 1, c. 7, amended and continued by the 34 Geo. III. c. 75. At the commencement of the reign of George III. the hereditary revenues of the Crown, arising from renewals, fines, unclaimed estrays, escheats from manors held in capite, and suchlike, being very uncertain, with all other hereditary revenues, were given up by His Majesty to the aggregate funds; and in lieu thereof His Majesty received 800,000*l.* a year for the maintenance of his civil list.—1 Geo. III. c. 1. By subsequent acts (34 Geo. III. c. 57; 48 Geo. III. c. 73; 52 Geo. III. c. 161), these hereditary revenues were put under the management of commissioners, styled 'Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues.' This arrangement was confirmed by 1 Geo. IV. c. 1. See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 42, and 29 & 30 Vict. c. 62. By 1 Vict. c. 2, the amount granted for the support of the Queen's household, and of the honour and dignity of the Crown, etc., is 385,000*l.* See CIVIL LIST. As to Crown lands, see that title, and as to the private estates of the Crown, see CROWN PRIVATE ESTATE ACTS.

Landa, an open field; a field cleared from wood.—Old Records.

Land-agende, Land-hlaford, or Land-rica, a proprietor of land; lord of the soil.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Land-boc [Sax.] (libellus de terra, Lat.), the deed or charter by which lands were held.—Spelm.

Land-cheap, a fine paid in some places on the alienation of lands.—Cowel.

Landea, a ditch, in marshy lands, to carry water into the sea.—Du Cange.

Landed Estates Court (Ireland), the court which deals with the transfer of land and the creation of title thereto in Ireland. This court is the successor of the Encumbered Estates Court, which latter was established to meet the exigencies of a time when the general distress of the country was aggravated by the fact that a great proportion of the land was in the hands of proprietors so needy and embarrassed that they were unable to do justice to the land, while the complicated state of the title prevented their finding a purchaser. The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 48, created the last-named court for the purpose of facilitating, and, in some cases, compelling the sale of lands in this condition, and at the same time creating an indefeasible title for the purchaser. This act was subsequently enlarged by the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 77, and the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 67. Afterwards by the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 72, the court created for this purpose was made a permanent court under the style of the Landed Estates Court, and continues to discharge (with some modifications) the same functions as the Encumbered Estates Court. By the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 88, power is given to make a record of title of conveyances, of declarations, and of other interests in land under the control and by direction of the Landed Estates Court. The court consists of (two) judges and masters, and some subordinate officers. As to the record of titles conferred by the Landed Estates Court, see 28 & 29 Vict. c. 88. By 28 & 29 Vict. c. 101, transferable debentures may be charged on land by order of the court. See also 29 & 30 Vict. c. 99.

Landefricus, a landlord; a lord of the soil.

Landegandman, an inferior tenant of a manor.—Spelm.

Land-gabel, a tax or rent issuing out of land. Spelman says, it was originally a penny for every house. This land-gabel, or land-gavel, in the register of Domesday, was a quit-rent for the site of a house, or the land whereon it stood; the same with what we now call ground-rent.

Landgrave [fr. land, Germ., earth, and graff, or grave, judge or count], a name formerly given to those who executed justice on behalf of the German emperors, with regard to the internal policy of the country. It was applied, by way of eminence, to those sovereign princes of the empire who possess by inheritance certain estates called land-gravates, of which they received investiture from the emperor.—Encyc. Lond.

Landimers [agrimensores, Lat.], measures of land.—Cowel.

Landirecta, rights which charged the land whoever possessed it. See TRINODA NECES- SITAS.

Landlord, he of whom lands or tenements are holden; who has a right to distrain for rent in arrear, etc.—Co. Litt. 57. See Wood-fall or Smith or Fawcett or Soden and Smith or Redman and Lyon on Landlord and Tenant.

Landlord and Tenant (Ireland) Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 46, amended by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 32.

Land-man [fr. terricola, Lat.], a terre-tenant.

Land-mark, an object fixing the boundary of an estate or property.

Land-reeve, a person whose business it is to overlook certain parts of a farm or estate; to attend not only to the woods and hedge-timber, but also to the state of the fences, gates, buildings, private roads, drift-ways, and watercourses; and likewise to the stocking of commons, and encroachments of every kind, as well as to prevent or detect waste and spoil in general, whether by the tenants or others; and to report the same to the manager or land-steward.—Encyc. Lond.

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 Vict. c. 18, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 18, applicable to England and Ireland, the public act of parliament whereby public bodies, authorised by special act of parliament to take the land of individuals for the purposes of such special act, enter upon and make compensation for the land. Until the passing of this general act, each special act contained the necessary provisions.

Lands Clauses Consolidation Act (Scotland), 8 & 9 Vict. c. 19, amended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 106, differs in form only from the above; most of the sections being word for word the same. A separate act was necessitated by the difference of the Scotch procedure.

Land-steward, a person who overlooks or has the management of a farm or estate.

Land-tax, a tax laid upon land and houses, which has superseded all the former methods of taxing either property or persons in respect of their property, whether by tenths or fifteenths, subsidies on land, hydages, scutages, or talliages. Although generally a charge upon a landlord, yet it is a tax neither on landlord nor tenant, but on the beneficial proprietor, as distinguished from the mere tenant at rack-rent; and if a tenant have to any extent a beneficial interest, he becomes liable to the tax, pro tanto, and can only charge the residue on his landlord. Houses and buildings appropriated to public purposes are not liable to land-tax. As to its origin and inequality, see 3 Hall. Cons. Hist. 135; Miller on the Land-Tax.

The sum fixed by 38 Geo. III. c. 5, to be paid for the land-tax in Great Britain, was 2,037,627*l.* 9*s.* 0*d.*, made up by contributions of fixed amount from the counties and boroughs as named by that act. The tax was first imposed in 1698, and was therefore annual until 1798, when it was made perpetual by 38 Geo. III. c. 60, upon the basis of the valuation of 1698. The same act provided for the redemption of the tax, but the redemption clauses were shortly afterwards superseded by 42 Geo. III. c. 116, under which, together with 53 Geo. c. 123 and other acts, of which the most important is 16 & 17 Vict. c. 117, which reduced the terms of redemption by 17½ per cent., redemption is still effected. Up to 1876 about 800,000*l.* of the original 2,000,000*l.* had been redeemed.

The sum assessed upon every tenant for land-tax is to be paid by the tenant, who may make a proportional deduction out of all rents; and disputes concerning the adjustment of this proportion are to be settled by the commissioners; but all agreements on the subject are valid between the parties, and it has now become the general practice, both in leases and grants of rent, to stipulate that no such deduction shall be made.

For the various statutes for the better regulation of land-tax, and its redemption, see Chitty's Statutes, vol. iii., tit. 'Land-Tax.'

Land-waiter, an officer of the custom-house, whose duty is, upon landing any merchandise, to examine, taste, weigh, or measure it, and to take an account thereof. In some ports they also execute the office of a coast-waiter. They are likewise occasionally styled searchers, and are to attend and join with the patent searcher in the execution of all cockets for the shipping of goods to be exported to foreign parts; and in cases where drawbacks on bounties are to be paid to the merchant on the exportation of any goods, they, as well as the patent searchers, are to certify the shipping thereof on the debentures.—Encyc. Lond.

Langeman, a lord of a manor.—1 Inst. 5.

Langeolum [fr. lana, Lat.], an under garment made of wool, formerly worn by the monks, which reached to their knees.—Mon. Angl. 419.

Languidus, sick, in ill health; a return made by a sheriff to a writ, when the removal of a person in his custody would endanger his life.

Lanis de crescentiâ Walliæ traducendis absque custumâ, etc., an ancient writ that lay to the customer of a port to permit one to pass wool without paying custom, he having paid it before in Wales.—Reg. Orig. 279.

Lano niger, a sort of base coin, formerly current in this kingdom.—Mem. in Scac.

Lapidation, the act of stoning a person to death.

Lapis marmorius, a marble stone about twelve feet long and three feet broad, placed at the upper end of Westminster Hall, where was likewise a marble chair erected on the middle thereof, in which our sovereigns anciently sat at their coronation dinner, and at other times the Lord Chancellor.

Lapis pacis. See OSCULUM PACIS.

Lapse [fr. lapsus, Lat.], error; failing in duty.

(1) A benefice is said to lapse when the patron does not exercise the right of presentation within six calendar months (182 days) after the avoidance of the benefice, exclusive of the day of the avoidance. In such case there is a devolution of the rights of patronage from a neglectful patron to the bishop as ordinary, to the metropolitan as superior, and to the sovereign as patron paramount of all the benefices in the realm.

(2) A devise or legacy is said to lapse when the devisee or legatee dies before the testator. In such case the devise or legacy falls into the residuary real or personal estate as the case may be. If, however, the devisee or legatee should be a child or other issue of the testator, and should die leaving issue surviving at the testator's death, then, by the special operation of s. 33 of the Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, the lapse is prevented, and such surviving issue takes the subject matter of the devise or legacy, and see s. 32 of the same act as to a devise for an estate-tail.

Larceny [fr. larcin, Fr.; latrocinium, Lat.], contracted for latrocinny, the unlawful taking and carrying away of things personal, with intent to deprive the rightful owner of the same. Larceny is a species of felony. The statute law of England and Ireland relating to larceny and other similar offences is consolidated by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. Larceny is either simple or accompanied with circumstances of aggravation.

(1) Simple larceny, at common law, or plain theft. To constitute the offence there must be an unlawful taking, which implies that the goods must pass from the possession of a true owner (including one who has a bailee), and without his consent; where there is, then, no change of possession, or a change of it by consent, or a change from the possession of a person without title to that of the true owner, there cannot be a larceny. If a delivery be obtained from the owner by a person having animus furandi at the time, and he afterwards unlawfully appropriates the goods in pursuance of that intent, it is larceny. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 74, whoever shall steal a chattel or fixture let to be used by him in or with any house or lodging, is liable to the penalties of simple larceny; and by s. 3, any bailee of any chattel, money, or valuable security who shall fraudulently take or convert the same to his own use, or the use of any person other than the owner thereof, shall be guilty of larceny, although he shall not break bulk or otherwise determine the bailment. There must not be only a taking, but a carrying away (cepit et asportavit). A bare removal from the place in which he found the goods, though the thief does not quite make off with them, is a sufficient asportation or carrying away. It must be of personal goods, and not of the realty or things adhering thereto, or savouring thereof. The taking and carrying away must be with intent to deprive the owner of the thing taken, or, as it is expressed, animo furandi. Larceny may be committed of a thing the owner of which is unknown, provided it appear that there is some person other than the taker in whom the ownership resides. Larceny was formerly divided into petit, where the value of the property was not more than twelve pence, and grand, where it exceeded that amount; but now this distinction has been abolished (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 2). The punishment for simple larceny is in ordinary cases penal servitude for the term of three (now five, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47) years, or imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, and if the offender be a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping (s. 4). If the offender has been previously convicted of felony, either on indictment or on summary conviction, the term of penal servitude may be increased to ten years (s. 7). If he has been previously convicted of an indictable misdemeanour under the act, or has been twice summarily convicted of certain specified offences, the term of penal servitude may be increased to seven years (ss. 8, 9). Simple larceny is in certain cases punishable with greater severity, for whosoever shall steal any horse, mare, gelding, colt, or filly, or any bull, cow, ox, heifer, or calf, or any ram, ewe, sheep, or lamb, is liable to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen or less than three (now five, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47) years, or to be imprisoned not more than two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement (s. 10); and whosoever shall steal to the value of 10s. any woollen, linen, or cotton yarn, or any goods of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, alpaca, or mohair, or of any one or more of those materials mixed with each other, or mixed with any other material, whilst laid, placed, or exposed during any stage, process, or progress of manufacture in any building, field, or other place, is liable to the same punishment (s. 62).

(2) Larceny in a dwelling-house. Whosoever shall steal in any dwelling-house any chattel, money, or valuable security to the value of 5*l.* or more, shall be liable to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen and not less than three (now five, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47) years, or to be imprisoned for not more than two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 60); and whosoever shall steal any chattel, money, or valuable security in a dwelling-house, and shall, by any menace or threat, put any one being therein in bodily fear, shall be liable to the same punishment (s. 61).

(3) Larceny from the person. It is either,

(a) Privately stealing, as picking a person's pocket.

(β) Open and violent larceny from the person, or robbery, called by the civilians rapine, as to which see ROBBERY.

As to larceny by bailees, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 3.

As to larceny by clerks, servants, or agents, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. Embezzlement is distinguished from this offence as being committed in respect of property which is not, at the time, in the actual or legal possession of the owner. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

As to larceny by partners of partnership property, the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116 provides that if any person, being a member of any co-partnership, or being one of two or more beneficial owners of any money, goods, or effects, bills, notes, securities, or other property, shall steal or embezzle any such money, goods, or effects, bills, notes, securities, or other property of, or belonging to any such co-partnership, or to such joint beneficial owners, every such person shall be liable to be dealt with, tried, convicted, and punished for the same as if such person had not been, or was not a member of such co-partnership, or one of such beneficial owners.

As to larceny by persons in the Queen's service, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 69, 70; by tenants, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 74.

As to larceny in relation to the post-office see 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 25 et seq., and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 88, s. 4.

As to larceny from ships, docks, wharves, or quays, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 63.

See as to larceny generally, Archbold's or Roscoe's Crim. Evid. and Russell on Crimes.

Larceny (Advertisement) Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 65. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 102, a penalty of 50*l.* is imposed on any person publishing an advertisement for the return of stolen goods 'without questions being asked.' This leading to vexatious actions by common informers against the publishers of newspapers, the Act of 1870 enacts that no such action shall be brought without the consent of the Attorney-General, etc.

Lardarius regis, the king's larderer, or clerk of the kitchen.—Covel.

Larding money [fr. lardarium, Lat.]. In the manor of Bradford, in Wilts, the tenants pay to their lord a small yearly rent by this name, which is said to be for liberty to feed their hogs with the masts of the lord's wood, the fat of a hog being called lard: or it may be a commutation for some customary service of carrying salt or meat to the lord's larder.—Mong. Angl., t. 1, p. 321.

Larons [fr. latro, Lat.], thieves.

Lascar, a native Indian sailor; 'the term is also applied to tent pitchers, inferior artillery-men, and others.'—Wilson's Indian Glossary.

Lashite, or Lashlite, a kind of forfeiture during the government of the Danes in England.—Encyc. Lond.

Last [fr. hæstan, Sax.; lest, Fr.], a burden; a weight or measure of fish, corn, wool, leather, pitch, etc.

Lastage, or Lestage [fr. lastagium, Lat.], a custom exacted in some fairs and markets to carry things bought whither one will. But it is more accurately taken for the ballast or lading of a ship. Also, custom paid for wares sold by the last, as herrings, pitch, etc.

Lastatinus, an assassin or murderer.—Wals.

Last Court, a court held by the twenty-four jurors in the marshes of Kent, and summoned by the bailiffs, whereby orders are made to lay and levy taxes, impose penalties, etc., for the preservation of the said marshes.—Encyc. Lond.

Last day of Term. On the last day of each of the four terms, the junior barrister present in every court of law, was entitled to make his motion the first, and so on, in order of juniority, to the senior outer barrister: afterwards, among the Queen's counsel and serjeants, the senior began. For the purposes of the administration of justice the division of the legal year into terms is abolished (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 26). See SITTINGS.

Last heir, he to whom lands come by escheat for want of lawful heirs; that is, in some cases the lord of whom the lands were held, but in others the Sovereign.—Bract. l. 7, c. xvii.

Last resort. A court from which there is no appeal is called the court of last resort.

Lata culpa, dolo æquiparatur (gross negligence is tantamount to fraud). This maxim is only another form of the English one, 'Every man is taken to intend that which is the natural consequence of his actions.'

Latching, an underground survey.

Latent [fr. latens, Lat.], hidden, concealed; secret.

Latent ambiguity. See AMBIGUITY.

Latera, sidesmen, companions, assistants.

Laterare, to lie sideways, in opposition to lying endways, used in descriptions of lands.

Lath, or Lathe, a part of a county. In some counties there is an intermediate division between the shire and the hundred, as lathes in Kent, and rapes in Sussex; each of them containing three or four hundreds. In Ireland the arrangement was different. 'If all that tything failed, then all that lath was charged for that tything; and if the lath failed, then all that hundred was demanded for them: and if the hundred, then the shire, who would not rest until they found that undutiful fellow who was not amenable to law.'—Spencer's Ireland.

Lathreeve, Ledgreeve, or Trithin-greve, an officer under the Saxon government, who had authority over a lathe.—Covel.

Latimer [fr. latinier, Fr., q. d. latinier], an interpreter, according to Coke (2 Inst. 515). It is suggested that it should be latiner because he who understood Latin might be a good interpreter. Camden makes it signify a Frenchman or interpreter.—Britan., f. 598.

Latin, the language of the ancient Romans. There are three sorts of law Latin:—(1) Good Latin, allowed by the grammarians and lawyers. (2) False or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs; though it would not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, etc. (3) Words of art, known only to the sages of the law, and not to grammarians; called lawyers' Latin.—1 Lit. Abr. 146. But proceedings are now written in English.—4 Geo. II. c. 26.

Latinarius, an interpreter of Latin.

Latitat (he lies hid), a writ, whereby all persons were originally summoned to answer in personal actions in the Queen's Bench; so called because it is supposed by the writ that the defendant lurks and lies hid, and cannot be found in the county of Middlesex (in which the court is holden) to be taken by bill, but has gone into some other county, to the sheriff of which this writ was directed to apprehend him there.—F. N. B. 78; Termes de la Ley; 2 Bl. Com. 286. Abolished by the 2 Wm. IV. c. 39. See now SUMMONS, WRIT OF.

Lator [fr. latus, Lat.], a bearer, a messenger.—Colé.

Latro, he who has the sole jurisdiction de latrone in a particular place (mentioned in Leg. W. I.) See INFANGENTHEF.

Latrocination [fr. latro, Lat., a robber], the act of robbing; a depredation.

Latrocinium, the prerogative of adjudging and executing thieves; also, larceny, theft.—Old Charter.

Latrocinij, larceny.

Latter-math, a second mowing; the after-math.

Laudare, to advise or persuade; to arbitrate.

Laudatio, testimony delivered in court concerning an accused person's good behaviour and integrity of life. It resembled the practice which prevails in our trials, of calling persons to speak to a prisoner's character. The least number of the laudatores among the Romans was ten.

Laudator, an arbitrator.

Laudibus (de) Legum Angliæ. Sir John Fortescue, who had been some time chief justice of the King's Bench in the reign of Henry VI., is said to have written this work, while in exile with the Prince of Wales, and others of the Lancastrian party, in France. Sir John was then made chancellor; and in that character he supposes himself holding a conversation with the young prince on the nature and excellence of the laws of England compared with the civil law and the laws of other countries. He considers at length the mode of trying matters of fact by jury, and shows how it excels that by witnesses. He informs us, that some of our princes wished to introduce the civil law merely for the sake of governing in the arbitrary way allowed by that law, which declares, quod principi placuit legis habet vigorem. He then proceeds to examine some other points of difference between the civil and common law, always deciding in favour of our own. He concludes his book with a short account of the societies where the law of England was studied, the degrees and ranks in the profession, with the manner in which they were conferred; to these are subjoined some short remarks on the conduct and delay of suits.—4 Reeves, 113.

Laudimium, the fiftieth part of the value of an estate, paid by a new proprietor to the tenant for investiture or leave of possession.—Civil Law.

Laudum, an arbitrament or award.—Wals.

Laughe, frank-pledge.—2 Reeves, 17.

Launcegay, a kind of offensive weapon, now disused, and prohibited by 7 Rich. II. c. 13.

Laund, or Lawnd, an open field without wood.—Blount.

Laureate, or Laureat [fr. laurea, Lat.], an officer of the household of the sovereign, whose business formerly consisted only in composing an ode annually, on the sovereign's birthday, and on the new year; sometimes also, though rarely, on occasion of any remarkable victory.—Warton's Hist. of English Poetry. The annual birthday ode has been discontinued for many years. The title is derived from the circumstance that in classical times and in the middle ages the most distinguished poets were solemnly crowned with laurel. From this the practice found its way into our universities; and it is for that reason that Selden, in his Titles of Honour, speaks of the laurel crown as an ensign of the degree of mastership in poetry. A relic of the old university practice of crowning distinguished students of poetry exists in the term 'Laureation,' which is still used at one of the Scotch Universities (St. Andrew's), to signify the taking of the degree of Master of Arts.

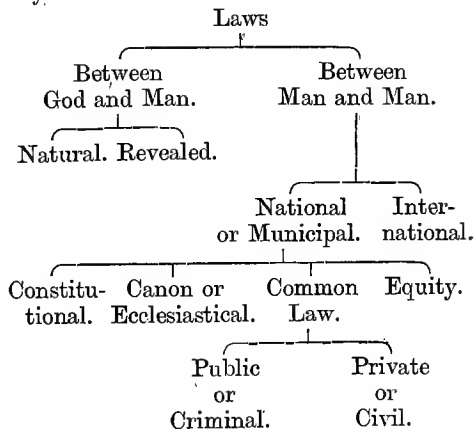

Laurels, pieces of gold, coined in 1619, with the king's head laureated; hence the name.

Lavatorium, a laundry or place to wash in; a place in the porch or entrance of cathedral churches, where the priest and other officiating ministers were obliged to wash their hands before they proceeded to Divine service.

Lavina. See LABINA.

Law [fr. lage, lagea, or lah, Sax.; lawe, Belg.; loi, Fr.; legge, Ital.; leg, Span. and Port.; laugh, Erse; lex, fr. ligo, Lat., to bind], a rule of action to which men are obliged to make their moral conduct conformable.

The several departments or branches of law may be thus shown:—

The law of foreign countries is a question of fact. See FOREIGN LAW.

Law is also sometimes used as opposed to equity, meaning the principles followed in Common Law Courts in contradistinction to those which were administered only in Courts of Equity; now, however, in all branches of the Supreme Court and in inferior courts (Jud. Act, 1873, ss. 24, 89, 91) full effect is to be given to all equitable rights. See further s. 25, by which the law on several points has now been altered.—Consult 1 Bl. Com. s. 2, ‘On the Nature of Laws in General’; Montesquieu, Esprit des Loix; Austin’s Lectures.

Law arbitrary, opposed to immutable, a law not founded in the nature of things, but imposed by the mere will of the legislature.

Law Agents (Scotland). By the 36 & 37 Vict. c. 63, the law relating to law agents (solicitors) practising in Scotland is amended, and new provisions are made in regard to their admission.

Law of arms [fr. lex armorum, Lat.], the ordinances regulating proclamations of war, leagues, and treaties, etc.

Lawday, a court-leet, or view of frankpledge.

Lawful. The natural meaning in a statute of the words ‘it shall be lawful,’ is permissive only, but if the words are used to effectuate a legal right, they are compulsory. Julius v. Bishop of Oxford, 5 App. Cas. 182.

Lawing of dogs, the cutting several claws of the forefeet of dogs in the forest, to prevent their running at deer.

Lawless court [quia dicta sine lege, Lat.], ‘a tribunal held on King’s Hill, at Rochford, in Essex, on Wednesday morning next after Michaelmas-day, yearly, at cock-crowing, at which court they whisper, and have no candle, nor any pen nor ink, but a coal; and he that owes suit or service there, and appears not, forfeits double his rent.’—Cam. Brit. Obsolete.

Lawless man [ex lex, Lat.], an outlaw.

Law List, a list of barristers, solicitors, and other legal practitioners, giving their addresses, and the dates of their entering the profession. The present ‘Law List,’ which has been published annually since 1801, is prima facie evidence that the persons therein named as solicitors, or certificated conveyancers, are such.—23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 22.

Law of marque, where they that are driven to it, take the shipping and goods of that people of whom they have received wrong, and cannot get ordinary justice, when they can take them within their own bounds and precincts.—27 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 17. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Law martial, the military law.

Law merchant [lex mercatoria, Lat.], that part of the law of England which governs mercantile transactions. It is founded upon the general custom of merchants of all nations, which, though different from the general rules of the common law, has been gradually engrafted into it and made to form part of it. See 1 Bl. Com. 67, 273; and Introduction to Smith’s Merc. Law.

Law of the staple, the law merchant.—4 Inst. 235. See STAPLE.

Law Reports. Reports of judgments of Courts on points of law, published for the purpose of being used as precedents (see REPORTS). Prior to 1865, these reports were all executed and published as mere private speculations, one reporter or pair of reporters being usually though not always accredited by the chief judge of each court. In 1865 ‘The Incorporated Council of Law Reporting’ began to publish monthly the reports called the Law Reports, which though they have no monopoly,—for contemporaneous monthly reports are published under the name of the Law Journal, and contemporaneous weekly reports under the names of The Law Times Reports and The Weekly Reporter,—possess a peculiar authority, being sometimes spoken of as ‘the authorized reports.’

Law spiritual [lex spiritualis, Lat.], the ecclesiastical law, or law Christian.—Co. Litt. 344.

Law suit, an action or litigation.

Laws of Oleron, a maritime code said to have been drawn up by Richard I. at the Isle of Oleron, whence their name. They are constantly quoted in proceedings before the Admiralty Courts, as are also the Rhodian Laws.—Co. Litt. 11. See OLERON.

Law Terms. See TERMS.

Lawyer, a person learned in the law, as a counsel, or solicitor.

Lay [fr. λαός, Gk.], not clerical or not professional; regarding or belonging to the people, as distinct from the clergy or a particular profession.

Lay corporations, bodies politic; they are either (1) Civil, erected for temporal purposes; or (2) Eleemosynary, for charitable purposes.

Lay days, running or consecutive days; a term used as to the time of loading and unloading ships, etc. See DEMURRAGE.

Lay fee, lands held in fee of a lay lord, as distinguished from those lands which belong to the church.

Lay impropriators, lay persons to whose use ecclesiastical benefices have been annexed. At the dissolution of the monasteries by stat. 27 Hen. VIII. c. 28, and 31 Hen. VIII. c. 13, the appropriations of the several personages which belonged to them were given to the king. The same had been done in former reigns when the alien priories were dissolved and given to the Crown. From these two roots have sprung all the lay impropriations or secular parsonages, they having been afterwards granted out from time to time by the Crown to laymen. See Bl. Com. 386. See APPROPRIATION.

Lay investiture of bishops, putting a bishop into possession of the temporalities belonging to his bishopric.

Laye [fr. ley, Old Fr.], law.

Layman, one of the people, and not one of the clergy; (2) one who is not of the legal profession; (3) one who is not of a particular profession.

Lay people, jurymen. Obsolete.

Laystall [Sax.], a place for dung or soil.

Lazaret, or Lazaretto, places where quarantine is to be performed by persons coming from infected countries; to escape from them is felony.—6 Geo. IV. c. 78, s. 21.

Lea, or Ley, a pasture.—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Leading case. A case so frequently followed as to become invested with peculiar authority. The leading cases on important points of law were collected and published by Mr. Smith with copious notes in 1837, and a similar collection on points of equity, by Messrs. Owen and Tudor, in 1849. The 8th edition of the former collection was published in 1879, and the 5th of the latter in 1877.

Leading question, a question which suggests to a witness the answer which he is to make—a suggestive interrogation. Such questions are not allowed to be put except in cross-examination.

It is not easy to lay down any precise general rule as to what are leading questions: on the one hand, it is clear that the mind of the witness must be brought into contact with the subject of inquiry; on the other, that he ought not to be prompted to give a particular answer, or to be asked any question, to which yes or no would be conclusive. But how far it may be necessary to particularise, in framing the question, must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case.

If a witness by his conduct show himself decidedly adverse, it is in the discretion of the court to allow him to be examined as if on cross-examination. The situation of the witness, and the inducements under which he may labour to give an unfair account, are material considerations in this respect.—Tayl. on Evid. s. 1262 a.

League [fr. ligue, Fr.; ligo, Lat.], a treaty of alliance between different states or parties. It may be offensive, or defensive, or both. It is offensive when the contracting parties agree to unite in attacking a common enemy; defensive when the parties agree to act in concert in defending each other against an enemy.

Also a measure equal to three English miles, or 300 geometrical paces.

Leakage, an allowance made to merchants for the leaking of casks or the waste of liquors.

Leal, loyal, belonging to law.

Leap-year. See BISSEXTILE.

Lease [either from locatio, Lat., the letting of property, or laisser, Fr., to let, or leapum, or leasum, Sax., to enter lawfully], sometimes also called Demise (demissio), is a conveyance of property for life, or years, or at will, by one who has greater interest in the property. The person conveying is called the lessor, who is possessed of the reversion (as to a reversion being essential to a lease, see Platt on Leases, 9 et seq.); he to whom the property is conveyed, the lessee. The consideration is usually the payment of a rent or other annual recompense, expressly covenanted in the deed to be paid by the lessee, but this is not indispensable. The ancient operative words were 'demise, lease, and to farm let,' or 'demise and lease.'

Under a lease for years, the lessee must enter into the leased premises (unless, of course, he take by way of use), for before entry, he has only an interesse termini by virtue of his common law assurance, a right which can be assigned, but not surrendered, and which will never prevent the merger of two estates by its interposition, nor itself occasion a merger. The interest in a term in futuro is also called interesse termini.

By the Statute of Frauds (see FRAUDS) leases not exceeding the term of three years from the making thereof, whereupon the rent reserved to the landlord during such term shall amount unto two-third parts, at the least, of the full improved value of the thing demised, may be by parol or verbal contract; but all other leases were required to be in writing by the same statute; and the Act 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, has added the requirement of a deed.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34, all causes and matters for the specific performance of contracts for leases are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court.

Lease and release, a mode of conveyance which derived its effect from the Statute of Uses, and operated by transmutation of possession compounded of a lease for a year, at common law, or a bargain and sale for a year under the Statute of Uses, and a common law release. This compound conveyance originated thus: The Statute of Enrolments

(27 Hen. VIII. c. 16) seemed to be confined to cases where an estate of inheritance or freehold, or the use thereof, was to be made or take effect by reason only of a bargain and sale: it was therefore concluded that if a bargain and sale were first made for an estate less than freehold, as for one year, and then the inheritance or freehold were superadded by a separate deed of release, the transaction could not be affected by the statute; and that such release to the bargainee would be valid, without his entry upon the lands, as a consequence of the strong words in the Statute of Uses, which converts all vested uses at once into legal estates. The convenience and general applicability of the lease and release recommended and established it as a common assurance. For it was preferable to a bargain and sale, and to a covenant to stand seised to uses, because it affected a transfer of the legal estate under the rules of the common law, and therefore the declaration of uses upon it needed not to be confined to persons from whom a consideration moved. It was also preferable to a bargain and sale, and still more to a feoffment, because no additional ceremony was necessary to its operation; but the transfer of property in land might have been effected by it in any part of the world, as instantaneously as the payment of money. And where the subject of conveyance was land in reversion or remainder, it was also preferable to a mere deed of grant, as it made it unnecessary for the grantee, if his title were called in question, to prove that there was a peculiar estate in existence at the time of the grant.

It was immaterial to the operation of the release whether the previous estate for a year were created by a bargain and sale under the Statute of Uses, or by a lease at common law, perfected by the entry of the lessee. In either case, the conveyance operated by transmutation of possession. It transferred a seisin to the releasee; and if the use had been declared to him, he took an estate, not by virtue of the Statute of Uses, but in the course of possession at the common law. But if the use had been declared to any other person or persons, then it was executed by the statute. When the release was founded upon a bargain and sale for a year, it was necessary that the person making the conveyance should be capable of standing seised to a use. But if the releasor were incapable of standing seised to a use, then the estate for a year should have been created by a lease at common law, accompanied by an actual entry on the part of the lessee.

If a lease and release had been made to D. and his heirs, to the use of K. and his heirs, to the use of, or in trust for, M. and his heirs,

D. would have taken the seisin, K. the use or legal estate, and M. the equitable or beneficial interest; K. would therefore have been a trustee for M., the cestui que trust, or beneficiary.

By 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21 (repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1874, No. 2), conveyance by release without a lease was made effectual.

Leasehold, a dependent tenure derived either from a freehold or a copyhold estate.

Leases, Ecclesiastical. Leases by ecclesiastical corporations are made under certain restrictions imposed by statutes, of which the principal one is the Ecclesiastical Leasing Act, 1842.

Leases of settled estates. See SETTLED LAND.

Leasing, or Lesing, gleanings.

Leasing-making, slanderous and untrue speeches to the disdain, reproach, and contempt of the sovereign, his council, and proceedings, or to the dishonour, hurt, or prejudice of the sovereign or his ancestors. — Scotch Acts, 1584, 1585, 1703, c. 4.

Leave and License, a defence to an action in trespass setting up the consent of the plaintiff to the trespass complained of.

Leave to defend. The Bills of Exchange Act, 1853 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 67), allows actions on bills or notes commenced within six months after the same are due, to be by writ of summons in a form provided by the Act, and, unless the defendant within twelve days obtain leave to appear, and defend the action, allows the plaintiff to sign judgment on proof of personal service. This procedure was retained by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. II., r. 6, but abolished in 1880 by Ord. II., r. 62.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. III., r. 6, it is provided that in all actions where the plaintiff seeks merely to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money, the writ of summons may be specially indorsed with the particulars of the amount sought to be recovered, after giving credit for any payment or set off; in which case, if the defendant fail to appear, judgment may be signed for the amount claimed, Ord. XIII., r. 3; and by Ord. XIV. it is further provided that where the defendant appears on a writ of summons specially indorsed, under Ord. III., r. 6, the plaintiff may, on affidavit verifying the cause of action, and swearing that in his belief there is no defence to the action, call on the defendant to show cause before the Court or a judge why the plaintiff should not be at liberty to sign final judgment for the amount so indorsed, together with interest, if any, and costs; and the Court or judge may, unless the defendant, by affidavit or otherwise, satisfy the Court or judge that he has a good defence to the action on the merits, or disclose such facts as the Court or judge may think sufficient to entitle him to be permitted to defend the action, make an order empowering the plaintiff to sign judgment accordingly (r. 1). See also APPEARANCE; PLEADING; REMOVAL OF CAUSES; SUMMONS, WRIT OF.

Leccator, a debauched person.—Cowel.

Lecherwite [fr. legum, Sax., to lie with; wite, penalty], a fine for adultery or fornication, anciently paid to the lords of certain manors.—4 Inst. 206. See LAIR-WITE.

Le congrès, a species of proof on charges of impotency in France, coitus coram testibus. Abolished A.D. 1677. See CONGRESSUS.

Lectrinum, a pulpit.—Mon. Angl. tom. iii, p. 243.

Lecturer [fr. prælector, Lat.], an instructor, a reader of lectures; also a clergyman who assists rectors, etc., in preaching, etc. See 7 & 8 Vict. c. 59, and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 127, s. 12.

Lectures, Copyright in. See 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 65. And see also COPYRIGHT.

Ledger-book, a book in the prerogative courts, considered as their rolls.

Ledgreve, or Ledgrave. See LATHREEVE.

Ledo, the rising water or increase of the sea.

Leeman's Acts. (1) 30 Vict. c. 29, by which contracts for sale of bank shares are void unless the numbers of the shares sold are set forth in the contract (this act is believed to be a dead letter on the Stock Exchanges, but is (see Neilson v. James, 9 Q. B. D. 546) in full legal force); and (2) 35 & 36 Vict. c. 91, authorising the application of the funds of municipal corporations, and other governing bodies, under certain conditions, towards promoting or opposing parliamentary and other proceedings for the benefit or protection of inhabitants.

Leet, Court, an obsolete inferior court, held annually in manors, in ancient times. See COURTS LEET.

Leets, or Lects, meetings which were appointed for the nomination or election of ecclesiastical officers in Scotland.—Cowel.

Lega, or Lacta, the alloy of money.—Spelm.

Legable [fr. legabilis, Lat.], capable of being bequeathed.

Legacy [fr. legatum, Lat.]. A legacy is a gift of personalty by will, and, arising as it does from the mere bounty of the testator, it is postponed to the claims of creditors. There are four kinds of legacies:—(1) General, when it does not amount to a bequest of any particular thing or money, as distinguished from all others of the same kind; as if a testator give A. a diamond ring, not referring to any particular diamond ring as distinguished from others. (2) Specific, when it is a bequest of a particular thing, or sum of money, or debt, as distinguished from all others of the same kind, as if a testator give B. 'my diamond ring.' (3) Demonstrative, when it is in its nature a general legacy, but there is a particular fund pointed out to satisfy it, as if a testator bequeath 1,000*l.* out of his Reduced Bank Three per Cents. And (4) Cumulative, or substitutional, when a testator by the same testamentary instrument, or by different testamentary instruments, has bequeathed more than one legacy to the same person, and the question arises whether he intended the second legacy to be cumulative, i.e., in addition to the first, or substitutional for it. If by different instruments he has given legacies of equal, greater, or lesser sums to the same person, the court, considering that he who has given more than once must, primâ facie, be intended to mean more than one gift, awards to the legatee all the legacies. If, however, they are not given simpliciter, but the motive of the gift is expressed, and in such instruments the same motive is expressed, and also the same sum is given, the court considers these two coincidences as raising a presumption that the testator did not by a subsequent instrument mean another gift, but a repetition only of the former gift. And where the same specific thing or corpus is given, either in the same instrument or in different instruments, it can only be a repetition. Where the legacies in the same instrument, whether a will or a codicil, are given simpliciter, and are of equal amount, one only will be good, the repetition being considered to arise from forgetfulness; nor will small differences in the way in which the gifts are conferred afford internal evidence that the testator intended that they should be cumulative. Where, however, the legacies given by the same instrument are of unequal amount, they will be considered cumulative. When two legacies of equal amount are given by one instrument, parol evidence is admissible to show that the testator intended the legatee to take both, for that is in support of the apparent intention of the will; but where the court does not raise the presumption—for instance, where legacies of equal amount are given simpliciter by different instruments—parol evidence is not admissible to show that the testator intended the legatee to take one only, for that is in opposition to the will. See Mr. Justice Aston's judgment in Hooley v. Hatton, 1 Bro. C. C. 390, n. (1772), and 2 Wh. and Tud. Lead. Cases, 274 et seq. See CUMULATIVE LEGACIES.

In deciding upon the validity and interpretation of purely personal legacies, courts of equity have implicitly followed the rules of the civil law as recognised and acted on in the spiritual courts. But in legacies chargeable on land they have for the most part followed the rules of the common law as to the validity and interpretation thereof. A specific legacy assented to by an executor might be recovered by an action at law.

A legacy not exceeding 500*l.* can be recovered in the county court.—28 & 29 Vict. c. 99, s. 1, subs. 1.

If a legacy be bequeathed to a person to be paid or payable at the age of twenty-one, or any other age or certain determinate term, and the legatee die before that age, this is such an interest vested in the legatee immediately on the testator's death, that it goes to his executor or administrator, it being debitum in presenti, though solvendum in futuro, the time being annexed to the payment and not to the gift itself; but if a legacy be bequeathed to a person at twenty-one, or if, or when, or in case, or provided he shall attain twenty-one, or at any future definite period, and he die before that age or period, the legacy lapses, these expressions being construed as annexing the time to the substance of the legacy, so that the right of the legatee is made to depend upon his being alive at the time fixed for its payment. The giving of interest on a legacy to a legatee, let the interest be ever so small, or a provision for his maintenance until the time for payment of the legacy, provided it be equal in amount to the interest, vests the legacy; but not, it seems, where the legacy is payable out of land, much less where anything appears on the will to show that the legacy was not intended to vest.

While it is a general rule that if a legatee die in the lifetime of the testator the legacy is lapsed and falls into the residue, except he have been a child of the testator who has left children, it is also a general rule that a trust-legacy does not lapse by the death of the trustee in the testator's lifetime, but that it survives for the benefit of the cestui que trust.

A general legacy will not, if the personal assets are sufficient, be liable to ademption, except in the case of a legacy to a child where a subsequent portion is given by the parent or person in loco parentis. (See SATISFACTION.) In the case, however, of a specific legacy, if the thing specifically bequeathed be not in existence at the time of the testator's death, the legacy is adeemed. A specific legacy of goods at a particular place will generally be adeemed by their removal, unless such removal be temporary or accidental, fraudulent, or on account of fire. If a debt, specifically bequeathed, be received by the testator, it will be adeemed, since there would not then exist anything upon which the will could operate. A partial receipt of a debt will, however, only be an ademption pro tanto.

Where a partner in trade makes a provision out of his share for his family, and afterwards renews the partnership by which, perhaps, his interest is varied, yet it is not a revocation, since it would occasion great confusion. See 1 Vict. c. 26, ss. 23, 24; Roper on Legacies; and 2 Wms. Exors.

In the Roman Law a legacy was an injunction given to the heir to pay or give over a part of the inheritance to a third person. For its four kinds see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 219, or Cum. Civ. Law, 160.

Legacy duty, a tax paid to government on legacies, rising from 1 to 10 per cent. in proportion to the distance of relationship between the testator and legatee. The Legacy Duty Acts are 36 Geo. III. c. 52; 45 Geo. III. c. 28; 55 Geo. III. c. 184; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 97; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51; and 44 Vict. c. 12. See also as to the collection or recovery of legacy duty, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 92; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104, ss. 53—64; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 124, s. 9. Consult Hanson on the Legacy and Succession Duties.

Legal, lawful; according to law. 2, opposed to equitable.

Legal assets. See ASSETS.

Legal debts, those that were recoverable in a court of common law, as debt on a bill of exchange, a bond, or a simple contract. See DEBTS.

Legal estates. See ESTATES.

Legal reversion, the period within which a proprietor is at liberty to redeem land adjudged from him for debt. See Bell's Dict.

Legal tender. See TENDER.

Legalis homo, a person who stands rectus in curia, neither outlawed, excommunicated, nor infamous.

Legalis moneta Angliæ, lawful money of England.—1 Inst. 207.

Legality, or Legalness, lawfulness.

Legalize, to authorize; to make lawful.

Legally, lawfully; according to law.

Legamannus. See LAGEMAN.

Legantine or Legatine Constitutions, ecclesiastical laws enacted in national synods, held under the Cardinals Otho and Othobon, legates from Pope Gregory IX. and Pope Clement IV. in the reign of King Henry III. about the years 1220 and 1268.

Legatary [fr. legatum, Lat.], a legatee.

Legate [fr. degare, deligare, Lat., to send], a deputy; an ambassador, the Pope's nuncio. There are three kinds:—(1) Legates à latere, being such as the Pope commissions to take his place in councils, and so called, because he never gives this office to any but his favourites and confidants, who are always à latere—at his side. (2) Legates de latere or legati dati, those entrusted with apostolical legation, and acting under a special commission. (3) Legates by office, or legati nati, those that were legates by virtue of their offices, as in England, the Archbishop of Canterbury in former times.—Encyc. Lond.

Legatee, one who has a legacy left to him.

Legation, an embassy or mission.

Legator, one who makes a will, and leaves legacies.

Legatos violare contra jus gentium est. 4 Co., ad lect.—(It is contrary to the law of nations to injure ambassadors.)

Legatum, a legacy given to the church, or an accustomed mortuary.—Cowel.

Legatum morte testatoris tantum confirmatur, sicut donatio inter vivos traditione sola. Dyer, 143.—(A legacy is confirmed by the death of a testator, in the same manner as a gift from a living person is by delivery alone.)

Legatus regis vice fungitur à quo destinatur et honorandus est sicut ille cujus vicem gerit. 12 Co. 17.—(An ambassador fills the place of the king by whom he is sent, and is to be honoured as he is whose place he fills.)

Legem facere, to make law upon oath. See Selden's Notes on Heng. 133.

Legem ferre, or rogare [Lat.], to propose a law.—Rom.

Legem habere, to be capable of giving evidence upon oath. Witnesses who had been convicted of crime, were incapable of giving evidence until 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85. See OATH.

Legem seiscere [Lat.], to give consent and authority to a proposed law, applied to the consent of the people.—Rom.

Leger, Leiger, or Ledger [fr. legger, Dut., to lie], anything that lies in a place; as, a leger-book, a book that lies in a counting-house; leger-ambassador, a resident ambassador.

Legergild. See LAIRWITE.

Leges Angliæ sunt tripartitæ; jus commune, consuetudines, ac decreta comitiorum. (The laws of England are threefold: common law, customs, and decrees of parliament.)

Leges non verbis sed rebus sunt impositæ. 10 Co. 101.—(Laws are imposed on things, not words.)

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant. 2 Rol. Rep. 410.—(Later laws abrogate prior contrary laws).

Legiosus, litigious, subjected to a course of law.—Cowel.

Legis constructio non facit injuriam. Co. Litt. 183.—(The construction of law does no injury.)

Legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. Elles. Post. 55.—(The interpretation of law obtains the force of law.) See STATUTORY EXPOSITION.

Legislation, the act of giving or enacting laws.

Legislature, the power that makes laws; members of a legislative body.

Legitim, the legal share of the father's free moveable property due on his death to his children. Where a father dies leaving a widow and children, his free moveable estate is divisible into three equal parts; one-third part is divided equally amongst all the children, whether of his last or of any former marriage, as legitim; another third goes to his widow as her jus relictæ; and the remaining third is called 'dead's part,' which the father may dispose of as he pleases by will. If he die intestate, the 'dead's part' goes to his children as next of kin. If the father leave no widow the legitim is one-half instead of one-third.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Legitimacy, lawful birth.

Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 93, which provides that 'any natural-born subject of the Queen, or any person whose right to be deemed a natural-born subject depends wholly or in part on his legitimacy or on the validity of a marriage, being domiciled in England or Ireland, or claiming any real or personal estate situate in England, may apply by petition to the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes (now part of the High Court of Justice), praying the Court for a decree, declaring that the petitioner is the legitimate child of his parents, and that the marriage of his father and mother, or of his grandfather and grandmother, was a valid marriage, or for a decree declaring either of the matters aforesaid; and any such subject or person, being so domiciled or so claiming, may in like manner apply for a decree declaring that his marriage was a valid marriage, and such court shall make such decree in the premises as is just; and the decree binds Her Majesty and all persons' (s. 1).

The right of appeal to the Lords given by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 56, extends to all sentences and final judgments on petitions under this act.—22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 7. See APPEAL.

Legitimizing, the act of making legal or of giving the right of lawful birth. As to legitimization in the civil law, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 38.

Legitimation per subsequens matrimonium. The legitimation of a bastard by the subsequent marriage of his parents.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Legitime, that portion of a parent's estate of which he cannot disinherit his children without a legal cause.—Civ. Law. See LEGITIM.

Legitimi hæredes, agnate because the inheritance was given to them by a law of the Twelve Tables.—Sand. Just., 5th ed., 272.

Legruita, a fine for criminal conversation with a woman.—Old Records.

Leidgrave [fr. leid, Lat.], an officer under the Saxon government who had jurisdiction over a lath.—Encyc. Lond. See LATH.

Leigh, a meadow.

Leipa, one who escapes or departs from service.—Spelm.

Le ley est le plus haut enheritance que le roy ad, car per le ley il mesme et tous ses sujets sont rules, et si le ley ne fuit, nul roy ne nul enheritance serra. 1 J. H. 6, 63.—(The law is the highest inheritance that the king possesses; for, by the law, both he and all his subjects are ruled; and if there were no law, there would be neither king nor inheritance.)

Lent [fr. lenten, Sax., spring], the quadregesimal feast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ash-Wednesday to Easter-day.

Leod, the people, nation, country, etc.—Gibbon's Camd.

Leodium, liege.

Leocht-gesceot [symbolum luminis, Lat.], a tax for supplying the church with lights.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Lep and Lace, a custom in the manor of Writtle, in Essex, that every cart which goes over Greenbury within that manor (except it be the cart of a nobleman) shall pay 4d. to the lord.—Blount.

Leporarius, a greyhound.—Cowel.

Leporium, a place where hares are kept.—Mon. Angl. t. 2, 1035.

Leproso amovendo, an ancient writ that lay to remove a leper or leazar, who thrust himself into the company of his neighbours in any parish, either in the church, or at other public meetings, to their annoyance.—Reg. Orig. 237.

Le Roy (or la Reine) le veut. (The King (or the Queen) wills it.) The form of the royal assent to public bills in parliament.

Le Roy (or la Reine) remercie ses loyal sujets, accepte leur bënëvolence, et ainsi le veut. (The King (or the Queen) thanks his (or her) loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and wills it thus.) The form of the royal assent to a bill of supply.

Le Roy (or la Reine) s'avisera. (The King (or the Queen) will consider of it.) The form of words used to express a denial of the royal assent.

Letter of absolution, the mode formerly resorted to by an abbot for the release of his brethren, in order to qualify them for entering into some other order of religion.

Letters of administration. See ADMINISTRATOR.

Letter of attorney, Power of attorney, or Procurator, a writing authorizing another person, who, in such case, is called the attorney of the person appointing him to do any lawful act in the stead of another: as to give seisin of lands, receive debts, or sue a third person, etc. It is either general or special. The nature of this instrument is to give the attorney the full power and authority of the maker to accomplish the act intended to be performed; sometimes it is revocable, sometimes not. If it is an authority coupled with an interest; e.g., if the attorney is authorized to collect debts, and pay thereout a debt due to himself, it is irrevocable. But revocable letters of attorney may be dissolved either by acts of the parties or operation of law. See REVOCATION OF AGENCY.

No person making any payment or doing any act bond fide under or in pursuance of any power of attorney is liable for the moneys so paid or the act so done by reason that the person who gave the power of attorney was dead or had become lunatic or bankrupt, or had revoked the power before such payment or act, if the death, etc., was not known to him at the time of the payment or act.—Conveyancing Act, etc., Act, 1881, s. 47, extending 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 26, which applied to trustees, etc., only, and to the case only of death of the donor of the power.

As to the forgery or alteration of a power of attorney for the transfer of any interest in the public funds, or in the capital stock of any body corporate established by charter or act of parliament, or the offering, uttering, disposing of, or putting off such power of attorney, knowing it to have been forged or altered, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 2. See title FORGERY.

Letter-claus (litteræ clausæ), close letter, so called in contradistinction to letters-patent, because the former is commonly sealed up with the royal signet, or privy seal; whereas letters-patent are left open and sealed with the broad seal.

Letter of credit, a letter written by a merchant or correspondent to another, requesting him to credit the bearer with a certain sum of money.

Letter of exchange, a bill of exchange, which see.

Letter of horning. See HORNING.

Letters of license, an instrument in writing whereby the creditors of a man who had failed to meet his engagements, gave him time for the payment of his debts, and undertook that in the meantime he should be free from arrest. Imprisonment for debt was abolished by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62.

Letters of marque, commissions for extraordinary reprisals for reparation to merchants taken and despoiled by strangers at sea, grantable by the secretaries of state, with the approbation of the sovereign and council; and usually in time of war, etc.—Lex. Merc. 173. The words marque and reprisal are used as synonymous terms, although the latter is strictly, taking in return; the former, passing the frontiers in order to such taking.—Dufresne, tit. 'Marca.'

These letters are grantable by the law of nations, wherever the subjects of one state are oppressed and injured by those of another, and justice is denied by that state to which the oppressor belongs. In this case, letters of marque and reprisal may be obtained, in order to seize the bodies or goods of the subjects of the offending state, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found; and, in fact, this custom seems dictated by nature. The necessity, however, is obvious of calling in the sovereign power to determine when reprisals may be made, else every private sufferer would be a judge in his own cause.—4 Hen. V. c. 7; Muratori's Antichità Italiane, tit. 'Rappresaglie'; Malvezzi's Chron. of Brescia.

But the term itself is now somewhat differently applied. If during war a subject should take an enemy's ship, without commission from the Crown, the prize would, by the effect of the prerogative, become a droit of admiralty, and would belong, not to the captor, but to the Crown. To encourage merchants and others to fit out privateers or armed ships in time of war, the lords of the admiralty have been in former times empowered, by various acts of parliament, and sometimes by proclamation of the sovereign in council, to grant commissions to the owners of such ships, and the prizes captured by them have been directed to be divided between such owners and the captains and crews. But the owners, before the commission is granted, give security to the admiralty to make compensation for any violation of treaties between those powers with whom the nation is at peace; and that such armed ship shall not be employed in smuggling. These commissions were called letters of marque, in which sense alone the term is now accepted—2 Steph. Com. By Order in Council, dated 29th of March, 1854, 'general reprisals' were granted against the ships, vessels, and goods of the Emperor of Russia, and to give the benefit of all the prizes taken by Her Majesty's ships to the captors.

On the 16th of April, 1856, the plenipotentiaries of Great Britain, Austria, France, Prussia, Russia, Sardinia, and Turkey assembled in congress at Paris, signed a declaration, of which the first article was 'Privateering is and remains abolished.' They also engaged, on behalf of their respective governments, that the declaration should be brought to the knowledge of the states which had not taken part in the congress, and that they should be invited to accede to it. It was agreed that the declarations should not be binding except between those powers who had acceded or should accede to it.—Phillimore on International Law. The United States of America were invited to accede to this declaration, but declined.

Letter-missive. When a peer was made a defendant in the Court of Chancery, the Lord Chancellor sent a letter-missive to him, to request his appearance, together with a copy of the bill, petition, and order; if he neglected to appear to this, he was then served with a copy of the bill and a citation to appear and answer; if he continued still in contempt, a sequestration nisi, which was made absolute in the usual way, issued immediately against his lands and goods, without any of the arresting processes of attachment, etc., which cannot affect a lord of parliament. See 1 Dan. Ch. Pr.

Also, for electing a bishop, a letter-missive from the sovereign is sent to the dean and chapter, containing the name of the person whom he would have them elect. See CONGRÈ D'ÉLIRE.

Letters-patent, or Letters overt [fr. littere patentes, Lat.], writings of the Queen, sealed with the Great Seal of England, whereby a person or public company is enabled to do acts or enjoy privileges which he or it could not do or enjoy without such authority.—7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 73. They are so called because they are open with the seal affixed and ready to be shown for confirmation of the authority thereby given. Peers are sometimes created by letters-patent, and letters-patent of precedence are granted to barristers. By letters-patent aliens are made denizens, and especially new inventions are protected; hence the incorporeal chattel of patent-right.

A 'patent-right' is a privilege granted by the Crown to the first inventor of any new contrivance in manufactures, that he alone shall be entitled, during a limited period, to make articles according to his own invention.—21 Jac. I. c. 3. A manufacture that is the subject of a patent-right must be new within this realm, and must be such as others at the time of granting such letter-patent do not use. The person applying for the patent must be the true and first inventor of it; yet where the secret is acquired abroad by one who afterwards introduces it into the realm, he is considered by the law as the true inventor. A patent-right granted as to England will not extend to Ireland.

The grant is an act of royal favour, but obtained without difficulty, supposing there be no objection to it. Letters-patent are often taken out in the joint names of two or three persons—if one or two of these persons bore no part in the invention, the patent would be void. Every manufacture within the meaning of the statute must be—

- (1) New.
- (2) Not used before,
 - (a) By others, nor
 - (β) By the inventor.
- (3) Vendible.
- (4) Useful.

Though it may be learned abroad (Edgebery v. Stephens, 2 Salk. 447), yet it must not be suggested by a friend at home (Tennant's Patent, Dav. Pat. C. 429). When the objects of two grants are substantially the same, they may both be valid, if the modes of attaining the desired effect are essentially different (Russell v. Cowley, 1 C. M. & R. 864). It would be very difficult to say how much a substance or machine might be used by way of experiment before the patent was obtained, without running a great risk of invalidating the grant (Severne v. Olive, 3 B. & B. 72).

It is obtained as follows:—An application is made by petition to the Crown, which must be supported by a declaration that the petitioner is the true and first inventor, and that the article has not been before made or used to his knowledge. This petition and declaration are left with the 'Commissioners of Patents for Inventions,' and with them an instrument called 'the provisional specification,' describing the nature of the invention. The applicant is then referred to one of the law officers of the Crown, who may call in any scientific or other person: and if he is satisfied that the provisional specification describes the nature of the invention, and certifies the same, the invention may, during six months from the date of the application, be used and published without prejudice to any letters-patent to be afterwards granted; or the applicant may file a 'complete,' in lieu of a 'provisional,' specification, stating in the declaration that the instrument particularly describes the nature of the invention, and in what manner the same is to be performed; and in this case he has, during the said six months, like powers and privileges as by letters-patent on the date of the application, and the invention may be used and published without any prejudice to any letters-patent to be granted.

The applicant next gives notice to the commissioners of his intention to proceed with his application, which is advertised, and any person interested in opposing letters-patent within a certain period may lodge particulars in writing of his objections. The period having expired, the specification and the objections are referred to the law officer, who, after such hearing as he thinks fit, may cause a warrant to be made for the sealing of the Letters-patent; which having been sealed by the commissioners, the Lord Chancellor may cause letters-patent to be sealed with the Great Seal, granting the exclusive right to the invention within the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, and (if the warrant so direct) within the colonies, for 14 years. But the letters-patent provide that, if the 'complete specification' filed does not particularly describe the nature of the invention, etc., or if none has been filed, then if the applicant does not file one in a given time in Chancery, the grant is void. See 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 83; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 67; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83; 16 & 17 Vict. cc. 5, 115; and 22 Vict. c. 13.

The object of the specification is to put the public in full possession of the inventor's secret, so that any person may be in a condition to avail himself of it, when the period of exclusive privilege has expired. It should be such a description as to enable persons of ordinary skill to make the patent article by simply following the directions given, without resorting to contrivances of their own. The specification is bad, when (1) Its terms are ambiguous. (2) Necessary descriptions are omitted. (3) Parts are claimed which are not original. (4) Things are inserted to mislead. (5) The drawings are incorrect. (6) One of different ways or of different ingredients named, fails. (7) One of several effects specified is not produced. (8) The things described are not the best known to the patentee.

A patent right is assignable by deed. The patentee may also grant deeds of license to any one or more persons to manufacture the article, and this without an entire alienation of his interest.

Where it is discovered that an invention, for which a patent has been granted, is not new, although not generally known to the public, the patentee may, under the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 83, s. 2, obtain from the Crown a confirmation of the original grant or a new grant, upon satisfying the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that he is entitled to such relief. By the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 69, s. 4, a patentee may obtain a prolongation of the term of his patent for not more than 14 years, upon satisfying the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that he has not reaped, within the former period, a reward for his labour and ingenuity. If there be a mistake or defect in the title or specification of the invention it may be amended under the 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 83, s. 1; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 3; and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, by filing a disclaimer or memorandum of alteration in Chancery, the consent of the Attorney or Solicitor-General being first obtained.

An action for damages for the infringement of a patent is an action on the case. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, sch. B., No. 33; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, ss. 41, 42; and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 79—82. See CASE.

The 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 83, s. 7, imposes a penalty of 50% upon any person unlawfully using the name, etc., of a patent, to be recovered by action of debt, bill, plaint, process, or information, one-half to His Majesty, his heirs, and successors, and the other to any person who shall sue for the same.

If a person have been long in the exclusive use of a patent, a special injunction may be obtained against a person invading it, until the right is tried.

Letters-patent are void, if (1) Contrary to law; (2) Mischievous to the state, e.g., (a) raising the price of commodities at home; (β) or being hurtful to trade; (γ) or being generally inconvenient; or (3) If the pretended invention be not new.

The scire facias for repealing letters-patent is an original writ, and founded on some matter of record: it issued out of the common law jurisdiction of the High Court of Chancery, and will now issue out of the Chancery Division of the High Court.—12 & 13 Vict. c. 109, s. 29; 2 Steph. Com. 33; 2 Broom & Had. Com.; Hindmarch, Godson, or Coryton on Patents. As to the time when letters-patent take effect in the colonies, see 26 & 27 Vict. c. 76; and as to India, see 17 & 18 Vict. c. 77; and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 106, s. 3. The jurisdiction of the Lord Chancellor, in relation to grants of letters-patent, is not transferred to the High Court (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 17 (4)). By the 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81, s. 6, provision is made for the abolition of the office of Clerk of the Patents.

Letters of request, the mode of commencing an original suit in the Court of Arches, instead of proceeding in the first instance in the Consistory Court.

These letters dispense with instituting a suit in an inferior ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and authorize it in the superior court, otherwise only a court of appeal. The judge of the inferior court waives his jurisdiction, which attaches to the appellate court, without consent from the intended defendant.—1 Hagg. Eccl. R. 4 note (a).

Letters of safe-conduct. No subject of a nation at war with us can, by the law of nations, come into the realm, nor can travel himself upon the high seas, or send his goods and merchandise from one place to another, without danger of being seized by our subjects, unless he has letters of safe-conduct, which, by divers old statutes, must be granted under the Great Seal, and enrolled in Chancery, or else are of no effect—the Sovereign being the best judge of such emergencies as may deserve exemption from the general law of arms.—Chitty's Prerogatives of the Crown, p. 48, and Vattel by Chit. 416. But passports or licenses from our ambassadors abroad, are now more usually obtained, and are allowed to be of equal validity.

Lettres de cachet. See CACHET.

Leuca, a measure of land, the extent of which is not precisely known. Some say 1500 paces. Ingulphus, p. 910, says 2000 paces. In the Monastic., tom. i., p. 313, it is 480 perches. Spelman says a mile.

Leucata, a space of ground as much as a mile contains.—Monastic., tom. i., p. 768. And so it seems to be used in a charter of William the Conqueror to Battle Abbey.—Cowel.

Levant et couchant [levantes et cubantes, Lat.], cattle that have been so long in the ground of another, that they have lain down and risen to feed, supposed to be a day and a night.—Termes de la Ley.

Levari facias (that you cause to be levied), a writ of execution at common law, commanding the sheriff to levy or make of the lands and chattels of the judgment-debtor the sum recovered by the judgment. The sheriff is not authorized to sell or extend the lands, or deliver them to the creditor, but must collect the debt from the issues and profits of the land, and from the sale of the chattels. This writ, excepting in the case of outlawry, has been completely superseded by the writ of elegit.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 693. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XLII., r. 1.

Also a writ to the bishop of the diocese, commanding him to enter into the benefice of a judgment debtor, and take and sequester the same into his possession, and hold the same until he shall have levied the amount of the judgment out of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof. See SEQUESTRARI FACIAS.

Levable, that may be levied.—Bacon's Henry VII.

Levirate [fr. levir, Lat., husband's brother or brother-in-law], the name of an ancient law, existing prior to the time of Moses (Gen. xxviii. 8—12), by which, if a husband died without issue, leaving a widow, the brother of the deceased, or the nearest male relation, was bound to marry the widow, to give to the first-born son the name of the deceased kinsman, to insert his name in the genealogical register, and to deliver into his possession the estate of the deceased. This peculiar law had its origin, doubtless, in that strong desire of offspring, which was entertained by the Jewish nation. See also Deut. xxv. 5—10; Ruth iv. 7, 8; Matt. xxii. 23—28.

The same custom or law prevails in some parts of India.—Elliot's Asiatic Researches, vol. iii., p. 35.

Levitical degrees, degrees of kindred within which persons are prohibited to marry. They are set forth in the eighteenth chapter of Leviticus. By 32 Henry VIII. c. 38, it is declared that all persons may lawfully marry, but such as are prohibited by God's law; and it is declared by the same statute, that 'no reservation or prohibition (God's law except) shall trouble or impeach any marriage without the Levitical degrees.'—1 Broom & Had. Com. 528; 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 242.

Levy [fr. levo, Lat.], the act of raising money or men.

Lewdness, licentiousness; an offence against the public economy, when of an open and notorious character; as by frequenting houses of ill-fame, which is an indictable offence, or by some grossly scandalous and public indecency, for which the punishment at common law is fine and imprisonment. See Russell on Crimes.

Lex, law. In the Roman law it was a resolution adopted by the whole Roman populus (Patricians and Plebians) in the comitia, on the motion of a magistrate of senatorial rank, as a consul, a prætor, or a dictator.

Lex fingit ubi subsistit æquitas. 11 Co. 90.—(The law makes use of a fiction where equity subsists.) This is the maxim by which the law sought to reconcile theoretical consistency with substantial justice, but the latter is no longer considered to derive support from transparent fictions.

Lex fori, the law of the place of action.

The forms of remedies, modes of proceeding, and execution of judgments are regulated by the laws of the place where the action is instituted; or, as the civilians uniformly express it, according to the lex fori.

Lord Brougham, in Don v. Lippman, 5 Clark & Fin. 1, remarks (citing British Linen Co. v. Drummond, 10 B. & C. 903):—‘The law on this point is well settled, that whatever relates to the remedy must be determined by the lex fori, the law of the country to the tribunals of which the appeal is made.’

Lex hostilia de furtis, a Roman law, which provided that a prosecution for theft might be carried on without the owner's intervention.—4 Steph. Com.

Lex judicat de rebus necessariò faciendis quasi re-ipsâ factis. (The law judges of things which must necessarily be done, as if actually done.)

Lex judicialis, an ordeal.—Leg. H. 1.

Lex Julia majestatis, a law promulgated by Augustus Cæsar among the Romans, comprehending all the ancient laws that had before been enacted to punish transgressors against the state.—4 Steph. Com.

Lex loci contractûs (the law of the place of the contract). Generally speaking, the validity of a contract is decided by the law of the place where it was made. If valid there, it is, by the general law of nations (jure gentium), held valid everywhere, by the tacit or implied consent of the parties. The rule is founded not merely in the convenience, but in the necessities of nations; for otherwise it would be impracticable for them to carry on an extensive intercourse and commerce with each other. The whole system of agencies, of purchases and sales, of mutual credits, and of transfers of negotiable instruments, rests on this foundation; and the nation which should refuse to acknowledge the common principles, would soon find its whole commercial intercourse reduced to a state like that in which it now exists among savage tribes.

The same rule applies to the invalidity of contracts; if void or illegal by the law of the place of the contract, they are generally held void and illegal everywhere. This would seem to be a principle derived from the very elements of natural justice. The code expounds it:—Nullum enim pactum, nullam conventionem, nullum contractum, inter eos videri volumus subsecutum, qui contrahunt lege contrahere prohibente (l. i. tit. 14, l. 5). If void in its origin, it seems difficult to find any principle upon which any subsequent validity can be given to it in any other country. But there is an exception to the rule as to the universal validity of contracts:—‘No nation is bound to recognise or enforce any contracts injurious to its own interests, or its subjects.’ See CONFLICT OF LAWS, and Story's Conf. of Laws, c. viii.; and consult Westlake's Pr. Inter. Law.

Lex loci rei sitæ (the law of the place where the thing is situate). It is sometimes also called lex sitûs. As to real or immoveable property, the general rule of the common law is, that the laws of the place where such property is situate exclusively govern in respect to the rights of the parties, the modes of transfer, and the solemnities which should accompany them. The title, therefore, to real property can be acquired, passed, and lost only according to the lex loci rei sitæ.—Story's Conf. of Laws, s. 424. See also Westlake on Private International Law.

Lex mercatoria, the mercantile law or general body of European usages in commercial matters.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 55.

[See

ANALOGY, COMMON LAW, and the remarks of Parke, J., in Mirehouse v. Rennell, 8 Bing. 515.] And if that does not appear, then the law which Rome uses should be followed.)

The last maxim of Lord Coke is so far followed at the present day, that, in cases where there is no precedent of the English courts, the civil law is always heard with respect, and often, though not necessarily, followed.

Lex semper dabit remedium. (The law will always give a remedy.)

Lex semper intendit quod convenit rationi. Co. Litt. 78 b.—(The law always intends what is agreeable to reason.)

Lex spectat naturæ ordinem. Co. Litt. 197 b.—(The law has regard to the order and course of nature.) See Broom's Max., 5th ed., 252.

Lex talionis, the law of retaliation. The law of retaliation was common among all ancient nations, as the best means of protection; but, in progress of time, when manners had assumed a milder tone, bodily injuries were brought into the civil courts, and the punishment to be inflicted, or the satisfaction to be rendered, was left entirely to the judge.—Br. & Had. Com. iv. 8.

Lex terræ, the law and custom of the land.

Lex uno ore omnes alloquitur. 2 Inst. 184.—(The law speaks to all with the same mouth.)

Lex Wallensica, the Welsh law.

Ley, or Loi, law; the oath with compurgators; also, a meadow.

Ley gager, a wager of law; one who commences a lawsuit.—Cowel.

Leyerwite. See LAIRWITE.

Leze-majesty, an offence against sovereign power; treason; rebellion.

Liard, a farthing.

Libel [fr. libellus, Lat.; libelle, Fr.], defamatory writing. All contumelious matter that tends to degrade a man in the opinion of his neighbours, or to make him ridiculous, will amount (when conveyed in writing, or by picture, effigy, or the like) to libel. The term also legally includes such writings as are of a blaspheming, treasonable, seditious, or immoral kind.—3 Hall. Const. Hist. 167; 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 381.

Both the author and the publisher of a libel are liable to be either sued or indicted by the party libelled, but it is a defence in either case that the matter complained of was written or printed on what is called a privileged occasion, i.e., upon an occasion which justified the writing or printing of it, e.g., that the defendant was giving a character of a servant, or commenting upon a matter of general interest to the public.

It is a good defence to an action of libel, that the libel was true. See P'Anson v. Stuart, 2 Sm. L. C. 57. But to be a defence to an indictment, a plea justifying on the ground of the truth of the libel must further allege that its publication was for the public good (6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 6). As to newspaper libels, see NEWSPAPER, and for the law of the subject generally consult Folkard's Treatise (founded on Starkie) and Odger's Digest.

A law of the Twelve Tables inflicted very severe punishment on those who composed defamatory writings against any person.—Cic. de Repub. iv. 10; Arnob. iv. 151. During the later times of the Republic the law appears to have been suspended, for Tacitus (Ann., i. 72) says, that before Augustus libels had never been legally punished, and that Augustus, provoked by the audacity with which Cassius Severus brought into disrepute the most illustrious persons of the age, ordained by a lex majestatis, that the authors of libelli famosi should be brought to trial. On this occasion Augustus, who was informed of the existence of several such works, had a search made at Rome by the ædiles, and in other places by the local magistrates, and ordered the libels to be burned; some of the authors were subjected to punishment.—Dion. Cass. lvi. 27. A law quoted by Ulpian (Dig. 47, tit. 10; s. 5), ordained that the author of a libellus famosus should be intestabilis; and during the later period of the empire we find that capital punishment was not only inflicted upon the author, but upon those persons in whose possession a libellus famosus was found, or who did not destroy it so soon as it came into their hands.—Cod. ix. tit. 36; Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

2. In the spiritual court a libel is the declaration or written charges on the plaintiff's behalf, in the civil litigation. It consists of three parts:—

(1) The major proposition, which shows a just cause of the petition. (2) The narration, or minor proposition. (3) The conclusion or conclusive petition, which conjoins both propositions.

In the Scotch law it is the form of the complaint or ground of the charge, on which either a civil action or criminal prosecution takes place.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Libellant, the suitor plaintiff who files a libel in an ecclesiastical case.

Libellee, the suitor defendant against whom a libel has been filed.

Libelli famosi, scurrilous publications of a libellous nature. See LIBEL.

Libellus conventionis, the statement of a plaintiff's claim in a petition presented to the magistrate, who directed an officer to deliver it to the defendant.—Civ. Law.

Liber assisarum, the book of assizes or pleas of the Crown, being the fifth part of the year-books.

Liber feudorum, a code of the feudal law, compiled by direction of the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, and published at Milan, A.D. 1170.

Liber homo, a freeman.

Liber judicialis of Alfred, Alfred's dome-book, which see.

Liber niger domûs regis (the black book of the king's household), the title of a book in which there is an account of the household establishment of King Edward IV., and of the several musicians retained in his service, as well for his private amusement as for the service in his chapel.—Encyc. Lond.

Libera, a livery or delivery of so much corn or grass to a customary tenant, who cut down or prepared the said grass or corn, and received some part or small portion of it as a reward or gratuity.—Cowel.

Libera batella, a free boat, a right of fishing.

Libera chasea habenda, a judicial writ granted to a person for a free chase belonging to his manor after proof made by inquiry of a jury that the same of right belongs to him.

Libera piscaria, a free fishery.

Libera wara, a free measure of ground.

Liberam legem amittere, to lose one's free law (called the villainous judgment), to become discredited or disabled as juror and witness, to forfeit goods and chattels and lands for life, to have those lands wasted, houses razed, trees rooted up, and one's body committed to prison. It was anciently pronounced against conspirators, but is now disused, the punishment substituted being fine and imprisonment.—Hawk. P. C. 61, c. lxxii., s. 9; 3 Instit. 221.

Liberata pecunia non liberat offerentem. Co. Litt. 207.—(Money being restored, does not set free the party offering.)

Liberate, a writ that lay for the payment of a yearly pension or other sum of money granted under the Great Seal, and addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the Exchequer. Also a writ to the sheriff for the delivery of possession of lands and goods extended or taken upon the forfeiture of a recognisance. Also a writ that issued out of Chancery, directed to a gaoler, for delivery of a prisoner that has put in bail for his appearance.—F. N. B. 432.

Liberatio, money, meat, drink, clothes, etc., yearly given and delivered by the lord to his domestic servants.—Blount.

Liberation, payment.—Civ. Law.

Libertas ecclesiastica, church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunity.

Libertas est naturalis facultas ejus quod cuique facere libet, nisi quod de jure aut vi prohibetur. Co. Litt. 116.—(Liberty is that natural faculty which permits everyone to do anything he pleases except that which is restrained by law or force.)

Libertate probandâ, an ancient writ which lay for such as being demanded for villeins, offered to prove themselves free: addressed to the sheriff that he should take security from them for the proof of their freedom before the justices of assize, and that in the meantime they should be unmolested.—F. N. B. 77.

Libertates regales ad coronam spectantes ex concessione regum à coronâ exierunt. 2 Inst. 496.—(Royal franchises relating to the Crown have emanated from the Crown by grant of kings.)

Libertatibus allocandis, a writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed.—Reg. Orig. 262.

Libertatibus exigendis in itinere, an ancient writ whereby the king commanded the justices in eyre to admit of an attorney for the defence of another's liberty.—Reg. Orig. 19.

Liberticide, a destroyer of liberty.

Liberties, privileged districts exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction. See 13 & 14 Vict. c. 105, and NON OMITTAS.

Libertinum ingratum leges civiles in pristinam servitutem redigunt; sed leges Angliæ semel manumissum semper liberum judicant. Co. Litt. 137.—(The civil laws reduce an ungrateful freedman to his original slavery, but the laws of England regard a man once manumitted as ever after free.)

Liberty, a franchise, being a royal privilege or a branch of the Crown's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a subject, as a liberty to hold pleas in a court of one's own.

Also, generally, a state of freedom, as contradistinguished from slavery, the power to act, no law restraining it, or a right over one's actions, subject, however, to the will of God, i.e., piety, and to one's duty towards mankind. It is of various kinds. (1) Natural liberty—a state of exemption from the control of others, and from positive laws and institutions of social life. (2) Civil liberty—the security from the arbitrary will of others, which is afforded by the laws. (3) Political liberty—a more extended civil liberty, being the freedom of a nation or a state from all abridgments of its rights and independence by another nation.

(4) Religious liberty, or liberty of conscience—the free right of adopting and enjoying opinions on religious subjects, and of being allowed to worship the Supreme Being according to the dictates of conscience, unfettered by external control.

(5) Liberty of the press—the free power of publishing everything, subject, however, to punishment for publishing what is mischievous to the public morals, or injurious to individuals.

(6) Liberty of speech—the right of speaking facts and expressing all opinions, except a desire to overthrow the existing form of government and to deny religion.

Liberty of the rules, a privilege to go out of the Fleet and Marshalsea prisons within certain limits and there reside. Abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22.

Libereum tenementum, a frank tenement or freehold. The plea of liberum tenementum commonly pleaded by the defendant in an action of trespass, was the only case of usual occurrence in more modern practice, in which the allegation of a general freehold title in lieu of a precise allegation of title was sufficient. It was sustained by proof of any estate of freehold, whether in fee, in tail, or for life only, and whether in possession or expectant on determination of a term of years, but it did not apply to the case of a freehold estate in remainder or reversion, expectant on a particular estate of freehold nor to copyhold tenure.—Stephen on Pleading, 7th ed., 257. Obsolete; see now PLEADING.

Liblac [veneficium, Lat.], witchcraft, particularly that kind which consisted in the compounding and administering of drugs and philtres.—Leg. Athel. 6.

Liblacum, bewitching any person; also a barbarous sacrifice.—Leg. Athel. 6.

Libra pensa, a pound of money by weight.

It was usual in former days, not only to sell the money, but to weigh it: because many cities, lords, and bishops, having their mints, coined money, and often very bad money, too, for which reason, though the pound consisted of 20 shillings, they weighed it.—Encyc. Lond.

Libraries (Public). By the Public Libraries Acts, 1855—1877 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 70; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 114; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 71; and 40 & 41 Vict. c. 54), free public libraries may be established in municipal boroughs, improvement act districts, and parishes by the vote of a majority of two-thirds of the inhabitants, taken by voting papers. The libraries when established are maintained at the expense of the ratepayers, but the rates levied in any one year must not exceed one penny in the pound. For similar provisions as to Scotland, see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 37, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 59; and as to Ireland, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 40, and 40 & 41 Vict. c. 15.

Librata terræ, a portion of ground containing four oxgangs, and every oxgang four-tine acres.—Cowel.

This is the same with what in Scotland was called pound-land of old extent.

Libripens, a scalesman.—Civ. Law.

License, or Licence [fr. licentia, Lat.], a grant of permission, a power of authority given to another to do some lawful act. It may be either written or verbal; when written, the paper containing the authority is called a license.

A license is necessary before doing many acts, as to found a church, to erect a park, to marry without publication of banns, to a corporation to alien, etc., also to carry on various trades, and to practise any profession. See Ayliffe's Parergon. Sanchez de Matrimonio : Lib de Dispensationibus.

As to licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors by retail, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

As to music and dancing licenses in London and Westminster, and within 20 miles thereof, see 25 Geo. II. c. 36 ; 28 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 1 ; and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 21. And as to billiard licenses, see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 10 et seq.

Licensee, a person to whom a license has been granted.

Licentia concordandi, that license for which the king's silver was paid on passing a fine. See FINE.

Licentia loquendi, an imparlance. See IMPARLANCE.

Licentia surgendi, license to arise, which was a liberty or space of time anciently given by the court to a tenant to arise out of his bed, who was essoined de malo lecti in a real action; and it was also the writ thereupon. —Fleta, l. 6, c. x.

Licentia transfretandi, a writ or warrant directed to the keeper of the port of Dover, or other seaport, commanding him to let such persons pass over sea as have obtained the royal license thereunto.—Reg. Orig. 193.

Licentiate, one who has license to practise any art or faculty.

Licet [Lat.], it is lawful; although.

Licet dispositio de interesse futuro sit inutilis, tamen potest fieri declaratio præcedens quæ sortiatur effectum, interveniente novo actu. Bacon.—(Although a disposition of a future interest is void, yet a precedent declaration can be made, which, a new act intervening, may have an effect.)

Licet sæpius requisitus [Lat.] (although often requested).

Licita bene miscentur, formula nisi juris obstat. Bacon.—(Things permitted are properly joined, unless the form of law oppose.)

Licitation [fr. liceo, Lat., to set a price for sale], the act of exposing to sale to the highest bidder.—Encyc. Lond.

Licking of thumbs, a form by which bargains were complete. Obsolete.

Lidford law, a sort of Lynch law, whereby a person was first punished and then tried.

Liege [fr. lige, Fr.; ligio, Ital.], bound by some feudal tenure; a subject.

Liege homage, an acknowledgment which included fealty and the services consequent upon it.—1 Br. & Had. Com. 442.

Liege-lord, a sovereign; superior lord.

Liege-man, he that oweth allegiance.—Cowel.

Liege poustie [legitima potestate], a state of health which gave a person lawful power in Scotland to dispose of his heritable property either mortis causâ or otherwise. But the Scotch Law of Deathbed has now been abolished by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 81, which enacts that no deed, instrument, or writing made by any person who shall die after the passing of that act shall be liable to challenge or reduction ex capite lecti.

Lieger, or Leger, a resident ambassador.

Lieges, or Liege people, See LIEGE.

Lien [answering to the tacita hypotheca of the Civil Law], a right in one man to retain that which is in his possession belonging to another, until certain demands of the person in possession are satisfied. It is neither a jus in re, nor a jus ad rem, i.e., it is not a right of property in the thing itself, or right of action to the thing itself.

It is either particular, as a right to retain a thing for some charge or claim growing out of, or connected with, the identical thing; or general, as a right to retain a thing not only for such charges and claims, but also for a general balance of accounts between the parties in respect to other dealings of the like nature.

Particular liens may arise in various ways: (1) by an express contract; (2) by an implied contract, resulting from the usage of trade, or the manner of dealing between parties; (3) by mere operation of law from the relation and acts of the parties, independently of any contract. General liens, not being favoured in law, must be maintained upon one of the two first grounds.

The civil law derived its own liens, whether they were pledges or hypothecations, or simple privileges, from similar sources.

The following is an analysis of the mode in which the law on this subject has been treated. (1) As to the manner and circumstances under which a lien may be acquired. To create a valid lien, it is essential that the person through whom it is acquired should himself either have the absolute ownership of the property, or at least a right to vest it; for nemo plus juris ad alium transferre potest, quam ipse habet. There must also be an actual or constructive possession by the party asserting it, with the express or implied assent of the party against whom it is asserted. It must not be inconsistent with the express terms, or the clear intent, of the contract.

(2) The proper debts or claims to which a lien properly attaches. It attaches only to certain and liquidated demands, and not to those which sound only in damages, and can be ascertained only through the intervention of a jury, unless, indeed, a special contract exists. The debt or demand for which the lien is asserted, must be due to the person claiming it in his own right, and not merely as the agent of a third person. It must also, in the absence of a special agreement, be a debt or demand due from the person for whose benefit the party is acting, and not from a third person, although the goods may be claimed through him.

(3) How a lien may be waived or lost. It may be waived by any act or agreement between the parties, by which it is surrendered, or becomes inapplicable. A voluntary parting with the possession of the goods, will amount to a waiver or a surrender of a lien: for as it is a right founded upon possession, it must ordinarily determine when the possession ceases. There are exceptions in favour of trade, as that of a factor.—Cowp. R. 251. But the lien may revive and re-attach, upon the property coming again into the possession of the person entitled to the lien, if it so come as the property of the same owner against whom his right exists, and no new intermediate equities have affected that right.

A lien is not lost when the demand in respect of which it was acquired can no longer be enforced by an action, on account of the Statute of Limitations, for the statute does not put an end to the debt, but only to the remedy by action.

(4) In what manner a lien may be enforced. There is, it seems, but a mere right of retainer, which may be used as a defence to an action for the recovery of the property, or as a matter of title or special property, to reclaim the property, by action, if he have been unlawfully dispossessed of it. Sometimes a court of equity has decreed a sale as a part of its own system of remedial justice; and courts of admiralty have been constantly in the habit of decreeing a sale to satisfy maritime liens, such as bottomry-bonds, seamen's wages, repairs of foreign ships, salvage, and other claims of a kindred nature. The owner has a perfect right to dispose of the property, subject to the lien, and the person to whom he conveys it will have a perfect title to it, upon discharging the lien. Consult Smith's Merc. Law.

Equity follows the law, when a claim, depending on the right of lien incidentally presents itself for decision. There are, however, liens which, existing only in the contemplation of a court of equity, have been therefore exclusively within its cognizance. Thus, if an estate be mortgaged, and the mortgagor has sold successively various portions of the estate to different purchasers, one of whom has paid the mortgage-debt, he will have a right to compel the other purchasers to contribute. So a joint purchaser has a lien upon the estate purchased for repairs which he may have done. Where one of two joint tenants of a lease renews for the benefit of both, he will have a lien on the moiety of the other joint tenant for a half of the fines and expenses. Again, if a person, entitled to an estate, stand by without interference, whilst another innocently builds or makes improvements on the land, thinking that he has a title to it, the person making such improvements will be entitled to a compensation. A trustee is entitled to a lien upon the trust estate for his expenses so long as it remains trust estate, but an agent or other person employed by him has not.—See 2 Sp. Eq. Jur. 766—804, and the cases there cited.

The doctrine of a vendor's equitable lien for unpaid purchase-money is thus stated by Lord Eldon (Mackreth v. Symmons, 15 Ves. 329 (1808), and 1 White and Tudor's Lead. Cas., 4th ed., 289 and notes):—'Where the vendor conveys, without more, though the consideration is upon the face of the instrument expressed to be paid and by a receipt endorsed upon the back, if it is the simple case of a conveyance, the money, or part of it, not being paid as between the vendor and the vendee, and persons claiming as volunteers upon the doctrine of this court, which, when it is settled, has the effect of a contract, though perhaps no actual contract has taken place, a lien shall prevail; in the one case, for the whole consideration; in the other, for that part of the money which was not paid.' And this lien attaches if possession of the estate have been delivered to the purchaser, although there has been no conveyance of it to him. Should the vendor take from the purchaser a security for the unpaid purchase-money, the question arises whether the lien was intended to be reserved, or whether credit was exclusively given to the person from whom the security was taken. A mere personal security for the purchase-money, as a bond, a bill of exchange, or a promissory note, will not, without more, be sufficient evidence of the intention of the vendor to give credit exclusively to the purchaser, or to his security, so as to take away the lien.

Where an estate is conveyed, in consideration of an annuity, the vendor will have a lien upon the land for an annuity, although a bond or covenant is given to secure the payment of the annuity. An actual agreement, though by parol, to accept a security, and rely upon it alone, will, it seems, discharge the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money. And if a vendor take a totally distinct and independent security for the unpaid purchase-money, it will then become a case of substitution for the lien, instead of a credit given.

If the purchase-money, or part of it, have been paid, prematurely, before a conveyance, the vendee will have a lien upon the estate in the hands of the vendor, even, it seems, although he may have taken a security for his money.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34, causes for the sale and distribution of the proceeds of any property, subject to lien, are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court.

In the Scottish law, the doctrine of lien is known by the name of retention, and that of set-off by the name of compensation.

Lien of a covenant. The commencement of a covenant stating the names of the covenantors and covenantees, and the character of the covenant, whether joint or several.

Lieu [Fr.], place, room; it is only used with in; in lieu, instead of.—Encyc. Lond.

Lieu connu, a castle, manor, or other notorious place, well known, and generally taken notice of by those who dwell about it.—2 Lil. Abr. 641.

Lieutenancy, Commission of. See COMMISSION OF ARRAY.

Lieutenant [fr. lieu, Fr., a place, and tenant, holding], a deputy; locum tenens; one who acts by vicarious authority.

Life annuity, an annual payment during the continuance of any given life or lives. See ANNUITY.

Life assurance, a transaction whereby a sum of money is secured to be paid upon the death of the person whose life is assured, or upon the failure of one out of two or more joint lives. See INSURANCE.

Life-estate, a freehold not of inheritance. It is either—

(1) Conventional, or expressly created by the act of the parties, which is either—

(a) For one's own life, or

(β) The life of another—pur auter vie; or

(2) Legal, which is either—

(a) Tenancy-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct.

(β) Courtesy of England.

(γ) Dower.—2 B. & H. Com. 250 et seq.

Life-land, or Life-hold, land held on a lease for lives.

Life-peerage, Letters-patent, conferring the dignity of baron for life only, do not enable the grantee to sit and vote in the House of Lords, not even with the usual writ of summons to the house.—Resolution of the Committee for Privileges, 22nd February, 1856.

Life-rent, a rent received for a term of life.

Ligan [fr. lier, Fr., to tie], a wreck consisting of goods sunk in the sea, but tied to a cork or buoy, in order that they may be found again.—5 Rep. 106, and 1 Br. & Had. Com. 363.

Ligeance, the true and faithful obedience of a subject to his sovereign; also the dominion and territory of a liege lord.

Ligeantia est quasi legis essentia; est vinculum fidei. Co. Litt. 129.—(Allegiance is, as it were, the essence of law; it is the chain of faith.)

Ligeantia naturalis nullis claustris coercetur, nullis metis refrenatur, nullis finibus premitur. 7 Co. 10.—(Natural allegiance is restrained by no barriers, reined by no bounds, compressed by no limits.)

Ligeas, a liege.—Old Records.

Light, a right to have the access of the sun's rays to one's windows free from any obstruction. An uninterrupted enjoyment of light for twenty years constitutes, in every case, an absolute and indefeasible right to it, unless it shall appear that the enjoyment took place under some deed or written consent or agreement.—2 Wm. IV. c. 71. See Gale on Easements, and 2 Br. & Had. Com. 40.

Light-house, a high building, at the top of which lights are shown to guide ships at sea. The power of erecting and maintaining them is a branch of the royal prerogative.—1 Broom & Had. Com. 317. The management of light-houses is now regulated by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, Part VI., ss. 339—416, and subject to the rights of persons having authority over local light-houses, is vested in the following bodies:—

(1) As to light-houses in England, Wales, Jersey, Guernsey, Sark, and Alderney, and the adjacent seas and islands, and in Heligoland and Gibraltar, in the Trinity House.

(2) In Scotland and the adjacent seas and islands, and in the Isle of Man, in the Commissioners of Northern Light-houses.

(3) In Ireland and the adjacent seas and islands, in the Dublin Corporation.

The statute also provides for the levy of light dues; the construction and dues of new light-houses, the surrender of local light-houses, damage to lights, etc., and the prevention of false lights. See also 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, s. 43 et seq. By 17 & 18 Vict.

c. 120, several statutes relating to light-houses are repealed. As to colonial light-houses, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91.

Lighting and Watching Act, 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 90, superseding 2 Geo. IV. c. 27. An act which may be adopted in any parish by the votes of a majority of two-thirds of the ratepayers, and which, if adopted, regulates the lighting of the parish 'by gas, oil, or otherwise' (s. 45), and the appointment, employment, and dismissal of 'watchmen' or constables therein. The act may be abandoned in three years after its adoption (s. 15).

The act was repealed as to the metropolis by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 90, s. 35, and is superseded by the Public Health Act in districts where that act is in force (see 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 163).

Ligius, a person bound to another by a solemn tie or engagement; now used to express the relation of a subject to his sovereign.

Lignagium, a right of cutting fuel in woods; also a tribute or payment due for the same.—Jacob.

Lignamina, timber fit for building.—Du Fresnoe.

Ligula, a copy or transcript of a court-roll or deed.—Cowel.

Liguritor, a flatterer; perhaps a glutton.—Somner.

Limitation, restriction or circumspection; settling an estate or property; a certain time allowed by a statute for litigation. See next title.

Limitation of Actions. By various statutes, of which the first was 21 Jac. I. c. 16, and the principal succeeding ones 3 & 4 Wm. IV. cc. 27 and 42, and the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, certain periods are fixed within which particular actions must be brought or proceedings taken.

Statutes of Limitation have been correctly denominated Statutes of repose, and being all in pari materia, and passed with the same object, should be liberally expounded in furtherance of that object.—White v. Parnther, Knapp's Rep. 226.

The principal reasons for the introduction of these statutes have been; first, as regards real property, after upwards of forty years adverse possession, or even a shorter time, a person should, upon every principle of justice, except in the case of fraud, be quieted and rendered secure in his possession; for, although his right, if tried within a reasonable time after his obtaining possession, might have been proved by documents and evidence, such evidence, after so great a lapse of time, may have become altogether lost; besides, a new succession of persons may have become the occupiers, by descent or devise, or by alienation, and it would be unjust to require them to prove their title, impeached by a claimant who has slept so long on his legal rights, and who would sustain no just disappointment by being deprived of the means of pursuing so stale a demand; second, as regards claims of a personal nature, as for supposed debts or damages, the lapse of six years induces a presumption (upon which 21 Jac. I. c. 16 was founded) that the claim has been satisfied, and that the receipt or evidence, showing its satisfaction, has been lost; or that the claim has been too weak to prosecute, or perhaps not worth it; third, as to assaults and batteries, and verbal slander, proof of which usually depends upon doubtful and conflicting parol evidence, injured parties slumbering upon such wrongs for years cannot be favoured objects of the courts, since length of time tends to obliterate the injurious effects arising from such evanescent causes; and fourth, as to justices, public officers, and individuals acting under particular powers, inasmuch as their duties are arduous and sometimes perilous, and the construction of the statutes under which they act is frequently exceedingly nice and difficult, they should be specially protected from actions frequently arising from errors in judgment being long kept hanging over their heads, until, perhaps, all evidence in support of their defence may have been lost.

If the statute once begin to run, it continues; and if the cause of action were complete in a testator's lifetime, then the statute begins and continues from that time, and not from his death or the time of obtaining the probate.—Hickman v. Walker, Willes, 27.

It seems that the day on which the cause of action accrued ought in general to be excluded in calculating the times of limitation under these statutes (Higgins v. McAdam, 3 Young & J. 1 and 16; 1 Mon. & R. 300, note b). And as to the expiration (the statutes requiring the action to be brought within the limited time), the writ, or process, at least should be issued upon the last day of the time limited, exclusive of the day on which the cause of action accrued.

There is no cause of action till the claimant can legally sue, and till there be some person in existence who can assert it, and also a person to be sued; and therefore, where the payee of a bill, at the time it fell due, was dead, it was held that the statute did not begin to run until letters of administration to his estate had been obtained (Douglas v. Forrest, 4 Bing. 686); but as regards chattels real, process for their recovery must be commenced within the limited time, without regard to the date of the letters of administration; and in cases of the reversal of judgment or outlawry in any personal action, the plaintiff, or his heirs, executors, or administrators may commence de novo within a year afterwards, but not after; and also as to actions against persons beyond sea, they may be brought at any time within six years after their return.

No verbal acknowledgment of a debt is sufficient to prevent the operation of the statutes (Benest v. Pipon, Knapp's Rep. 60). By 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, s. 1, in actions of debt, or on the case grounded upon any simple contract, no acknowledgment or promise by words only shall be deemed sufficient evidence of a new or continuing contract whereby to take any case out of the operation of 21 Jac. I. c. 16, unless such acknowledgment or promise be contained in some writing, to be signed by the party to be chargeable thereby; or by his agent duly authorized (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 13); and where there are two or more joint-contractors, no such joint-contractor shall be chargeable, in respect only of the written acknowledgment of the other. By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, where there are two or more co-contractors, or co-debtors, none of them shall lose the benefit of the limitation, by reason only of payment of any principal or interest by any of the others.

By the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, s. 3, persons, who at the time their right to recover land, etc., first accrues, are under the disability of infancy, coverture, idiocy, lunacy, unsoundness of mind, are allowed six years from the termination of their disability, and their representatives the same time from their death.

An allowance for 'absence beyond seas,' which formerly obtained, is excluded by s. 4 of that act, as to real property, and by s. 10 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 27, as to other matters.

As to real property, there are four general rules when the possession is not adverse, viz:—1st, when both parties claim under the same title; 2ndly, when the possession of the one is consistent with the title of the other; 3rdly, when the claimant or his successor has never, in contemplation of law, been out of possession; and 4thly, when the occupier has acknowledged the plaintiff's title.

It would not excuse a solicitor for not suing within six years, to show that he had not delivered his bill till within that time, although he is prohibited from suing until a calendar month after such delivery; and his cause of action, with respect to his bill, begins from the completion of the business.—Harris v. Osbourn, 2 Cr. & M. 629; 4 Tyr. 445.

In courts of equity, the rule has been, that, although the statute 21 Jac. I. c. 16, s. 3, and other acts, do not mention bills or suits in equity, yet that courts of equity in giving effect to equitable claims, and affording equitable relief, will observe the principles of these enactments, in all cases where the legal and equitable titles to demands, noticed in the acts, correspond, and differ only in the court where the right happens to be enforced (Stackhouse v. Burnston, 10 Ves. 66, 67). The 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27 expressly enacts, that no suit in equity shall be brought after the time in which the plaintiff, if entitled at law, might have brought an action (s. 24). Section 25 provides, that where land or rent is vested in a trustee upon express trust, the right of the cestui que trust shall not be deemed to accrue until after a conveyance to a purchaser for a valuable consideration. By section 26, in cases of concealed fraud, no time runs until the fraud has been, or with reasonable diligence might have been discovered; and no owner shall sue in equity on account of fraud, or set aside a bond fide conveyance to a purchaser for valuable consideration. Section 29 continues the jurisdiction of equity, in refusing relief on the ground of acquiescence or otherwise.

If there be a general devise for the payment of debts, it will be no recognition or revival of debts, already barred by the statute, before the death of the testator, although it was formerly held otherwise (Stratford v. Blakesley, 6 Bro. P. C. 630); but such a devise stops the operation of the statute, as to all debts not so previously barred.—Rendell v. Carpenter, 2 Young & P. 484.

By the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, which did not come into operation until the 1st January, 1879, the period within which actions for the recovery of land may be brought was shortened, in the case of recovery of land or rent-charge, from 20 to 12 years.

No advantage can be taken of the statutes of limitation in an action unless an issue thereon be raised by the pleadings (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 18).

As to renewal of writs to save statutes of limitations, see RENEWAL OF WRITS.

TABLE OF PERIODS.

The following is an alphabetical arrangement of the periods fixed by the principal Statutes.

It has been provided by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (2), that no claim of a cestui que trust against his trustee for any property held on any express trust or in respect of any breach of such trust, shall be held to be barred by any statute of limitations.

As to the limitation of the time during which a writ of summons remains in force, see SUMMONS, WRIT OF.

Limitation of estate, a modification or settlement of an estate determining how long it shall continue, or a qualification of a preceding estate.—1 Inst. 204, 234.

Limitation, Words of, those which operate by reference to, or in connection with, other words, and extend or modify an estate given by such other words, as 'heirs,' 'heirs of the body.' See 1 Smith's Real and Pers. Prop., 4th ed., 63—65, 160.

Limited administration, a special and temporary administration of certain specific effects of a testator or intestate granted under varying circumstances. See 1 Wms. Exors., 7th ed., 479 et seq.

Limited executor, an executor whose appointment is qualified by limitations as to the time or place wherein, or the subject-matter whereon, the office is to be exercised; as distinguished from one whose appointment is absolute, i.e., certain and immediate, without any restriction in regard to the testator's effects or limitation in point of time.—1 Wms. Exors., 7th ed., 249 et seq.

Limited Liability. At common law every person is liable, upon his contracts, etc., up to the whole amount of his estate, and every partner is so liable upon all the contracts, etc., of the partnership. So extensive a liability being apt to prevent persons from engaging in business as partners, the statutes authorizing the construction of railways, etc., have always limited the liability of each shareholder to the amount of the shares held by him. Similar limitations, extending in some cases to double the amount of shares held, have also long been found (though not universally) in the charters of incorporated banks and insurance companies. In 1855 the Act 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, first brought these limitations into common and popular use, and the Companies Act, 1862, while providing for unlimited, expressly provides for limited liability, it being left to promoters to decide on which of the two principles they will bring out their company. Except in the case of banking companies, unlimited liability has always been uncommon, and even in the case of banking and other companies which have been registered as unlimited, the Companies Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 76,—the passing of which was suggested by the failure of the Glasgow Bank, an unlimited company,—provides for a registration anew with limited liability. Most of the principal banking companies have taken advantage of this act, which, however, continues the unlimited liability of a bank of issue in respect of its notes.

The liability of shipowners is limited by s. 54 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, and of railway companies in respect of the carriage of certain animals by s. 7 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854.

Limited Owner. A tenant for life, in tail or by the curtesy, or other person not having a fee-simple in his absolute disposition. See Settled Land Act, 1882, s. 58, and SETTLED LAND.

Limited Owners Residences Act (33 & 34 Vict. c. 56). This act, as amended by the 'Limited Owners Residences Act, 1870, Amendment Act, 1871' (34 & 35 Vict. c. 84), enables the tenant for life of a settled estate to charge the estate with the expense of building a mansion house.

Limogia, enamel.—Du Cange.

Linarium, a flax plat, where flax is grown.—Du Cange.

Lincoln's Inn, an Inn of Court. See INNS OF COURT.

Lindesfern, or Lindesfarne, Holy Island, in Northumberland, which was formerly a bishop's see.—4 Inst. 288.

Line, succession of relations; boundary; the twelfth part of an inch.

Linea recta est index sui et obliqui; lex est linea recti. Co. Litt. 158.—(A right line is a test of itself, and of an oblique; law is a line of right.)

Linea recta semper præfertur transversali. Co. Litt. 10.—(The right line is always preferred to the collateral.)

It is a rule of descent that the lineal ancestors, in infinitum, of any person deceased shall represent their ancestor, that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done had he been living. See CANONS OF INHERITANCE.

Lineage [fr. lignage, Fr.], race, progeny, family, ascending or descending.

Lineal consanguinity, that relationship which subsists between persons descended in a right line, as grandfather, father, son, grandson.

Lineal descent, the descent of an estate from ancestor to heir in a right line.

Lineal warranty, where the heir derived, or might by possibility have derived, his title to the land warranted, either from or through the ancestor who made the warranty; as where a father or an elder son in the life of the father released to the disseisor of themselves, or of the grandfather, with warranty, this was lineal to the younger son.—Litt. s. 703. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, s. 14.

Liquidated damages, a certain, fixed, and ascertained sum, in contradistinction to a penalty, which is both uncertain and unascertained.

It must be remarked, that calling a sum liquidated damages will not change its character as a penalty, if upon the true construction of the instrument it must be deemed to be a penalty. Indeed, wherever the payment of a small sum is secured by the payment of a much larger sum, it must be considered as a penalty, and this especially where the sum referred to is penal in its nature. But where it is agreed that if a person do, or neglect to do, a particular thing in respect to which the damages are uncertain, a certain sum shall be paid by him, there the sum stated may be treated as liquidated damages, if the terms of the contract do not evince a different intention.

Liquidated demand, where an action is brought for the recovery of a liquidated sum the writ of summons may be specially endorsed, under the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. III., r. 6, and a special course of procedure followed; as to which see the title LEAVE TO DEFEND. See also APPEARANCE; PLEADING; SUMMONS, WRIT OF.

Liquidation. As to liquidation by arrangement with creditors, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 125. As to liquidation under the Joint Stock Companies Act, see JOINT STOCK COMPANY. The Liquidation Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 68), provided for the distribution of assets, without a sale, in certain cases.

Lis [Lat.], a suit, action, controversy, or dispute.

Lis mota (the dispute having arisen). Declarations of deceased members of a family, in matters of pedigree, are inadmissible in evidence, if made after a controversy has arisen as to the facts on which the claim is founded (or, as it is called, post litem motam), which for that purpose is to be deemed the commencement of the lis mota.—6 C. & P. 560; Taylor on Evidence, s. 564 et seq.; Shedden v. The Attorney-General, 30 L. J. (P. M. & A.) 232.

Lis pendens (a pending suit). The pendency of another action between the same parties for the same cause of action might under the former practice have been pleaded in abatement, though not in bar; but the pendency of an action in an inferior or foreign court could not be so pleaded. Such matter may now be set up by way of defence, or the action may be stayed by the Court, under the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 24 (5).

The actual pendency of a suit in equity was regarded as notice of the suit to all the world, though after a complete decision the public attention may be supposed to be drawn off to other matters, and therefore a person was allowed to be ignorant of a final decree of the court made in a cause in which he was not concerned. But by 2 Vict. c. 11, s. 7, it was enacted, that no lis pendens shall bind a purchaser or mortgagee without express notice thereof, unless and until a memorandum or minute, containing the name of the usual or last known place of abode, and the title, trade, or profession of the person whose estate is intended to be effected thereby, and the Court of Equity, and the title of the cause or information, and the day when the bill or information was filed, shall be left with the senior master of the Court of Common Pleas, who shall forthwith enter the same particulars in a book, in alphabetical order, by the name of the person whose estate is intended to be affected by such lis pendens; and the provisions contained in the act in regard to the re-entering of judgments every five years, shall extend to every case of lis pendens.

which shall be registered under the provisions of the act. See 18 Vict. c. 15, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 16, s. 46. A special case in Chancery is a lis pendens, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 17. As to entering satisfaction as to pending suit, etc., see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 115, s. 2, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 47, s. 2.

Literary and Scientific Institutions Act (1854), 17 & 18 Vict. c. 112, which affords greater facilities for procuring and settling sites and buildings in trust for institutions established for the promotion of literature, science, or the fine arts, or for the diffusion of useful knowledge, and makes provisions for improving the legal conditions of such institutions. As to their exemption from poor-rates, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36.

Literate, one who qualifies himself for holy orders by presenting himself as a person accomplished in classical learning, etc., not as a graduate of Oxford, Cambridge, etc.

Literatura. Ad literaturam ponere means to put children to school. This liberty was anciently denied to those parents who were servile tenants, without the lord's consent: the prohibition against the education of sons arose from the fear that the son, being bred to letters, might enter into holy orders, and so stop or divert the services which he might otherwise do as heir to his father.—*Paroch. Litis contestatio, in the Ecclesiastical Courts, the issue of an action. (2) A submission to the decision of a judex.—Civ. Law.

Litis nomen omnem actionem significat, sive in rem, sive in personam sit. Co. Litt. 292. —(A lawsuit signifies every action, whether it be in rem or in personam.)

Litispence [fr. lis, Lat., strife, and pendeo, to hang], the time during which a lawsuit is going on. Obsolete.

Little Goes, a species of, lottery, declared unlawful.—42 Geo. III. c. 119.

Littleton, a judge of the Common Pleas in the reign of Edward IV., who composed a book of tenures for the use of his son, to whom it is addressed. It contains three books; the first upon estates; the second upon tenures and services, which two were designed to explain more at large the principal subject of the old book of tenures; the third discourses of several incidents and consequences of tenures and estates.

The undiminished reputation which this author still possesses is owing principally to the choice of his subject. The law of tenures and estates, as understood in the time of Littleton, is at this day the best introduction to the knowledge of real property; and though great part of this volume is not now law, yet so intimately was the whole of that system connected, that what remains of tenures cannot be understood without a knowledge of what is abolished, and, therefore, the parts of Littleton which are now obsolete are studied both with profit and pleasure. Sir Edward Coke has furnished the world with a very copious and minute commentary on this book, in which he has carried his attention to the import of every word so far as to make interesting remarks on his very et cæteras.—4 Reeves, c. 25, p. 113.

Liturgy [fr. λεωτοργία, Gk., a public service], the Book of Common Prayer used in the Established Church, as confirmed by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4.

It would be disingenuous not to acknowledge that the chief part of this Liturgy was in use in the Roman Catholic Church, from which the Church of England is reformed; but it would betray a want of acquaintance with ecclesiastical antiquity to suppose that these prayers and services originated in that church, as several of them were in use in the first ages of Christianity, and before the Roman Catholic Church was known.—Clarke's Bible; p. xxv.; Cookson's Com. Prayer. The 34 & 35 Vict. c. 37, passed 'to amend the law relating to the Tables of Lessons and Psalter contained in the Prayer Book,' provides a new Table of Lessons. The 35 & 36 Vict. c. 35, provides 'a shortened form of Morning and Evening Prayer.' See ACT OF UNIFORMITY.

Livelode, maintenance, support.

Livery [fr. livrer, Fr.], the act of giving or taking possession, now abolished by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106; release from wardship; also the writ by which possession was obtained.—In London, the Loan [hlen, Sax.], anything lent or given to another on condition of return or repayment. A sum of money confided to another.

Loan, gratuitous, or Commodate, a class of bailment which is called commodatum in the Roman law, and is denominated by Sir William Jones a loan for use (prêt à usage), to distinguish it from mutuum, a loan for consumption. It is the gratuitous lending of an article to the borrower for his own use.

Several things are essential to constitute this contract. (1) There must be a loan of either goods or chattels, in contradistinction to a sale or deposit of a thing with another for the sole benefit or purposes of the owner. (2) It must be lent gratuitously. (3) It must be lent for the use of the borrower, which must be the principal object, and not merely accessorial. (4) The property must be lent to be specifically returned by the lender at the determination of the bailment: and in this respect it differs from a mutuum, or loan for consumption, where the thing borrowed, such as corn, wine, oil, or money, is to be returned in kind.

The borrower has the right to use the thing during the time and for the purpose agreed upon by the parties. The loan is to be considered as strictly personal, unless from other circumstances a different intention may fairly be presumed. The borrower must take proper care of the thing borrowed, use it according to the lender's intention, restore it at the proper time, and in a proper condition.

The lender must suffer the borrower to use and enjoy the thing lent during the time of the loan, according to the original intention, without any molestation or impediment, under the peril of damages. He must reimburse the borrower the extraordinary expenses to which he has been put for the preservation of the thing lent. He is bound to give notice to the borrower of the defects of the thing lent ; and if he do not, but conceal them, and an injury occurs to the borrower thereby, the lender is responsible. Where the thing has been lost by the borrower, and, after he has paid the value thereof, is restored to the lender, the latter must return either the price paid or the thing ; for, by such payment of the loss, the property is effectively transferred to the borrower.

Mr. Justice Story thus concludes his observations on gratuitous loans—a subject of daily occurrence in the actual business of human life:—‘It has, however,’ says he, ‘furnished very little occasion for the interposition of judicial tribunals, for reasons equally honourable to the parties and to the liberal spirit of polished society. The generous confidence thus bestowed is rarely abused ; and if a loss or injury unintentionally occurs, an indemnity is either promptly offered by the borrower, or compensation is promptly waived by the lender.’—Story’s Bailments, c. iv.

Loan Commissioners. See PUBLIC WORKS LOANS ACT, 1875.

Loan Societies, institutions established for the purpose of advancing money on loan to the industrious classes, and receiving back payment for the same by instalments, with interest.

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110 (continued by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 19, and made perpetual by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 56), forms of proceeding of a similar nature to those prescribed in the acts regulating savings banks and friendly societies are requisite to enable loan societies to avail themselves of this act ; as to which see the Friendly Societies Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), and the title FRIENDLY SOCIETIES.

These societies are entitled to issue debentures for money deposited with them (otherwise than by way of gift), and these, as well as all other notes and instruments given in pursuance of the act, are exempted from stamp duty. They are also placed on the same footing with savings banks, in the event of the death of a claimant intestate, who is entitled to less than 50%, the production of a will or letters of administration not being requisite.

The amount which these societies may advance is 15% ; and no second loan can be granted until the first is repaid. The society is permitted to receive, by way of discount, at the time of the loan, interest under its enrolled rules, not exceeding 12% per cent., and to receive the principal by such instalments as the rules specify, so that the first repayment shall not be sooner than the eleventh day from the time of the advance.

With respect to the recovery of loans, the act has provided a form of note to be signed by the borrower and two sureties ; and upon failure in payment, the person liable may be summoned before any justice of the peace, who may levy by distress and sale of the goods. The society (by its treasurer) may proceed against the person liable, in any county court having jurisdiction, and where the sum due happens to exceed the amount for which the court has jurisdiction, may recover such part of the debt as that court can give judgment for, in lieu of the whole.

An abstract of the accounts is to be made out early to the 31st December, and sent during January to the proper authority, to be laid before parliament.

Local actions, those referring to some particular locality as actions for trespasses on land, in which the venue must have been laid in the county where the cause of action arose.

Real actions and the mixed action of ejectment were local : but personal actions were for the most part transitory, i.e., their cause of action might be supposed to take place anywhere, but when they were brought for anything in relation to realty, they were then local. See Mostyn v. Fabrigas, 1 Smith, L. C., and 2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Local venues are abolished by Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 1. See VENUE.

Local allegiance, such as is due from an alien or stranger born, so long as he continues within the sovereign’s dominions and protection ; it ceases the instant such stranger transfers himself from this kingdom to another. But if an alien, seeking the protection of the Crown, and having a family and effects here, should, during a war with his native country, go thither, and there adhere to our enemies for purposes of hostility, he may be dealt with as a traitor.—Fost. 115. See ALIEN.

Local and Personal Acts of Parliament. See ACTS OF PARLIAMENT. Provisions in local and personal acts giving double and treble costs, and allowing the general issue to be pleaded, and special matter to be given in evidence, are repealed by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97, ss. 1, 3. The same act provides for uniformity of notice of action in such actions—one month in all cases ; and equalizes the periods of limitation under such acts. See LIMITATION, STATUTES OF. By 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, every statute made after the commencement of the then next session of parliament, is to be taken to be a public one, and judicially noticed as such, unless the contrary be expressly declared.

Local authority. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

As to loans to such authorities and their right to issue debentures, see the Local Loans Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 83.

Local Board. A body of persons established by an order of the Local Government Board, upon a resolution of the owners and ratepayers of a rural district, for the purpose of administering the Public Health Act (which see) within such district, which is called a 'local government district.' They are elected by open voting of the owners and ratepayers, each voter having from one to six votes in proportion to the property occupied by him. See s. 272, and sched. 2 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Local Courts, tribunals of a limited and special jurisdiction, as the several county courts throughout the country. See further BOROUGH COURTS; INFERIOR COURTS.

Local Government Board. The 'Local Government Board Act, 1871' (34 & 35 Vict. c. 70), concentrating in one department of the Government 'the supervision of the laws relating to the public health, the relief of the poor, and local government,' establishes this Board, and transfers thereto all the powers of the Poor Law Board, all the powers of a Secretary of State as to registration of births, deaths, and marriages, public health drainage, local government, etc. (as mentioned in scheduled acts), and all the powers of the Privy Council as to prevention of disease and vaccination (as mentioned in scheduled acts). By s. 3, the Board consists of a President, and (as ex-officio members) of the President of the Privy Council, the principal Secretaries of State for the time being, the Lord Privy Seal, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. By the 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, s. 36, the powers of the Secretary of State under the Highway and Turnpike Acts are also transferred to the Local Government Board. See also PUBLIC HEALTH.

A similar Board has been constituted for Ireland by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 69.

Locus in quo (the place in which).—1 Salk. 24.

Locus partitus, a division made between two towns or counties, to make trial where the land or place in question lies.—Fleta, l. 4, c. xv.

Locus pœnitentiæ (a place or chance of repentance), a power of drawing back from a bargain before any act has been done to confirm it in law.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Locus pro solutione redditus aut pecunie secundum conditionem dismissionis aut obligationis est strictè observandus. 4 Co. 73.—

(The place for the payment of rent or money, according to the condition of a lease or bond, is to be strictly observed.)

Locus regit actum. Cited L. R. 1 Q. B. 119. The place governs the act; that is, the act is governed by the law of the place where it is done.

Locus sigilli [Lat.], abbrev. L. S., the place of the seal.

Locus standi, the right of a party to appear and be heard on the question before any tribunal. Such questions rarely occurred in the courts of equity, and it may be said never in the courts of law. But they are of perpetual occurrence in private bill legislation. Consult the works of Smethurst, or of Clifford and Stephens on this subject.

Lode-manage, or Lode-merage, the hire of a pilot for conducting a vessel from one place to another.—Cowel. See LOADMAN-AGE.

Lodger, a tenant, with the right of exclusive possession of a part of a house, the landlord, by himself or an agent, retaining general dominion over the house itself.

Lodging-Franchise. This was first conferred upon the occupiers of lodgings in boroughs of 10*l.* yearly value, if let unfurnished, by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102, s. 4, and was afterwards much extended by 41 & 42 Vict. c. 26, s. 6. See Bradley v. Baylis, 8 Q. B. D. 195.

Lodging-Houses, Common. See the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 76 et seq., which provides for their registration and inspection, and enacts that they may be kept only by registered keepers. This Act repeals the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 28, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 41; except as to the Metropolitan Police District, and the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, except as to the Metropolitan district.

Lodging-houses for the Labouring Classes. See LABOURERS' DWELLINGS.

Lodgings, part of a house taken on lease.

Lodgings may be let in the same manner as lands and tenements; in general, however, they are let either by agreement in writing or by parol. An executory agreement by parol is void by the statute of frauds as being a contract in relation to land, and a written agreement is often desirable to avoid dispute.

By the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 79, passed for the protection of lodgers' goods, it is provided (s. 1), that if any superior landlord shall levy a distress on any furniture, goods, or chattels of any lodger (see Morton v. Palmer, 51 L. J. Q. B. 7) for arrears of rent due to such superior landlord, by his immediate tenant, such lodger may serve such superior landlord, or the bailiff or other person employed by him to levy such distress, with a declaration in writing made by such lodger, setting forth that such immediate tenant has no right of property or beneficial interest in the furniture, etc., so distrained, and that such furniture, etc., are the property, or in the lawful possession of such lodger; and also setting forth whether any and what rent is due from such lodger to his immediate landlord; and such lodger may pay to the superior landlord, the rent, if any, so due as last aforesaid, or so much thereof as shall be sufficient to discharge the claim of such superior landlord. And by s. 3 it is provided that any payment made by any lodger pursuant to the first section of the act, shall be deemed a valid payment on account of any rent due from him to his immediate landlord.

Lodgings constitute such an interest according to the duration of the term, that for many purposes lodgers are considered in law in the light of householders, and enjoy the same protection and greater immunities, not being, for instance, rateable to the relief of the poor. The law makes no distinction between lodgers and other tenants as to the payment of their rent, or turning them out of possession, for they are, generally, subject to the same regulations as other tenants. A notice to quit has in all cases a reference to the letting, and for lodgings let by the month, a month's notice suffices. If a tenant quit without giving notice, the landlord may recover the rent though he has put up a bill in the window for the purpose of letting the apartments, or has lighted fires in the rooms; but if the landlord let the apartments to another, he rescinds the contract, and cannot recover rent for any subsequent portion of the original tenancy.

By the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 38, compensation may be awarded to the extent of 15*l.* by a police magistrate, for wilful damage done by tenants of houses or lodgings, within the metropolitan police district, to the premises or furniture.

As to stealing by lodgers of chattels or fixtures let, to be used by them, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 70.

Logia, a small house, lodge, or cottage.—Mon. Angl., tom. 1, p. 400.

Logic [fr. λογος, Gk., reason], the science of the operations of the understanding which are subservient to the estimation of evidence both the process itself of proceeding from known truths to unknown, and all other intellectual operations, in so far as auxiliary to this. It includes, therefore, the operation of naming; for language is an instrument of thought, as well as a means of communicating our thoughts. It includes also defininition and classification. For, the use of these operations (putting all other minds than one's own out of consideration) is to serve not only for keeping our evidence and the conclusions from them permanent and readily accessible in the memory, but for so marshalling the facts which we may at any time be engaged in investigating, as to enable us to perceive more clearly what evidence there is; and to judge, with fewer chances of error, whether it be sufficient. These, therefore, are operations specially instrumental to the estimation of evidence, and, as such, are within the province of logic.—1 Mill's Log.; Whateley's Logic.

Logium, a lodge, hovel, or outhouse.—Old Records.

Logomachy, a contest of words.

Lollardy [fr. tullen, lollen, or lallen, Old Germ., to sing with a low voice; and hard, from their singing funeral dirges, Mosh.], a vulgar term of reproach brought from Belgium and given to the early Protestants (the followers of Wycliffe) as far back as the reign of Edward III. The Lollards closely resembled the puritans of Elizabeth's reign.—Stow's Annals, 425.

London, the metropolis of England. For a short account of early London, see 3 Hallam, Mid. Ages, p. 219.

It is a county of itself, a market overt every day, except Sundays, and a corporation by prescription, and is exempted from the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76. It is divided into twenty-six wards, over each of which there is an alderman, and is governed by a lord mayor, who is chosen yearly, and presented to the Queen, or in her absence, to her justices, or the barons of the Exchequer at Westminster. He is the chief justice of gaol delivery, escheator within the liberties, and bailiff of the river Thames, etc. He has also jurisdiction over the local courts, viz., Sheriff's Court (now called the City of London Court, since 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, s. 35, by which act it is placed on the same footing as County Courts), Mayor's Court, etc. See CENTRAL CRIMINAL COURT.

The customs of London are many and various; they are against the common law, but made good by special usage, and confirmed by act of parliament.—4 Inst. 249; 8 Rep. 126. They differ from all others in the mode of their trial; for, if the existence of the custom be brought in question, it should not be tried by a jury, but by certificate from the Lord Mayor and Aldermen by the mouth of their Recorder; unless it be such a custom as the corporation is itself interested in, as a right of taking toll, etc., for then the law permits them not to certify on their own behalf. See Pulling's Customs of London, p. 5 et seq.

An action upon the custom of London can only be brought in the Lord Mayor's Court; but the custom may be pleaded in bar in a superior court. It may be used in a superior court by way of defence, and in such cases the superior court will take notice of the custom.—Lavie v. Phillips, 3 Burr, 1784. As to the mode of certifying the customs of the city, see Plummer v. Bentham, 1 Burr, 249. When a custom has once been certified, the superior courts must take notice of it, and cannot require to have it certified again.—Blacquiere v. Hawkins, 1 Doug. 380. The customs of London as to the distribution of intestates' effects are abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 94. Admission to the freedom of the city of London by redemption is exempted from stamp duty by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 81, s. 4. The name applies legally only to the city.

Long vacation. The long vacation formerly extended from the 10th of August to the 24th of October at Common Law, and to the 28th of October in Chancery in every year. But by the Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LXI., r. 2, it is provided that in the several courts and offices of the Supreme Court the long vacation shall commence on the 10th of August and terminate on the 24th of October. See further VACATION.

Loquela, an imparlance; a declaration.

Loquela sine die, a respite to an indefinite time.

Loquendum ut vulgus, sentiendum ut docti. 7 Co. 11.—(Speak as the ordinary people, think as the learned.)

Lord [fr. hlaford, laford, lord, Sax., of hlaf, a loaf of bread, and ford, to give, because such great men kept extraordinary houses, and fed all the poor; for which reason they were called givers of bread], monarch, governor, master.—Encyc. Lond.

Lord in gross, he who is lord, not by reason of any manor, but as the king in respect of his crown, etc. Very lord, is he who is immediate lord to his tenant; and very tenant, he who holds immediately of that lord. So that, where there is lord paramount, lord mesne, and tenant, the lord paramount is not very lord to the tenant.

Lord Justice Clerk, the second judicial officer in Scotland. See SESSION, COURT OF.

Lord Lieutenant, the chief governor or viceroy of Ireland.

Lords Lieutenant of Counties, officers of great distinction, appointed by the Crown for the managing of the standing militia of the county, and all military matters therein. Lords Lieutenants are supposed to have been introduced about the reign of Henry VIII., for they are mentioned as known officers in the 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 3, though they had not been long in use; for Camden speaks of them in the time of Queen Elizabeth, as extraordinary magistrates, constituted only in times of difficulty and danger. They are generally of the principal nobility, and of the best interest in the county; they are to form the militia in case of a rebellion, etc., and march at the head of them, as the Crown shall direct. They have the power of presenting to the sovereign the names of deputy-lieutenants, who are to be selected from the best gentry in the county, and act in the absence of the Lord Lieutenant. Their jurisdiction and privileges in relation to the militia, yeomanry, and volunteers, reverted to Her Majesty by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 86, s. 6. See that Act. Subservient to the Lord Lieutenant and the deputy lieutenants are the justices of the peace, who according to the orders they receive from them, are to issue warrants to the high and petty constables, etc. Lords Lieutenant are appointed for life or quamdiu se bene gesserint.

Lord of a manor, the grantee or owner of a manor. See COPYHOLD.

Lord Mayor's Court in London. An inferior (Cox v. Mayor of London, L. R. 2 H. L. 239) Court of the Queen, held before the Lord Mayor and aldermen. Its practice and procedure are amended and its powers enlarged by 20 & 21 Vict. c. clvii. In this court the recorder, or, in his absence, the common serjeant, presides as judge (s. 46); and from its judgments error might have been brought in the Exchequer Chamber (s. 4). See now

Judicature Act, 1873, s. 45, and Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LVIII., r. 1. See further INFERIOR COURTS.

Lord Ordinary. See SESSION, COURT OF.

Lord Privy Seal, before the 30 Hen. VIII., was generally an ecclesiastic; the office has since been usually conferred on temporal peers, above the degree of barons. He is appointed by letters patent. The Lord Privy Seal, receiving a warrant from the signet office, issues the Privy Seal, which is an authority to the Lord Chancellor to pass the Great Seal, where the nature of the grant requires it. But the privy seals for money begin in the Treasury, whence the first warrant issues, countersigned by the Lord Treasurer. The Lord Privy Seal is a member of the Cabinet Council.—Encyc. Lond.

Lord and vassal. In the feudal system the grantor, who retained the dominion or ultimate property, is called the lord, and the grantee, who had only the use or possession, is called the vassal or feudatory.

Lord's Act, 32 Geo. II. c. 28, amended by 33 Geo. III. c. 5, and made perpetual by 39 Geo. III. c. 50. It was passed for the relief of insolvent debtors, but was repealed by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 119.

Lord's Day. Dies Dominica, Sunday. See SUNDAY.

Lords of Erection. On the Reformation in Scotland, the king, as proprietor of benefices, formerly held by abbots and priors, gave them out in temporal lordships to favourites, who were termed Lords of Erection.

Lords, House of. See HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lords Justices of Appeal, the title of the ordinary Judges of the Court of Appeal, by the Jud. Act, 1877, s. 4. Prior to the Jud. Acts, there were two 'Lords Justices of Appeal in Chancery,' to whom an appeal lay from a Vice-Chancellor, by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 83.

Lords marchers, those noblemen who lived on the marches of Wales or Scotland; who in times past had their laws and power of life and death, like petty kings. Abolished by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, and 6 Edw. VI. c. 10. See MARCHES.

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, appointed, with a salary of 6000*l.* a year, to aid the House of Lords in the hearing of appeals. They rank as barons for life, but sit and vote in the House of Lords during the tenure of their office only.—App. Jur. Act, 1876, s. 6.

Lords of parliament, those who have seats in the House of Lords. During bankruptcy peers are disqualified from sitting or voting in the House of Lords.—34 & 35 Vict. c. 50.

Lords of regality, persons to whom rights of civil and criminal jurisdiction were given by the Crown.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Lordsspiritual, the archbishops and bishops who have seats in the House of Lords.

Lords temporal, those lay peers who have seats in the House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lordship, dominion, manor, seignior, domain; also title of honour used to a nobleman not being a duke. It is also the customary titular appellation of the judges and some other persons in authority and office.

Lord Warden of Cinque Ports. See CINQUE PORTS.

Lost Bill of Exchange, Cheque, or Promissory Note. The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 69, replacing the repealed 9 & 10 Wm. III. c. 17, s. 3, enacts that if a bill of exchange or cheque or note be lost before it is over due, 'the person who was the holder of it may apply to the drawer to give him another bill (or cheque or note) of the same tenor, giving security to the drawer, if required, to indemnify him against all persons whatever in case the bill (or cheque or note) alleged to have been lost shall be found again'; and that 'if the drawer on request as aforesaid refuses to give such duplicate bill (or cheque or note), he may be compelled to do so.' By s. 70 of the same act, re-enacting 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 87, 'in any action or proceeding on' a bill (or cheque or note), 'the court or a judge may order that the loss of the instrument shall not be set up, provided an indemnity be given to the satisfaction of the court or judge against the claims of any other person upon the instrument in question.'

Lost Document. The ordinary rule is that a document is proved by the production of the original, but on proof that a document cannot be found after proper search made, it may be proved by a copy or by oral evidence of its contents.

Lot, a contribution or duty. See SCOT.

Lot or Loth, the thirteenth dish of lead in the mines of Derbyshire, which belonged to the Crown.

Lothervite, or Leyerwit, a liberty or privilege to take amends for lying with a bond-woman without license. See LAIR-WITE.

Lottery, a game of chance; a distribution of prizes by chance. By 10 & 11 Wm. III. c. 17, all lotteries were declared to be public nuisances, and all grants, patents, or licenses for the same to be contrary to law. But as lotteries were found a ready mode for raising money for the service of the state, they were from time to time sanctioned by acts of parliament passed expressly for this purpose (see 4 Geo. IV. c. 60), but by 6 Geo. IV. c. 60, they were abolished. In the case of art unions the legislature has legalised the distribution by lottery of works of art. See ART UNIONS FOREIGN LOTTERIES.

Lou le ley done chose, la ceo done remedie a vener a ceo. 2 Rol. R. 17.—(Where the law gives a right, it gives a remedy to recover.)

Lourecurdus, a ram, or bell-wether.—Cowel.

Love-day, the day on which any dispute was amicably settled between neighbours; or a day on which one neighbour helps another without hire.

Lowbote, a recompense for the death of a man killed in a tumult.—Cowel.

Low-water mark, that part of the sea-shore to which the waters recede when the tide is lowest.

L. S. See LOCUS SIGILLI.

Lubricum lingue non facile trahendum est in penam. Cro. Car. 117.—(A slip of the tongue ought not lightly to be subjected to punishment.)

Lucid interval. By a lucid interval is understood, in a legal sense, a temporary cessation of the insanity or a perfect restoration to reason. It differs entirely from a remission, in which there is a mere abatement of the symptoms. See this subject fully discussed by Dr. Taylor (Med. Jur., 2nd ed., vol. ii., 484). See also per Lord Thurlow in Attorney-General v. Parnter, 3 Bro. C. C. 234. The following works may also be consulted:—Ray's Med. Jur. of Insan. 224; Beck's Med. Jur. 463; and *Brown's Med. Luci causa [Lat.] (for the purpose of gain).

Lucrum, a small slip or parcel of land.

Luminare, a lamp or candle set burning on the altar of any church or chapel, for the maintenance whereof lands and rent-charges were frequently given to parish churches, etc.—Ken. Glos.

Lunatic. See IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

Lunatic asylums, houses established for insane persons. Some established by law for the public, as county or borough lunatic asylums; others by the endowments of charitable donors; other private houses kept for private profit. County and borough lunatic asylums for insane paupers or criminals of the county are regulated by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, amended by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 105; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 75; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 104; and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 110; other asylums are regulated by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, amended by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96; 18 & 19 Vict. cc. 13, 105; and 25 & 26 Vict. cc. 54, 111; and as to Ireland, see now 38 & 39 Vict. c. 67.

Lundress, a sterling silver penny, which was only coined in London.—Lownd's Essay on Coins, 17.

Lupanatrix, a bawd or strumpet.—3 Inst.

Lupinum caput gerere, to be outlawed, and have one's head exposed, like a wolf's, with a reward to him who should take it.—Cowel.

Lurgulary, casting any corrupt or poisonous thing into the water.

Luxury, excess and extravagance, which was formerly an offence against the public economy, but is not now punishable.—1 Jac. I. c. 25. See 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64, which repealed the Statute of Nottingham, 10 Ed. III., stat. 3, de cibariis utendis.

Lych-gate, the gate into a churchyard, with a roof or awning hung on posts over it to cover the body brought for burial, when it rests underneath.

Lyef-yeld, or Lef-silver, a small fine paid by a customary tenant to his lord, for leave to plough or sow.—Cowel.

Lying by. A person who, by his presence and silence at a transaction which affects his interests, may be fairly supposed to acquiesce in it if he afterwards propose to disturb the arrangement, is said to be prevented from doing so by reason that he has been lying by.

Lying in franchise, waifs, wrecks, estrays, and the like, which may be seized without suit or action.—3 Steph. Com.

Lying in grant, or in livery. See GRANT.

Lying-in hospitals, charities which cannot be established without a previous license from the quarter sessions; and illegitimate children born in them are not to be chargeable to the parish of their births.—13 Geo. III. c. 82. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101.

Lyndhurst's (Lord) Act (5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 54) renders marriages within the prohibited degrees absolutely null and void. Theretofore such marriages were voidable merely.

Lynch-law. See LIDFORD LAW.

Lyon's Inn, an inn of Chancery. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

Lyon King of Arms. The ancient duty of this officer was to carry public messages to foreign states, and it is still the practice of the heralds to make all royal proclamations at the Cross of Edinburgh. The officers serving under him are heralds, pursuivants, and messengers.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

M.

M, the brand or stigma of a person convicted of manslaughter, and admitted to the benefit of clergy. It was burned on the brawn of the left thumb. Abolished.

Maal, Mahl, Mehal, places, districts, departments; places or sources of revenue, particularly of a territorial nature; lands.—Indian.

Mace, a large staff, made of the precious metals, and highly ornamented. It is used as an emblem of authority and carried before certain public functionaries by a mace-bearer.

Mace-greff [fr. machecarius, Lat.], one who buys stolen goods, particularly food, knowing it to have been stolen.—Brit. c. xxix.

Mace-proof, secure against arrest.

Macer, a mace-bearer; an officer attending the Court of Sessions in Scotland.

Machecollare, or Machecoulare, to make a warlike device over a gate or other passage like to a grate, through which scalding water or ponderous or offensive things may be cast upon the assailants.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Machinery. As to the riotous destruction of machinery, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 11. As to the fencing of machinery in factories, see FACTORIES.

Mactator, a murderer.

Mæc-burgh, kindred, family.

Mæg-bot, compensation for homicide paid by the perpetrator to the kinsman or family of the slain.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Mære [fr. mer, Sax.], famous, great, noted; as Elmere, all famous.—Gibbs. Camd.

Magic, witchcraft and sorcery. See WITCH-CRAFT.

Magis de bono quam de malo lex intendit. Co. Litt. 78 b.—(The law favours a good rather than a bad construction.) Where the words used in an agreement are susceptible of two meanings, the one agreeable to, the other against the law, the former is adopted. Thus a bond conditioned 'to assign all offices,' will be construed to apply to such offices only as are assignable.—Chitty on Contracts, 9th ed., 78.

Magister, a master or ruler; a person who has attained to some eminent degree in science.—Cowel.

Magister ad facultates, an ecclesiastical officer who grants dispensations.

Magister navis (the master of a ship).

Magister societatis (the manager of a partnership).

Magistracy, the body of officers who administer the laws; the office of a magistrate.

Magistrate, a man publicly vested with authority, a governor, an executor of the laws. (2) A paid justice of the peace. (3) An unpaid justice of the peace. See STIPENDIARY.

MAGISTRATE.

Magnâ assisâ eligendâ, Writ de. The first species of extraordinary trial is that of the grand assize, which was instituted by Henry II. in parliament, by way of alternative offered to the choice of a tenant or defendant in a writ of right instead of the duel. The writ issued to the sheriff to return four knights, who were to elect and choose twelve others to be joined with them, and these formed the grand assize or great jury, which was to try the matter of right. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

Magna centum, the great hundred, or six score.

Magna Charta. This Great Charter is based substantially upon the Saxon Common Law, which flourished in this kingdom until the Norman invasion consolidated the system of feudality, still the great characteristic of the principles of real property. The barons assembled at St. Edmund's Bury, in Suffolk, in the latter part of the year 1214, and there solemnly swore upon the high altar to withdraw their allegiance from the Crown, and openly rebel, unless King John confirmed by a formal charter the ancient liberties of England; and they then engaged to demand this of the sovereign in the early part of the ensuing year, arming themselves in the meantime, so as to compel John, if necessary, to confirm those liberties which had been confirmed by the charters of his predecessors, and his own solemn but disregarded oath. As the first step the barons disclaimed all allegiance to him, were formally absolved from their oaths of fidelity, and chose for their general Robert Fitz Walter, with the title of Marshal of the Army of God and of the Holy Church. After the fortress of Bedford had surrendered to them, and they were in possession of the metropolis, by private agreement with the citizens, the king sent a message to them to desire that a place and time of meeting might be fixed for the purpose of his complying with their demands. Accordingly, the famous meadow called Runingmede, or Runemede (from the Saxon word runa, signifying council), situated on the south-west bank of the Thames, between Staines and Windsor, in Surrey, was selected for the interview. The conferences between the king and the armed barons opened on Monday the 15th of June, and closed on Friday the 19th of June, 1215, being in the seventeenth year of his reign. After the adjustment of preliminaries, articles or heads of agreement were drawn up and sealed; these articles were then reduced to the form of a charter, to which the Great Seal of the realm was solemnly affixed, and the instrument was given by the king's hand as a confirmation of his own act, but it was not signed by him, as commonly supposed. This celebrated event in our history took place in a small island, still called Magna Charta Island, situated in the Thames, not far beyond Aukerwyke in Buckinghamshire. Many originals of the Great Charter were made, for the purpose of depositing one in every diocese. Two of these are extant in the British Museum, and it is said that there are two others in existence, one in the cathedral at Salisbury, and the other in that at Lincoln.

Magna Charta was not firmly established as the common law of the realm and the inalienable right of the subject for nearly a century after the conferences at Runingmede, during which period the country was kept in a constant state of alarm and excitement by the struggles of the barons' war, but at length this constitutional barrier against regal encroachments was finally secured to the people by its solemn confirmation by Edward I. No fewer than thirty-two acts of parliament were obtained from 1267 to 1416, from the sovereigns of England, for the purpose of fixing the Great Charter as the broad basis of our legislation, and the material guarantee of the freedom of political opinion, and of vindicating the right of publicly discussing and scrutinizing the conduct and measures of the government of the day.

The Great Charter, as set forth in the statutes at large, is expressed to be made in the 9th year of King Henry III. (that is in 1225), and confirmed by King Edward I. in the 25th year of his reign (that is in 1297). The original is written in the Latin language, which, although not of that pure classicality that will be appreciated by the scholar, is nevertheless simple, vigorous, and unmistakable. The original Latin is printed in the statute-book in one column, and an English translation of it in another.

This memorable document commences thus:—'Edward, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Guyan, to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting. We have seen the Great Charter of the Lord Henry, formerly King of England, our father, of the liberties of England in these words:—Henry, by the Grace of God, King of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Normandy and Guyan, and Earl of Anjou, to all Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, Sheriffs, Provosts, Officers, and to all Bailiffs, and other our faithful subjects, which shall see this present charter, greeting. Know ye that we, unto the Honour of Almighty God, and for the salvation of the souls of our progenitors and successors, to the advancement of Holy Church, and amendment of our realm, of our mere and free will have given and granted to all Archbishops, Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and to all freemen of this our realm, these liberties following, to be kept in our kingdom of England for ever.' Consult Thomson's Historical Essay on Magna Charta.

Magna Charta is a collection of statutes, or capitulary, which consists of thirty-seven chapters, which are for the most part declaratory of our ancient and cherished customs, supplying, however, many of the deficiencies of the common law. The 1st chapter is a confirmation of liberties in these words:— 'First, we have granted to God, and by our present chapter have confirmed for us and our heirs for ever, that the Church of England shall be free and shall have all her whole rights and liberties inviolable. We have granted also and given to all the freemen of our realm, for us and our heirs for ever, these liberties underwritten, to have and to hold them and their heirs, of us and our heirs for ever.'

The 2nd chapter relates to the relief of the Crown's tenant of full age:—If any of our earls or barons, or any other, which holdeth of us in chief by knight's service, die, and at the time of his death his heir be of full age, and oweth to us relief, he shall have his inheritance by the old relief; that is to say, the heir or heirs of an earl, for a whole earldom, by one hundred pounds; the heir or heirs of a baron, for a whole barony, by one hundred marks; the heir or heirs of a knight, for one whole knight's fee, one hundred shillings at the most, and he that hath less shall give less, according to the old custom of the fees.

The Great Charter only aimed at modifying the grievances of feudalism, which created the military tenure of knights' service. It was reserved for the vigorous administration of Cromwell to abolish this military tenure, which he did by intermitting the Court of Wards in 1645. So perfectly hopeless was the restoration of this oppressive system at the restoration of the second Charles, that the provision annihilating these feudal tenures, contained in the statute 12 Car. II. c. 24, simply embodied this wholesome law of the Commonwealth, and rendered it perpetual.

The statute of Charles II. did away with the effect of the four next chapters of the Great Charter. It will be only necessary, therefore, to mention their subjects:— Chapter three related to the wardship of an infant heir of an earl, baron, or knight; chapter four prohibited the guardian from wasting the lands of his ward, and from destroying his tenants, a plain indication of the wretched condition of the serfs in those days; chapter five compelled such guardians to keep in repair such lands; and chapter six that such heirs should be married without disparagements, that is, should not be compelled to contract an improper or unequal marriage.

The 7th chapter concerns widows, and enacts that:—A widow, after the death of her husband, immediately, and without any difficulty, shall have her marriage, and her inheritance, and shall give nothing for her dower, her marriage, or her inheritance, which her husband and she held the day of the death of her husband, and she shall tarry in the chief house of her husband forty days after the death of her husband, within which days her dower shall be assigned her (if it were not assigned her before), or that if the house be a castle, and she depart from the castle, then a competent house shall be forthwith provided for her, in the which she may honestly dwell, until her dower be to her assigned, as it is aforesaid, and she shall have in the meantime her reasonable estovers of the common; and for her dower shall be assigned unto her a third part of all the lands of her husband which were his during coverture, except she were endowed of less at the church door. No widow shall be distrained to marry while she chooses to live single; nevertheless, she shall find surety that she shall not marry without our (the royal) license and assent (if she hold of us), nor without the assent of the lord, if she hold of another. See DOWER.

The 8th chapter relates to Crown debts:—

We or our bailiffs shall not seize any land or rent for any debt, as long as the present goods and chattels of the debtor do suffice to pay the debt, and the debtor himself be ready to satisfy therefore. Neither shall the pledges of the debtor be distrained, as long as the principal debtor is sufficient for the payment of the debt. And if the principal debtor fail in payment of the debt, having nothing wherewith to pay, or will not pay where he is able, the pledges shall answer for the debt. And if they will, they shall have the lands and rents of the debtor, until they be satisfied of the debt which they before paid for him, unless the principal debtor can show himself to be acquitted against the said sureties.

This order of enforcing Crown-debts from debtors and their sureties appears to be clear and satisfactory. It is the prerogative of the Crown to claim priority for taxes and penalties before all other creditors, and to recover them by a very prompt and efficacious process, because thesaurus regis est pacis vinculum et bellorum nervi (the public revenue is at once the security of peace and the sinews of war).

The 9th chapter perpetuates our right of self-government, the source and bulwark of our constitutional freedom. It enacts that:—The City of London shall have all their old liberties and customs. Moreover, we will and grant that all other cities, boroughs, towns, and the barons of the five ports, and all other ports, shall have all their liberties and free customs.

The 10th chapter prohibited excessive distress for more service for a knight's fee than was due, all which has been abolished.

The 11th chapter enacts that:—The Common Pleas shall not follow our court, but shall be holden in some place certain. See COMMON PLEAS; ROYAL COURTS.

The 12th chapter relates to assizes, and provides that:—Assizes or recognitions of novel disseisin and mortancestor, shall not be taken but in the shires, and after this manner; we, or if we be out of this realm, our chief justicers shall send our justicers through every county once in the year, which, with the knights of the shire, shall take the said assizes in those counties; and those things that at the coming of our aforesaid justicers, being sent to take those assizes in the counties, cannot be determined, shall be ended by them in some other place in their circuit; and those things which for difficulty of some articles cannot be determined by them, shall be referred to our justicers of the bench, and there shall be ended.

Assizes or actions of novel disseisin and mortancestor have long been abolished, and more simple remedies established. A novel disseisin was so called to distinguish it from an ancient disseisin, and it arose in this way:—The judges in the olden time, when travelling was perilous and slow, went their circuits but once in seven years; all disseisins then or dispossessionings of the lawful owners of lands which took place before the last circuits were ancient, but all disseisins since were novel. Mortancestor was an action brought against a person who had taken possession of property after the death of an ancestor, and before his heir-at-law had entered into their occupancy. This chapter of the Great Charter is interesting as showing that our circuits and the practice of reserving points of law arising on circuit, for the consideration of the court, are a very old institution of our judicial system.

The 13th chapter relates to assizes of darrein presentment, a now abolished method of trying the right to present a priest to an ecclesiastical benefice.

The 14th chapter is directed against excessive fines, and provides that a freeman shall not be amerced, i.e., fined, for a small fault, but after the manner of the fault; and for a great fault after the greatness thereof, saving to him his contentment; and a merchant likewise, saving to him his merchandize; and any other's villein than ours shall be likewise amerced, saving his wainage, if he fall into our mercy. And none of the said amerciements shall be assessed but by the oath of honest and lawful men of the vicinage. Earls and barons shall not be amerced but by their peers, and after the manner of their offence. No man of the church shall be amerced after the quantity of his spiritual benefice, but after his laytenement, and after the quantity of his offence.

A man's contentment is that which is absolutely necessary for his support and maintenance, as his tools and instruments of trade, and wainage is that that is necessary for the labourer and the farmer, for the cultivation of his land, as carts, and implements of husbandry.

The 15th and 16th chapters relate to the making of bridges and defending of riverbanks, a subject which now forms part of local law.

The 17th chapter enacts that:—No sheriff, constable, escheator, coroner, nor any other our bailiffs, shall hold pleas of our Crown.

Pleas of the Crown comprehend the criminal department of the law. It was ever the anxious care of our ancestors that a person accused of crime should be tried by a superior judge and a jury, and not by an inferior magistrate. It has, however, from time to time been necessary and expedient to give to justices and local magistrates jurisdiction to a limited extent in dealing with crimes and quasi criminal matters. This jurisdiction is of two kinds:—(1) Relating to indictable offences; and (2) relating to offences punishable summarily. As to the latter jurisdiction, the proceedings and powers of justices are regulated (except where otherwise provided by the particular statute) by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. See JUSTICES.

The 18th chapter enacts that:—If any that holdeth of us lay-fee do die, and our sheriff or bailiff do show our letters-patent of our summons for debt, which the dead man did owe to us, it shall be lawful to our sheriff or bailiff to attach and inroll all the goods and chattels of the dead, being found in the said lay-fee, to the value of the same debt, by the sight of lawful men, so that nothing thereof shall be taken away, until we be clearly paid off the debt, and the residue shall remain to the executors to perform the testament of the dead, and if nothing be owing unto us, all the chattels shall go to the use of the dead (saving to his wife and children their reasonable parts).

Debts owing to the Crown take precedence of all other debts, and this appears to be perfectly fair, for it is only by the certain payment of taxes that the government of a country can be carried on. The old law which prohibited a man from willing away all his property from his wife and children has long since been abrogated, and a man can now by a valid will deprive his widow and children of any participation in the property which he may leave.

The subjects of the 19th, 20th, and 21st chapters, relating to purveyance for a castle, doing of castle ward, and taking of horses, carts, and woods for the service of the royal castles, have been rendered obsolete by the abolition of feudalism.

The 22nd chapter declares thus:—We will not hold the lands of them that be convict of felony but one year and one day, and then those lands shall be delivered to the lords of the fee.

The addition of the day to the year appears to have been intended to prevent any dispute about whether the year is to be calculated as inclusive or exclusive of its last day. By the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, escheat and forfeiture for treason or felony has now been entirely abolished.

The 23rd chapter enacts that:—All weirs from henceforth shall be utterly pulled down in the Thames and Medway, and through all England, but only by the sea-coasts. It is obvious that weirs in navigable rivers would be obstructive of free communication. See WEARS.

The 24th chapter relates to the writ called precipe in capite, which has been abolished.

The 25th chapter directs that:—One measure of wine shall be through our realm, and one measure of ale, and one measure of corn, that is to say, the quarter of London; and one breadth of dyed cloth, russets, and haberjects, that is to say, two yards within the lists, and it shall be of weights as it is of measures. See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The 26th, 27th, and 28th chapters, relating to the writ of inquisition of life and member, and the old feudal tenures and wager of law, have been utterly superseded by their abolition.

The next chapter (29) is so often quoted that it is better to give it in the original, which is as follows:—

Nullus liber homo capiatur vel imprisonetur aut disseisiatur de libero tenemento suo vel libertatibus vel liberis consuetudinibus suis aut utlagetur aut exuletur aut quicquid modo destruatur nec super eum ibimus nec super eum mittemus nisi per legale iudicium parium suorum aut legem terre. Nulli vendemus nulli negabimus aut differemus rectum vel iusticiam.

No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, or be disseised of his freehold, or liberties, or free customs, or be outlawed or exiled, or any otherwise destroyed; nor will we pass upon him, nor condemn him, but by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. To no man will we sell, to no man deny, to no man delay, justice or right.

It is required by our law that the twelve jurors be unanimous in their verdict, the reason for which would appear on criminal trials to be out of comparison to the prisoner, by giving him the benefit of every doubt, in accordance with the benignant quality of mercy. The unanimity required in trials of a civil nature is said to have arisen from the now abolished punishment, to which every juror was liable, for returning an improper verdict, and as each juror might have been subjected to a conviction, it was no doubt reasonable that every one should have a power of dissenting, and not be concluded by the opinion of the others.

The 30th chapter evinces a liberal treatment of foreigners:—All merchants (if they were not openly prohibited before) shall have their safe and sure conduct to depart out of England, to come into England, to tarry in and go through England, as well by land as by water, to buy and sell, without any manner of evil tolls, i.e., extortions, by the old and rightful customs, except in time of war. And if they be of a land making war against us, and such be found in our realm at the beginning of the war, they shall be attached without harm of body or goods, until it be known unto us, or our chief justice, how our merchants be intreated there in the land making war against us; and if our merchants be well intreated there, theirs shall be likewise with us. See ALIENS.

The 31st, 32nd, and 33rd chapters, relating to the royal escheat, the lord's services, and the patronage of abbeys, have been entirely superseded.

The 34th chapter would appear to be harsh and uncivil; it is this:—No man shall be taken or imprisoned upon the appeal of a woman for the death of any other than of her husband.

Now the occasion of this restriction was that when a woman brought an appeal of death, her opponent lost his right of defending himself against her by combat, and therefore, it was limited to widows. The present constitutional mode of prosecuting for the crime of adultery or murder is by indictment.

The 35th chapter, relating to county-courts, sheriffs' turns, and leets, has long since fallen into desuetude by reason of new laws upon these subjects.

The 36th chapter enacts that:—It shall not be lawful from henceforth to any to give his land to any religious house, and to take the same land again to hold of the same house. Nor shall it be lawful to any house of religion to take the lands of any, and to lease the same to him of whom it received them. If any from henceforth give his lands to any religious house, and thereupon be convict, the gift shall be utterly void, and the land shall accrue to the lord of the fee.

It is curious to trace the ingenious devices to which the ecclesiastics had recourse for the purpose of acquiring land and accumulating wealth; to defeat these mischievous contrivances many acts of parliament beginning with this chapter of Magna Charta, and including the 9 Geo. II. c. 36, have been passed. This last statute imposes many restrictions upon the gifts of land to charities. See further CHARITABLE USES.

The concluding chapter of Magna Charta sets forth that its establishment was bought from the Crown, like most of our great liberties, with a fifteenth of our moveable property, in consideration of which the king grants 'for us and our heirs, that neither we nor our heirs shall attempt to do anything whereby the liberties contained in this charter may be infringed or broken. And if anything should be done to the contrary, it shall be held of no force or effect.' Consult 2 Hallam's Middle Ages, p. 326.

Magna Charta et Charta de Foresta sunt appellés les deux grandes charters. 2 Inst. 570. —(Magna Charta, and the Charter of the Forest, are called the two great charters.)

Magna precaria, a great or general reapp-day.—Covel.

Magnus portus, the town and port of Portsmouth.

Maha-gen, a banker or any great shop-keeper among the Hindoos.

Mahal [Indian, literally, a place], any land or public fund producing a revenue to the government of Hindostan. Mahalaat is the plural.

Maiden, an instrument formerly used in Scotland for beheading criminals. It consisted of a broad piece of iron about a foot square, very sharp in the lower part, and loaded above with lead. At the time of execution it was pulled up to the top of a frame about eight feet high, with a groove on each side for it to slide in. The prisoner's neck being fastened to a bar underneath, and the sign given, the maiden was let loose, and the head severed from the body. The prototype of the guillotine.

Maiden Rents, a noble paid by the tenants of some manors on their marriage. This was said to be given to the lord for his omitting the custom of mercheta, whereby he was to have the first night's lodging with his tenant's wife; but it seems more probably to have been a fine for license to marry a daughter.

Maignagium [fr. maignen, Fr.], a brasier's shop, or perhaps a house.—Covel.

Maihem. See MAYHEM.

Maihematus, maimed or wounded.

Maihemium est inter crimina majora minimum, et inter minora maximum.—Co. Litt. 127.—(Mayhem is the least of great crimes, and the greatest of small.)

Maihemium est membri mutilatio; it dici poterit, ubi aliquis in aliquâ parte sui corporis effectus sit inutilis ad pugnandum.—Co. Litt. 126.—(Mayhem is the mutilation of a member, and can be said to take place when a man is injured in any part of his body so as to be useless in fight.)

Maihemium est homicidium inchoatum. 3 Inst. 118.—(Mayhem is incipient homicide.)

Mail [fr. malle, Fr., a trunk], a bag of letters carried by the post, or the vehicle which carries the letters. Also, armour.

Maile, a kind of ancient money, or silver halfpence; a small rent.—9 Hen. V.

Mails and Duties, the rents of an estate, whether in money or victuals.—Scotch Law.

Maiming, depriving of any necessary part. See MAYHEM.

Mainad, a false oath, perjury.—Covel.

Maine-port, a small tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in some places the parishioners paid to the rector in lieu of small tithes.—Covel.

Mainour, Manour, or Meinour, a thing taken away which is found in the hand (in manu) of the thief who took it.—Covel.

Mainovre, or Mainevvre, a trespass committed by hand. See 7 Rich. II. c. 4.

Mainpernable, that which may be held to bail. See Stat. West. I., 3 Ed. I. c. 15.

Mainpernor [fr. main, Fr., hand, and preneur, taker], surety, a kind of bail. See BAIL.

Mainprize [fr. main, Fr., and pris, taken], delivery into the custody of a friend upon security for appearance. The writ of mainprize is obsolete.—Old. Nat. Br. 42.

Main-rent, vassalage.

Mainsworn, forsworn.

Maintainers, persons who second or support a cause in which they are not interested, by assisting either party with money, or in any other manner. See next title.

Maintenance, an officious intermeddling in a suit which in no wise concerns one, by assisting either party with money or otherwise, to prosecute or defend it. By the Roman law, it was a species of crimen falsi to enter into any confederacy, or do any act to support another's law-suits, by money, witnesses, or patronage.

It is either ruralis, in the country, as where one assists another in his pretensions to lands, by taking or holding the possession of them for him; or where one stirs up quarrels or suits in the country; or it is curialis, in a court of justice, where one officiously intermeddles in a suit depending in any court, which does not belong to him, and with which he has nothing to do.—2 Rol. Abr. 115. Maintaining suits in the spiritual courts is not within the statutes relating to maintenance.—Cro. Eliz. 549. A man may, however, maintain a suit in which he has any interest, actual or contingent; and also a suit of his near kinsman, servant, or poor neighbour, out of charity and compassion, with impunity.—Bac. Abr., tit. 'Maintenance.'

Any legitimate common interest will justify persons jointly subscribing to pay the expenses of a suit, even when it is carried on by a third party.

This offence is punished by common law, and also by 1 Rich. II. c. 4, by fine and imprisonment; and by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9, by a forfeiture of 10*l*. See CHAMPERTY.

Maisnada, a family.—Mon. Angl., tom. 2, p. 19.

Maison de Dieu, a monastery, hospital, or almshouse.

Maisura, a house, mansion, or farm.—Cowel.

Majesty, a title of sovereigns. It was first used among ourselves in the reign of Henry VIII.

Majestas is defined by Ulpian (Dig. 48, tit. 4, s. 1) to be 'crimen illud quod adversus populum Romanum vel adversus securitatem ejus committitur.' He then gives various instances of the crime of majestas, some of which pretty nearly correspond to treason in English law; but all the offences included under majestas comprehend more than our term treason. One of the offences included in majestas was the affecting, aiding in, or planning the death of a magistratus populi Romani, or of one who had imperium or potestas. Though the phrase, 'crimen majestatis,' was used, the complete expression being crimen læsæ majestatis.

Major [fr. maier, Old Eng., power], an officer in the army; also, a person of full age, as distinguished from a minor. See FULL AGE, MAJORITY.

Major hæreditas venit unicuique nostrum à jure et legibus quam à parentibus. 2 Inst. 56.

—(A greater inheritance comes to every one of us from right and the laws than from parents.)

Majora regalia, the greater rights of the Crown, such as regard the royal character and authority.—1 Bl. Com. 241; 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 475.

Majority, full age; a minor comes of age in the eye of the law on the day preceding the anniversary of his birth; the greater number; the office and rank of major.

Majua, a petty dealer in Hindostan.

Majun, a banker or considerable trader in Hindostan.

Majus dignum trahit ad se minus dignum. Co. Litt. 43.—(The more worthy draws to itself the less worthy.)

Majus jus, a writ or law proceeding in some customary manors, in order to try a right to land.—Cowel.

Maker, the person who signs a promissory note; by making it he 'engages that he will pay it according to its tenor, and is precluded from denying to a holder in due course the existence of the payee and his then capacity to endorse.'—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 88.

Making law, clearing one's self of an action, etc., by an oath and the oath of neighbours. See Old Nat. Br. 161; Kitchin, 192.

Mal, a prefix, meaning bad, wrong, fraudulent; as mal-administration, mal-practice, mal-versation, etc.

Mala, a mail, or port-mail; a bag to carry letters, etc.

Malâ fide, in bad faith.

Mala fides, bad faith; the opposite to bond fides, good faith.

Mala grammatica non vitiat chartam. Sed in expositione instrumentorum mala grammatica quoad fieri possit evitanda est. 6 Co. 39.—(Bad grammar does not vitiate a deed. But in the exposition of instruments, bad grammar, as far as it can be done, is to be avoided.)

Mala in se, acts which are wrong in themselves, whether prohibited by human laws or not, as distinguished from mala prohibita. Of this class are murder, robbery, perjury, etc.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 38; 1 Broom & Hadley's Com. 52.

Malandrino, a thief or pirate.—Wals. 338.

Mala praxis. If the health of an individual be injured by the unskilful or negligent conduct of a surgeon, or apothecary, or general practitioner, in assuming to heal a dislocated or fractured limb, or internal disorder, an action for compensation may be sustained (8 East, 348); or the wrong doer may be proceeded against by censure in the college; or, for gross negligence or misconduct he might be indicted.—Com. Dig. 'Physician.' And if a medical practitioner, through ignorance or want of skill, should, in attempting to deliver a child, unnecessarily wound the same, and if it be afterwards born alive, and then die of such wound, he will be guilty at least of manslaughter.—The King v. Long, 4 C. & P. 398; Rex v. Senior, 1 Mood. Cr. C. 346; 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 376.

Mala prohibita, wrongs which are prohibited by human laws, but are not necessarily mala in se, or wrongs in themselves, as is playing at unlawful games; breaches of positive law.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 11.

Malary, judicial, belonging to a judge or magistrate.—Roberts' Indian Glos.

Malberge [mons placiti, Lat.], a hill where the people assembled at a court, like our assizes; which by the Scotch and Irish were called parley hills.—Du Cange.

Malconna, a treasury or storehouse in Hindostan.—Rob. Ind. Glos.

Malecreditus, one of bad credit, who is not to be trusted.—Fleta, l. 1, c. xxxviii.

Maledicta expositio quæ corrumpit textum. 4 Co. 35.—(It is a bad exposition which corrupts the text.)

Malediction, a curse, which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches or religious houses, against those who should violate their rights.—Cowel.

Malefaction, a crime, an offence.

Maleficia non debent remanere impunita; et impunitas continuum affectum tribuit delinquenti. 4 Co. 45.—(Evil deeds ought not to remain unpunished; and impunity affords continual incitement to the delinquent.)

Maleficia propositis distinguuntur. Jenk. Cent. 290.—(Evil deeds are distinguished from evil purposes.)

Maleficium, waste; damage; injury.—Civ. Law.

Maleson, or Malison [fr. malum, Lat., evil; and sonus, a sound], a curse.—Bailey.

Malesworn, or Malsworn, forsworn.—Cowel.

Maletent, Maletoute, a toll for every sack of wool.—25 Ed. I. c. 7.

Malfeasance, the commission of some evil or unlawful act.

Malice [fr. malitia, Lat.], a formed design of doing mischief to another, technically called malitia præcogitata, or malice prepense or aforethought. It is either express, as when one with a sedate and deliberate mind and formed design, kills another, which formed design is evidenced by certain circumstances discovering such intention, as lying in wait, antecedent menaces, former grudges, and concerted schemes to do him some bodily harm; or implied, as where one wilfully poisons another; in such a deliberate act the law presumes malice, though no particular enmity can be proved. The nature of implied malice is illustrated by the maxim 'Culpa lata dolo æquiparatur'—when negligence reaches a certain point it is the same as intentional wrong—'Every one must be taken to intend that which is the natural consequence of his actions'—if any one acts in exactly the same way as he would do if he bore express malice to another he cannot be allowed to say he does not.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 70 et seq.

Malicious burning. The statute law of England and Ireland relating to the offences of maliciously setting fire to property or maliciously attempting so to do, is consolidated and amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. As to buildings, ss. 1—8; corn, trees, vegetable productions, ss. 16—18; mines, ss. 26, 27; ships, ss. 43, 44. By 12 Geo. III. c. 24, s. 1, which is unrepealed, the offence of maliciously setting fire to ships of war is a capital felony. See ARSON.

Malicious Injuries to the Person. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100.

Malicious injuries to private property. The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, consolidated and amended the laws relating to this subject. The offence is made felony, punishable by penal servitude or imprisonment in many cases. As to the malicious destruction of works of art, science, etc., in public institutions, see s. 39.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 138.

Malicious prosecution, a prosecution preferred maliciously without reasonable or probable cause; the remedy is an action on the case, in which damages may be recovered. The allegation of want of probable cause must be substantively and expressly proved, and cannot be implied (1 T. R. 544, 545). From the want of probable cause malice may be implied. See Addison on Torts.

Malignare, to malign or slander; also to main.

Malik, a proprietor.—Indian.

Malins (Sir Richard) Acts. The Infants Marriage Settlement Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43, and the Married Women's Reversionary Property Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57.

Malitia præcogitata, malice aforethought. See MALICE.

Malitia supplet ætatem. Dyer, 104 b.—(Malice supplies [the want of] age.)

Mallum and Mallus. See METHEL.

Malo grato, in spite; unwillingly.

Malt mulna, a quern or malt-mill.—Mat. Par.

Malt-shot or Malt-scut, a certain payment for making malt.—Somner.

Malt tax. This, too, as to which see 22 & 23 Vict. c. 18, ss. 7, 8; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 66; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 85; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 9 (malt mixed with linseed, duty free to feed cattle); and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 85, was abolished by the Inland Revenue Act, 1880, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 20, which substitutes a duty on beer.

Malum in se. See MALA IN SE.

Malum non habet efficientem, sed deficientem causam. 3 Inst. (Proem.)—(Evil has not an efficient, but a deficient cause.)

Malum non presumitur. 4 Co. 72.—(Evil is not presumed.)

Malum prohibitum. See MALA PROHIBITA.

Malum quo communius eo pejus. (The more common an evil is the worse.)

Malus usus est abolendus. Litt. s. 212.—(An evil or invalid custom [or an abuse] ought to be abolished.) Broom's Max., 5th ed., 921.

Malveilles [fr. malveillance, Fr.], ill-will; crimes and misdemeanours; malicious practices.—Cowel.

Malveisa, a warlike engine to batter and beat down walls.—Mat. Par.

Malveisin [fr. mauvais voisin, Fr.], an ill neighbour, a warlike engine so called.—Mat. Par.

Malveis procurors, such as used to pack juries, by the nomination of either party in a cause, or other practice.—Art. super Chart. c. x.; Cowel.

Malversation, misbehaviour in an office, employment, or commission, as breach of trust, extortion, etc.

Man, Isle of, an island in the Irish Sea off the coast of Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire. The island is divided into two districts, which are subdivided into six sheadings including seventeen parishes. Each sheading has its own coroner, to whom the jury-list for the sheading is committed, and who is bound to summon the juries from that list when required.—4 Inst. 283.

This was formerly a distinct territory, but by 5 Geo. III. cc. 26, 39, the whole island and all its dependencies, except the landed property of the Athol family, and some other rights belonging to them, are inalienably vested in the Crown, and subjected to the regulations of the British excise and customs.

Mana, an old woman.—Jacob.

Manacle [fr. Manus, Lat.], chain for the hands; shackle.

Manager, a superintendent, a conductor or director. As to frauds by managers of companies, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 81—84.

Managium, a mansion-house or dwelling-place.—Cowel.

Manbote, a compensation or recompense for homicide, particularly due to the lord for killing his man or vassal, the amount of which was regulated by that of the wer.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Manca, Mancus, or Mancusa, a square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at 30 pence.—Cowel.

Manceps [Lat.], a farmer of the public revenues; one who sold an estate with a promise of keeping the purchaser harmless; one who bought an estate by outcry; one who undertook a piece of work and gave security for the performance.

Manche-present, a bribe; a present from the donor's own hand.

Manchester. Its bishopric was established by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 108. The 'Manchester Parish Division Act, 1850,' is 13 & 14 Vict. c. 41. The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 69, enables the Ecclesiastical Commissioners for England to apply certain funds towards the repairs of the cathedral or collegiate church of Manchester; and see 31 and 32 Vict. c. 114, s. 15. See also the Bonding Acts, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 31, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 84; the Local Government Act, 22 Vict. c. 31; and the Stipendiary Magistrates Acts, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 30, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 20.

Mancipate, to enslave; to bind; to tie.

Mancipatio. Every father, in the Roman law, had such an authority over his son, that before the son could be released from his subjection and made free, he must be twice sold and bought, his natural father being in the first instance the vendor. The vendee was called pater fiduciarius. After this fictitious bargain, the pater fiduciarius sold him again to his natural father, who could then, but not till then, manumit or make him free. The imaginary sale was called mancipatio; and the act of giving him liberty, or setting him free, was called emancipatio.

Also, the selling or alienating of certain lands by the balance or money paid by weight, and in the presence of five witnesses. This mode of alienation took place only among Roman citizens, and that only in respect to certain estates situated in Italy, which were called mancipia.—Encyc. Lond. Abolished by Justinian, when he obliterated the distinction between things mancipi and things nec mancipi. See Sand. Just., 5th ed., xlv.

Manciple [fr. manceps, Lat.], a clerk of the kitchen, or caterer, especially in colleges.—Cowel.

Mandamus (we command), a high prerogative writ of a most extensive remedial nature. In form it is a command issuing in the Queen's name from the Court of Queen's Bench only (except a mandamus to examine witnesses in India, etc., under 1 Wm. IV. c. 22, s. 1, and a mandamus under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, which might be awarded by any of the three superior courts of common law), and addressed to any person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature within the kingdom, requiring them to do something therein specified, which appertains to their office, and which the court holds to be consonant to right and justice. It is used principally for public purposes, and to enforce performance of public rights or duties. It enforces, however, some private rights when they are withheld by public officers.

It is a general rule that this writ is only to be issued where a party has no other specific remedy; and he must apply to the court without delay. The jurisdiction is altogether in the discretion of the court.

By mandamus, arbitrations and awards, when made under public acts, may be enforced; overseers and public officers may be compelled to deliver up parish books, etc., to their successors; burial may be enforced, and also the statement of a special case by justices. It will compel justices to perform their duties. But by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 5, the court may, in lieu of a mandamus, grant a rule ordering justices to do an act. It also lies to compel lords of manors to admit copyholders, and corporations to fill up vacant offices, and to proceed to the election of mayor; to restore persons wrongfully ousted from an office or right, or to admit a person wrongfully refused. So it formerly lay to the Ecclesiastical Courts to compel probate to the executor named in a will, or letters of administration to the next of kin.

The remedy by mandamus was extended by the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, by which (ss. 68—77) the plaintiff, in the superior courts, except in replevin and ejectment, might indorse upon the writ a notice that he intends to claim a writ of mandamus, and may claim one in the declaration, with or without any other demand, for the defendant to fulfil a duty in which the plaintiff is interested. The provisions of the C. L. P. Acts, 1852 and 1854, applied to the proceedings and pleadings upon a prerogative writ of mandamus issued by the Court of Queen's Bench.

By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 43, it was provided that no mandamus should in future issue to a judge or officer of a county court for refusing to do any act relating to the duties of his office; but that application must be made to a superior court or a judge for a rule or summons to show cause why such act should not be done.

The issuing of this writ being part of the original jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench, and a matter within its exclusive cognizance, is assigned to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34). And, as it is a matter on the crown side of the court when moved for as a prerogative writ, the former mode of procedure must be followed (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LXII.). When it is sought as a remedy in an action, the same procedure must be followed as in other actions in the High Court.

An interlocutory mandamus may be granted by order of the Court in all cases in which it shall appear to the court to be just or convenient that such order should be made (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (8)).

Mandant, the principal in the contract of mandate.

Mandata licita strictam recipiunt interpretationem; sed illicita latam et extensam. Bac. Max. Reg. 16.—(Lawful authority is to receive a strict interpretation; unlawful authority a wide and extended interpretation.) See per Byles, J., in Parkes v. Prescott, 38 L. J. Ex. 111; and L. R., 4 Ex., 182.

Mandatarius terminos sibi positos transgredi non potest. Jenk. Cent. 53.—(A mandatary cannot exceed the bounds placed upon himself.)

Mandatary [fr. mandatarius, Lat.], he to whom a mandate, charge, or commandment is given; also, he that obtains a benefice by mandamus.

Mandate [fr. mandatum, Lat.], a judicial command, charge, commission.

Also, a bailment of goods, without reward, to be carried from place to place, or to have some act performed about them. The person employed is called in the civil law mandant or mandator, and the person employed mandatarius or mandatary. The distinction between a mandate and a deposit is, that in the latter the principal object of the parties is the custody of the thing; and the service and labour are merely accessorial. In the former the labour and service are the principal objects of the parties, and the thing is merely accessorial. Three things are necessary to create a mandate: (1) that there should exist something which should be the subject of the contract, or some act or business to be done; (2) that it should be done gratuitously; (3) that the parties should voluntarily intend to enter into the contract. A mandatary incurs three obligations: (1) to do the act which is the object of the mandate, and with which he is charged; (2) to bring to it all the care and diligence that it requires; (3) to render an account of his doings to the mandator. A mandator contracts to reimburse a mandatary for all expenses and charges reasonably incurred in the execution of the mandate, and also to indemnify him for his liability on all contracts which arise incidentally in the proper discharge of his duty. The contract of mandate may be dissolved either by the renunciation of the mandatary at any time before he has entered upon its execution, or by his death; for, being founded in personal confidence, it is not presumed to pass to his representatives, unless there is some special stipulation to that effect. But if the mandate be partly executed, there may in some cases arise a personal obligation on the part of the representatives to compel it, Story's Bailments, c. iii. In the canon law, a rescript of the Pope, by which he commands some ordinary collator or precentor to put the person there nominated in possession of the first benefice vacant in his collation. As to their abuses, see 2 Hall. Mid. Ages, 212.

Royal mandates to judges for interfering in private causes, constituted a branch of the royal prerogative, which was given up by Edward I. And the 1 W. & M. st. 2, c. 2, declared that the pretended power of suspending or dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, without consent of parliament, is illegal.

Mandati Dies, Maundy Thursday.

Mandato, panes de, loaves of bread given to the poor upon Maundy Thursday.

Mandator, director. See MANDATE.

Mandatory, perceptive; directory.

Mandatum, a fee or retainer given by the Romans to the procuratores and advocati. Mandatum is also used in the sense of a command from a superior to an inferior. See also MANDATE.

Mandavi ballivo (I have commanded the bailiff). If a bailiff of a liberty have the execution and return of a writ, the sheriff may return that he commanded the bailiff to execute it; and if the bailiff have not made a return, the sheriff should return that fact accordingly (mandavi ballivo, qui nullum dedit responsum); or if he have made a return, the sheriff should return it.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Manentes [fr. maneo, Lat., to continue], tenants. Obsolete.—Cowel.

Manerium dicitur à manendo, secundum excellentiam, sedes magna, fixa, et stabilis. Co. Litt. 58.—(A manor is so called from 'manendo,' according to its excellence, a seat, great, fixed, and firm.)

Mangonare, to buy in a market.—Leg. Etheld. c. 24.

Mangonellus, a warlike instrument for casting stones against the walls of a castle.—Cowel.

Mania, mental alienation, which see.

Mania a potu, otherwise denominated delirium tremens, a disease induced from the imtemperate use of spirituous liquors, or certain other diffusible stimulants.

Manifesta probatione non indigent. 7 Co. 40.—(Things manifest do not require proof.)

Manifesto, or Manifest, a public declaration made by a prince, in writing, showing his intentions to begin a war or other enterprise, with the motives that induce him to it, the reasons on which he founds his rights and pretensions.—Encyc. Lond.

In commercial navigation, a document signed by the master, containing the names of the places where the goods have been laden, and the places for which they are destined, the name and tonnage of the vessel, the name of the master, and the place to which the vessel belongs, a particular description of the packages on board, marks, numbers, etc., the goods contained in them, and the names of the shippers and consignees, as far as known. The manifest must be made out, dated, and signed by the captain, at places where the goods, or any part, are taken on board.

Manipulus, according to Blount, was 'a handkerchief, which the priest always had in his left hand.'

Manner, or Mainour [fr. the Fr. manier]. To be taken with the manner is where a thief is taken with the stolen goods about him—as it were in his hands; that is in flagrante delicto.

Manning, a day's work of a man.—Cowel.

Mannire, to cite any person to appear in court and stand in judgment there; it is different from bannire; for though both of them are citations, this is by the adverse party, and that is by the judge.—Du Cange.

Manopus, goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief.—Cowel. See MANU OPERA.

Mannus, a horse.—Cowel.

Manœuvres, Military. See MILITARY MANŒUVRES.

Manor [fr. manerium, Lat.; manoir, Fr., habitation, or manendo, of abiding there, because the lord usually resided there], an estate in fee simple in a tract of land granted by the sovereign to a subject (usually of power and consequence) in consideration of certain services to be performed. The tenementales were granted out; the dominicales (whence the term demesne) were reserved to the lord; the barren lands which remained formed the 'wastes'; the whole fee was termed a lordship or barony; and the court appendant to the manor the Court Baron. Every manor (with some doubtful and unimportant exceptions) is of a date prior to the statute of Quia Emptores (18 Ed. I. c. 1). See Co. Litt. 58 a; 1 Steph. Com.; and COPYHOLD.

Man-queller [fr. man and cwellan, Sax.], a murderer.

Manrent, a kind of bond between lord and vassal, by which protection was stipulated on the one hand, and fidelity with personal service on the other.—Rob. Scott. b. 1.

Manso, or Mansum, a mansion or house.—Spelm.

Manse, a house or habitation, either with or without land. See next title.

Manse, or Mansum presbyteri, the dwelling-house of the clergyman.—Paroch. Antiq. 431. Sometimes called presbyterium.

Manser, a bastard.—Cowel.

Mansion [mansio, Lat., à manendo], the lord's house in a manor. See next title.

Mansion-house, a dwelling-house.—3 Inst. 64. See LIMITED OWNERS' RESIDENCES ACT. By s. 15 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, which gives (see SETTLED LAND) a tenant for life a power otherwise absolute to sell settled land, the 'principal mansion house' may not be either sold or leased by such tenant for life without the consent of the trustees of the settlement, or the order of the Chancery Division of the High Court.

Manslaughter, the unlawful killing of another without malice express or implied. It is either—

(a) Voluntary, upon a sudden heat; or

(β) Involuntary, upon the commission of some other unlawful act.

Both are felony, and punished at the discretion of the Court, by penal servitude for life, or not less than three years, or by imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years, or by a fine.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 5.

Mansum capitale, the manor house or lord's court.—Paroch. Antiq. 150.

Mansura, the habitation of people in the country.—Domesday.

Mansus, a farm.—Selden's Hist. of Tithes, 62.

Mantea, a long robe or mantle.—Old Records.

Mantheoff [fr. mannus, Lat., a horse; and theft, Sax., a thief], a horse-stealer.—Leg. Alf.

Manticulate, to pick pockets.—Bailey.

Man-trap, engines to catch trespassers, unlawful, unless set in a dwelling-house for defence between sunset and sunrise.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 31.

Manualia beneficia, the daily distributions of meat and drink to the canons and other members of cathedral churches for their present subsistence.—Cowel.

Manualis obedientia, sworn obedience or submission upon oath.—Cowel.

Manucaptio, a writ that lay for a man taken on suspicion of felony, etc., who cannot be admitted to bail by the sheriff or others having power to let to mainprise.—F. N. B. 249.

Manucaptor, one who stands bail for another.

Manufacture, anything made by art. As to a patent for a manufacture, see LETTERS-

PATENT. As to the operation of the Factory Acts, see that title and consult Notcutt on the Factory & Workshop Acts. As to the manufacturing of gunpowder and other explosives, see 38 Vict. c. 17.

Manu forti (with strong hand).

Manumission, the act of giving freedom to slaves. Among the Romans it was performed in three several ways: 1st, when with his master's consent a slave had his name entered in the census or public register of the citizens; 2nd, when the slave was led before the prætor, and that magistrate laid his wand (vindicta) on his head; 3rd, when the master, by his will, gave his slave freedom. Among us, in the time of the Conqueror, villeins were manumitted by their master delivering them by the right hand to the viscount or sheriff in full court, showing them the door, giving them a lance and a sword, and proclaiming them free. Others were manumitted by charter. There was also an implied manumission, as when the lord made an obligation for payment of money to the bondman at a certain day, or sued him where he might enter without suit, and the like.—Encyc. Lond.

Manumittere idem est quod extra manum vel potestatem ponere. Co. Litt. 137.—(To manumit is the same as to place beyond hand and power.)

Manung, or Monung, the district within the jurisdiction of a reeve, apparently so called from his power to exercise therein one of his chief functions, viz., to exact (amanian) all fines.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Manu opera, cattle or implements of husbandry; also, stolen goods taken from a thief caught in the fact.—Cowel.

Manupastus, a domestic; perhaps the same as hlafæta.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Manupes, a foot of full and legal measure.

Manurable, admitting of tillage.

Manus, an oath, from the ceremony of laying the hand on the book; also the person taking an oath, or compurgator.

Manas mediæ, or infimæ homines, men of a mean condition, or of the lowest degree.

Manutenentia, the old writ of maintenance.—Reg. Orig. 182.

Manwyrth, the value or price at which a man is estimated, according to his degree; apparently synonymous with wer-geld. It occurs only in the laws of Hlothhære and Eadric.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Mara, a mere, lake, or great pond, that cannot be drawn dry.—Par. Antiq. 418; Mon. Angl., tom. 1, p. 666.

Marcatus, the rent of a mark by the year anciently reserved in leases, etc.

Marchandises avariées [Fr.], damaged goods.

Marchers, or Lord Marchers, those noble-men who lived on the marches of Wales and Scotland, who, in times past, had their laws and regal power, until they were abolished by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26.

Marches, the boundaries of countries and territories; the limits between England, Wales, and Scotland. Also, in Scotland, the boundaries between private properties.—Co. Litt. 106 b.

Marches, Court of, an abolished tribunal in Wales, where pleas of debt or damages, not above the value of 50*l.*, were tried and determined.—Cro. Car. 384.

Marchet, or Marchetta, a pecuniary fine, anciently paid by the tenant to his lord for the marriage of one of the tenant's daughters. This custom obtained, with some difference, throughout all England and Wales, as also in Scotland; and it still continues to obtain in some places. It is also denominated gwahr-merched, i.e., maid's fee.—Co. Litt. 117 b., 140 a.

Marchioness [formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchio], a dignity in a woman answerable to that of marquess in a man, conferred either by creation, or by marriage with a marquess.

Mare Liberum, a famous treatise by Grotius, to show that all nations have an equal right to use the sea.

Mareschall, or Mareshal, a marshal.

Marettum [fr. maret, Fr., a fen or marsh], marshy ground overflowed by the sea or great rivers.—Co. Litt. 5.

Marginal note. An abstract of a reported case, a summary of the facts, or brief statement of the principle decided which is prefixed to the report of the case, sometimes in the margin, is spoken of by this name. The marginal notes which appear in the statute books have not the authority of the legislature, and cannot alter the interpretation of the text. See Claydon v. Green, L. R. 3 C. P. 522 per Willes, J.; Attorney-General v. G. E. R. Co., 11 Ch. D. 460.

Marinarius capitaneus, an admiral or warden of the ports.—Par. Antiq.

Marinarius, a mariner or seaman.—Par. Antiq.

Marine, a general name for the navy of a kingdom or state; as also the whole economy of naval affairs, or whatever respects the building, rigging, arming, equipping, navigating, and fighting ships. It comprehends also the government of naval armaments, and the state of all the persons employed therein, whether civil or military. Also one of the marines. See MARINES.

Marine insurance. See INSURANCE.

Marines, a military force drilled as infantry, whose especial province is to serve on board ships of war when in commission. The force was first established about the middle of the last century. When serving on board ship, their discipline is regulated by the Naval Discipline Act, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 109; when on shore, by an act annually passed, called the Marine Mutiny Act.

Marine Society, a charitable institution for the purpose of apprenticing boys to the naval service, etc., incorporated by 12 Geo. III. c. 67.

Marine-store dealers. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 480—483; by which dealers in 'anchors, cables, sails, old junk, old iron, or marine-stores of any description, must enter in a book all such marine-stores as he may become possessed of, and may not cut up cables, etc., without obtaining a "permit" from a justice of the peace.'

Marischal, an officer in Scotland, who, with the Lord High Constable, possessed a supreme itinerant jurisdiction in all crimes committed within a certain space of the court, wherever it might happen to be.

Mariscus, a marshy or fenny ground.—Domesday; Co. Litt. 5 a.

Maris et femine conjunctio est de jure nature. 7 Co. 13.—(The connection of male and female is by the law of nature.)

Maritagio amisso per defaultam, an obsolete writ for the tenant in frank-marriage to recover lands, etc., of which he was deforced.

Maritadium, the portion which is given with a daughter in marriage. Also the power which the lord or guardian in chivalry had of disposing of his infant ward in matrimony.—Spelm. See 1 Reeves (Finlason's Edition), 171.

Maritadium est aut liberum aut servitio obligatum; liberum maritadium dicitur ubi donator vult quod terra sic data quiesca sit et libera ab omni seculari servitio. Co. Litt. 21.—(A marriage portion is either free or bound to service; it is called frank-marriage when the giver wills that land thus given be exempt from all secular service.)

Maritadium habere, for Maritare, to have the free disposal of an heiress in marriage.

Marital [fr. maritus, Lat.], pertaining to a husband; incident to a husband.

Marital rights. Rights of a husband. Where a woman, during a treaty for marriage, made a settlement of property without the concurrence of her intended husband, the husband after the marriage became entitled to have such settlement set aside as a fraud on his marital rights (see Strathmore v. Bowes, 1 W. & T. L. C. 446), but it is conceived that the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (see MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY), has abolished this right of the husband, which was founded on the rule of the common law, abrogated by that statute, that the property of the wife became by marriage the property of the husband.

Maritima Angliæ, the profits and emolument arising to the Crown from the sea, which anciently was collected by sheriffs; but it was afterwards granted to the Lord High Admiral.—Par. 8 Hen. III. m. 4.

Maritime courts. These were formerly the High Court of Admiralty and its court of appeal, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. But by the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 16, the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty is transferred to, and vested in the High Court of Justice; and all causes and matters pending in that Court, or which would have been within its exclusive cognizance, are now assigned to a division of the High Court, called the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division (Ibid., s. 34). The appeal from the Admiralty branch of that division lies to the Court of Appeal (Ibid., s. 18 (5)), with a further appeal in some cases for the present to the House of Lords (Jud. Act, 1875, s. 2). Courts of Vice-Admiralty are established in Her Majesty's possessions, beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize. By 2 Wm. IV. c. 51, it is enacted, that in all cases where a ship comes within the local limits of a Court of Vice-Admiralty, suits may be commenced therein for 'seamen's wages, pilotage, bottomry, damage to ships by collision, breach of regulations of the royal service at sea, salvage, and droits of admiralty,' notwithstanding the cause of action may have arisen out of the local limits of such courts. See also 26 & 27 Vict. c. 24; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 45; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 75. See also ADMIRALTY; and consult Williams & Bruce's Admiralty Practice.

Maritime law, the law relating to harbours, ships, and seamen. An important branch of the commercial law of maritime nations; divided into a variety of departments, such as those about harbours, property of ships, duties and rights of masters and seamen, contracts of affreightment, average, salvage, etc. No system or code of maritime law has ever been issued by authority in Great Britain. The laws and practices that now obtain amongst us have been founded on the practice of merchants, the principles of the civil law, the laws of Oleron and Wisby, the works of jurists, the judicial decisions of our own and foreign countries, etc. Though still susceptible of amendment, our system corresponds more nearly than any other system of maritime law with those universally recognised principles of justice and general convenience on which merchants and navigators should act.

The decisions of Lord Mansfield did much to fix the principles and to improve and perfect the maritime law of England. It is also under great obligations to Lord Stowell. The decisions of the latter chiefly have reference to questions of neutrality, and of the conflicting pretensions of belligerents and neutrals; but the principles and doctrines which he unfolds, throw a strong light on all branches of maritime law. It has, indeed, been alleged, that his lordship favoured the claims of belligerents. But his judgments must be regarded, allowing for this bias, as among the noblest monuments of judicial wisdom.—McCull. Comm. Dict. As to the maritime laws of early times, see 3 Hall. Mid. Ages, 333.

Maritime state, consists of the officers and mariners of the British navy, who are governed by express and permanent laws, or the articles of the navy, established by act of parliament.

Mark [fr. marc, Welsh; mearc, Sax.; merche, Dut.; marque, Fr.], a token; an impression; a proof; an evidence; license of reprisals; also, formerly, a coin of the value of 13s. 4d.

In commerce and manufacture, a certain character struck or impressed on various kinds of commodities either to show the place where they were made, and the person who made them; or to witness that they have been viewed and examined by the officers charged with the inspection of manufactures; or to show that the duties imposed thereon have been paid. It is also used to indicate the price of a commodity. If one use the mark of another, to do him damage, an action on the case will lie, and an injunction may be obtained in Chancery.—2 Cro. 471. See TRADE MARKS.

Those who are unable to write sign a cross, for their mark, when they execute any document. See MARKSMAN.

Markepenny, a penny anciently paid at the town of Maldon by those who had gutters laid or made out of their houses into the streets.—15 Edw. I.

Market [anciently written mercat, fr. mercatus, Lat.], a public time and appointed place of buying and selling; also purchase and sale. It differs from the forum, or market of antiquity, which was a public market-place on one side only, or during one part of the day only, the other sides being occupied by temples, theatres, courts of justice, and other public buildings.

A market can only be set up by virtue of a royal grant, or by long and immemorial usage, which presupposes a grant.

All contracts for anything vendible in fairs or markets overt are binding, if made according to the following rules:—(1) the sale must be in a place that is open, so that any one who passes may see it, and that is proper for the sale of such goods; (2) it must be an actual sale for a valuable consideration; (3) the buyer must not know that the seller has a wrongful possession of the goods sold; (4) the sale must not be fraudulent between two to bar a third person of his right; (5) there must be a sale and a contract by persons able to contract; (6) the contract must be originally and wholly in the market overt; (7) toll ought to be paid where required by statute; (8) the sale ought not to be in the night; though, if the sale be made in the night, it may bind the parties.—5 Rep. 83.

See FAIRS; and Public Health Act, 1875, s. 167; and the Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, 10 Vict. c. 14.

Market, Court of the Clerk of the, a tribunal incident to every fair and market in the kingdom, to punish misdemeanours therein; as a court of piedpoudre is to determine all disputes relating to private or civil property. The object of this, the most inferior criminal jurisdiction, is principally the recognisance of weights and measures, to try whether they be according to the true standard which was anciently committed to the custody of the bishop, who appointed some clerk under him to inspect abuses of them more narrowly; and hence this officer, though usually a layman, is called the clerk of the market. His functions, however, are by the Weights and Measures Act. See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Market geld, the toll of a market.

Market overt, an open market. See MAR-KET.

Market price. See VALUE.

Market towns, those towns which are entitled to hold markets.—1 Steph. Com.

Marketable, such things as may be sold; those for which a buyer may be found. See FAIRS.

Markets and Fairs Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 14. See the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 167, which incorporates some of its provisions, and title FAIRS.

Marketzeld. See MARKET GELD.

Marksman, a person who cannot write, and therefore makes his mark X only in executing instruments, which mark is a sufficient 'signature' of a will (re Clarke, 1 Sw. & T. 22) or of a writing which the statute of Frauds requires to be signed (see Baker v. Dening, 8 A. & E. 94). See MARK.

Marlebridge, Statute of, 52 Hen. III., A.D. 1267, enacted at Marlebridge, now Marlborough, and principally directed against unlawful and excessive distresses, as to which it is still in force.

Marque [fr. mearc, Sax.; signum, Lat.], a mark, a sign; reprisals. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Marquis, or Marquess [fr. marquis, Fr.; marchio, Lat.; margrave, Ger.], one of the second order of nobility, next in order to a duke. The first marquis was Robert de Vere, Earl of Oxford, whom Richard II. in the year 1386 made Marquis of Dublin.

A marquis is styled by the sovereign in Royal Commissions, etc., 'our right trusty and entirely-beloved cousin.' His title is 'most honourable'; and his sons, by courtesy, are styled lords, and his daughters ladies.

Marquisate, the seignior of a marquis.

Marriage [fr. maritagium, low Lat.], a solemn contract; whereby a man is united to a woman in matrimony. The common law treats it as a civil contract, and deems it to be valid where it is entered into by persons willing and able to, and who actually do, contract, according to the solemnities established. Each party must exercise free-will, for it is the consent which constitutes the marriage. If either party to the marriage has not consented, or if consent has been obtained by fraud, error, or duress, the marriage is void, although all the required formalities may have been observed. Persons who have not sufficient mental capacity to consent, lunatics, idiots, and children, cannot contract marriage. The marriage of a lunatic contracted during a lucid interval is good, unless a commission of lunacy has been taken out and remains unrevoked at the time of the marriage, when it is void by 51 Geo. III. c. 37, replacing the repealed 15 Geo. II. c. 30.

The marriage of a child under seven years of age is a mere nullity. The age of consent is fourteen in males and twelve in females. If either is between the age of seven and the respective ages of fourteen and twelve, the marriage is not void, but imperfect. It cannot be annulled until the party wishing to annul it has arrived at the age of consent. Either of them upon attaining that age may declare the marriage void; or upon their both attaining it they may agree to live together: in the former case a judicial dissolution would not be necessary, and in the latter another marriage ceremony would not be requisite. It is to be observed that a promise to marry in futuro is not binding, if the party be not twenty-one years of age; but where there are mutual promises to marry between two persons, one of whom is of the age of twenty-one, and the other under that age, the adult is bound by the promise, but the minor is not.

The parties to a marriage must be able as well as willing to contract, i.e., they must not labour under any legal disability. The disabilities are:—

(1) A prior marriage undissolved, and the former husband or wife still living; a second marriage under such circumstances is absolutely void, and is punishable as a felony. See BIGAMY.

(2) Proximity of relationship, i.e., being within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity.

Consanguinity comprehends those related to a person by blood; they are either of lineal or collateral consanguinity; affinity comprehends those related by marriage.

Before the year 1835 marriages between the prohibited degrees were voidable but not absolutely void, i.e., if their validity was questioned during the lifetime of the parties, they would be pronounced void, but after the death of either party their validity could not be questioned. But in 1835, by 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 54, all marriages celebrated between persons within the prohibited degrees were void for all purposes. The marriages now illegal in respect of proximity of degree are:—Those between persons in the ascending and descending lines, in infinitum (sed quere de hoc). The ascending and descending lines form what is called lineal consanguinity, as, father, grandfather, great-grandfather, and so upwards, in the direct ascending line, and son, grandson, great grandson, etc., in the direct descending line.

Marriages, also, between collaterals to the third degree inclusive, according to the mode of the computation in the civil law, are prohibited. Collaterals are those who descend from a common ancestor, but do not ascend or descend from one another, as brothers, uncles, nephews, etc. A man's parents are counted as one degree in collaterals; his brothers and sisters, grandfather and grandmother, are in the second degree; and his uncles, aunts, nephews, and nieces in the third degree. The prohibition as to collaterals extends not only to consanguinity, but also to affinity. Cousins-german, or first cousins, being in the fourth degree of collaterals, may marry. Though those of the consanguinity of the wife are always related by affinity to the husband, and vice versa, yet those of the consanguinity of the husband are not at all necessarily related to those of the consanguinity of the wife; hence two brothers may marry two sisters, or father and son may marry mother and daughter. These prohibitions extend to the relations of the half blood, as well as to the whole blood, and they also apply though one of the parties be a bastard; for though, as to many civil consequences, a bastard is deemed nullius filius, yet he is recognised his relationship to his natural parents for moral purposes.

(3) Impotence or inability to consummate the marriage, arising from corporal defect or infirmity. In order to nullify the marriage the impotence must have existed at the time when it was solemnized, and must be incurable.

(4) The fraudulent suppression or alteration of the name of one or both of the parties in the publication of the banns. A suit for nullity on this ground can only be instituted if both were cognizant of it; in that case either may maintain the suit. In the case of a marriage by license, however, it would appear that the fraudulent suppression or alteration of a name does not invalidate the marriage. See Bevan v. M'Mahon, 2 Sw. & Tr. 230.

The 22nd section of the 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, enacts that 'if any person shall knowingly and wilfully intermarry in any other place than a church or such public chapel wherein banns may lawfully be published, or shall knowingly and wilfully intermarry without due publication of banns or license from a person having authority to grant the same first had and obtained, or shall knowingly and wilfully consent to or acquiesce in the solemnization of marriage, by any person not being in holy orders, the marriage of such persons shall be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.'

It has now been enacted (4 Geo. IV. c. 76, s. 2), that all banns of matrimony shall be published in an audible manner in the parish church, or in some public chapel, in which chapel banns of matrimony may now or may hereafter be lawfully published (see 6 Geo. IV. c. 92; 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 18), of or belonging to such parish or chapelry wherein the persons to be married shall dwell, according to the form of words prescribed by the rubric prefixed to the office of matrimony in the Book of Common Prayer, upon three Sundays preceding the solemnization of marriage, during the time of morning service or of evening service (if there shall be no morning service in such church or chapel upon the Sunday upon which such banns shall be so published) immediately after the Second Lesson.

If the bridegroom be a priest he cannot perform the service himself. If he do, the marriage is null and void.—Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. of L. Cases, 274.

(5) After a marriage has been dissolved neither party can contract a second marriage until the time limited for an appeal against the decree of dissolution has expired without any appeal being presented, or until such appeal has been dismissed, or until in the result of such appeal the marriage has been declared to be dissolved (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85 ; s. 57.)

The 7 Geo. IV. c. 76, directs that the consent of parents or guardians shall be obtained to the marriage of minors, but the marriage is not invalidated by the want of such consent. It is to be observed, that if the minor be a widow or widower, no consent is necessary, since he or she would be then deemed emancipated.

As to modes of marriage, see next title.

Marriage Acts, 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, and 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 85, amended by 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 22; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119; 23 Vict. c. 24; and 26 & 27 Vict. cc. 27, 90. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 246.

The 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, directs that all the rules prescribed by the rubric, prefixed to the office of matrimony in the Book of Common Prayer, shall be duly observed, and prescribes the publication of banns, or a license to marry without. The marriage must be in a church or public chapel, wherein banns may be published, between 8 A.M. and noon, and be solemnised by a person in holy orders. See BAN.

By the 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 85, amended by 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 22, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72, the superintendent registrar for every poor-law union, parish, or place, under the 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 86, is superintendent registrar of marriages therein, and a marriage may take place by the superintendent registrar's certificate, without license, or by his certificate with license.

Neither of these acts extend to the marriages of the royal family, nor to any marriage taking place out of England. See also HUSBAND AND WIFE.

As to marriages of dissenters, see further DISSENTERS.

Marriage articles, an agreement in order to marriage; a stipulation between the parties which is to be binding in case of marriage.

Marriage brokerage, a consideration paid for contriving a marriage, and illegal as contrary to public policy.

Marriage consideration, the highest consideration recognised by law. A marriage consideration, in a settlement made prior to marriage, or in pursuance of articles entered into before marriage, runs through the whole settlement, as far as it relates to the husband and wife and issue, and protects them.

Marriage portion, the portion of one given in marriage.

Marriage, Promise of, need not be in writing, although an 'agreement in considration of marriage' must be, by s. 4 of the Statute of Frauds. In an action for the breach of the promise, the parties are competent witnesses, but the plaintiff may not 'recover a verdict,' unless his or her testimony be corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise.—32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 2.

Marriage Registry See BIRTHS, BURIALS, and MARRIAGE.

Marriage settlement, an arrangement made before marriage, and in consideration of it (the highest consideration known to the law), whereby a jointure is secured to the wife, and portions to children, in the event of the husband's death. There is an express saving for such a settlement in s. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (see post. MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY).

By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 43 (Malin's Act), a male of 20, or a female of 17, may make a binding marriage settlement.

By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 45, the Divorce Court is empowered, in cases where a marriage has been dissolved, or a sentence of judicial separation has been pronounced, on the ground of the wife's adultery, to order such settlement, as it shall think reasonable, to be made of any property to which the wife is entitled, either in possession, or in reversion, or of any part thereof, for the benefit of the innocent party, and of the children of the marriage, or any of them; and see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 6, which provides that any instrument executed by the order of the court under this enactment shall be deemed valid, notwithstanding coverture at the time of execution; and 41 Vict. c. 19, which allows the court to revise a settlement, although there be no children of the marriage. By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 5, the court may, after a final decree of nullity, or dissolution of marriage, inquire into any ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements, and make such orders as to the application of the property settled, for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their parents, as seem fit. See Browne on Divorce; Dixon on Divorce.

Married Woman. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Married Woman's Property. At common law, a woman, by marrying, transferred the ownership of all her property, real and personal, present and future, to her husband absolutely, so that he might sell, pay his debts out of, give away, or dispose by will of it as he pleased, with these exceptions and modifications:—

(1) Her freehold estate became his to manage and take the profits of during the two lives only. After his death, leaving her surviving, it passed to her absolutely; after her death, leaving him surviving, it passed to him, as 'tenant by the curtesy of England,' during his life, and after his death to her heirs.

(2) Her leasehold estate, her personal estate in expectancy, and the debts owing to her and other 'choses in action,' became his absolutely if he did some act to appropriate or reduce them into possession during the marriage, or if he survived her. If he did not do such act, they passed to her absolutely if she survived him.

(3) Her personal clothing and ornaments suitable to her condition in life passed to her absolutely at her husband's death.

The almost complete control which the common law gave to the husband was much modified by the doctrines and practice of equity in fully recognising and giving effect to 'marriage settlements,' whereby the property of the wife is usually assigned to trustees in trust to pay her, for her separate use, all or part of the income during her life, and the capital after her death to such person as she may have appointed; and by compelling the husband to give the wife her 'equity to a settlement' by making a somewhat similar settlement of a proportion (usually one-half) of property coming to him in the right of his wife during the marriage.

But these protections of the wife's property not being deemed sufficient by the Legislature, the Married Women's Property Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 93 (amended in 1874 by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 50), enacted (inter alia) that the earnings of a married woman and also her deposits in a savings bank should be deemed her separate property; that a married woman might procure investments in the funds or in shares or stock to be made to stand in her own name as her separate property; and that personalty to any amount coming to any woman married after the passing of the act [9th August, 1870], as next of kin of an intestate, and personalty up to 200*l.* coming to her under any deed or will should belong to her for her separate use. See for further details COVERTURE.

A still further step forward was taken by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, which repeals and consolidates, with important amendments, the acts of 1870 and 1874. The 1st section of this act provides that a married woman, whether married before the act or after it, (1) 'shall be capable of acquiring, holding, and disposing, by will or otherwise, of any real or personal property as her separate property, in the same manner as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of a trustee'; (2) shall be capable of contracting so as to bind her separate property as if she were a feme sole; (3) shall prima facie bind her separate property by her contracts; (4) shall so bind her after-acquired, as well as her existing separate property; and (5) shall, if trading separately, be subject to the laws of bankruptcy as if she were a feme sole.

The 2nd section applies only to women who married after the commencement of the act (1st January, 1883), and enacts that every woman who marries after that date 'shall be entitled to have and to hold as her separate property, and to dispose of all real and personal property which shall belong to her at the time of marriage, or shall be acquired by or devolve upon her after marriage, including any wages, earnings, money, and property gained or acquired by her in any employment, trade, or occupation in which she is engaged, or which she carries on separately from her husband, or by the exercise of any literary, artistic, or scientific skill.'

By s. 3 any loans by the wife to the husband are to be treated as the husband's assets in case of his bankruptcy, with a reservation of the right of the wife to claim a dividend after all claims of other creditors have been satisfied.

The 5th section provides that property acquired after the commencement of the act [1st January, 1883] by a woman married before the commencement of the act, is to be held and be disposable by her as a feme sole.

By ss. 6—9 stock, etc., of any kind standing in the name of a married woman or of a married woman and another is exempted from any control by her husband, whose concurrence in the transfer of any such stock is dispensed with.

By s. 10 any investments by a wife of the moneys of her husband without his consent may be transferred to him by order of Court.

Section 19 contains a very important saving of 'marriage settlements.' It provides (with a qualification for ante-nuptial debts and rights of creditors) that 'nothing in this act contained shall affect any settlement made or to be made whether before or after marriage respecting the property of any married woman, or render inoperative 'any restriction against anticipation' [see ANTICIPATION] 'at present attached or to be hereafter attached to the enjoyment of any property or income by a woman under any settlement, agreement for a settlement, will, or other instrument.' See further HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Marrow, author of a famous book, written in the reign of Henry VII., and said to be still in manuscript, on the office of a justice of the peace—a work which has been quoted by later writers, such as Fitzherbert and Lambard, with great commendation, and seems to have been followed by them on the subject. —4 Reeves, c. xxvii., p. 186.

Marshal, or Mareschal, primarily denotes an officer who has the care or command of horses.

An officer called a marshal attends each judge on the assizes (being paid by the treasury), and receives records for trials, etc. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 73, s. 7; and Jud. Act, 1873, s. 77.

Marshal (Lord). See CHIVALRY, COURT OF.

Marshal of the Queen's Bench, an officer who had the custody of the Queen's Bench Prison. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, abolished this office, and substituted an officer called Keeper of the Queen's Prison.

Marshalling, the act of arranging or of putting into proper order.

The doctrine of marshalling assets and securities depends upon the principle, that a person having two funds out of which to satisfy his demands, shall not, by his election, prejudice a person who has only one such fund. If, therefore, one who has a claim upon two funds, resorts to the only fund upon which another has a claim, the latter stands in his place for so much against the fund, to which otherwise he could not have access: the object being that every claimant shall be satisfied as far as, by any arrangement consistent with the nature of the several claims, the property which they seek to affect can be applied in satisfaction of such claims. This is in accordance with the great ethical maxim, Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas—so exercise your own right as not unnecessarily to prejudice that of your neighbour.

The doctrine, as exercised in the administration of deceased's assets, comprehends five different classes of persons:—

(1) Between creditors. Since freehold and copyhold estates have been rendered liable to simple contract debts, it is not now necessary to resort to this doctrine for the purpose of enforcing their payment.

(2) Between legatees. Where one or more legacies are charged upon real estate, and other legacies are not, if the personal estate prove insufficient to pay all, the legacies charged on the real estate shall be paid thereout; or if they have been paid out of the personal estate, the other legacies, as to so much as is thus paid thereout, shall stand in their place as a charge upon the land; but where the charge of a legacy upon a real estate fails to effect it, in consequence of an event happening subsequently to the death of the testator, as the death of the legatee before the time of payment, equity will not marshal so as to throw such legacy upon the personal estate, in which case it would be vested and transmissible, whereas, as against the real, it would sink by the death of the legatee.

(3) Between creditors and legatees. Where there are specialty debts and legacies, and the real estate descends, if the creditors exhaust the personal estate the legatees stand in their place, and can come upon the real estate, against the heir-at-law. But if a testator devises his real estate, and gives general pecuniary legacies not charged on such real estate, and dies leaving specialty debts, and the specialty creditors exhaust the personal estate, the legatees shall not stand in their place and come on the realty because it was the intention of the testator that the devisee should have the real estate as well as that the legatees should be paid. Nevertheless, where a mortgagee of a devised, as well as of a descended estate, has exhausted the personal assets by resorting to them in the first instance, a legatee shall stand in his place and be satisfied out of the mortgaged premises to the extent of the personalty applied in their exoneration; for the application of the personal assets in exoneration of the real estate mortgaged does not take place so as to defeat a legacy. A specific legatee will not be allowed to stand in the place of specialty creditors as against real estate devised, although the devisee be the heir. A devisee and a specific legatee must contribute pro rata to satisfy such specialty debts of a testator as his general personal estate is insufficient to pay. If land be devised for, or made subject to, the payment of debts, assets will be marshalled in favour of legatees, who will stand in the place of the creditors who may have been satisfied out of the personal assets. Where simple contract creditors exhaust the personal assets, the legatees may stand in their place as to the real estate descended.

(4) Between legatees and vendors. Where a vendor, having a lien upon land for the unpaid purchase-money, resorts to the personalty in the first instance for the realisation of his claim, the purchased estate, when it descends, and the personal assets will, as against the heir, be marshalled in favour of simple contract creditors and pecuniary legatees: but where the purchased estate is devised, then marshalling against the devisee will take place in favour of the simple contract creditors only, and not of legatees.

It is a general rule, that assets are not marshalled in favour of legacies given to charities. Thus, if a testator gives his real estate and personal estate, consisting of personalty savouring of realty, as leaseholds and mortgage securities, and also pure personalty, to trustees upon trust to sell, and pay his debts and legacies, and bequeathes the residue to a charity, equity will not marshal the assets by throwing the debts and ordinary legacies upon the proceeds of the real estate, and the personalty savouring of the realty, in order to leave the pure personalty for the charity.

(5) Between widows and legatees. A widow's paraphernalia (the necessary wearing apparel excepted) are liable for her deceased husband's debts: but a widow being preferred to a general legatee, she is entitled to marshal assets in those cases in which a general legatee would be entitled to do so, i.e., as against realty descended or devised, should it be subjected by the will to the payment of debts. If a devised estate be subject to a mortgage or other specific incumbrance, the widow will be entitled to marshal the assets, as against the devisee, by throwing the charge upon the estate, since a legatee would have that right.

Where a person having two estates mortgages both to one mortgagee, and afterwards only one of such estates to a second mortgagee, who has no notice of the first mortgage, the court, in order to relieve the second mortgagee, has directed the first to take his satisfaction out of that estate only which is not in mortgage to the second mortgagee, if that be sufficient to satisfy the first mortgage, in order to make room for the second mortgage, even though the estate descended to two different persons. And if one of two estates in mortgage is subject to a portion, the person entitled to the portion may, if it be necessary, compel the mortgagee to resort to the other estate, so that the payment of the portion, as well as the mortgage, may be worked out. But this marshalling will not be enforced to the prejudice of a third party. The doctrine also has been carried to a great extent in bankruptcies; 'for,' as observed by Lord Eldon, in Aldrich v. Cooper (8 Ves. 382, 1802), 'a mortgagee whose interest in the estate was affected by an extent of the Crown, has found his way, even in a question with the general creditors, to this relief, that he was held entitled to stand in the place of the Crown, as to those securities which he could not affect per directum, because the Crown affected those in pledge to him.' See 2 Wh. & Tud. Lead. Cas. 91.

By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, the distinction as to priority of payment between the specialty and simple contract debts is abolished.

In the administration by the court of the assets of any person dying insolvent after the commencement of the Judicature Acts, the rules prevailing in the Court of Bankruptcy are to prevail (Jud. Act, 1875, s. 10). See DEBTS.

Marshalling court armour has now fallen into the hands of the heralds.

Marshalsea, Court of the, originally held before the steward and marshal of the royal house, to administer justice between the sovereign's domestic servants, that they might not be drawn into other courts, and their service become lost. It held pleas of all trespasses committed within the verge of the court (twelve miles round the sovereign's residence), where only one of the parties was in the royal service (in which case the inquest was taken by a jury of the country); and of all debts, contracts, and covenants where both of the contracting parties belonged to the royal household, and then the inquest was composed of men of the household only. But this court being ambulatory, Charles I. erected a new court of record, called the curia palatii, or palace court, to be held before the steward of the household and knight marshal, and the steward of the court or his deputy, with jurisdiction to hold plea of all manner of personal actions whatsoever which should arise between any parties within twelve miles of the royal palace at Whitehall, not including the city of London.

The court was held once a week for causes under 20*l.*, together with the ancient Court of Marshalsea, in the borough of Southwark, and a writ of error lay thence to the Court of Queen's Bench. Abolished by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 101, s. 13.

Marshalsea Prison. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, amended by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 7, this prison is consolidated with others, and denominated the Queen's Prison, which see. As to the Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin) Prison, see 37 & 38 Vict. c. 21, discontinuing the same.

Mart [contracted fr. market], a place of public traffic or sale.

Martial, Courts. See COURTS MARTIAL, and Simmons & Finlason on Courts Martial, 30; Thring's Criminal Law of the Navy. As to the more speedy trial of a person subject to the Army Act, who may be guilty of the murder or manslaughter of a person subject to that act, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 65.

Martial law, that rule of action which is imposed by the military power. See MARTIAL, COURTS.

Martinmas, the feast of St. Martin of Tours, on the 11th November; sometimes corrupted into martilmas or martlemas. It is the third of the four cross quarter-days of the year.

Martyria, a figure by rhetoric, by which the speaker brings his own experience in proof of what he advances.

Masagium, a message.

Masculine, of the male sex. Statutes passed 1850 frequently declare that words in them which import the masculine gender shall be deemed to include females, unless there is something in the act inconsistent therewith; and in 1850, by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, this provision was made general so as to dispense with its repetition with each particular case in future.

Master [fr. meester, Dut.; maître, Fr.; magister, Lat.], a director; a governor; a teacher; one who has servants; the head of a college; the chief functionaries of courts of law. See MASTER OF A SHIP.

Master and apprentice, a business relationship which should be constituted by deed, containing all proper and explicit stipulations. If the apprentice be under age, an adult person should covenant for his good conduct, because a minor cannot be sued for misconduct.

At common law a master has such an interest in the apprentice, that he may defend him with force, or maintain an action for any injury to him, whereby a loss of service accrues; he may also support an action for his detention. The master is entitled to all the apprentice's earnings, however considerable, in case he should wrongfully absent himself.

An apprentice may compel maintenance and enforce proper instruction; and magistrates or a court of equity will, in some cases, enforce a return of the premium, or a just proportion of it. Consult Smith's or MacDonell's Law of Master and Servant.

Master and Servant, a relation founded in convenience, whereby a person calls in the assistance of others, where his own skill and labour are not sufficient to carry out his own business or purpose.

Servants are of several descriptions:—1st. Servants in husbandry, termed labourers. These were placed by virtue of several statutes under the control of magistrates. See LABOURERS, STATUTE OF.

Servants in husbandry are very generally hired by the year, as from Michaelmas to Michaelmas, and this is an entire hiring for a year; and, unless otherwise stipulated, no wages are payable until the end of the year. Consult Burn's Justice, tit. 'Servants.'

2nd. Servants in particular trades. These are also subject to the control of the magistrates, under several acts, some of them confined to particular trades, as the silk, cloth, woollen, linen, fustian, cotton, iron, leather, hat, lace, clock, paper, tailoring, shoemaking, and other trades; and disputes between master and servants in husbandry, artificers, calico printers, handicraftsmen, miners, colliers, keelmen, pitmen, glass-blowers, and other labourers in general, are regulated by several more general acts. They will be found collected in Burn's Justice, tit. 'Servants.'

3rd. Menial or domestic servants. If no terms be stipulated, it is considered a hiring with reference to the general understanding on the subject, that is, a continuing service, until the expiration of a month's warning given by either party.

It is not legally compulsory on a master or mistress to give a discharged servant any character, and no action is sustainable for the refusal; but if a character be given, it must accord with the truth; for if a false good character be given, and the servant afterwards rob his new master, the person who gave such false character is liable to an action, and to compensate for the entire loss; and he is liable to punishment in certain cases of false character under 32 Geo. III. c. 56. And if a bad character be untruly and maliciously given, the party giving it will be liable to an action for defamation, though, until the untruth of the character given and express malice have been proved, the communication is presumed to have been privileged, and no action is sustainable (8 B. & C. 578).

A master is liable civilly, except to a fellow-servant,—an exception much modified by the Employers' Liability Act, 1880,—and sometimes criminally, for torts committed by his servant in the course of or under colour of his employ, but not for the wilful misfeasance of his servant, who has wholly lost sight of his duty (1 East, 106). As to embezzlement by servants, see EMBEZZLEMENT. The not providing with food, etc., or ill-treatment of a servant by his master, is an indictable offence under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 26, and an offence punishable on summary conviction by a fine of 20*l.* or six months imprisonment with or without hard labour under the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, s. 6.

The offence of taking corn or other food by a servant from the possession of his master, contrary to his orders, for the purpose of giving the same to horses or other animals of such master, which was a felony at common law, is no longer a felony, but is punishable upon summary conviction by fine or imprisonment, by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 103.

Disputes between masters and servants, and attempts to compel servants and workmen to combine in opposition to masters have been the subject of much recent legislation. In 1867 the Masters and Servants Act of that year (30 & 31 Vict. c. 141), provided various remedies by summary process for breaches of contract between masters and servants. This Act, however, with a large number of earlier acts on the subject, has been repealed by the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict.

c. 86), which also repeals the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 32, which was passed to amend the law relating to violence, threats, and intimidation. The Act of 1875 provides, that in trade disputes no agreement or combination shall be indictable unless the act contemplated would be indictable if done by one person (s. 1); while it also makes special criminal provisions in the case of persons employed by gas and water companies (s. 2). It imposes penalties on masters for not taking proper care of their servants (s. 6), and on persons intimidating or using threats or violence to others (s. 7); and provides for a summary process in such cases (s. 10), with an appeal to quarter sessions (s. 12). It also allows the parties to a contract of service and their husbands and wives to give evidence on proceedings under the Act (s. 11).

By the Acts 5 Geo. IV. c. 96, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 105, and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 46, provision was made for modes of arbitration between workmen and their employers in case of trade disputes. And by the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), special powers are given to County Courts as to ordering payment of money, set-off, and rescission of contracts, and taking securities for performance of contracts, in trade disputes between employers and workmen (s. 3). And the same jurisdiction is given to justices by the Act, up to the value of £10 (s. 4), which extends also to disputes between Masters and Apprentices (ss. 5, 6).

Masters in Chancery, officers of the High Court of Chancery. They were either ordinary or extraordinary. Abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80. See CHIEF CLERKS, COMMISSIONERS TO ADMINISTER OATHS, and TAXING MASTERS.

Masters of the Common Law Courts. There were five masters on the plea side of each of the Courts of Queen's Bench and Exchequer, and also in the Common Pleas. They were appointed by 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 30, and their duties were to tax costs, compute damages, attend the judges in court, etc.—B. H. 32 Geo. III.; 4 T. R. 580, Q. B.; 1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 9 et seq. These officers became, under the Judicature Acts, officers of the Supreme Court, and were attached to the Division of the High Court, representing the Court to which they formerly belonged (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 77; Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LX., r. 1). Under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 68, and the General Rules of Michaelmas Term, 1867, the Masters transacted a considerable portion of the business at Judges' Chambers; and they have similar powers under the Rules of the Supreme Court (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LIV., r. 2). Digitized by Microfilm Masters of the Supreme Court. Officials deriving their title from the Jud. (Officers) Act, 1879, and being, or filling the places of, the sixteen Masters of the Common Law Courts, the Queen's Coroner and Attorney, the Master of the Crown Office, the two Record and Writ Clerks, and the three Associates.

Master of the Crown Office, the Queen's coroner and attorney in the criminal department of the Court of Queen's Bench, who prosecuted at the relation of some private person or common informer; the Crown being the nominal prosecutor.—6 & 7 Vict. c. 20. He is now an officer of the Supreme Court; see last title. See CROWN OFFICE.

Master of the Faculties, an officer under the archbishop, who grants licenses and dispensations, etc. See 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85, s. 7; and ARCHES COURT, and PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT, 1874.

Master of the Horse, the third great officer of the royal household, being next to the Lord Steward and Lord Chamberlain. He has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the royal stables.

Masters in Lunacy. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, and LUNACY.

Master of the Mint, an officer who receives bullion for coinage, and pays for it, and superintends everything belonging to the mint. He is usually called the warden of the mint. It is provided by the 33 Vict. c. 10, s. 14, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the time being shall be the Master of the Mint.

Master of the Ordnance, a great officer, to whose care all the royal ordnance and artillery were committed.—39 Eliz. c. 7. But see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 117.

Master of Reports and Entries. This Chancery official was not to be continued after the next vacancy occurring after the Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 134.

Master of the Rolls [magister rotulorum, Lat.], the chief of a body of officers called the Masters in Chancery, of whom there were eleven others, including the Accountant-General. He was a judge of the equity court, which ranked next to that of the Lord Chancellor, and has the keeping of the rolls and grants which pass the Great Seal, and the records of the Chancery. All orders and decrees by him made, except such as by the course of the court were appropriated to the Great Seal alone, were deemed to be valid, subject, nevertheless, to be discharged or altered by the Lord Chancellor, and were not enrolled till they were signed by the Lord Chancellor.—3 Geo. II. c. 30.

His Judge, by the Jud. Act, 1881, s. 2, sits in the Court of Appeal only. Before that act he was the second judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 31 (1)), and also an ex officio judge of the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1875, s. 4). Before the Jud. Acts he was (alone among the judges) allowed to sit in the House of Commons.

Master of a ship [magister navis, Lat.], the person intrusted with the care and navigation of a ship, possessing what foreign jurists have called exercitatorial power over her. The master may delegate his power whenever it may be for the welfare of the ship and the accomplishment of the voyage.

The master of a ship is the confidential servant or agent of the owners; and by the maxims of the law of England, the owners are bound to the performance of all his contracts as to the usual employment of the ship. It follows that the owners must answer for a breach of contract, though committed by the master or mariners against their will, and without their fault. The owners, by selecting a person as master, hold him forth to the public as worthy of trust and confidence. And in order that this selection may be made with due care, and that all opportunities of fraud and collusion may be obviated, it is indispensable that they should be made responsible for his acts.

The master may hypothecate or pledge both ship and cargo for necessary repairs in foreign ports during the voyage; but neither the ship nor cargo for repairs at home.

The master has no lien upon the ship for his wages, nor for money advanced by him for stores or repairs.

The master is bound to employ his whole time and attention in the service of his employers, and may not enter into any engagement that may occupy any portion of his time; and if he do so, and the price of such engagement happen to be paid to his owners, they may retain the money.

During war, a master should be attentive to the regulations as to sailing under convoy; for besides his responsibility to his owners or freighters, he may be prosecuted by the Court of Admiralty, and fined in any sum not exceeding 500*l.*, and imprisoned for any term not exceeding one year, if he wilfully disobey the signals, instructions, or commands of the commander of the convoy, or desert it without leave.

A penalty of 10*l.*, in addition to the payment of the wages due, is imposed on every master of a vessel who having, on account of unfitness or inability to proceed on the voyage, left any seafaring men at any foreign port or place, shall neglect or refuse to deliver an account of the wages due to him, and to pay the same.—17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 209.

The law makes no distinction between carriers by land and carriers by water. The master of a merchant ship (except where he confines the credit to the owner and excludes any liability on his own part) is, in the eye of the law, a carrier, and is as such bound to take care of the goods committed to his charge, and to convey them to the place of their destination, the act of God and the Queen's enemies only being excepted. He would not, for example, be liable for damage done to goods on board in consequence of a leak in the ship occasioned by the violence of a tempest, or other accident, but if the leak were occasioned by rats he would be liable, for these might have been exterminated by ordinary care, as by putting cats on board, etc. So if the master run the ship in fair weather against a rock, or shallow, known to expert mariners, he is responsible. See 6 C. B. N. S. 894; and Maude & Pollock on Shipping, 3rd ed., 111, 459.

Master of the Temple, the chief ecclesiastical functionary of the Temple Church.

Masura, a decayed house; a wall; the ruins of a building; a certain quantity of lands about four oxgangs.—Old Records.

Mate, the deputy of the master in a merchant ship. There are sometimes one, sometimes two, three, or four.

Matelotage [fr. matelot, Fr.], the hire of a ship or boat.—Cole.

Mater-familias, the mother or mistress of a family.—Civ. Law.

Matertera, a maternal aunt; the sister of one's mother.

Matertera magna, a great maternal aunt.

Math, a mowing.

Matricide, slaughter of a mother. 2. One who has slain his mother.

Matricula, a register of the admission of officers and persons entered into any body or society, whereof a list is made; hence those who are admitted into our universities are said to be matriculated. The stamp-duties on matriculations at Oxford are repealed by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 36, s. 1; and at Cambridge by 21 Vict. c. 11. It was also a kind of almshouse, which had revenues appropriated to it, and was usually built near the church, whence the name was given to the church itself.—Encyc. Lond.

Matriculate (v. n.), to enter an university.

Matrimonia debent esse libera. Halkerston, 86.—(Marriages ought to be free.)

Matrimonial causes, suits for the redress of injuries respecting the rights of marriage. They were formerly a branch of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, but were transferred to the jurisdiction of the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes (now a branch of the High Court of Justice), by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. See DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES, and DIVORCE COURT.

They are either:—(1) Cause jactitationis matrimonii, when one boasts or gives out that he or she is married to another, whereby a reputation of marriages ensues. The party injured may petition the Court, which will enjoin a perpetual silence. (2) Restitution of conjugal rights, when a husband or wife is guilty of living apart from the other without reason. The court will compel them to come together again.

(3) Judicial separation, and (4) dissolution of marriage, which have superseded the divorces à mensâ et thoro, and bills of divorce.

Matrimonial Causes Acts, 1857 to 1873. The 36 Vict. c. 31, s. 2, provides that that Act, together with the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 32; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 77; may be cited as 'The Matrimonial Causes Acts, 1857 to 1873.'

Matrimonium, the inheritance descending to a man ex parte matris (from his mother).

Matrimonium subsequens tollit peccatum præcedens. Jur. Civ.—(Subsequent marriage cures preceding criminality.)

Matrimony, marriage; the nuptial state; the contract of man and wife. See titles MARRIAGE, and HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Matrina, a godmother.

Matrix Ecclesia, the mother church, i.e., the cathedral so called in relation to the parochial churches within the same diocese, or a parochial church in relation to chapels depending on it.—Leg. Hen. I. c. 19.

Matron, a married woman; a mother of a family.

Matron of Queen's Prison. See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, s. 22.

Matrons, Jury of. Such a jury is empanelled to try if a woman condemned to death be with child. See JURY-WOMEN.

Matter in ley ne serra mise in boutche del jurors. Jenk. Cent. 180.—(Matter of law shall not be put into the mouth of the jurors.)

Maturiora sunt vota mulierum quam virorum. 6 Co. 71.—(The desires of women are more mature than those of men; i.e., women arrive at maturity earlier than men.)

Maturity, the time when a bill of exchange or promissory note becomes due.

Maundy Thursday [fr. maund, Sax., an alms-basket, or dies mandati, Lat., the day of the command], the day preceding Good Friday, on which princes give alms.

Maxim [fr. maximum, Lat.], an axiom; a general principle; a leading truth; so called, says Coke, quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima auctoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur.—1 Inst. 11. Consult Broom's Legal Maxims; and see a very full collection in Bowyer's Law Dictionary, tit. 'Maxim.' In the present work each maxim is explained separately under its alphabetical title.

Maxima ita dicta quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima, auctoritas, atque quod maxime omnibus probetur. Co. Litt. 11.—(A maxim is so called because its dignity is greatest, and its authority the most certain, and because universally approved by all.)

Maximè paci sunt contraria vis et injuria. Co. Litt. 161.—(Force and injury are chiefly contrary to peace.)

Maximus erroris populus magister. Bacon.—(The people is the greatest master of error.)

Mayhem, the deprivation of a member proper for defence in fight, as an arm, leg, finger, eye, or a fore-tooth; yet not a jaw-tooth, or the ear, or a nose, because they have been supposed to be of no use in fighting. One circumstance, peculiar to an action for mayhem was that the court might, on view of the wound, increase the damages awarded by the jury.—3 Salk. 115. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 18, 29; 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 140, iii. 373, iv. 79; and Addison on Torts, 4th ed.

Mayhemavit (he has maimed).

Maynooth, St. Patrick's College at. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 25, and the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 40, s. 40, repealing the same, except as to the first three sections, and repealing also 23 & 24 Vict. c. 104.

Mayor [according to some anciently written meyr, fr. the British miret, to keep, or fr. the Old English maier, power, not from the Latin major], the annual chief magistrate of a municipal borough, elected by the councillors under s. 15 of the Municipal Corporation Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, 'from among the aldermen or councillors, or persons qualified to be such' on the 9th November of every year (Ib. s. 61). He receives little salary, if any. His principal duties are to act as returning officer at parliamentary and municipal elections, as revisor (with two assessors) of the Burgess lists in non-parliamentary boroughs, as chairman of the meetings of the council, and as a justice of the peace for the borough.

Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses, the name of a municipal corporation of a borough to which the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, applies; see s. 8 of that act (by which 'citizens' is substituted for 'burgesses' in the case of a city), re-enacting part of s. 6 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1835.

Mayor's Court, London. See LORD MAYOR'S COURT.

Mayoralty, the office of a mayor.

Mayoress, the wife of a mayor.

Mead, or Meadow [fr. mæde, Sax.], ground somewhat watery, not ploughed, but covered with grass and flowers.—Encyc. Lond.

Meal-rent, a rent formerly paid in meal.—Phillips.

Mean, or mesne [fr. medius, Lat.], a middle between two extremes, whether applied to persons, things, or time. See MESNE.

Mease [fr. messuagium, Lat.], a messuage or dwelling-house, F. N. B. 2; also, half of a thousand.

Meason-due [corruption of maison de Dieu, Fr.], a house of God; a monastery; religious house or hospital. See 39 Eliz. c. 5.

Measure [fr. mensura, Lat.], that by which anything is measured, the rule by which anything is adjusted or proportioned. See WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Measure of damage, the test which determines the amount of damages to be given. There are excellent books on the subject by Mayne and Sedgwick.

Measurer, or Meter, an officer in the City of London, who measured woollen clothes, coals, etc. See ALNAGER.

Measuring money, a duty which some persons exacted, by letters-patent, for every piece of cloth made, besides alnage. It is abolished.

Meat unsound. As to the inspection and destruction of unsound meat, see Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 116—9.

Mederia, a house or place where metheglin or mead was made.—Old Records.

Medfee, a reward; a bribe; that which is given to boot.—Scott.

Mediæ et infimæ manus homines, men of a middle and base condition.—Blount.

Melius inquirendum, a writ that lay for a second inquiry, where partial dealing was suspected; and particularly of what lands or tenements a man died seised, on finding an office for the king.—F. N. B. 255.

Members, places where anciently a custom-house was kept, with officers or deputies in attendance. They were lawful places of exportation or importation.—Beaumes' Lex. Mer., 6th ed., Vol. I., p. 246.

Members of Parliament. See HOUSE OF LORDS and HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Membrum, a slip or small piece of land.

Memorandum of Association, a document required by s. 8 of the Companies Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, from every joint stock company on its formation, to contain the name thereof, its objects, the amount of its capital, the liability of its members, etc. It usually is, but need not necessarily be unless the company be limited by guarantee or unlimited, accompanied by 'articles of association' signed by the subscribers, and regulating the internal management of the company, whereas the memorandum regulates the position of the company in relation to the public.

Memorandum in error, was a document alleging error in fact, accompanied by an affidavit of such matter of fact.—15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 158. See ERROR.

Memorial, that which contains the particulars of a deed, etc., and is the instrument registered, as in the case of an annuity which must be registered.

Memory, Time of Legal. By Statute Westminster the First, 3 Edw. I., A.D. 1276, the time of memory was limited to the reign of Richard I., July 6, 1189. But see the Prescription Act, 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71.

Menace, a threat.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 45, it is made felony to demand with menaces property, money, etc., with intent to steal; and see THREATS, and also title MASTER and SERVANT.

Menagium, a family.—Wals. p. 66.

Mendlefe. See MEDLEFE.

Menials [fr. mænia, Lat., walls], those servants who live within their masters' walls.—Termes de la Ley.

Mensa, patrimony, or goods, and necessary things for livelihood.—Jacob.

Mensâ et thoro, Divorce à. Superseded by a judicial separation. See A MENSA ET THORO, and MARRIAGE.

Mensalia, parsonages or spiritual livings united to the tables of religious houses, and called mensal benefices amongst the canonists.—Cowel.

Mensura domini regis, or Mensura regalis, the royal standard measure, which was kept in the Exchequer, according to which all measures were to be made. But see MEASURE.

Mental reservation, a silent exception to the general words of a promise or agreement not expressed, on account of a general understanding on the subject. But the word has been applied to an exception existing in the mind of the one party only, and has been degraded to signify a dishonest excuse for evading or infringing a promise.

Mepris, neglect; contempt.

Mer or Mere, a fenny place.—Cowel.

Mera noctis, midnight.—Cowel.

Merannum, timbers; wood for building.—Old Records.

Mercable [fr. mercor, Lat.], to be sold or bought.

Mercantile Law Amendment Act, 1856, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97. Its principal enactments are: (1) that a writ of execution shall not affect a title bonâ fide acquired before seizure; (2) that in an action for breach of contract to deliver goods sold, a writ for delivery of the goods may be obtained; (3) that the consideration for a guarantee need not appear in writing; (4) that a guarantee to or for a firm ceases upon a change in the firm; (5) that a surety who discharges a liability is to be entitled to an assignment of all securities held by the creditor; (6 & 7) that an acceptance of a bill of exchange must be in writing; (8) that as to repairs of ships, every port in the United Kingdom is to be deemed a home port; (9) that actions for merchants' accounts must be brought in six years; (10) that absence beyond seas is no disability within the Statute of Limitations; and (11) that part payment by one contractor is not to prevent the bar by the Statute of Limitations in favour of another contractor.

Mercat [fr. mercatus, Lat.], market; trade.

Mercative, belonging to trade.

Mercature, the practice of buying and selling.

Mercenary [fr. mercedula, Lat., a small fee], one that hires.

Mercenarius, a hireling or servant.—Jacob.

Mercen-lage, the mercian laws, which were observed in many of the midland counties, and those bordering on the Principality of Wales, the retreat of the ancient Britons.

Merchants, Statute of, 13 Ed. I. st. 3, repealed by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125.

Merchet, a fine or composition paid by inferior tenants to the lord for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage.—Cowel. See Kennet's Gloss. voce 'Maritagium.'

Merciament, an amerciament, penalty, or fine.

Mercimoniatus Angliæ, the impost of England upon merchandise.—Cowel.

Merger [fr. mergo, Lat., to sink], an annihilation, by act of law, of a particular in an expectant estate consequent upon their union in the same person—thus accelerating into possession the expectant which swallows up the particular estate. It is the drowning of one estate in another, and differs from suspension, which is but a partial extinguishment for a time; while extinguishment, properly so termed, is the destruction of a collateral thing in the subject itself out of which it is derived.

The doctrine of merger probably results from the maxim—nemo potest esse dominus et tenens; or perhaps from the inconsistency, but for it, of one person owning two estates in fact, whilst one of them, in law, includes the time or duration of both. 'Perhaps,' remarks Preston (3 Conv. 22), 'the rule that nemo potest esse dominus et tenens does not clearly, and beyond all controversy, furnish a principle to which the learning can be exclusively referred; yet of all other rules none affords principles to which the cases on merger bear a nearer affinity.'

When the same person has the legal estate in the fee, and is also entitled to the trust or beneficial ownership of that estate, the trust will merge in the legal ownership, but, on the other hand, the legal estate can never be extinguished in the equitable ownership.

Merger is either absolute or qualified, for as we shall presently see, an estate as against one person may be extinguished, whilst as against another it may still have existence.

In order to effect a merger, the following circumstances must concur:—

(1) There must of necessity be two estates at least in the same property, or in the same part of the same property, which must vest in the same person.

Merger, however, will operate between three or more estates, as well as between two.

(2) The several estates must be immediately expectant upon each other; the more remote estate must be without any intervening vested estate or contingent remainder created in the same instant of time and by the same means, which originated the other estates; and the determination or acquisition of an intermediate estate may be the cause of merger, as between estates kept distinct by means of such intermediate estate.

(3) The estate in reversion or remainder must be larger than the preceding estate, for there cannot be a merger as between equal estates of freehold.

With regard to the merger of terms for years in each other, the following propositions may be advanced:—

A term of years derived by way of underlease from a term of years, will merge on the two terms becoming possessed by one and the same person.

An estate for years may also merge in another estate in reversion of the same denomination, and it does not make any difference, whether the reversion is for a longer or shorter period of time than the former or preceding term; therefore, a term in possession, though for a hundred years, will be annihilated by its union with the term in reversion though for two years only. With a view, then, to the doctrine of merger, every term of years is equally extensive in quality at least.

The merger of a longer term in one of shorter duration may be accounted for on the ground that it is merely a relinquishment of the tenancy or rather possession to the person who has the immediate reversion, or, perhaps, remainder.

It is to be observed that both terms must be vested in interest to operate a merger of one of them. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112.

(4) The several estates must be held in the same legal right ; or, when the estates are held in different legal rights, one of them must not be an accession to the other, merely by the operation of law.

The proposition insisted on by some text writers, that the two estates must come to one and the same person in one and the same right is not tenable, for it is clear that if a husband, possessed in right of his wife, purchase the reversion or remainder, or if an executor have a term in his testator's right and purchase the reversion, in either instance the term will merge, and yet the husband or executor has the term in one right, and the fee in another. The ground, however, of these cases is that the reversion or remainder was acquired by the party by his own act.

The grand effect of merger is, as between the particular tenant, whose estate is annihilated, and the reversioner or remainderman, to bring the reversion or remainder into the same place and condition, as if the particular estate had never existed, or had determined by completing the period of its duration ; nevertheless the particular estate is, for all the purposes of title, to be treated as still subsisting and continuing ; and all charges, by way of rent, annuity, underlease, or judgment, are preserved in like manner and for the same time as if such extinguished particular estate were in fact in existence, so that the accelerated reversion or remainder is subjected as well to its own peculiar incumbrances as to the charges upon the merged estate, quoad its originally destined endurance. And see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 9.

It is to be particularly remarked, that where A., a tenant-in-tail, whether in possession or not, with remainder or reversion to B. in fee, there being a protector of the settlement, makes an assurance by virtue of the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, which, by reason of the nonconsent of the protector, is insufficient to bar the remainder or reversion, such assurance bars the issue in tail, and acquires a fee determinable on failure of such issue, but does not divest or displace the remainder or reversion, which, therefore, continues to subsist as an estate, expectant on the determinable fee. If, by any means, the remainder or reversion of B. become afterwards vested in A., the determinable fee does not merge in the remainder or reversion, as upon ordinary principles it would have done, but, by the express provisions of the act is enlarged, and A. has thenceforth a clear fee simple, founded, in point of title, upon the estate-tail.—3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, s. 49.

Owners of both lands and tithes, even tenants for life, are empowered to merge tithes in the lands.—6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 71, ss. 71, 81, etc. ; and see also 1 & 2 Vict. c. 64 ; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, ss. 1, 6, 7 ; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 73, ss. 18—20.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (4), it is provided that there shall not, after the commencement of that Act, be any merger by operation of law only of any estate the beneficial interest in which would not be deemed to be merged or extinguished in equity.

When an engagement has been made by simple contract, and then the same engagement is made by deed, the simple contract is merged and extinguished in the deed.

Merger, in criminal law, is abolished by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12.

Meritorious consideration, one founded upon some moral obligation ; a valuable consideration in the second degree.

Merits, Affidavit of. This instrument is necessary when a defendant seeks to set aside, for irregularity, a judgment signed or other proceeding. The term 'merits,' in an affidavit of this nature, is to be read in a technical sense, and is not to be understood to be confined to strictly moral and conscientious defences ; and defences of the Statute of Frauds or of Limitations, and of Bankruptcy and Infancy, are defences on the merits.—2 *Chit. Mersey. As to collisions in the sea channels leading to the Mersey, see 37 & 38 Vict. c. 52.

Mertlage, a church calendar or rubric.—Covel.

Merton, Statute of, 20 Hen. III. c. 4, A.D. 1235, so called because it was enacted at the Priory of Merton, in Surrey. Its principal un repealed provisions (1) allow the inclosure or 'approvement' of commons by lords of manors provided that the freeholders have sufficient pasture; (2) declare the illegitimacy of children born before marriage; and (3) allow the appointment of attorneys. See BASTARD, INCLOSURE, SOLICITOR.

Mescroyants, unbelievers.

Mese, a house and its appurtenance.—Cowel.

Mesnality, a manor held under a superior lord.

Mesnalty, the right of the mesne.—Cowel.

Mesne [fr. medius, Lat.], middle, intermediate.

Mesne Lord, a lord who holds of a superior lord.—Cowel.

Mesne process, all those writs which intervene in the progress of a suit or action between its beginning and end, as contradistinguished from primary and final process. Thus, the capias or mesne process was issued after a writ of summons, which was the primary process, and before a capias ad satisfaciendum, which was the final process, or process of execution. See IMPRISONMENT.

By the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 1, the power of arrest upon mesne process was relaxed, and confined to the case of a debtor about to quit England, and where the amount of the debt was 20*l.* or upwards. But by the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 6, it is enacted, that 'after the commencement of the act a person shall not be arrested upon mesne process in any action.' Nevertheless, where a plaintiff has good cause of action against the defendant to the amount of 50*l.* or upwards, and the defendant is about to quit England, and the absence of the defendant from England will materially prejudice the plaintiff in the prosecution of his action, a judge may order the defendant to be arrested unless or until security be found.

Mesne profits, Action of, an action of trespass brought to recover profits derived from land, whilst the possession of it has been improperly withheld; that is, the yearly value of the premises.

The action should be brought in the name of the plaintiff, who has recovered judgment in the ejectment, and lies against any person found in possession of the premises after a recovery in ejectment. It cannot be maintained against executors or administrators for the profits accruing during the lifetime of the testator or intestate, and received by him, except, indeed, for those received within six calendar months before the death of the testator or intestate, and then only provided the action be brought against the executor or administrator within six months after entering upon the administration of the estate (3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 2). The defendant may pay money into court, as in other actions.

The jury are not bound by the amount of the rent, but may give extra damages. But ground-rent paid by the defendant should be deducted from the damages. A plaintiff may recover in this action the costs of the action of ejectment.

By the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 214, damages for mesne profits may be recovered at the trial of an ejectment at the suit of the landlord against a tenant, wherever it shall appear at the trial that such tenant has been served with due notice of trial, whether the defendant shall appear upon such trial or not. See a similar enactment for the County Courts, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 51.

A claim for mesne profits in respect of the premises claimed may be joined with an action for the recovery of land (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XVII., r. 2). See EJECTMENT.

Mesne, Writ of, an ancient and abolished writ, which lay when the lord paramount distrained on the tenant paravail; the latter had a writ of mesne against the mesne lord.

Messarius [fr. messis, Lat.], a chief servant in husbandry; a bailiff.—Mon. Angl., tom. ii., p. 832.

Messenger, one who carries an errand; a forerunner.

Messengers are certain officers employed under the direction of the secretaries of state, and always ready to be sent with despatches, foreign and domestic. They were employed with the secretaries' warrants to arrest persons for treason, or other offences against the state, which did not so properly fall under the cognizance of the common law, and, perhaps, were not properly to be divulged in the ordinary course of justice.—2 Hawk. P. C. c. xvi., s. 9.

There are other officers distinguished by this appellation, as the messengers of the Lord Chancellor, Privy Council, and Exchequer, etc. Also, in bankruptcy, persons officially appointed who seize a bankrupt's property. The office of messenger of the Great Seal has been abolished by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81.

Messe thane, one who said mass; a priest.—Cowel.

Messina, harvest.—Cowel.

Metayer system. Under this, the land is divided in small farms, among single families, the landlord generally supplying the stock which the agricultural system of the country is considered to require, and receiving, in lieu of rent and profit, a fixed proportion of the produce. This proportion, which is generally paid in kind, is usually (as is implied in the words métayer, mezzaiuolo, and medietarius), one-half.—1 *Mill's Pol. Metecorn, a measure or portion of corn, given by a lord to customary tenants as a reward and encouragement for labour.—Cowel.

Metegavel [meat-tax, Sax.], a tribute or rent paid in victuals.—Cowel.

Meter [fr. mete, Sax.], an instrument of measurement, as a coal-meter, a land-meter.

Meteward, or Meteyard, a staff of a certain length wherewith measures are taken.

Methel, speech, discourse; mathlian, to speak, to harangue.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Metric system, a system in numbering of coinage, weights, measures, etc., wherein the integer is divided into fractions of a tenth, hundredth, etc., and no others. Contracts may now be made on this system. See 27 & 28 Vict. c. 117, which recites that 'for the promotion and extension of our internal as well as our foreign trade, it is expedient to legalise the use of the Metric System of weights and measures.'

Metteshep, or Mettenschep, an acknowledgment paid in a certain measure of corn; or a fine or penalty imposed on tenants for default in not doing their customary service in cutting the lord's corn.—Old Records.

Meubles meublant [Fr.], household furniture.

Meya, a mow or heap of corn.—Blount Ten. 130.

Micel-gemote. See MICHEL-GEMOTE.

Michaelmas, the feast of the Archangel Michael, celebrated on the 29th of September, and one of the usual quarter days.

Michaelmas Head Court, a meeting of the heritors of Scotland, at which the roll of freeholders used to be revised.—20 Geo. II. c. 50. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Michaelmas Sittings of the Supreme Court commence on the 2nd of November and terminate on the 21st of December (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LXI., r. 1).

Michaelmas Term begins on the 2nd and ends on the 25th of November in every year. The division of the legal year into terms is abolished so far as relates to the administration of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 26).

Michel-gemote, the great meeting or ancient parliament of the kingdom.—1 Bl. Com. 147.

Michel-synoth, the great council of the Saxons.—1 Bl. Com. 147.

Michery, theft; cheating.

Middle-man, an agent between two parties. In Ireland a person who takes land in large tracts from the proprietors, and then leases it out to the peasantry in small portions at a greatly enhanced rent.

Middlesex, Bill of, a writ anciently resorted to by the Court of Queen's Bench, in order to enlarge its jurisdiction in civil causes, which was formerly confined to actions of trespass, or other injury alleged to have been committed vi et armis. But it might always hold pleas of any civil action other than actions real, provided the defendant was an officer of the court, or in the custody of the marshal, or prison-keeper of the court. In proceedings against prisoners or officers of the court, the actions were said to be commenced by bill, in all other cases by original writ. Both are abolished by 2 Wm. IV. c. 39.

Middlesex Industrial Schools Act, 17 & 18 Vict. cap. clxix.

Middlesex Quarter Sessions. By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 71, there shall be holden for the county of Middlesex two sessions, or adjourned sessions of the peace, in every calendar month, and the first sessions in January, April, July, and October respectively, shall be the general quarter sessions of the county; and the second sessions in January, April, July, and October, shall be adjournments of the general quarter sessions. See also 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, ss. 14—17; and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 4; and as to the payment of the Assistant Judge and his Deputy, see 37 Vict. c. 7.

Middlesex Registration of Deeds, 7 Anne c. 20; and 25 Geo. II. c. 4; and see the 'Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874,' 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, s. 8, as to non-registration of Wills affecting realty in Middlesex.

Middle Term (in logic). The term which occurs in both of the premises in the syllogism, being the means of bringing together the two terms in the conclusion. See SYLLOGISM.

Midsummer-day, the summer solstice, which is on the 24th day of June, and the feast of St. John the Baptist, a festival first mentioned by Maximus Tauricensis, A.D. 400. It is generally a quarter day for the payment of rents, etc.

Mile, a measure of length or distance, containing 8 furlongs, or 1,760 yards, or 5,280 feet.

Mileage, travelling expenses, which are allowed to witnesses, sheriffs, and bailiffs, according to certain scales of fees observed by the officer of the several courts.

Milestones. The trustees of turnpike roads were, very early in the history of such roads (see 3 Geo. IV. c. 26, s. 119), under an obligation to set up and maintain milestones, but there is no such legal obligation upon the managers of public highways, although the Highway Rate, etc., Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 27, by s. 6 constitutes 'the expenses incurred by a highway authority in maintaining, replacing, or setting up milestones on any highway' a 'lawful charge upon the highway rate.'

Miles [Lat.], generally, a soldier; particularly, a knight.

Militare, to be knighted.

Military Asylum of Chelsea, for the reception of children of soldiers.—17 & 18 Vict. c. 61.

Military courts, the court of chivalry and courts martial. See CHIVALRY, COURTS OF, and COURTS MARTIAL.

Military feuds, the genuine or original feuds which were in the hands of military men, who performed military duty for their tenures. See TENURE.

Military forces. See ARMY, and also titles MILITIA and RESERVE FORCES.

Military Forces Localization Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 68; amended by 36 & 37 Vict. c. 68, s. 8; and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 84, s. 2.

Military Laws. See MARTIAL LAW.

Military Manœuvres (Autumn). See 34

& 35 Vict. c. 97; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 64; and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 58.

Military offences, those offences which are cognizable by the courts military, as insubordination, sleeping on guard, desertion, etc.

Military Savings Banks. By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 20 (which repealed former acts), the Queen may establish or continue military or regimental savings banks, for the receiving sums of money from such of the non-commissioned officers and soldiers employed in her service, either in the United Kingdom or upon foreign stations (India alone excepted), as may be desirous of depositing the same, and for receiving deposits of any money or funds whatsoever raised or paid for objects or purposes connected with non-commissioned officers and soldiers, which Her Majesty may from time to time think fit to authorise to be deposited in such savings banks. The regulation and the management of such institutions are entrusted to the Secretary at War for the time being, in concurrence with the Commander-in-Chief, and the Commissioners of the Treasury. See also 26 & 27 Vict. c. 12.

Military tenure, tenure in chivalry or knight service.

Military testament, a nuncupative will, that is, one made by word of mouth, by which a soldier may dispose of his goods, pay, and other personal chattels, without the forms and solemnities which the law requires in other cases.—1 Vict. c. 26, s. 11.

Militia, the national soldiery, as distinguished from the regular forces or standing army, being the inhabitants, or as they have been sometimes called, the trained bands of a town or county, who are armed on a short notice for their own defence. As to its origin, see 3 Hall. Cons. Hist. 262. The statutes on this subject make service compulsory upon all men between 18 and 30 who shall be selected by ballot (23 & 24 Vict. c. 120, s. 7), with exceptions for peers, clergymen, etc. (42 Geo. III. c. 90, s. 43), but by acts dating from 10 Geo. IV. c. 10, and finally in 1865 by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 46,—a temporary act, which has been continued from time to time by successive Expiring Laws Continuance Acts,—these statutes were suspended, subject to a power in the Crown to revive them by Order in Council.

Voluntary enlistment in the militia, which was the practice long before the Suspension Act was passed, is regulated by The Militia Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 49, replacing The Militia (Voluntary Enlistment) Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 69, the schedule of which contains a long list of repealed militia acts.

Milk. As to the sale of unwholesome milk, see Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 116, 9 and Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 and 1879, by s. 3 of which latter Act inspectors of nuisances and other officers may obtain, for analysis, a sample of milk at the place of delivery. See also ADULTERATION.

Millbank Prison, formerly called the Penitentiary at Millbank. A prison at Westminster, for convicts under sentence of transportation, until the sentence or order shall be executed, or the convict be entitled to freedom, or be removed to some other place of confinement. This prison is placed under the inspectors of prisons appointed by the Secretary of State, who are a body corporate, 'The Inspectors of the Millbank Prison.' The inspectors make regulations for the government thereof, subject to the approbation of the Secretary of State, and yearly reports to him, to be laid before parliament. The Secretary also appoints a governor, chaplain, medical officer, matron, etc.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 98; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 26; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 104; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 39; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 60; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 95.

Milleate, or Mill-leat, a trench to convey water to or from a mill.—7 Jac. I. c. 19.

Milled money, coined money.

Mill-holms, low meadows and other fields in the vicinity of mills, or watery places about mill dams.—Encyc. Lond.

Minage, a toll or duty paid for selling corn by the mina.—Cowel.

Minare, to dig mines.—Cowel.

Minator, a miner.—Old Records.

Minatur innocentibus, qui parcit nocentibus. 4 Co. 45.—(He threatens the innocent who spares the guilty.)

Mine [fr. mwyn or mwv, Wel., fr. maen, a stone], an excavation or cavern in the earth, which yields metal or minerals. Where stones only are produced, the places from which they are dug out are called quarries. As to what are minerals, see 2 Mod. 193; Plowd. 337; 14 M. & W. 859—872; and L. R. 1 Ch. 303.

The Crown has a right of pre-emption of any gold or silver which may be found in mines of copper, tin, iron, or lead, by 1 & 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 30, s. 4; 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 6; and 55 Geo. III. c. 134.

A man may dig mines in his own lands, but he cannot go under the land of his neighbour, for that would be trespass.—6 Ves. 147. The lord of the manor, as such, has no right, without a custom, to enter upon copyhold lands in his manor, under which there are mines or veins of coal, to bore for or work the same, for the copyholder may maintain trespass for his so doing, and also obtain an injunction against the lord to restrain him.—17 Ves. 381. But a copyholder of inheritance may dig mines in his own land by special custom.

A tenant for life may work an open mine and sink new shafts or pits to pursue the old veins. And he may also work any mines lawfully opened by a precedent tenant-in-tail, although subsequent to the settlement under which he claims; but if he open a new mine it is waste.—3 P. Wms. 288. As to his mining leases, see SETTLED LAND. As to the regulation and inspection of mines, see 35 & 36 Vict. cc. 76, 77; and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 39; and 1 Bro. & Had. Com. 512.

Coal mines only were rateable under 43 Eliz. c. 2, but the Rating Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 54, has made all mines rateable.

As to the sale or reservation of minerals by trustees, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 108.

See as to mines under or near railways, 8 Vict. c. 20, ss. 77—85, and under or near waterworks, 10 Vict. c. 17, ss. 18—27.

Minerator, a miner.—Old Records.

Minima pena corporalis est major qualibet pecuniaria. 2 Inst. 220.—(The smallest bodily punishment is greater than any pecuniary one.)

Minimè mutanda sunt quæ certam habent interpretationem. Co. Litt. 365.—(Things which have a certain interpretation are to be altered as little as possible.)

Miniment, or Muniment, the evidences or writings whereby a man is enabled to defend the title of his estate. It includes all manner of evidences.—Cowel.

Minimum est nihilo proximum.—(The smallest is next to nothing.)

Minister, an agent; one who acts not by any inherent authority, but under another.

In politics, one to whom a sovereign entrusts the administration of government. In Great Britain, the word ministry is used as a collective noun for the heads of departments in the state. The ministry, or executive government, consists of the following high officers of state, who are also members of the Cabinet Council:—The First Lord of the Treasury, the Lord Chancellor, the Lord President of the Council, the Lord Privy Seal, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the Secretaries of State for the Home Department, for Foreign Affairs, for the Colonial Department, for the War Department, and for India; of the following officers, many of whom are usually but not necessarily members of the Cabinet Council:—Chief Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and of Works and Public Buildings, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, First Lord of the Admiralty, President of the Board of Trade, Paymaster-General of the Forces, Judge Advocate-General, Postmaster-General, Master-General of the Ordnance, Chief Secretary for Ireland, President of the Local Government Board. It sometimes happens that a statesman who holds no office is a member of the Cabinet. The First Lord of the Treasury is at the head of the government, and appoints his colleagues. Besides the officers above-mentioned, there are a number of others, including the law officers of the Crown, the Under Secretaries for the different departments, the Lord Lieutenant and the Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and the law officers of Ireland and Scotland, and the great officers of Her Majesty's household, who are also members of the ministry, and who resign their offices whenever the Prime Minister who has appointed them resigns. All the chief offices in a ministry, and most of the inferior offices, are conferred upon peers and members of the House of Commons who agree with the First Lord of the Treasury in general principles of home and foreign policy, and who act together in parliament for the promotion of measures in accordance with those principles.

In religion, a pastor of a church, chapel, or meeting-house, etc.

Ministerial, attendant; acting under superior authority; the word is used in opposition to judicial.

Ministrant, the party cross-examining a witness under the old system of the ecclesiastical courts.

Ministri regis (ministers of the king), applied to the judges of the realm, and to all those who hold ministerial offices in the government.—2 Inst. 208.

Ministry [contracted fr. ministry], office; service. Those members of the government who are in the cabinet. See MINISTER.

Minor, a person under age, who is not yet arrived at the power of managing his own affairs. See INFANT.

Minor ante tempus agere non potest in casu proprietatis nec etiam convenire; differetur usque ætatem; sed non cadit breve. 2 Inst. 291.—(A minor before majority cannot act in a case of property, nor even agree; it should be deferred until majority; but the writ does not fail.)

Minor 17 annis, non admittitur fore executores. 6 Co. 68.—(A minor under seventeen years of age is not admitted to be an executor.)

Minor minorem custodire non debet; alios enim præsumitur male regere qui seipsum regere nescit. Co. Litt. 88.—(A minor cannot be guardian to a minor, for he is presumed to direct others badly who knows not how to direct himself.)

Minor non tenetur respondere durante minori ætate; nisi in causâ dotis, propter favorem. 3 Bulst. 143.—(A minor is not bound to reply during his minority, except as a matter of favour in a cause of dower.)

Minor, qui infra etatem 12 annorum fuerit, utlagari non potest, nec extra legem poni, quia ante talem etatem, non est sub lege aliquid, nec in decennid. Co. Litt. 128.—(A minor who is under twelve years of age cannot be outlawed, nor placed without the law, because before such age he is not under any law, nor in a decennary.)

Minora regalia, the lesser prerogatives of the Crown, relating to the revenue.

Minority [fr. minor, Lat.], the state of being under age, i.e., twenty-one years. See FULL AGE, INFANT, GUARDIAN, EQUITY. Also, the smaller number.

Mint [fr. moneta, Lat.; mynet, Sax., money, from mynehan, to coin], the place where money is coined. The mint of Great Britain is situated near the Tower of London. By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 10 (repealing various acts), the laws relating to the coinage and Her Majesty's mint are consolidated and amended. See COIN. As to colonial coinage, see 29 & 30 Vict. c. 65. See MASTER OF THE MINT.

Also, a place of privilege in Southwark, near the Queen's Prison, where persons formerly sheltered themselves from justice under the pretext that it was an ancient palace of the Crown. The privilege is now abolished; and the statutes 8 & 9 Wm. III. c. 27; 9 Geo. I. c. 28; 11 Geo. I. c. 22; and 1 Geo. IV. c. 116, enact, that persons opposing the execution of any process in such pretended privileged places within the bills of mortality, or abusing any officer in his endeavour to execute his duty therein, so that he receives bodily hurt; and all persons aiding and abetting such opposition, shall be felons, and shall be punished accordingly.

Mint-mark. The masters and workers of the mint, in the indentures made with them, agree 'to make a privy mark in the money they make, of gold and silver, so that they may know which moneys were of their own making'; after every trial of the pix, having proved their moneys to be lawful they are entitled to their quietus under the Great Seal, and to be thereanent discharged from all suits or actions; they then change the privy mark, that so the moneys from which they are not yet discharged may be distinguished from those for which they are; they use the new mark until another trial of the pix. See PYX, and 33 Vict. c. 10, s. 12.

Mint-master, one who manages the coinage. See MASTER OF THE MINT.

Mintage, that which is coined or stamped.

Minute, 60 seconds, or the 60th part of a degree or hour; also a memorandum.

Mirror des Justices. This singular work has raised much doubt and difference of opinion concerning its antiquity. Some have pronounced it older than the Conquest, others have ascribed it to the time of Edward II.

This book, which bears the name of Andrew Horne, and is written with very little precision, treats of all branches of the law, whether civil or criminal. Besides this, it gives a cursory retrospect of some changes ordained by former kings; enumerates a list of abuses, as the author terms them, of the common law, proposing, at the same time, what he considers to be desirable corrections. He does the same with Magna Charta, the statutes of Merton and Marlbridge, and some principal acts in the reign of Edward I.—2 Reeves, c. xii. 358.

Mis, an inseparable particle used in composition, to mark an ill sense or depravation of the meaning, as miscomputation or misaccounting, i.e., false reckoning. Several of the words following are illustrations of the force of this monosyllable.—Todd's Johnson's Diet.

Misa, a compact, a firm peace.—Old Records.

Misadventure, Excusable homicide by, also termed homicide per infortunium; it arises where a man, doing a lawful act, without any intention of hurt, unfortunately kills another, as where a person is at work with a hatchet, and the head of it flies off and kills a bystander, or is shooting at a mark and undesignedly kills a man, for the act is lawful, and the effect is merely accidental. So where a parent is moderately correcting a child, a master his apprentice or scholar, or an officer punishing a criminal, and happens to occasion his death, it is only misadventure, for the act of correction was lawful; but if he exceeds the bounds of moderation, either in the manner, the instrument, or the quantity of punishment, and death ensue, it is manslaughter at least, and in some cases, according to the circumstances, murder, for the act of immoderate correction is unlawful.—Fost. 275; 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 52.

Misallege, to cite falsely as a proof or argument.

Misappropriation by Servants Act, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 103, provides that servants taking their masters' corn, etc., without authority, for the purpose of giving the same to their masters' horses, etc., shall not be guilty of felony, but shall be liable to imprisonment.

Miscarriage, a failure of justice. See 29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 4.

Miscarriage, Producing. See ABORTION.

Mischief. This word is often used as signifying the evil or danger which a statute is meant to cure or avoid.

Mischievous animals. As to the liability of the owners for damage done by such animals, see ANIMALS.

Miscognizant, ignorant of, unacquainted with.

Miscontinuance, cessation, intermission.

Misdemeanour, a species of crime or offence comprehending all breaches of public law less than felony, as libels, conspiracies, assaults, etc., which are not so atrocious as murder, burglary, arson, etc., which are felonies. As to bail in misdemeanours, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 32. Consult Archbold's Crim. Plead., and Russell on Crimes.

Misdirection, an error in law made by a judge in charging a jury. See now Jud. Act, 1875, s. 22, and titles, NEW TRIAL and NON-DIRECTION.

Mise, disbursement, costs; also a tax or tallage, etc.; also, the issue in a writ of right. It is sometimes corruptly used for mease or mees, i.e., a message.

Miselli, leprous persons.—Cowel.

Mise-money, money paid by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, etc.—Blount.

Misera est servitus, ubi jus est vagum aut incertum. 4 Inst. 245.—(It is a wretched state of slavery which subsists where the law is vague or uncertain.)

Miserabile depositum, an involuntary deposit under pressing necessity.—Civ. Law.

Miserere (have mercy). The name and first word of one of the penitential psalms being that which was commonly used to be given by the ordinary to such condemned malefactors as were allowed the benefit of clergy: whence it is also called the psalm of mercy.

Misericordia, an arbitrary amerciaiment or punishment imposed on any person for an offence. It is thus called, according to Fitzherbert, because it ought to be but small and less than that required by Magna Charta.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Also, a discharge of all manner of amerciaiments, which a person might incur in the forest. See CAPIAS PRO FINE. See 1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 527.

Misericordia communis, a fine set on a whole county or hundred.

Misericordia domini regis est, quâ quis per juramentum legalium hominum de vicineto eatenus amerciandus est, ne aliquid de suo honorabili contenemento amittat. Co. Litt.—(The mercy of our lord the king is that by which everyone is to be amerced by a jury of good men from his immediate neighbourhood, lest he should lose any part of his own honourable tenement.)

Misevenire, to fail or succeed ill.

Misfeazance, a misdeed or trespass; also, the improper performance of some lawful act.

Misfeazor, a trespasser.

Misfortune. See CHANGE.

Misjoinder of Parties. See PARTIES.

Miskenning, a wrongful citation.—Du Cange; Anc. Inst. Eng.

Misnomer, a wrong name. In real and mixed actions at common law a misnomer was a ground of abatement, but not in any personal action; but in all cases in which a misnomer would, but for the following act, have been pleadable in abatement, the defendant was at liberty to cause the declaration to be amended at the plaintiff's cost by inserting the right name. And this was done by taking out a summons before a judge at chambers, founded on an affidavit of the right name, and in case the summons was discharged, the costs of such application were paid by the party applying, if the judge thought fit.—3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 11. Where a plaintiff sued a defendant by his wrong Christian name, but declared against him by his right Christian name, the proceeding was regular under the foregoing act of parliament.

Misnomers in civil proceedings are now curable by Order XVI., Rule 2, and Order LIX., Rule 2; and misnomers in criminal pleading by 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 19.

Misnomers in lists, notices, or voting papers, etc., required by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, do not, by s. 241 of that act, hinder the full operation of it, 'provided the description be such as to be commonly understood,' and there is a similar provision in relation to lists of parliamentary voters, etc., at the end of s. 10 of the Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843, 6 Vict. c. 18.

As to misnomer of a juror, see Reg v. Mellor, D. & P., C. C. R. 468; 4 Jur. N. S. 214.

Mispleading. See JEOPAILS.

Misprision [fr. mépris, Fr.], neglect, negligence, or oversight.

All such high offences as are under the degree of capital, but nearly bordering thereon, are misprisions; and it is said that a misprision is contained in every treason and felony whatsoever, and that, if the Crown so please, the offender may be proceeded against for the misprision only. And upon the same principle, while the court of Star Chamber existed, it was held that the sovereign might remit a prosecution for treason, and cause the delinquent to be censured in that court, merely for a high misdemeanour; as in the case of Roger, Earl of Rutland, in 43 Eliz., concerned in Essex's rebellion. Every great misdemeanour, according to Coke, which has no certain term appointed by the law, is sometimes called a misprision.

Misprisions are divided in the text-books into two kinds :—

(1) Negative, the concealment of what ought to be revealed; such is misprision of treason, the bare knowledge and concealment of treason without any degree of assent, for any assent makes the party a principal; as the concealment, construed to be aiding and abetting, did at the common law; but it was enacted by st. 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 10, that a bare concealment of treason shall be only held a misprision. Information will not lie for this offence, but indictment, as for capital crimes. There must be two witnesses to support the case.—7 Wm. III. c. 3; 1 Hale P. C. 374; 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 165, 302, 426; 4 Br. & Had. 97 et seq.

Besides the last described offence, the mere concealment of a felony is criminal, and is called misprision of felony: but if there be an assent, this makes the person assenting either a principal or accessory. Theftbote, and concealing treasure-trove, are each of their species of negative misprision.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 232.

(2) Positive, otherwise denominated contempt or high misdemeanours, such as the mal-administration of such high officers as are in public trust and employment, usually punishable by parliamentary impeachment; also, embezzlement of the public money, punishable by fine and imprisonment; also, such contempts of the executive magistrate as demonstrate themselves by some arrogant and undutiful behaviour towards the sovereign and government. And to endeavour to dissuade a witness from giving evidence, to disclose an examination before the Privy Council, or to advise a prisoner to stand mute (all of which are impediments to justice), are high misprisions and contempts, punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Misprisions of clerks are mistakes made by clerks, etc., in writing or keeping records.

Misrecital, a wrong recital. If it be in the beginning of a deed, which goes not to the end of a deed, it shall not hurt, but if it go to the end of a sentence, so that the deed is limited by it, it is vicious.—Cart. 149.

Misrepresentation, i.e., suggestio falsi, in a matter of substance essentially material to the subject, whether by acts or by words, by manœuvres or by positive assertions whereby a person is misled and injured, and a fraud perpetrated. It is immaterial whether the misrepresenter knew the matter to be false, or asserted it, without knowing if it were true or false; for the affirmance of that which is not known to be true is as unjustifiable as the assertion of that which is known to be false, since it is equally a means of deception. But equity would not relieve, if the misrepresentation were of a trifling or immaterial thing, or if the other party did not trust to it, or was not misled by it, or if it were vague and inconclusive, in its own nature, or if it were upon a matter of opinion or fact equally open to the inquiries of both parties, and in regard to which neither could be presumed to have confided in the other for vigilantibus, non dormientibus, æquitas subvenit. Equity cannot indemnify a person from the consequences of indolence and folly, or of careless indifference and neglect of easily accessible means of information. See more fully under the title DECEIT.

Misrepresentation of solvency, etc. By 9 Geo. IV. c. 14, s. 6, no action lies in respect of any representation of the credit, trade, dealings, etc., of another, to obtain credit for that other, unless it be in writing, signed by the party to be charged therewith. See DECEIT.

Missa, the mass.

Missæ presbyter, a priest in orders.—Blount.

Missal, the mass-book.

Misstaicus, a messenger.—Old Records.

Missura, the ceremonies used in the Romish Church to recommend and dismiss a dying person.

Mistake, misconception, error.

The word 'mistake,' as it has been employed in Chancery, is to be understood as an unintentional act or omission, arising from ignorance or imposture. Mistakes are either (1), in a point of law; or (2), of a matter of fact.

As to the former, equity regards the well-known and ancient maxim, Ignorantia legis neminem excusat; for 'otherwise,' observed Lord Ellenborough, Bilbie v. Lumley, 2 East, 469 (1802), 'there is no saying to what extent the excuse of ignorance might be carried.'

The following propositions illustrate this maxim: Where an obligee releases one of two joint-obligors, supposing that, in point of law, the other will still be bound, he nevertheless releases both, and equity will not relieve him, provided his release have not been procured by fraud. So, where a person, having a power of appointment, executes it absolutely without a power of revocation, upon a notion that in law a voluntary deed is always revocable, he is not entitled to relief, unless indeed there had been an intention of inserting such a power, and it has been omitted by mistake in the draft. And all agreements entered into with good faith, but under a mistake of law, will be binding on all the parties, especially those agreements which seek to preserve the honour and peace of families, whose establishment is part of the final cause of government.

It is, however, to be remarked that if a person acting in plain ignorance of a settled principle of law is induced to give up, by way of compromise, a right or a portion of his indisputable property, of which he has no knowledge, equity will relieve him from the effect of his error, the misapprehension that he possesses no title at all to property being held to constitute a mistake of fact, i.e., the fact of ownership, arising from a mistake of law. And where a man having a right to an estate, purchased it of another person, being ignorant of his own title, the vendor was compelled to repay the purchase-money, with interest from the time of filing the bill, and costs.—Bingham v. Bingham, 1 Ves. 126 (1748). Equity is indeed disinclined to sustain even family settlements, where there is a mixture of mistake of title, gross personal ignorance, liability to imposition, habitual intoxication, or want of professional advice.

Surprise joined to a mistake of law invalidates agreements upon the equitable ground that those who are unable to protect themselves, and of whom undue advantage is taken, ought to be protected.

As to the other kind of mistakes, the fundamental rule is that an act done under a mistake or ignorance of a material fact, i.e., a fact essential to the character of the act, and an efficient cause of its being done, is relieved against in equity, provided compensation can be made for the injury occasioned by it; and this although there be no fraud and the parties are entirely innocent. But besides the materiality of the fact, it must also be a fact which the exercise of reasonable diligence could not have ascertained; for if so, equity will not relieve, as that would be to encourage culpable neglect. Where, however, each party is equally innocent, and there is not any concealment by one of facts which the other has a right to know, and there is no surprise or imposition, the mistake or ignorance, whether mutual, or on one side only (or unilateral, as the Scotch law expresses it), is treated as laying no foundation for equitable interference. It is strictly damnum absque injuriâ.—1 Sto. Eq. Jur. chap. v., and see Lord St. Leonards' V. and P. 179. A mistake of a fact and an ignorance of a fact differ in meaning; the former supposes some error of opinion as to the real facts; but the latter may be mere want of knowledge without any error of opinion. The two phrases are, however, convertible, and are commonly used synonymously.

Equity has been frequently resorted to, in order to amend written agreements, which, on account of a plain mistake (clearly and satisfactorily proved), do not set forth the precise intent of the parties. 'No doubt,' said Lord Hardwicke, Henkle v. R. E. Assur. Co. (1 Ves. 317 (1749)), 'but this court has jurisdiction to relieve in respect of a plain mistake in contracts in writing as well as against frauds in contracts in writing, so that, if reduced into writing contrary to the intent of the parties, that, on proper proof, would be rectified.' Marriage settlements and conveyances are on the same grounds rectified and made consistent with the purpose intended.

Parol evidence is admissible to vary, alter, or explain written instruments on the ground of accident, mistake, or fraud, and although this is certainly an exception to the rule excluding the reception of parol evidence against written agreements, yet it is obvious that both the exception and the rule stand upon the same ground of policy—the suppression of fraud and the promotion of good faith and confidence.

But besides the relief granted, where the fact of the mistake is clearly established, assistance will be extended to those cases in which the mistake is fairly implied from the nature of the transactions; thus, in the instance of a joint loan to two or more obligors, who give a joint bond for its repayment, equity will make it joint and several, since the debt being joint, the plain inference is that it was the intent of the parties to attach the responsibility to each obligor and to all equally, which is not affected by a joint bond, for in that case on the death of one obligor the survivor only is liable at law to be sued for the debt; equity therefore acts upon the presumption that the omission arose from a blunder or mistake.

Equity will also supply defects in conveyances occasioned by mistake, as a surrender in copyhold transfers for valuable, but not for merely meritorious, consideration; livery of seisin in feoffments; and instruments given up or cancelled by mistake, and in ignorance of the facts, upon the ground that the party in whose favour they were made is conscientiously entitled to the benefit of such instruments. Besides, equity regards not the outward form but rather the inward substance and essence of the matter.

Defective executions of all kinds of powers arising from accident or mistake, are relieved against, and the defect supplied by compelling the person seised of the legal estate to convey in the manner pointed out by the defective appointment in favour of the donee's creditors, bonâ fide purchasers for value, mortgagees, lessees, wives, or children, and also in favour of charities, against remaindermen and heirs-at-law duly provided for, but such relief must not operate any injustice to others or involve a breach of trust, and there must be an absence of all counter equity; neither must the intention of the author of the power be thereby defeated, nor the enactments of an act of parliament contravened. See West v. Ray, 2 Eq. Rep. 431 (1854). But as a general rule, the non-execution of a power is not aided, unless brought about by fraud. For equity will not do that for a person which he does not think fit to do for himself. The exception to this general rule is, that where the power is coupled with a trust, to the execution of which the parties looked with confidence, then equity will relieve against its non-execution, for the benefit of the cestuis que trust.—Tollet v. Tollet, 2 P. Wms. 489.

Obvious mistakes or omissions in a will can be rectified or supplied in equity, when they are apparent upon its face or may be made out on a due construction of its terms, for in such cases intention prevails over language. Parol evidence or evidence out of (dehors) the will is not admissible to vary or control its terms, although it is so to remove a latent ambiguity. Equity will correct mistakes in the computation of legacies, in the property intended to be given, or in the names, descriptions, or number of the legatees.

Where there is an excessive appointment under a power by deed, it is void quoad the excess, the execution being rendered effectual, so far as the appointment is warranted by the power; valeat quantum valere potest.

If a testator's intention be not consistent with the policy of the law so that it cannot be specifically acted upon, yet equity will give effect to such intention, as nearly as the rules of law will allow, by applying what is technically called the doctrine of cy-près (i.e., as near to), which is simply a practical and legal scheme to carry out an intent, which is strictly impracticable and not perfectly consistent with legal principles, as where lands are limited to an unborn person for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail. As such limitations are clearly incapable of taking effect, since the common law rule prohibited the limitation of a possibility upon a possibility, and made the remainder to the issue absolutely void, this doctrine, in order to prevent the total frustration of the intention in favour of the issue, gives to the parent the estate-tail, which was designed for the issue, under which estate-tail, unless barred by some act on the part of the parent, the lands will descend to the persons intended to have been made tenants-in-tail by purchase. The intention that the testator's bounty shall flow to the issue is considered as paramount to that which regulates the manner of their taking, and the latter is therefore sacrificed.

This doctrine does not apply to limitations of personalty, except in the case of charities (see CY-PRÈS), or to deeds, or to any attempt made to limit a succession of life estates to the issue of an unborn person, either for a definite or indefinite series of generations; or to a limitation in fee simple for the children of unborn persons. See further as to this doctrine, Fearne's Cont. Rem. and 2 Lord St. Leonards on Powers.

While equity will redress a mistake as between the original parties and their privies, it will neither relieve against mere accidents, nor rectify mistakes so as to affect bonâ fide purchasers for value without notice, for the mistakes or ignorances of parties to conveyances as to their claims cannot be allowed to be turned to the prejudice of such.

In cases of mistake, the time of limitation, which by analogy to that prescribed by the 21 Jac. I. c. 16, is held to bar the remedy in courts of equity, begins to run from the time of the discovery of the mistake.—2 Chit. Eq. Ind. by Mac. 1422.

The rectification or setting aside or cancellation of written instruments is part of the business assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34).

In criminal cases a mistake of fact is an excuse, as when a man, intending to do a lawful act, does that which is unlawful.

Mistery [fr. métier, Fr.], a trade or calling.—Cowel.

Mistress, the proper style of the wife of an esquire or a gentleman.

Mistrial, an erroneous trial.

Misuser, abuse of any liberty or benefit which works a forfeiture of it.

Mitigation, abatement of anything penal, harsh, or painful; an address in mitigation is a speech made by the defendant or his counsel to the judge, after verdict or plea of guilty, and which may be followed by a speech in aggravation from the prosecuting counsel.

By the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 110, justices were prohibited from mitigating minimum penalties in pursuance of any power of mitigating penalties conferred on such justices by any local or private act of parliament; but this act is repealed, as to England, by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, which gives an almost unlimited power of mitigating such penalties as may be imposed by justices.

Mitior sensus (the more favourable acceptance).

Mitius imperanti melius paretur. 3 Inst. 24.—(He is better obeyed who commands leniently.)

Mittendo manuscriptum pedis finis, an abolished judicial writ addressed to the treasurer and chamberlain of the Exchequer to search for and transmit the foot of a fine acknowledged before justices in eyre, into the Common Pleas.—Reg. Orig. 14.

Mitter le droit (to pass a right).—Co. Litt. 273 a. See RELEASE.

Mitter l'estate (to pass an estate). See RELEASE.

Mittimus (we send), a writ for removing and transferring records from one court to another. Also a precept or command in writing, directed to the gaoler or keeper of some prison for the receiving and safe keeping of an offender charged with any crime, until he be delivered by due course of law. As to writs into a county palatine, see C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 122.

Mittre à large (to set or put at liberty).

Mixed actions, suits at common law partaking of the nature of real and personal actions, by which some real property was demanded, and also personal damages for a wrong sustained, were so called. They substantially partook, however, of the character of real actions, and were often so called, but they are now abolished, except the action of ejectment.—3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27. Correctly speaking, however, ejectment is in its form a species of the personal action of trespass.—Steph. Plead. app. vii. See now ACTION.

Those in Roman law, in which some specific thing was demanded, and where also some personal obligations were claimed to be performed.—Hallifax on Roman Law, 85.

Mixed contract, one in which one of the parties confers a benefit on the other, and requires of the latter something of less value than what he has given; as a legacy charged with something of less value than the legacy itself.—Civ. Law.

Mixed government, a form of government, combining monarchy, aristocracy, and democracy, like that of the British Empire.

Mixed larceny, otherwise called compound or complicated larceny, that which is combined with circumstances of aggravation or violence to the person, or taking from a house. See LARCENY.

Mixed laws, those which concern both persons and property.

Mixed property, a compound of realty and personality.

Mixed questions [questions mixtes, Fr.], those which arise from the conflict of foreign and domestic laws.

Mixed questions of law and fact, cases in which a jury are to find the particular facts, and the court is to decide upon the legal quality of those facts by the aid of established rules of law, independently of any general inference or conclusion to be drawn by a jury. All technical expressions, such as asportation, conversion, acceptance, etc., are, in their application, partly matters of law, partly matters of fact. See 6 East, 3; 1 T. R. 167; and Taylor's Evid., s. 24 et seq.

Mixed subjects of property, such as fall within the definition of things real, but which are attended nevertheless with some of the legal qualities of things personal, as emblements, fixtures, and shares in public undertakings, connected with land. Besides these, there are others which, though things personal in point of definition, are, in respect of some of their legal qualities, of the nature of things real; such are animals feræ nature, charters and deeds, court rolls and other evidences of the land, together with the chests in which they are contained, ancient family pictures, ornaments, tombstones, coat of armour, with pennons and other ensigns, and especially heirlooms.

Mixed tithes, tithes of wool, milk, pigs, etc., consisting of natural products, but nurtured and preserved in part by the care of man. See Com. Dig. 'Disines,' and TITHES.

Mobiliasequuntur personam. Story's Conf. of laws, s. 378.—(Moveables follow the person.)

Mobles [fr. mobilia, Lat.], moveable goods; furniture. Obsolete word.

Mockadoes, a kind of cloth made in England, mentioned in 23 Eliz. c. 9.

Mocurrery, lands to let on a lease.—Indian.

Model, a representation or copy of a thing. The 54 Geo. III. c. 56, gives a copyright in models.

Moderata misericordia, a writ founded on Magna Charta, which lies for him who is amerced in a court, not of record, for any transgression beyond the quality or quantity of the offence; it is addressed to the lord of the court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amercement of the parties.—N. N. B. 167; F. N. B. 76.

Moderate castigavit (he moderately corrected).

Moderator, a president or chairman.

Modiatio, a certain duty paid for every tierce of wine.—Mon. Angl. t. ii. p. 194.

Modification, the term usually applied to the decree of the Teind Court, awarding a suitable stipend to the minister of a parish.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Modius, a measure, usually a bushel.

Modius terræ vel agri, a quantity of ground containing in length and breadth 100 feet.—Mon. Angl. iii. 200.

Modo et formâ (in manner and form), a phrase formerly used in pleading. It was the nature of a traverse to deny the matter of fact in the adverse pleading in the manner and form in which it was alleged, and, therefore, to put the opposite party to prove it to be true in manner and form as well as in general effect. The plea of non est factum, and the replication deinjuriâ (now abolished), were the only negative traverses not pleaded modo et formâ. These words were in no case strictly essential, so as to render their omission a cause of demurrer. See now PLEADING.

Modus decimandi, a particular manner of tithing arising from immemorial usage, differing from the payment of one-tenth of the annual increase.

It is sometimes a pecuniary compensation, as twopence per acre for the tithe of land; sometimes a compensation in work and labour, as that the parson shall only have the twelfth cock of hay and not the tenth, in consideration of the owner's making it for him; sometimes in lieu of a large quantity of crude or imperfect tithe, the parson shall have a less quantity when arrived to greater maturity, as a couple of fowls in lieu of tithe eggs and the like. Any means, in short, whereby the general law of tithing is altered, and a new method of taking tithes is introduced, is called a modus decimandi, or special manner of tithing.

To make a good and sufficient modus, the following rules must be observed :—

- (1) It must be certain and invariable.
- (2) The substitution must be beneficial to the parson, and not for the emolument of third persons only.
- (3) It must be something different from the thing compounded for.
- (4) The payment of one species of tithe will not discharge a modus for another.
- (5) The substitution must be in its nature as durable as the tithes discharged by it.
- (6) The modus must not be too large; for that is a rank modus.
- (7) There must be evidence of usage for thirty years, etc., in accordance with 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 100.—2 Steph. Com.; bk. iv., pt. ii., ch. 3.

Modus de non decimando non valet.—(An agreement not to take tithes avails not.)

Modus et conventio vincunt legem. 2 Co. 73.—(Custom and agreement overrule law.)

Modus legem dat donationi. Co. Litt. 19.—(Custom gives law to the gift.)

Modus levandi fines. The statute 18 Edw. I. See FINES.

Moerda, the secret killing of another; murder.—Teutonic word. 4 Bl. Com. 194.

Mofussil, separated, particularised; the subordinate divisions of a district, in contradistinction to Sadder or Sudder, which implies the chief seat of government.—Indian.

Mofussil-Dewanny adawlut, provincial court of justice.—Ibid.

Mohatra [Fr.], a fraudulent contract to screen usury.

Moidore, a gold coin of Portugal, value 27s.

Moiety [fr. moitié, Fr.], one of two equal parts; an undivided half.

Molendinum, a mill.—Old Records.

Molendum, a grist; a certain quantity of corn sent to a mill to be ground.

Molestation, the name of an action competent to the proprietor of a landed estate against those who disturb his possession. It is chiefly used in questions of commonry or of controverted marches.—Scotch Law.

Molitura, or Molta, the toll or multure paid for grinding corn at a mill.

Molitura libera, a free grinding or liberty of a mill without paying toll.—Paroch. Antiq. 236.

Mollah, a doctor of laws.—Arabic.

Mollis-bœdling. See BÆDLING.

Molliter manus imposit. An officer may lay hands upon another to turn him out of church (for instance), and prevent his disturbing the congregation; and if sued for this and the like battery, he may set forth the whole case, and state that he laid hands upon him gently (molliter manus imposuit) for this purpose.—3 Steph. Com.

Molman, a man subject to do service.—Old Records.

Molmutian, or Molmutin laws, the laws of Dunvallo Molmutius, sixteenth king of the Britons, who reigned above four hundred years before the birth of Christ. These were the first published laws in Britain; and, together with those of Queen Mercia, were translated by Gildas into Latin.—Usher's Primord. 126.

Molneda, Mulneda, a mill-pond or pond.—Paroch. Antiq. 135.

Molta. See MOLITURA.

Mona, a name for the Isle of Anglesea or the Isle of Man—perhaps for both.

Monachus, a monk.

Monarchy [fr. μόναρχος, Gk.], a government in which the supreme power is vested in a single person. Where a monarch is invested with absolute power, the monarchy is termed despotic; where the supreme power is virtually in the laws, though the majesty of government and the administration are vested in a single person, it is a limited monarchy. It is hereditary, where the regal power descends immediately from the pos-essor to the next heir by blood, as in our country; or elective, as was formerly the case in Poland.

Monasteries Dissolution Acts, 27 Hen. VIII. c. 28; 31 Hen. VIII. c. 13; 32 Hen. VIII. cc. 7, 24; and consult Br. & Had. Com. i. 466; and ii. 68.

Monasticon, a book giving an account of monasteries, convents, and religious houses.

Moneta est justum medium et mensura rerum commutabilium, nam per medium monetæ fit omnium rerum conveniens et justa æstimatio. Dav. 18.—(Money is the just medium and measure of commutable things, for by the medium of money a convenient and just estimation of all things is made.)

Monetagium, Monya, or Moneyage, called also foagium, a certain tribute formerly paid by tenants to their lord every third year, that he should not change the money which he had coined, when it was lawful for certain great men to coin money, but not of silver and gold, in their territories. Abrogated by 1 Hen. I. c. 2.—Hale's Hist. 217.

Also a mintage, and the right of coining or minting money.

Monetandi jus comprehenditur in regalibus quæ nunquam à regio sceptro abdicantur. Dav. 18.—(The right of coining money is included in those rights of royalty which are never separated from the kingly sceptre.)

Money [fr. moneta, Lat., fr. monendo, because by the impression upon it we are warned whose it is], 'the name given to the commodity adopted to serve as the marchandise banmale, or universal equivalent of all other commodities; and for which individuals readily exchange their surplus products or services.'—Brande.

The materials of which it is now usually made are gold, silver, or other metal, and paper; its currency and the intrinsic or denominated value put upon it are by virtue of the prerogative of the Crown. It may be said that the substitution of paper for gold or silver replaces a very expensive medium of commerce by one much less costly, and sometimes more convenient, the expediency and operation of which substitution belongs to the political economy of a state. The word 'sterling,' so often found in deeds, as applied to money, seems to be derived from Easterlings, a company of merchants, who, shortly after the Norman Conquest, were employed in regulating the coinage, and means 'English coined money.'

For a comparative table of the value of English money from the Conquest to Elizabeth, see 3 Hall. Mid. Ages, 370. And see COIN, TENDER.

Money-bill, in parliamentary language an act by which money is directed to be raised from the subject, for any purpose or in any shapewhatsoever, either for governmental purposes, and collected from the whole kingdom generally, or for the benefit of a particular district, and collected in that district, as parish rates.

With respect to these bills the House of Commons are so reasonably jealous of their privilege of imposing new taxes upon the subject, that they will not suffer the House of Lords to exert any other power but that of rejection; they will not pass a money-bill introduced in the House of Lords, nor permit the least alteration or amendment to be made by the House of Lords in the mode of taxing the people by bills of this nature. See 1 Bl. Com. 170, 184.

Money-broker, a money changer; a scrivener or jobber; one who lends or raises money to or for others.

Money counts. Simple contracts, express or implied, resulting in mere debts, are of so frequent occurrence as causes of action, that certain concise forms of counts were devised for suing upon them. These were called the indebitatus or money counts. Consult Bullen and Leake on Pleading. See now PLEADING.

Money land. In equity, land articleed or devised to be sold, and turned into money, is considered as money; and money articleed or bequeathed to be invested in land, has, in equity, many of the qualities of real estate, and is descendible and devisable as such according to the rules of inheritance in other cases, and this upon the ground that equity regards substance and not form, and will further the intention of parties. See LAND.

Money agreed or directed to be laid out, so fully becomes land as, 1st, not to be personal assets; 2ndly, to be subject to the courtesy of the husband, and it should now seem to the dower of the wife (3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 105); 3rdly, to pass as land by will, if subject to the real use at the time the will was made; 4thly, not to pass as money by a general bequest to a legatee, but it will by a particular description, as so much money to be laid out in land, or by a bequest of all the testator's estate in law and equity. But equity will not consider money as land, unless the covenant or direction to lay it out in land be express. See 1 Wh. & Trid. L. C., 4th ed., 833.

The 7 Geo. IV. c. 45, which repealed the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 56 (commonly called Lord Eldon's Act), for barring quasi entails of money directed to be laid out in lands to be settled, was repealed by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, except so far as related to proceedings commenced under it before the 1st of January, 1834. The 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, enacts (s. 71) that lands to be sold of any tenure where the money arising from the sale is subject to be invested in the purchase of lands to be settled, so that any person, if the lands were purchased, would have an estate tail therein, and also money subject to be invested in the purchase of lands to be settled, so that any person, if the lands were purchased, would have an estate-tail therein, shall, for the purposes of the act, be treated as the lands to be purchased, and be considered subject to the same estates as the lands to be purchased would have been actually subject to.

Money-Orders. As to the issue of money-orders by the Post Office, see 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96, s. 38, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 88. As to the fraudulent issue of money-orders by post-office officers, see s. 4 of the last-mentioned act.

Monger [fr. Mangian, Sax., to trade], a dealer or seller. It is seldom or never used alone, or otherwise than after the name of any commodity, to express a seller of such commodity.

Also, a little fishing vessel.—13 Eliz. c. 11.

Moniers, or Moneyeers, ministers of the Mint; also bankers.—Cowel.

Moniment, a memorial, superscription, or record.

Monition, a summons or citation; a direction by an ecclesiastical judge to a clergyman to abstain from practices contrary to ecclesiastical law. See Dale's case, 6 Q. B. D. 376.

Monitory Letters, communications of warning and admonition sent from an ecclesiastical judge, upon information of scandal and abuses within the cognizance of his court.

Monmouth, county of, made one of the counties of the realm of England by 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26.

Monocracy, a government by one person.

Monogamy [fr. μόνος, Gk., single; and γάμος, marriage], marriage of one husband to one wife.

Monomachy [fr. μόνος, Gk.; and μάχη, fight], a duel; a single combat.

It was anciently allowed by law, for the trial or proof of crimes. It was even permitted in pecuniary causes, but it is now forbidden both by the civil law and canon laws.

Monomania, insanity upon a particular subject.

Monopolia dicitur, cum unus solus aliquod genus mercaturæ universum emit, pretium ad suum libitum statuens. 11 Co. 86.—(It is said to be a monopoly when one person alone buys up the whole of one kind of commodity, fixing a price at his own pleasure.)

Monopolies, Statute of, 21 Jac. I. c. 3. See next title.

Monopoly [fr. μόνος, Gk., single; and πωλέω, to sell], the exclusive privilege of selling any commodity. A license or privilege allowed by the Crown, for the sole buying, selling, making, working, and using of anything whatsoever, whereby the subject is restrained from that liberty of manufacturing or trading which he had before.

Such grants were common before the Stuarts, and were very oppressive and injurious during the reign of Elizabeth. The grievance became so insupportable, that, notwithstanding the power of granting monopolies was a valuable part of the prerogative, they were abolished by the 21 Jac. I. c. 3, 1624, which declares all monopolies, grants, and letters-patent for the sole buying, selling, and making of goods and manufactures, null and void. It excepts patents for fourteen years for the sole working or making of any new manufactures within the realm, to the true and first inventors thereof, provided they be not contrary to law nor mischievous to the state; grants by act of parliament to any corporation, company, or society, for the enlargement of trade, and letters patent concerning the making of gunpowder. See LETTERS-PATENT, and 4 Bl. Com. 160, 436; 2 Br. & Had. Com. 583.

A monopoly has three mischievous incidents: 1st, the raising of the price; 2nd, the deterioration of the commodity; 3rd, the impoverishing of poor artificers.—11 Rep. 86. See LETTERS-PATENT.

It was formerly an offence against public trade to transport and seduce our artists to settle abroad, or even to export any tools or utensils used in certain manufactures (4 Bl. Com. 160). But see, now, 5 Geo. IV. c. 97, and 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 52, and 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 262.

Monster. An animal which has not the shape of mankind, but, in any part, evidently bears the resemblance of the brute creation, has no inheritable blood, and cannot be heir to any land, although it be brought forth in marriage; but though it have deformity in any part of its body, yet if it have human shape, it may be an heir.—Co. Litt. 7 b.; 2 Bl. Com. 246. And see 1 Steph. Com.; 2 Br. & Had. Com.

As monsters by excess are capable of living, so by the law of France they are capable of inheriting.

Monstrans de droit (manifestation or plea of right), one of the common law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the Crown of either real or personal property. It was preferred either on the common law side of the Court of Chancery, or in the Exchequer, and will now come before any Division of the High Court.

Where the Crown is in possession under a title, the facts of which are already set forth upon record, a party aggrieved may proceed in monstrans de droit, i.e., may make, in opposition to such recorded title, a claim of right, grounded upon certain facts relied upon by him, without denying those relied upon by the Crown, and praying the judgment of the court whether, upon those facts, the Crown or the subject has the right (36 Edw. III. c. 13; 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 8). If the right be determined against the Crown, the judgment is that of ouster le main, or amoveas manus, by which judgment the Crown is instantly out of possession, and it therefore needs no actual execution.—Chit. Prerog. of the Crown, 345.

Monstrans de faits ou records (showing of deeds or records.)

Upon an action brought upon an obligation, after the plaintiff had declared he ought to have shown his obligation, and so also of records. Monstrans de faits differed from oyer de faits in that he who pleaded the deed or record, or declared upon it, ought to have shown it, and the defendant might demand oyer of the same.—Cowel.

Monstraverunt, a writ which lay for tenants in ancient demesne who held lands by free charter, when they were distrained to do unto their lords other services and customs than they or their ancestors used to do. It is, however, abolished.

Monstrum, a box in which relics are kept; also, a muster of soldiers.—Cowel.

Montesquien, the author of the Esprit des Loix, a work on civil institutions, both philosophical and elegant.

Month [fr. monath, Sax., moon, which was formerly written mone, as month was written moneth]. The period in which that planet moneth, i.e., completeth its orbit.—Tooke. It is either—

(1) Lunar, the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon returns to the same point, being twenty-eight days.

(2) Solar, that period in which the sun passes through one of the twelve signs of the zodiac.

(3) Calendar, by which we reckon time, consisting unequally of thirty or thirty-one days, except February, which consists of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine days. The calendar month is also called usual, natural, civil, political.

The month of nature, or lunar revolution, is strictly 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes, 3 seconds; and there are, of course, twelve such periods, and rather less than eleven days over, in a year. From an early period there were efforts among some of the civilized nations to arrange the year in a division accordant with the revolutions of the moon; but they were all strangely irregular till Julius Cæsar reformed the calendar, by establishing the system of three years of 365, followed by one (bissextile) of 366 days, and decreed that the latter should be divided as follows:

Januarius	31 days.
Februarius	30 "
Martius	31 "
Aprilis	30 "
Maius	31 "
Junius	30 "
Quintilis (altered to Julius)	31 "
Sextilis	30 "
September.	31 "
October	30 "
November.	31 "
December.	30 "

The general idea of Cæsar was that the months should consist of 31 and 30 days alternately; and this was effected in the bissextile or leap year, consisting, as it did, of twelve times thirty with six over. In ordinary years, consisting of one day less, his arrangement gave 29 days of Februarius. Afterwards, his successor Augustus had the month Sextilis called after himself, and from vanity broke up the regularity of Cæsar's arrangement by taking another day from February to add to his own month, that it might not be shorter than July; a change which led to a shift of October and December for September and November as months of 31 days. In this arrangement, the year has since stood in all Christian countries.

The Roman names of the months, as settled by Augustus, have also been used in all Christian countries excepting Holland.

Amidst the heats of the Revolution, the French Convention, in October, 1793, adopted a set of names for the months, somewhat like that kept up in Holland, their year standing thus:

French Months. Signification. English Months.
Autumn	1. Vindémiaire	Vintage. Sept. 22
	2. Brumaire .	Foggy . . Oct. 22
	3. Frimaire .	Frosty or Sleetly . Nov. 21
Winter	4. Nivose .	Snowy . . Dec. 21
	5. Pluviose .	Rainy . . Jan. 20
	6. Ventose .	Windy . Feb. 19
Spring	7. Germinal.	Springing or Budding Mar. 21
	8. Floréal .	Flowery . Apr. 20
	9. Prairial .	Hay Harv. May 20
Summer	10. Messidor .	Corn Harv. June 19
	11. Thermidor	Hot . . July 19
	12. Fructidor.	Fruit . . Aug. 18

Five days at the end, corresponding to our 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, and 21st of September, were supplementary, and named sansculottides, in honour of the half-naked populace who took so prominent a part in the affairs of the Revolution.

In an Act of Parliament, the word month, which was formerly taken to mean a lunar month, unless calendar month was specified (Cro. Eliz. 133), means calendar month; unless words be added pointing to lunar months (13 Vict. c. 21). By the common law and in equity, it is but twenty-eight days. In ecclesiastical matters it means a calendar month. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LVII., r. 1, it is provided that where, by the Rules of that act or by any judgment or order given or made after the commencement of the act, the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding is limited by months, not expressed to be lunar months, such time shall be computed by calendar months.

By the rule of the commercial world, a month is deemed, in cases of negotiable instruments, and in all commercial contracts, a calendar month.—Story on Bills, 379; and this rule is applied to bills of exchange and promissory notes by s. 14, subs. 4, of the Bill of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61.

Monumenta quæ nos recorda vocamus sunt veritatis et vetustatis vestigia. Co. Litt. 118.—(Monuments, which we call records, are the vestiges of truth and antiquity.)

Monya. See MONETAGIUM.

Mooktar, an agent or attorney.—Indian.

Mooktarnama, a written authority constituting an agent; a power of attorney.—Ibid.

Moor, an officer in the Isle of Man, who summons the courts for the several sheadings. The office is similar to our bailiff of a hundred.

Moot [fr. gmot, emot, Sax., meeting together], to plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the Inns of Court at appointed times, and has of late years been revived in Gray's Inn.—4 Reeves, 433, 574.

Moot-case, or moot-point, a point or case unsettled and disputable, such as properly affords a topic of disputation.

Moot-hall, or moot-house, council-chamber, hall of judgment, town-hall.

Moot-hills, hills of meeting, on which our British ancestors held their great courts.

Moot-man, one of those who used to argue the reader's cases in the Inns of Court. See MOOT-CASE.

Mop. See STATUTE-FAIR.

Mora, a moor, marsh land, a heath, fen land, barren and unprofitable ground.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Mora mussa, a watery or boggy moor; a morass.—Mon. Angl., tom. i., p. 306.

Mora reprobatur in lege. Jenk. Cent. 51.—(Delay is reproved in law.)

Moral actions, defined by Rutherford to be those only in which men have knowledge to guide them and a will to choose for themselves.—Inst. Nat. Law. lib. 1. c. i.

Moral consideration. A mere moral consideration will not support a promise, and is nothing in law, per Parke, B., 9 M. & W. 501. A subsequent express promise will not convert into a debt that which was not, of itself, a legal debt. See Flight v. Reed, 10 Jur. N. S. 1016, per Wilde, B., and CONSIDERATION.

Moratur in lege, he demurs; because the party does not proceed in pleading, but rests or abides upon the judgment of the court on a certain point, as to the legal sufficiency of his opponent's pleading. The court deliberate and determine thereupon. See DEMURRER.

Moravian, otherwise called Herrnhutters or United Brethren. A sect of Christians exempted from military service in America by 22 Geo. II. c. 30, and allowed by that act and by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 49, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 77, to give evidence on their solemn affirmation.

More or less (sive plus sive minus). These words in a contract, which rests in fieri, will only excuse a very small deficiency in the quantity of an estate; for if there be a considerable deficiency, the purchaser will be entitled to an abatement.—Hill v. Buckley, 17 Ves. 394; and see Cross v. Eglin, 2 B. & Ad. 106; Sugd. Vend. & Pur., 14th ed., 324.

Morganatic marriage. The lawful and inseparable conjunction of a man, of noble or illustrious birth, with a woman of inferior station, upon condition that neither the wife nor her children shall partake of the titles, arms, or dignity of the husband, or succeed to his inheritance, but be contented with a certain allowed rank assigned to them by the morganatic contract. But since these restrictions relate only to the rank of the parties and succession to property, without affecting the nature of a matrimonial engagement, it must be considered as a just marriage. The marriage ceremony was regularly performed; the union was indissoluble; the children legitimate. This connection was very usual in Europe; but there is not proof that the concubines of Charlemagne and the early kings of France were wives of this description, nor is there occasion to resort to that supposition in defence of their conduct, since the state of concubinage itself was little inferior to this in the public estimation. See Croke's Introd. to Horner v. Liddiard, 115—117, A.D. 1800.

Morgangina, or Morgangiva [fr. morgen, Sax., the morning, and gifan, gift], a gift on the morning after the wedding; dowry; the husband's gift to his wife on the day after the wedding.—Du Cange; Cowel.

Morina, murrain; also the wool of sick sheep, and those dead with the murrain.—Fleta, lib. ii. c. 79, par. 6.

Morling, or Mortling, wool from the skin of dead sheep.—3 Jac. I. c. 18; 14 Car. II. c. 88.

Mormonism, a social system prevailing in Utah, a territory of North America, within the dominion of the United States, whereby plurality of wives prevails. These marriages are not recognized by English law. See L. R. 1 P. & D. 130; 35 L. J. P. & M. 57. Nor are they legal according to the law of the United States.

Morosus, marshy. See MORA.

Mortality. See BILLS OF MORTALITY.

Mortgage [fr. mort, Fr., dead, and gage, pledge], a dead pledge; a thing put into the hands of a creditor.

A mortgage is the creation of an interest in property, defeasible, i.e., annulable, upon performing the condition of paying a given sum of money, with interest thereon, at a certain time. This conditional assurance is resorted to when a debt has been incurred or a loan of money or credit effected, in order to secure either the repayment of the one or the liquidation of the other. The debtor or borrower is then the mortgagor, who has charged or transferred his property in favour of or to the creditor or lender, who thus becomes the mortgagee. If the mortgagor pay the debt or loan and interest within the time mentioned in a clause technically called the proviso for redemption, he will be entitled to have his property again free from the mortgagee's claim; but should he not comply with such proviso, the legal estate becomes perfected in the mortgagee, i.e., indefeasible, and so lost at the Common Law to the mortgagor. It is redeemable, however, in a Court of Equity upon the payment of the debt or loan, with interest and expenses, at any period within twenty years after the last recognition of the mortgage security by the mortgagee; and this because Equity deems the non-compliance with the proviso for redemption a penalty, against which it always relieves when practicable.

Seeing that in by far the greater number of loan transactions the mortgagor never performs the condition in the proviso for redemption, they have been denominated mortgages, as the pledge is then dead or lost (mortuum vadum) to the mortgagor at law. A mortgage differs from a vifgage (vivum vadum), so called because neither loan nor property is lost, for the creditor enters into possession of the estate, and receives its proceeds in satisfaction of his debt with interest, upon which the debtor becomes entitled to his own again. A Welsh mortgage is one in which the creditor receives the proceeds of his security in satisfaction of the interest of his debt, the principal remaining due and the estate never becoming forfeited, but redeemable at any time; and the creditor not being entitled to sue at law in the absence of a covenant or bond, or to foreclose in equity. When property is conveyed to a mortgagee and his heirs, until out of its rents the loan and interest shall have been received, this is in the nature of a Welsh mortgage, and has been compared to a tenancy by elegit.

In order to protect a necessitous mortgagor from the exacting grasp of an inexorable mortgagee, equity will not suffer any compact whatever to infringe the right of redeeming a mortgage in its courts. The right or equity of redemption then is the chief and inseparable incident to a mortgage—an incident unextinguishable save by a foreclosure decree, a legislative provision or unreasonable delay.

In applying this inflexible principle practically, it is especially needful to distinguish between a mortgage and a conditional or defeasible settlement or purchase, which is sometimes a matter of great nicety, seeing that neither particular language nor any set form of assurance is necessary to constitute a mortgage. For while equity will not countenance any scheme for converting a mortgage into a purchase, yet, if the transaction is manifestly a settlement or purchase, with a reservation in the settlor or grantor to defeat it on the payment of a given sum within a stipulated time, it will be strictly enforced.

In determining the real character of the contract, the fact of the instrument not having a covenant for the repayment of the consideration-money, or containing uses or a declaration to bar dower, or the expressed consideration being an equivalent for the property, or possession of the property having been taken by the grantee at the time of the execution of the instrument, or the expense of the instrument having been defrayed by the grantee, materially favours the conclusion of a purchase rather than a mortgage.

Whoever can lawfully sell and purchase property may become mortgagors and mortgagees of it. Equity will direct a mortgage of an infant's estate for payment of his ancestor's debts by virtue of 1 Wm. IV. c. 47, s. 11; and 2 & 3 Vict. c. 60. By 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 65, the Lord Chancellor may order the estate of a lunatic to be mortgaged.

Every kind of property may be mortgaged except the salaries and emoluments of public functionaries; full pay and half pay of naval and military men; retiring allowance of a person liable to serve again, or of a servant of the East India Company; commissions in the army; church livings with cure of souls, pursuant to 13 Eliz. c. 20, revived by 57 Geo. III. c. 99, which was not repealed by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, so far as it repealed any former acts; and canonries or other ecclesiastical offices.

While an increase in the rate of interest upon default of regular payment is a penalty, and is not admissible, the reservation of a higher rate, with an abatement for punctual payment, may be made.

The modes by which the different kinds of property may be legally mortgaged are these—

(1) Freeholds. They are mortgaged either in fee or for the interest in them of which the mortgagor is seised, or by a demise for a long term of years, with a proviso that if the loan and interest be paid at a given day, the legal estate shall be re-conveyed to the mortgagor, or the mortgage-deed shall become void, or the term determine. In a mortgage of a freehold by demise, the mortgagor sometimes covenants that upon default he or his heirs will, at his or their own costs, do all lawful acts for confirming the term, or, if required, for conveying the reversion in fee to such person as the mortgagee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, shall direct.

(2) Entails. The 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, s. 21, provides that the disposition by tenant-in-tail, by way of mortgage, or for any other limited purpose, shall, to the extent of the estate created, be an absolute bar in equity as well as at law, to all persons as against whom such disposition is by the act authorized to be made, notwithstanding any intention to the contrary, expressed or implied in the deed by which the disposition may be effected, provided, that if the estate created by such disposition shall be only an estate pur autre vie, or for years absolute or determinable, or if an interest, charge, lien, or incumbrance should be created, without a term of years absolute or determinable, or any greater estate for securing or raising the same, such disposition should, in equity, be a bar only so far as may be necessary to give full effect to the mortgage, or to such interest, lien, charge, or incumbrance, notwithstanding any intention to the contrary expressed or implied in the deed by which the disposition may be effected. The 38th section enacts, that a voidable estate created in favour of a purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration shall (so far as a subsequent assurance by the tenant-in-tail can operate under the provisions of the act) be confirmed by such assurance, excepting as against a purchaser not having express notice of the first assurance.

(3) Copyholds. They are for the most part mortgaged by conditional surrender in the manor court by the mortgagor to the mortgagee and his heirs, to be void on payment of the loan with interest on a given day, pursuant to a covenant to surrender contained in a deed, in which the mortgagor covenants for title, payment of loan and interest, etc. The condition should be entered on the rolls, and immediately followed by the surrender, that the true state of the title may appear on the manor records. On performance of the condition, the mortgagor-surrenderer is in possession as of his old estate, without re-admission or fine, upon the conditional mortgagee-surrenderee giving a warrant to the steward to vacate the surrender. In the absence of a special custom, the lord cannot compell a conditional surrenderee to be admitted even after condition broken. If, however, he be admitted, and the condition is broken, his estate is absolute; and upon paying the mortgage debt, a re-admission of the mortgagor will be necessary, and he then acquires a new estate.

Whilst a mortgage transaction rests in covenant, if the mortgagee assign his equitable interest, and the mortgagor surrender to such assignee, the lord may be compelled by mandamus to admit him on payment of a single fine.

(4) Leaseholds. They are usually mortgaged by underlease at a nominal rent, reserving the last day of the original term in the mortgagor, who covenants to pay the rent and perform the covenants contained in the lease. In this way the mortgagee avoids liability to the lessee's covenants which run with the land. When a renewable lease is mortgaged, the mortgagor should be required to covenant that he will concur, at his own expense, in all lawful acts for obtaining its renewal, and that if he refuse, the mortgagee may renew and charge the estate with the expenses and interest.

A mortgagee of a leasehold should see that the rent is paid, and the covenants of the lease are performed, otherwise he risks the loss of his security by the lessor entering upon the property and determining the lease.

A provision for fire assurance is expedient in the mortgage of buildings, which may be effected either by the mortgagor in his own name, with an assignment to the mortgagee, or by the mortgagor in the mortgagee's name, which dispenses with an assignment.

(5) To raise portions under trust terms. In providing for the raising of portions it should be expressed when the portion shall vest, when it shall be payable, and the rate of interest it shall carry after it becomes payable, and until it is raised. Provisoes should be inserted, that the trustees may, after the deaths of the life-tenants or in their lifetime, if they shall direct, raise any part of the portion for advancement of a child, and shall after the deaths of the life tenants, and until the portion is payable, raise a stated sum for maintenance, not exceeding the amount of interest on the principal of the portion, and that the trustees shall not mortgage or sell until the portion becomes payable. The usual mode of raising the portion by mortgage is for the portionist to assign to the mortgagee his share of the sum to be raised, giving the mortgagee a power of attorney to receive it. If the term be reversionary, the life-tenant demises a proportionate part of the estate to the mortgagee for 99 years, provided such tenant so long live, upon trust for him to receive the rents until default shall be made in payment of the interest, and then for the mortgagee to receive the rents and retain his interest. The trustees of the term assign a proportional part of the premises comprised in the term to the mortgagee, with a proviso for redemption either by the tenant for life, or the expectant, on payment of the loan for the portion and costs. The life-tenant, or, if the term be in possession, the remainder-man covenants for payment of the loan and interest, and for title.

(6) To pay debts by executors, by trustees for sale, and under powers of charging. An executor may raise money required for the general purposes of the will by a mortgage of the assets, provided the will do not direct a peremptory sale. The mortgage-deed need not state that the loan is wanted for the purposes of the will, for in order to vitiate the security it must be proved that the money was not for such purpose. The mortgagee is not bound to see to the application of his advance. If, however, the will name a particular fund for the payment of debts a mortgagee should then inquire if such fund have been exhausted.

(7) Advowsons. They should be mortgaged in fee with a power of sale, not, however, exercisable during a vacancy, for they cannot produce any profit by presentment, nor can any value be put upon them in an account upon a redemption, so as to lessen the debt, since, on a vacancy, the mortgagor, as actual owner, has the right of nomination, and can compel the mortgagee, as having the legal estate, to present his nominee, although there may be an express agreement to the contrary.

(8) Rectories impropriate and tithes in lay hands. These may be mortgaged as any other species of realty.

If a warrant of attorney be given by an incumbent, and nothing appears therein necessarily leading to the conclusion that it was intended indirectly to create a charge on his living, it is valid, and the profits of the living may be taken under a judgment and sequestration. The grant of an annuity with a warrant of attorney is the expedient resorted to for raising money. The 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, provides a form of mortgage of the glebe, tithes, rents, and profits of a benefice for building a fit residence for the parson.

(9) Turnpike-tolls. See 3 Geo. IV. c. 126.

(10) Wife's Property. When husband and wife mortgage the wife's estate for his purposes, there is a resulting trust for her benefit since her estate is considered as surety only for the debt. The wife or her heir is, therefore, entitled to redeem after the husband's death, notwithstanding that the equity of redemption may be reserved to the husband and his heirs, or to the husband and wife, and their heirs, unless a contrary intention be clearly expressed. (Heather v. O'Neill; 2 De Gex and J. 399.) A similar rule obtains in a mortgage of a wife's chattels real, her personal representative in case of her death being then entitled. The husband's assets are liable to exonerate the wife's estate from such charge.

(11) Public Stock. This may be either the security of a debt or loan, or itself the subject of loan.

The mortgagee of stock in possession may sell immediately after forfeiture, but where the stock is in reversion, he cannot dispose of it, until he has made it his own by foreclosure.

A stock mortgage is made on the terms of securing a retransfer of the same amount of stock sold out, irrespective of the state of the funds at the time named for such retransfer.

(12) Fund in Court. When this is assigned, the assignee should obtain a stop-order, by which he gains a priority over an assignee who has neglected to obtain one, and prevents the fund from being transferred to the assignor.

(13) Chattels Personal. These are mortgaged by assignment, and if the property be in the possession of others, notice should be forthwith given to them, in order to preserve the priority of the charge. If it be a policy of assurance, notice should be given to the assurance-office. See BILL OF SALE.

(14) Ships. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104.

(15) Freight. The reward for carrying goods over the sea if in a charter-party may be assigned independently of the ship, and is not within the Registry Acts.

(16) Factors may pledge goods consigned to them pursuant to 4 Geo. IV. c. 83; amended by 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39.

(17) Policies of Life Assurance. These are not safe securities, as the mortgagee will have to pay the annual premium if not paid by the mortgagor, unless he can resort to a fund for this purpose. A life-policy is frequently given by way of collateral security. Notice of an assignment of a policy should be given to the insurance office as a protection against bankruptcy, but where a policy is effected in the mortgagee's name, notice is unnecessary, as there is no assignment of it, but only a covenant by the mortgagor to pay the premiums. Assignees of policies may sue in their own names.—30 & 31 Vict. c. 144.

(18) Debts. A person lending money on the assignment of a debt should be careful to give to the debtor prompt notice of such assignment, in order that he may be estopped from paying the debt to any other person, and also protecting his security from the consequences of the mortgagor's bankruptcy. As to the assignment of debts, and other choses in action, see Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (6).

Debentures founded on securities on land may now be issued by certain companies.—28 & 29 Vict. c. 78, amended by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 20.

(19) Acts of Parliament frequently confer powers to charge property for various purposes, and the form of security is usually provided. It is obvious then that the statute must not only be consulted, but followed in all its special provisions. As specimens see 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 71, ss. 77 & 78; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 73, s. 11 (Tithe Commutation); 8 & 9 Vict. c. 56; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 101; 11 Vict. c. 22 (Drainage); 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, s. 133 (Inclosure of Commons); 38 & 39 Vict. c. 83 (Local Rates, etc.).

It is usual for the act to indemnify a mortgagee against the misapplication of his loan, but if it do not, he will be bound to see that his money is applied to the purposes of the given act, although it be paid to the person appointed by the act to receive it.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 113, provides that the heir or devisee of real estate shall not claim payment of mortgages out of personal assets; and the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 69, provides that in construing wills a general direction to pay debts out of personalty shall not include mortgage debts, unless an intention to that effect be expressed or implied.

A mortgagor in possession or receipt of the rent and profits of any land, as to which the mortgagee has given no notice of intention to enter into possession or receipt of the rents and profits, may sue for such possession or such rents and profits, or to prevent or recover damage for any wrong thereto, in his own name only.—Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (5).

The Conveyancing and Law of Property Acts, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, by ss. 15—17, give a mortgagor power to require the mortgagee to transfer the mortgage debt instead of reconveying it, power to inspect title deeds, and power to pay off one mortgage, where there are mortgages to the same person of different properties, without paying off the others.

The same act (s. 18) confers on mortgagors and mortgagees in possession extensive powers of leasing, not existing at common law (see Keech v. Hall, 1 Doug. 21; Franklin v. Ball, 34 L. J. Ch. 153), but commonly provided for before the act by the express terms of the mortgage deed. These sections are not retrospective.

The same act (ss. 19—24) confers on mortgagees powers of sale, insurance, and to appoint a receiver. These sections are not retrospective, but they are an amplification of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, ss. 11—24, repealed by the act.

The same act (ss. 26—29) provides forms of 'Statutory Mortgage, Reconveyance, and Transfer,' and also (s. 57) short forms of mortgage and further charge.

All causes for redemption or foreclosure of mortgages are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court.—Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34.

See further PUBLIC WORKS LOANS ACT.

Mortgagee, he that takes a mortgage as security for a loan. See preceding title.

Mortgagor or Mortgage, he that gives a mortgage as security for a loan. See MORTGAGE.

Morth [Sax.], murder, answering exactly to the French assassinat or muerte de guet-apens.

Morthlaga, a murderer.—Cowel.

Morthlage, murder.—Cowel.

Mortification, a term of Scotch law, synonymous with the English 'mortmain.'

Mortis causâ donatio. See DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

Mortmain [fr. mort, Fr., dead, and main, hand], such a state of possession of land as makes it inalienable; whence it is said to be in a dead hand—in a hand that cannot shift away the property. Lands in mortmain are a dead weight upon commerce.

By several old statutes, alienation of lands and tenements in mortmain, i.e., to religious and other corporations, which were supposed to hold them in a dead or unserviceable hand, were prohibited under pain of forfeiture to the lord, the fruits of whose feudal seigniorship (the great hinge of government in those days) were thus impaired. But either with or without the consent of the immediate lords (for this is doubtful) this forfeiture might be dispensed with by a license in mortmain from the Crown, which license is made sufficient without any such consent by 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 37. See Steph. Com., bk. ii., pt. i., ch. 14, and CHARITABLE USES.

Such license is still necessary by law in all cases, except in the very numerous cases where, as by the Companies Act, 1862, s. 18, the necessity is dispensed with by the statute or charter constituting the corporation. In some cases a new restriction is imposed; e.g., Trade Unions may, by the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 7, hold only one acre of land, and Art., etc., societies registered under the Companies Act, 1862, may not, by s. 21 of that act, hold more than two acres without the license of the Board of Trade.

Mortmain Act, 9 Geo. II. c. 36, by which no land or money to be laid out in land may be given for any charitable use by will in any manner or in the lifetime of the donor except by deed executed in the presence of two witnesses twelve months before the death of the donor, and enrolled six months after its execution. The strictness of this act has been in some measure relaxed by 24 Vict. c. 9, and other acts.

Mortmain, Statute of, or de religiosis, 7 Edw. I. Its object was to aid in enforcing the provisions of the great charter on the subject of alienation to religious societies, and to carry that restriction somewhat further.—2 Reeves, 154. See preceding titles.

Mortuary, a burial place; also a gift left by a man at his death to his parish church, for the recompense of his personal tithes and offerings not duly paid in his lifetime. Also, a kind of ecclesiastical heriot, being a customary gift claimed by and due to the minister in very many parishes, on the death of his parishioners. Like lay heriots, they were originally only voluntary bequests to the church. It was usual in ancient times to bring the mortuary to church along with the corpse when it was brought to be buried, and thence it is sometimes called a corpse-present. In the laws of Canute it was called soul-scot or saule-sceat, which signifies pecunia sepulchralis, or symbolum anime. The lord must have the best chattel left him as a heriot; and the church the second best as a mortuary.—2 Br. & Had. Com. 608. See further the statute 21 Hen. VIII. c. 6; 2 Bl. Com. 427; 4 Reeves, 207.

It has been sometimes used in a civil as well as in an ecclesiastical sense, and applied to a payment to the lord of the fee.—Paroch. Antiq. 470.

Mortuum vadium, a dead pledge or mortgage. See MORTGAGE.

Mos retinendus est fidelissimæ vetustatis. 4 Co. 78.—(A custom of the truest antiquity is to be retained.)

Mote, a meeting, an assembly. Used in composition, as burgmote, folkmete, etc. See GEMOT.

Mote-bell, the bell which was used by the Saxons to summon people to the court.—Cowel.

Moteer, a customary service or payment at the mote or court of the lord, from which some were exempted by charter or privilege.—Cowel.

Mother-church [primaria ecclesia, Lat.]. See MATRIX ECCLESIA.

Mothering, a custom of visiting parents on Mid-Lent Sunday.—Jacob.

Motibilis, one that may be moved or displaced; also, a vagrant.—Fleta, l. 5, c. vi.

Motion, an occasional application to a court by the parties or their counsel, in order to obtain some rule or order, which becomes necessary either in the progress of a cause, or summarily and wholly unconnected with plenary proceedings.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LIII., it is provided that where by the rules of that Act any application is authorized to be made to the court or a judge in an action, such application, if made to a Divisional Court or to a judge in court, shall be made by motion (r. 1).

All appeals to the Court of Appeal shall be by way of rehearing, and shall be brought by notice of motion in a summary way (Ibid., Ord. LVIII., r. 2), and every application to a judge of the Court of Appeal shall be by motion, to which the provisions of Ord. LIII., above noticed, are to apply (Ibid., r. 18). As to motion for judgment see next title.

Motion for Judgment. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XL., it is provided that except where by the Act or its rules it is otherwise provided, the judgment of the court shall be obtained by motion for judgment.

Motu proprio, the commencing words of a certain kind of Papal Rescript.

Moult, a mow of corn or hay.—Paroch. Antiq. 401.

Moveables, goods, furniture, personalty.

Moving for an argument, making a motion on a day which is not motion day, in virtue of having argued a special case; used in the Exchequer after it became obsolete in the Queen's Bench.

Mulct, a fine of money or a penalty.

Mulier (1) a woman; (2) a virgin; (3) a wife; (4) a legitimate child.—1 Inst. 243.

Mulier puisné, when a man has a bastard son, and afterwards marries the mother, and by her has also a legitimate son, the elder son is bastard eigné, and the younger son is mulier puisné.

Mulieratus, a legitimate son.—Glanv.

Muliert, lawful issue, because begotten e muliere (of a wife), and not ex concubina.—Co. Litt. 352.

Mullones fœni, cocks or ricks of hay.—Cowel.

Mulmutin laws. See MOLMUTIAN LAWS.

Mulneda, a place to build a water-mill.—Mon. ii. 284.

Multa, or Multura, Episcopi, a fine or final satisfaction, anciently given to the king by the bishops, that they might have power to make their wills; and that they might have the probate of other men's wills, and the granting of administrations.—2 Inst. 291.

Multa conceduntur per obliquum, quæ non conceduntur de directo. 6 Co. 47.—(Many things are indirectly conceded which are not conceded directly.)

Multa ignoramus quæ nobis non laterent si veterum lectio nobis fuit familiaris. 10 Co. 73.—(We are ignorant of many things which would not be hidden from us if the reading of old authors was familiar to us.)

Multa in jure communi contra rationem disputandi, pro communi utilitate, introducta sunt. Co. Litt. 70.—(Many things contrary to the rule of argument are introduced into the common law for common utility.)

Multa multo exercitatione facilius quam regulis percipies. 4 Inst. 50.—(You will perceive many things much more easily by practice than by rules.)

Multa non vetat lex, quæ tamen tacite damnant.—(The law forbids not many things which yet it has silently condemned.)

Multa transeunt cum universitate quæ non per se transeunt. Co. Litt. 12.—(Many things pass in the whole, which do not pass by themselves.)

Multifariousness. This in a bill in equity, was the improperly joining in one bill distinct and independent matters, and thereby confounding them. For the former practice see Story's Eq. Plead. 224; and 1 Dan. Ch. Prac., 5th ed., and 2 Wms. Savnd. 295, c. See now JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

Multi multa, nemo omnia novit. 4 Inst. 348.—(Many men have known many things; no one has known everything.)

Multipartite [fr. multus, Lat., many, and pars, a part], divided into several parts.

Multiplepoinding, a proceeding in Scotch law, of the same nature as our INTERPLEADER.

Multiplex et indistinctum parit confusionem; et questiones quo simpliciores, eo lucidiores. Hob. 335.—(Multiplicity and indistinctness produce confusion; and questions, the more simple they are, the more lucid.)

Multiplicatâ transgressione crescat pœne inflictio. 2 Inst. 479.—(Let infliction of punishment increase with multiplied crime.)

Multiplicity. A bill in equity might have been objectionable for an undue dividing or splitting up of a single cause of suit, and thus multiplying subjects of litigation. Equity discourages unreasonable litigation. It would not, therefore, permit a bill to be brought for a part of a matter only, where the whole was the proper subject of one suit. Upon a somewhat analogous ground, if an ancestor have made two mortgages, the heir will not be allowed to redeem one without the other; for in such a case, the equity of the heir, like that of the ancestor, is to redeem the whole or neither.—Story's Eq. Plead. 234. See now Jud. Act, 1873, s. 24 (7); and as to inferior Courts, see ss. 89—91.

Multitude, an assembly of ten or more persons.—Co. Litt. 257.

Multitudinem decem faciunt. Co. Litt. 257.—(Ten make a multitude.)

Multitudo errantium non parit errori patrocinium. 11 Co. 75.—(The multitude of those who err gives no excuse to error.)

Multitudo imperitorum perdit curiam. 2 Inst. 219.—(A multitude of ignorant persons destroys a court.)

Multo, a wether sheep.—Old Records.

Multo fortiori. See A FORTIORI.

Multo utilius est pauca idonea effundere quam multis inutilibus homines gravari. 4 Co. 20.—(It is more useful to pour forth a few useful things than to oppress men with many useless things.)

Multure [fr. moulture, Fr.; fr. molo, Lat., to grind], a grist or grinding; the corn ground; also the toll or fee due for grinding.

Mumming. Antic diversions in the Christmas holidays, suppressed in Queen Anne's time. See 3 Hen. VIII. c. 9.

Mund, peace, whence mundbryc, a breach of the peace.—Leg. H. I., c. 37.

Mundbyrd, Mundeburde, a receiving into favour and protection.—Cowel.

Munera, portions of lands distributed to tenants, and revocable at the lord's will, under our early feudal system.

Municipal [fr. municipalis, Lat., of munus, office, and capio, I take, or hold], belonging to a corporation.

Municipal Corporation. A body of persons in a town having the powers of acting as one person, of holding and transmitting property, and of regulating the government of the town. Such corporations existed in the chief towns of England (as of other countries) from very early times, deriving their authority from 'incorporating' charters granted by the Crown.

The Municipal Corporations Act, 1835, 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76, passed after local inquiries by royal commissioners, completely re-organised the constitution of these corporations, and abrogated all charters inconsistent with it. This act applied to 178 corporations named in the schedules thereto, and to 68 other corporations subsequently receiving a charter, a town to which it applied being styled a 'borough.'

The Act of 1835 was amended by a series of statutes passed from time to time, and finally consolidated by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, of which the following is the short effect:—

The 246 places to which the act applies, and the other places to which it may hereafter be applied, are to a great extent under the control of a municipal corporation consisting of the 'mayor, aldermen, and burgesses,' and acting through a 'council' elected by the burgesses.

The burgesses consist of all resident householders who have occupied and paid rates for twelve months prior to any July, and have also been enrolled as burgesses.

The councillors are elected by the burgesses on every 1st of November. Their term of office is three years, and one-third of their number goes out of office every year. If the election be contested, the poll is taken by ballot under the Ballot Act, 1872. The aldermen, in number one-third of the number of councillors (and not necessarily burgesses), are elected by the council. They remain in office six years, one-half of their number going out of office every third year. The mayor is elected for one year by the council from among the aldermen or councillors or persons qualified to be such. He receives little, if any, salary. The aldermen and councillors serve gratuitously.

The council thus constituted manages the corporate property, having as officers a 'town clerk,' a 'treasurer,' and such other officers as the council think necessary. It has the control of the borough police, and power to levy a borough-rate and a watch-rate, and, by s. 23, to make bye-laws 'for the good rule and government of the borough, and for the suppression of nuisances not already punishable in a summary manner by virtue of any act in force throughout the borough,' e.g., by the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 47, 80, and 91, or by other public act, or by one of the many local acts in force in most of the larger boroughs. The council is also 'urban authority,' administering local government under the Public Health Act, 1875, 'school attendance committee' under the Elementary Education Act, 1876, and local authority under numerous other acts.

In most of the larger boroughs there is a separate commission of the peace, excluding the jurisdiction of the county justices, and a separate Court of Quarter Sessions, presided over by a 'recorder,' having the same jurisdiction in the borough as the justices in County Quarter Sessions have for the county. A separate commission and a separate Court of Quarter Sessions may also be granted by the Crown on petition of the council to such boroughs as do not possess them. Where there is a separate Court of Quarter Sessions, there is also a borough coroner, appointed by the council.

Not all municipal corporations are subject to the Municipal Corporations Act. There still remain a considerable number of small 'unreformed corporations,' in which there is a mayor and other corporation officers, and the Corporation of the city of London has always been exempt from the general law.

Municipal Law, that which pertains solely to the citizens and inhabitants of a state, and is thus distinguished from political law, commercial law, and the law of nations.

Muniment, support, defence, record; writing upon which claims and rights are founded and depend; evidences, charters.

Muniment-house, or Muniment-room, a house or room of strength, in cathedrals, collegiate churches, castles, colleges, public buildings, etc., purposely made for keeping deeds, charters, writings, etc.—3 Inst. 170.

Munitions of war. As to keeping secret patents for their invention, see 22 Vict. c. 13. As to supplying such to foreign states at peace with this country, for the purpose of hostilities between themselves, see 33 & 34 Vict. c. 90.

Murage [fr. murus, Lat., a wall], money paid to keep walls in repair.—Cowel.

Muratio, a town or borough surrounded with walls.—Jacob.

Murder [fr. morthor, morthen, Sax.; murdrum, law Lat. The etymology requires that it should be written, as it anciently often was, murther; but of late the word itself has commonly, and its derivatives have universally, been written with d.—Dr. Johnson]. It is thus defined by Coke (3 Inst. 47), 'when a person of sound memory and discretion unlawfully killeth any reasonable creature in being with malice aforethought, either express or implied.' Consult Russell on Crimes.

(1) The person committing the offence must be of sound memory and discretion, for children and insane people are incapable of committing any crime, unless they evince a consciousness of doing wrong, and a discernment between good and evil. See IDIOTS and LUNATICS.

(2) It must be an unlawful killing by any means which superinduces death within a year and a day after the cause of death administered.

(3) The person killed must be a reasonable creature in being, and under the Queen's peace.

(4) The killing must be with malice aforethought.

Every person convicted of murder shall suffer death as a felon.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 1; and see EXECUTION OF CRIMINALS.

Murdrum, the secret killing of another, also the amercement to which the vill wherein it was committed, or, if that were too poor, the whole hundred, was liable.

As to the rates of compensation for murder amongst the Anglo-Saxons, see 2 Hall. Mid. Ages, 275.

Muriatic Acid Gas, protection from exhalations of. See ALKALI WORKS.

Murorum operatio, the service of work and labour done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle; their personal service was commuted into murage, q. v.—Cowel.

Murthlach. See MORTLAGE.

Museum. A building or institution for the cultivation of science, favoured by the legislature in the Public Libraries Acts, and 34 Vict. c. 13.

Music, Copyright in. See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 12; and 45 & 46 Vict. c. 40; by which latter act provision is made for protecting the public from vexatious proceedings for the recovery of penalties for the unauthorized performance of musical compositions; and see COPYRIGHT.

Music and Dancing Licenses. The grant of these in London and Westminster and within 20 miles thereof is regulated by 25 Geo. II. c. 36, which enacts that any house kept for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind without a license from justices (which they may grant or withhold at discretion), is to be deemed a disorderly house. The same act prohibited the opening of such houses, even though licensed, before 5 p.m.; but this prohibition, which was frequently disregarded, was removed by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 21, which substitutes 'noon' for '5 p.m.'

Mussa, a moss or marsh ground; or a place where sedges grow; a place overrun with moss.—Cowel.

Muster-book, a book in which the forces are registered.—Termes de la Ley.

Muster-master, one who superintended the muster to prevent frauds.—35 Eliz. c. 4.

Muta-canum, a kennel of hounds, one of the mortuaries to which the Crown was entitled at a bishop's or abbot's decease.—2 Bl. Com. 426.

Mutatis-mutandis. With the necessary changes in points of detail.

Mute of malice, used of one who abstains from pleading to an indictment when he is able to do so. See 4 Bl. Com. 324. See MUTUS, and PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

Mutilation, deprivation of a limb or any essential part. See MAYHEM.

Mutiny Act, a statute annually passed from 1689 to 1879, 'to punish mutiny and desertion, and for the better payment of the army and their quarters.' See ARMY.

Mutseddey, mutseddee, intent upon; also writer, accountant, or secretary.—Indian.

Mutual debts, money due on both sides between two persons.—See 3 Bl. Com. 305; SET-OFF; and COUNTERCLAIM.

Mutual promises, concurrent considerations, which will support each other, unless one or the other be void; in which case, there being no consideration on the one side, no contract can arise. But if the promise on one side be only voidable, as in consideration of money given, or of a promise by an infant, it is sufficient.

Mutual promises, however, to be obligatory, must be made simultaneously. If they be made at different times on the same day, they will not be a good consideration for each other because of the want of reciprocity of obligation, at the moment the contract is made.—Story on Contracts, 81.

Mutual testament, wills made by two persons who leave their effects reciprocally to the survivor.

Mutuality, reciprocation; the state of things in which one person being bound to perform some duty or service or act for another, that other on his side is bound to do something for the former.

The most notable instances of contracts in which there is no mutuality, is where the memorandum required by the 17th section of the Statute of Frauds is signed by one only of the contracting parties, for there the party who has signed can be sued for not performing his part, but the other cannot.

Mutation, the act of borrowing.

Mutuo, to borrow.

Mutus, silent, not having anything to say.

Standing mute is when a person, being arraigned, either cannot speak, or refuses to answer or plead. A prisoner is said to stand mute when, being arraigned, he either (1) makes no answer at all; or (2) answers foreign to the purpose, or with such matter as is not allowable, and will not answer otherwise; or (3) having pleaded not guilty, refuses to put himself upon the country.—2 Hale, P.C. 316. By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 1, he shall by the plea of not guilty, without any further form, be deemed to have put himself upon the country for trial, and the court shall order a jury for the trial of such person accordingly.

By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 2, if any person being arraigned, shall stand mute of malice, or will not answer directly, the court may order a 'plea of not guilty' to be entered. When there is reason to doubt whether the prisoner is sane, a jury should be charged to inquire whether he be sane or not; this jury may consist of any twelve persons present, and upon this issue the question will be whether he has intellect to plead and to comprehend the proceedings. If they find the affirmative, the plea of 'not guilty' may be entered, and the trial will proceed; but if the negative, the 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 94, s. 2, provides that insane persons indicted and found to be insane, shall be kept in strict custody till the royal pleasure be known.

To advise a prisoner to stand mute is a contempt of court.

Mutus et surdus (dumb and deaf).

Mutuum, a loan, whereby the absolute property in the thing lent passes to the borrower, it being for consumption, and he being bound to restore, not the same thing, but other things of the same kind. Thus, if corn, wine, money, or any other thing which is not intended to be returned, but only an equivalent in kind, is lost or destroyed by accident, it is the loss of the borrower; for it is his property, and he must restore the equivalent in kind; the maxim—ejus est periculum, cujus est dominium—applying to such cases.

In a mutuum the property passes immediately from the mutuant or lender to the mutuary or borrower, and the identical thing lent cannot be recovered or redemanded.—Jones on Bailm. 64.

Mynster-ham (ecclesie mansio, Lat.), monastic habitation; perhaps the part of a monastery set apart for purposes of hospitality, or as a sanctuary for criminals.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Mystery [fr. mestier, Fr.], an art, trade, or occupation.—Cowel.

Mytacism [fr. μυτακισμός, Gk.], in rhetoric, the too frequent use of the letter M.—Encyc. Lond.

N.

Naam [fr. nam, Sax., to take], the attaching or taking of moveable goods, and chattels, called vif or mort according as the chattels were living or dead.—Termes de la Ley.

Nabob, Nawab; originally the governor of a province under the Mogul government of Hindostan, 'whence it became a mere title of any man of high rank, upon whom it was conferred without any office being attached to it (Wilson's Indian Glossary).—Indian.

Naib, a deputy.—Ibid.

Nail, a measure of two inches and a quarter.

Nam, distress; seizure.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Namation, the act of distraining or taking a distress.—Cowel.

Name [fr. namo, Goth.; nama, Sax.; naem, Dut.], the discriminative appellation of an individual.

Proper names are either Christian names, as being given at baptism, or surnames, from the father.—4 Rep. 170. See SURNAME, DIVORCE.

Names of persons not christened are surnames only.—1 Lord Raym. 305. As to the name of a bastard, see Co. Litt. 36, and 1 Moo. C. C. 402. A man may have divers names at divers times, but not divers Christian names.—2 Bro. C. C. 170. Any one may take on himself whatever surname or as many surnames as he pleases, without an act of parliament or royal license. See Falconer on Surnames, and refer to 3 M. & S. 250. See also MISNOMER.

Namium, a distress.—2 Inst. 140.

Namium vetitum, an unjust taking of the cattle of another and driving them to an unlawful place, pretending damage done by them.—3 Bl. Com. 149. See REPLEVIN.

Nantes, Edict of, for the security of Protestants, made by Hen. IV. of France, and revoked by Louis XIV., Oct. 2, 1685.

Narr [abbrev. of narratio, Lat.], a declaration in an action.—Jacob.

Narratio, a count, a declaration.

Narrator, a pleader, or reporter.—Cowel.

Narrow seas, those running between two coasts not far apart. The term is sometimes applied to the English Channel.

Natale, the state and condition of a man.

Nathwyte. See LAIRWITE.

Nation, a people distinguished from another people, generally by their language, origin, or government; an assembly of men of free condition, as distinguished from a family of slaves.

National Church, the Protestant church of England, of which the sovereign is the head and supreme governor.—26 Hen. VIII. c. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 1.

National Debt, the money owing by government to some of the public, the interest of which is paid out of the taxes raised by the whole of the public. It is entirely regulated by the 'National Debt Act, 1870.' See FUNDS.

Nations, Law of. See INTERNATIONAL LAW. The principal offences against the law of nations are: (1) Violations of safe conducts; (2) Infringement of the rights of ambassadors; and (3) Piracy. See the works of Grotius, Vattel, and others.

Nativi conventionarii, villeins or bondmen by contract or agreement.—Leg. H. I. c. 76.

Nativi de stipite, villeins or bondmen by birth or stock.—Cowel.

Nativitas [fr. neifty], the servitude, bondage, or villeinage of woman.—Leg. Wm. I.

Nativo habendo, a writ that lay to a sheriff from a lord who claimed inheritance in any villein, when his villein had absconded, for the apprehending and restoring him to such lord. It was in the nature of a writ of right to recover inheritance in a villein; upon which the lord pursued his plaint, and declared thereupon, and the villein made his defence, so that the question of freedom was tried and determined.—*F. Natural affection, that love which one has for his kindred. It is held to be a good consideration for certain purposes. See CONSIDERATION; COVENANT TO STAND SEISED.

Natural allegiance, that perpetual attachment which is due from all natural-born subjects to their sovereign; it differs from local allegiance, which is temporary only, being due from an alien or stranger born for so long a time as he continues within the sovereign's dominions and protection.—Fost. 184.

Natural-born subjects, those that are born within the dominions of the Crown of England, i.e., within the allegiance of the sovereign. See ALIEN.

Natural child, the child in fact, the child of one's body. Some children are both the natural and legitimate offspring of a marriage, i.e., those duly born in wedlock. Some are the legitimate but not the natural offspring of a marriage, i.e., those who are born in wedlock, and never bastardized, although begotten in adultery and the natural children of a stranger. See Shakespeare's King John, act i., sc. 1.

Some are natural children only; i.e., bastards, born out of wedlock, and those born in wedlock, who are bastardized, and hence the word is sometimes popularly used as though it were simply equivalent to bastard. See BASTARD and BASTARDIZE.

Natural equity. See EQUITY.

Natural infancy, a period of non-responsible life, which ends with the seventh year of a person's age.

Natural liberty. See LIBERTY.

Natural obligations, duties which have a definite object, but are not subject to any legal necessity.

Natural persons, such as we are formed by the Deity, as distinguished from artificial persons or corporations, formed by human laws, for purposes of society and government.

Naturale est quilibet dissolvi eo modo quo ligatur. Jenk. Cent. 66.—(It is natural for a thing to be unbound in the same way in which it was bound.) See Broom's Legal Maxims.

Navicularis [Lat.], a sea captain.

Navigation Acts were various enactments passed for the protection of British shipping and commerce as against foreign countries. For a sketch of their history and operation, see 3 Steph. Com. They are now repealed. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, and 17 & 18 Vict. cc. 5 & 120.

Navy [fr. navis, Lat., a ship], an assemblage of ships, commonly ships of war; a fleet.

The discipline of the navy was formerly regulated by certain express rules, articles, and orders, first enacted by the authority of parliament soon after the Restoration, but it is now regulated by 'The Naval Discipline Act, 1861,' 24 & 25 Vict. c. 115 (see NAVAL DISCIPLINE ACT). Nazeranna, a sum paid to government as an acknowledgment for a grant of lands, or any public office.—Encyc. Lond.

Nazim, composer, arranger, adjuster. The first officer of a province, and minister of the department of criminal justice.—Indian.

Ne admittas (that you admit not), a prohibitory writ directed to the bishop at the request of the plaintiff or defendant, where a quare impedit is depending, when either party fears that the bishop will admit the other's clerk during the suit between them; it ought to be issued within six calendar months after the avoidance, before the bishop may present by lapse; for it is in vain to sue out this writ when the title to present has devolved upon the bishop.—F. N. B. 37.

Neat, or Net, the weight of a pure commodity alone, without the cask, bag, dross, etc.—Com. term.

Neat Cattle, oxen or heifers.

Neat-land, land let out to the yeomanry.—Cowel.

Ne baila pas (he did not deliver).

Necation [fr. neco, Lat.], the act of killing.

Necessaries, a relative term, not strictly limited to such things as are absolutely requisite for support and subsistence, but to be construed literally, and varying with the state and degree, the rank, fortune, and age of the person to whom they are supplied. It has often been held that an infant is bound to pay a reasonable price for such necessary things as relate to his maintenance and education—as for food, lodging, apparel, medical attendance, and schooling—unless credit be given solely to the parent, which is presumed to be the fact, if it appear that the infant was placed at school, or is supported by him. See INFANT.

While a husband and wife live together, and the goods supplied to the wife are necessaries, both in quality and quantity, the law raises a presumption of assent on the part of the husband to the contract, and renders him liable therefore. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Necessarium est quod non potest aliter se habere. Bacon.—(That which is necessary cannot be otherwise.)

Necessitas culpabilis (a blameable necessity).

Necessitas est lex temporis et loci. Hales H. P. C. 54.—(Necessity is the law of time and place.)

Necessitas excusat aut extenuat delictum in capitalibus, quod non operatur idem in civilibus. Bacon.—(Necessity excuses or extenuates a delinquency in capital cases, which has not the same operation in civil cases.)

Necessitas facit licitum quod alias non est licitum. 10 Co. 61.—(Necessity makes that lawful which otherwise is not lawful.)

Necessitas inducit privilegium quoad jura privata. Bac. Max. 25.—(Necessity gives a privilege with reference to private rights.)

The necessity involved in this maxim is of three kinds, viz.;—1st, Necessity of self-preservation; 2nd, of obedience; and 3rd, necessity resulting from the act of God, or of a stranger.—Noy's Max. 32. See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 10.

Necessitas non habet legem. Plow. 18.—(Necessity has no law.)

Necessitas publica major est quam privata. Bacon.—(Public necessity is greater than private.)

Necessitas quod cogit, defendit. Hale's H. P.C. 54.—(Necessity defends what it compels.)

Necessitas sub lege non continetur, quia quod alias non est licitum necessitas facit licitum. 2 Inst. 326.—(Necessity is not restrained by law; since, what otherwise is not lawful, necessity makes lawful.)

Necessitas vincit legem; legum vincula irridet. Hob. 144.—(Necessity overcomes law; it derides the fetters of laws.)

Necessity, a constraint upon the will, whereby a person is urged to do that which his judgment disapproves, and which, it is to be presumed, his will (if left to itself) would reject. A man, therefore, is excused for those actions which are done through unavoidable force and compulsion.

Compulsion or necessity may arise :—

- (1) From civil subjection ;
- (2) From duress per minas ;
- (3) From the choice of the less pernicious of two evils, one of which is unavoidable ; or,
- (4) From want or hunger, which is, however, no legitimate excuse.—4 Bl. Com. 27.

Necessity, homicide by, a species of justifiable homicide, because it arises from some unavoidable necessity, without any will, intention, or desire, and without any inadvertence or negligence in the party killing, and therefore without any shadow of blame. As, for instance, by virtue of such an office as obliges one, in the execution of public justice, to put a malefactor to death who has forfeited his life to the laws of his country. But the law must require it, otherwise it is not justifiable.—4 Bl. Com. 178.

Neck-verse, the Latin sentence miserere mei Deus, Ps. li. 1, because the reading of it was made a test by which to distinguish those who, in presumption of law, were qualified, in point of learning, and admissible to benefit of clergy.

Nec tempus nec locus occurrit regi. Jenk. Cent. 190.—(Neither time nor place affects the king.)

Ne disturba pas, the general issue in quare impedit. It simply denied that the defendant obstructed the presentation, and was adapted to no other ground of defence. See now C. L. P. Act, 1860, ss. 26, 27, and PLEADING.

Ne dona pas, or non dedit, the general issue in a formedon, now abolished. It denied the gift in tail to have been made in manner and form as alleged : and was therefore the proper plea, if the tenant meant to dispute the fact of the gift, but did not apply to any other case.—5 East. 289.

Ne exeat regno, sometimes termed ne exeat regnum, when a person who owes an actually due equitable debt, or fails to pay alimony in Court for Divorce meditates a departure from the realm, the creditor or wife may file a bill, and pray for a writ of ne exeat regno in order to prevent his flight.

This writ was framed originally to deter the clergy from leaving the country without the royal license, on account of the jealousy of any intercourse between English ecclesiastics and the Papal See.

It will not be granted at the instance of a plaintiff resident abroad.

This writ must generally have been prayed for by bill, but the defendant's intention to go abroad might arise or be discovered during the suit, and then the writ would be granted at once. A defendant might obtain the writ without filing a bill, against a plaintiff ordered to pay a certain sum of money. It is obtained upon a motion ex parte, supported by an affidavit, which must state the defendant's intention to go abroad ; and it must state expressly that the debt or property would be endangered by the defendant's quitting the kingdom. It cannot be sworn before the plaintiff's solicitor. The writ is delivered to the sheriff in whose county the defendant is ; and he causes the party to be arrested, in effecting which outer doors must not be broken open. See now ACTION.

He may obtain his enlargement by depositing the amount with the sheriff or by executing a bond with two sufficient sureties, to the sheriff, in double the sum conditioned not to go or to attempt to go into parts beyond the seas, or into Scotland, without the leave of the court. The sheriff, after he has executed the writ, returns it either by saying that he has taken a deposit of the amount, or the defendant has found bail, etc. An application to discharge the writ for irregularity, or that it was improperly granted, might be made before answer, but must have been supported by affidavit ; after answer, it was usually on the merits therein disclosed, unless the writ was granted upon matter subsequent to answer, when the application may be supported by affidavit. The court will discharge the writ upon the defendant paying into court the amount, and the writ will be discharged should the plaintiff have no case, or the defendant be not going abroad, either absolutely or conditionally, i.e., by giving security to submit to the decree of the court. As for the corresponding remedy at common law, see CAPIAS. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 6 ; Consol. Ord., 1860, i., r. 38 ; xxxvi. r. 9 ; Beames' Brief View of the Writ. Consult 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 4th ed., 1536—1551.

Negatio conclusionis est error in lege. Wing. 268.—(The denial of a conclusion is error in law.)

Negatio destruit negationem et ambæ faciunt affirmativum. Co. Litt. 146.—(A negative destroys a negative, and both make an affirmative.)

Negatio duplex est affirmatio.—(A double negative is an affirmative.)

Negative. In general a negative cannot be proved or testified by witnesses.—2 Inst. 662. But this rule does not apply where one party charges another with a culpable omission or breach of duty; in such a case, the person who makes the charge is bound to prove it, though it may involve a negative, for it is one of the first principles of justice not to presume that a person has acted illegally till the contrary is proved. Where the presumption of law is in favour of a defendant, then the plaintiff must disprove the defence, though he may have to prove a negative.—1 Phil. Evid. c. vii, s. 4. It is a pleading rule that two negatives do not make a good issue. See as to pleading a negative in equity, Story's Eq. Pl. 507.

Negative pregnant, a form of denial which implies or carries with it an affirmative. As to its former effect in pleading, see Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 340; and 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., p. 630.

Neggildare, to claim kindred.—Jacob.

Negligence, acting carelessly. There are generally considered to be three degrees of negligence: (1) ordinary, which is the want of ordinary diligence; (2) slight, the want of great diligence; and (3) gross, the want of slight diligence. But 'gross negligence' has been defined to be 'only ordinary negligence with a vituperative epithet.' See per Rolfe B. in Wilson v. Brett, 11 M. & W. 113, and see also L. R. 1 C. P. 612.

So in the civil law there are three degrees of negligence: (1) lata culpa, gross neglect; (2) levis culpa, ordinary neglect; and (3) levissima culpa, slight neglect.—Halifax, C. L. 61.

The question of negligence is usually one of fact for a jury. The question may be one of law, where the case falls within a general settled rule or principle; or of fact, where no such rule or principle is applicable, and where the conclusion of negligence must be found or excluded by the jury.

The onus of proving negligence rests on the plaintiff, except where res ipsa loquitur, i.e., where the thing resulting from it speaks for itself. See Scott v. Lond. Dock Co., 34 L. J. Exch., 17, 220.

If the plaintiff have been guilty of contributory negligence, in other words, if with ordinary care he might have avoided the consequence of the defendant's negligence, he cannot recover.

A master is responsible to the public, and also, under certain conditions, to a fellow-servant, for the negligence of his servant acting in the execution of his master's business. See MASTER and SERVANT.

An action for negligence causing death passes to the representative or next of kin of the deceased, by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 95.

Negligentia semper habet infortunium comitem. Co. Litt. 246.—(Negligence always has misfortune for a companion.)

Negoce [fr. negotium, Lat.], business, trade, management of affairs.

Negotiable instruments, those the right of action upon which is, by exception from the common rule, freely assignable from one to another, such as bills of exchange and promissory notes. See also title CHOSE.

Promissory notes were made negotiable by 3 & 4 Anne c. 9, and 7 Anne c. 25, and placed in all respects upon the same footing with inland bills of exchange.

By 26 & 27 Vict. c. 105,—a temporary act, continued from time to time by successive 'Expiring Laws Continuance Acts,'—the restrictions on the negotiation of bills of exchange and promissory notes for the payment of 20s. and less than 5*l.*, or upon which 20s. and less than 5*l.* is undischarged, are repealed.

The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, ss. 31—38, contains the law as to negotiation of bills of exchange, promissory notes, and cheques. Section 31 declares that these instruments are negotiated when they are transferred from one person to another in such a manner as to constitute the transferee the holder of them, and section 32 enumerates the conditions under which an indorsement may operate as a negotiation, as that the indorsement must be written on the bill itself, and be signed by the indorser, and must be an indorsement of the entire bill.

By the common law, though the indorsement of a bill of lading transferred the property in the goods to which it related, the indorsee could not sue upon it in his own name, but by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, s. 1, 'every consignee of goods named in a bill of lading, and every indorsee of a bill of lading to whom the property in the goods mentioned in it passes upon or by reason of the consignment or indorsement, shall have transferred to and vested in him all rights of suit, and be subject to the same liabilities, as if the contract contained in the bill of lading had been made with himself.' As to dock-warrants, see that title.

Negotiation, treaty of business whether public or private.

Negotiorum gestor, a person who spontaneously, and without the knowledge or consent of the owner, intermeddles with his property, as to do work on it, or to carry it to another place, etc.

In cases of this sort, as he acts wholly without authority, there can, strictly speaking, be no contract. But the Roman law raises a quasi mandate, by implication, for the benefit of the owner in many of such cases. Nor is an implication of this sort wholly unknown to the common law, where there has been a subsequent ratification of the acts by the owner; and sometimes where unauthorized acts are done, positive presumptions are made by law for the benefit of particular parties. Thus, if a stranger enter upon a minor's lands, and take the profits, the law will, in many cases, oblige him to account to the minor for the profits as his bailiff; for it will be presumed that he entered to take them in trust for the infant.

As the negotiorum gestor interferes without any actual mandate, there is good reason for requiring him to exert the requisite skill and knowledge to accomplish the object or business which he undertakes; to do everything which is incident to or dependent upon that object or business, and to finish whatever he has begun. Without such an obligation every person in the community would be at the mercy of ignorant and officious friends.—Story's Bailment, 204.

Neife, a woman born in villenage.—2 Bl. Com. 94.

Neifty. See NATIVITAS.

Ne injuste vexes, a writ founded on Magna Charta that lay for a tenant distrained by his lord, for more services than he ought to perform; and it was a prohibition to the lord unjustly to distrain or vex his tenant; in a special use it was where the tenant had prejudiced himself by doing greater services or paying more rent without constraint, than he needed; for, in that case, by reason of the lord's seisin, the tenant could not avoid it by avowry, but was driven to his writ for remedy.—F. N. B. 10. (Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, s. 35.)

Ne luminibus officiatur, a servitude restraining the owner of a house from obstructing the light of his neighbour.

Nembda [Teut.], a jury.—3 Bl. Com. 350.

Nemine contradicente, abbrev. nem. con. [Lat.], the phrase to signify the unanimous consent of the Members of the House of Commons to a vote or resolution; it is analogous to the term nemine dissente (nem. dis.) in the House of Peers.

Nemo agit in seipsum. Jenk. Cent. 40.—(No one impleads himself.) Consult Broom's Leg. Max.

Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus. Civil Law Maxim.—(No one alleging his own baseness is to be heard.)

Nemo debet bis puniri pro uno delicto. 4 Rep. 40, 43.—(No one ought to be punished twice for the same offence.) See 2 H. & N. 248.

Nemo debet bis vexari, si constat curiæ quod sit pro una et eadem causâ. 5 Co. 61.—(No man ought to be twice put to trouble, if it appear to the court that it is for one and the same cause.) In civil actions, the general rule is, that the judgment of a court of concurrent jurisdiction directly upon the point is, as a plea, a bar, or as evidence, conclusive between the same parties upon the same matter directly in question in another court. The exception to this rule is in the action of ejectment.—2 Selv. N. P. 763.

It is also well established in the criminal law, that when a man is indicted for an offence, and acquitted, he cannot afterwards be indicted for the same offence, provided the first indictment were such that he could have been lawfully convicted upon it by proof of the facts contained in the second indictment.—Arch. Cr. Plead., 17th ed., 130—4.

Nemo debet esse iudex in propria causâ. 12 Co. 113.—(No one should be judge in his own cause.) Consult Broom's Legal Max., and see Dimes v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 3 H. L. C. 759, in which the judgment of Lord Chancellor Cottenham was set aside on the ground of his having been a shareholder in the defendant company.

Nemo est hæres viventis. Co. Litt. 8.—(No one is the heir of a living man.)

Nemo ex alterius facto prægravari debet.—(No one ought to be burdened by the act of another.)—Consult 1 Pothier, by Evans, 133.

Nemo ex dolo suo proprio relevetur, aut auxilium cupiat. Jur. Civ.—(Let no one be relieved or gain an advantage by his own fraud.) This rule is set aside in certain cases by several positive enactments of the legislature, as the Statute of Frauds, the Marriage Act, 3 & 4 Geo. IV. c. 76, s. 22. But the judges always lean towards giving effect to the maxim of the civil law. See Broom's Leg. Max.

Nemo tenetur divinare. 3 Co. 28.—(No one is bound to foretell.)

Nemo tenetur jurare in suam turpitudinem. Halk. 100.—(No one is bound to testify to his own baseness.)

Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum.—(No one is bound to betray himself. In other words, No one can be compelled to criminate himself.) See Broom's Legal Max.

The Act 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, which by s. 2 makes parties admissible witnesses in actions, expressly saves criminal proceedings from its operation. The Licensing Act, 1872, s. 51, the Adulteration Act, 1875, the Conspiracy, etc., Act, 1875, s. 11, and the Adulteration Act, 1875, s. 21, make defendants competent, but not compellable to give evidence.

Nephew [fr. nepos, Lat.], the son of a brother or sister.

A nephew, according to the civil law, is in the third degree of consanguinity; but, according to the canon law, in the second.

Nepos, a grandson.

Neptis, a granddaughter.

Ne recipiatur, a caveat entered by a defendant to prevent a plaintiff from trying his cause at certain sittings, where the cause was not entered in due time.—R. 43, H. T. 1853.

Ne releassa pas (he did not release).

Net profits, clear profits after all deductions.

Nether House of Parliament. The House of Commons was so called in the time of Henry VIII.—Div. of Purl. 221.

Ne unques accouple in loyal matrimonie, a plea whereby a tenant in the real action of dower unde nihil, controverted the validity of the defendant's marriage with the person out of whose estate she claimed dower. To this plea, the defendant replied that she was accoupled in lawful matrimony at A. in such a diocese, upon which a writ issued to the bishop of such diocese, requiring him to certify the fact to the court.—Co. Ent. 180.

Ne unques executor or administrator, a plea whereby a defendant denied that he was executor or administrator. It did not deny the cause of action, but only that the defendant was the personal representative of the testator or intestate.—1 Saund. 207 a.

Ne unques seisie que dower, a plea in dower which was often called the general issue, but it did not seem to fall strictly within the definition of that term. It did not, properly speaking, contain any denial or traverse of the count, and must therefore be considered as an anomaly or exception in the system of pleading. See C. L. P. Act, 1860, ss. 25, 27.

Never indebted, plea of, a species of traverse which occurred in actions of debt on simple contract, and was resorted to when the defendant meant to deny in point of fact the existence of any express contract to the effect alleged in the declaration, or to deny the matters of fact from which such contract would by law be implied.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 153, 156. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 20, a defendant is no longer allowed to deny generally the facts alleged by the plaintiff. See further title PLEADING.

New assignment, a form of pleading which sometimes arose from the generality of the declaration, when, the complaint not having been set out with sufficient precision, it became necessary, from the evasiveness of the plea, to re-assign the cause of action with fresh particulars. It most frequently occurred in actions of trespass, as where two assaults had been committed, one of which was justifiable and the other indefensible; or in trespass quare clausum fregit, when the defendant claimed a right of way.

New assignment is now abolished, and it is provided that everything which has heretofore been alleged by way of new assignment is to be introduced by way of amendment of the statement of claim.—Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 14.

New trial. If any defect of judgment happen from causes wholly intrinsic, i.e., arising from matters foreign to or dehors the record, the only remedy the party injured by it has (except formerly error coram nobis or vobis in some few cases), is by applying to the court for a new trial, which is in substitution for a bill of exceptions. But the court must be satisfied that there are strong probable grounds to suppose that the merits have not been fairly and fully discussed, and that the decision is not agreeable to the justice and truth of the case, before they will grant a new trial.

The following is a summary of the cases in which a new trial will be granted:—

(1) Mistake, etc., of the judge. If a judge misdirect a jury, even in a penal action, it is generally a good ground for a new trial. So if a judge improperly nonsuit a plaintiff. So if a judge admit improper evidence, or reject evidence which ought to be admitted, by which means the result of the trial or inquiry has been different from what it otherwise would have been. An objection to the admissibility of evidence should be made when the evidence is tendered. 'A new trial shall not be granted on the ground of misdirection or of the improper admission or rejection of evidence, unless in the opinion of the Court to which the application is made some substantial wrong or miscarriage has been thereby occasioned in the trial of the action; and if it appear to such Court that such wrong or miscarriage affects part only of the matter in controversy, the Court may give final judgment as to part thereof, and direct a new trial as to the other part only' (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXIX., r. 3). See also Judicature Act, 1873, s. 46, and Judicature Act, 1875, s. 22.

(2) Default or misconduct of the officer of the court. As where a cause is, by mistake, entered in a wrong list, and the cause is tried as undefended in the defendant's absence.

(3) Default or misconduct of the jury. If a juror has been sworn by a wrong surname, and it has been productive of some injustice. If a jury find a verdict contrary to evidence. For excessive damages, and for the smallness of the damages, if out of all proportion to the injury. For the misconduct of the jury, as if they had eaten or drunk at the expense of the party for whom they had afterwards found a verdict, or if they determine their verdict by lots, or if any of them had declared that the plaintiff should never have a verdict.

(4) Absence, etc., of counsel or solicitor. The instances are very rare in which the court has granted a new trial where a verdict has been obtained against a party on account of the absence of his counsel, etc.

(5) Default or misconduct of the opposite party. If a party for whom a verdict is afterwards given, deliver to the jury, after they have left the bar, evidence which had not been adduced in court, a new trial will be granted. So if he have laboured the jury, or used improper influence with them. So misleading or taking by surprise the opposite party. So where no notice of trial has been given; but if the defendant appear to defend, this irregularity is waived.

(6) Default or misconduct of witnesses. The general rule is, that a new trial will not be granted on the ground that evidence has not been given that might have been given at the trial, for the plaintiff ought, if unprepared with his evidence, either to make application to postpone the trial before the jury are sworn, or should withdraw his record and not take the chance of a verdict. The court has granted a new trial where it appeared clearly that the plaintiff's case was a mere fiction supported by perjury, which the defendant could not at the time of the trial be prepared to answer.

(7) Discovery of new evidence after the trial. A new trial will seldom be granted where a verdict has been given against a party, or a plaintiff has been nonsuited for want of evidence which might have been produced at the trial, because it would tend to introduce perjury. But if new evidence have been discovered after the trial, the court will grant a new trial (which has usually been upon payment of costs) if it be necessary, in order to do justice between the parties; but the discovery of witnesses who can contradict those produced on the former trial, seems to be no ground for a new trial, nor will the court grant a new trial to let a party into a defence of which he was apprised at the first trial.

(8) Where one of several issues, etc., has been wrongfully decided. A new trial may be ordered on any question in an action, whatever be the grounds for the new trial, without interfering with the finding or decision upon any other question (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXIX., r. 4).

(9) Where the action or defence is trifling or vexatious. The value or amount must be 20*l.* at least, in actions of contract, to induce the court to interfere, unless on trials before the sheriff in which the limited sum is 5*l.*; or the verdict involve some particular right independent of the damages.

(10) Where there has been a previous new trial. If the jury on the second trial find for the party against whom the former verdict was given, the court, if the case be doubtful, or the second verdict do not accord with the justice of the court, may be induced to grant a third trial, but this is entirely in the discretion of the court, even after two concurring verdicts.

(10) Where a party has been taken by surprise.

A new trial may be awarded for the same causes, after inquiry before the sheriff, as after a verdict. Also, in actions of ejectment, if verdict found for the plaintiff; but where the verdict is for the defendant, the court will seldom grant a new trial, because the plaintiff may, if he will, bring a new action, and it is expressly enacted by the C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 93, that the plaintiff may be ordered to give security for costs. In replevin, where the verdict is for the plaintiff, the court will be more cautious in granting a new trial than in other actions, and will not grant it unless upon very clear grounds; for the landlord has other remedies for his rent, and a new trial will renew the liability of the sureties.

As to time and manner of moving for a new trial, see Ord. XXXIX.

The court may make the order absolute upon terms; as that witnesses infirm or going beyond sea may be examined upon interrogatories, or their evidence may be read from the judge's notes of the first trial; that deeds, books, papers, etc., may be produced at the trial, facts admitted, or party make discovery of certain facts upon oath.

It is entirely in the discretion of the court whether they will oblige the party applying for a new trial to pay costs as a condition precedent to his proceeding to a second trial. If a new trial has been granted upon a ground not opened upon the first trial, it has usually been upon payment of costs. If a new trial has been granted without any mention of costs in the order, the costs of the first trial have not been allowed to the successful party, though he succeeded on the second. Where the costs are to abide the event of the second trial, if the same party succeed on both trials, he shall have the costs of both. By 'the event of the second trial,' is meant the ultimate event of the cause; and, therefore, if the verdict at the second trial be set aside, and on the third trial the ultimate event be the same as on the first trial, the party will be entitled to the costs of the first trial. See COSTS.

As to appealing:—Before the Judicature Act, in all cases of motion for a new trial upon the ground that the judge had not ruled according to law, if the rule to show causes were refused, or if granted were then discharged or made absolute, the party decided against might appeal, if any judge dissented from the order, or if the court thought fit that an appeal should lie; but where the application was upon matter of discretion, as that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, no such appeal lay. When the rule was upon a point reserved at the trial, there was always an appeal whether the rule was refused, discharged, or made absolute.—C. L.

P. A. 1854, ss. 25 and 34; and see s. 44; but an appeal would seem to lie in all cases, under Jud. Act, 1873, s. 19.

Applications for new trials of causes tried before juries in the Court of Probate must be made 14 days from the day of trial, or the first motion day after the 14 days (Rule 59 of 1862). So of the rehearing of causes heard before the judge alone, on evidence given vivâ voce (Rule 60 of 1863). And as no mention of new trials in this branch of the Court is made by the new rules, the former practice in this respect will remain. See note at head of Sched. I. of Jud. Act, 1875.

In divorce cases the judge ordinary has power to grant or refuse applications for new trials. If either party is dissatisfied with his decision an appeal lies within 14 days of the pronouncing of the decision to the full court, whose decision is final.—23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, s. 2. Proceedings for divorce, etc., are unaffected by the Rules of the Supreme Court (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LXII.).

News. Spreading false news to make discord between the sovereign and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, is a misdemeanour punishable at common law with fine and imprisonment; which is confirmed by stat. West. I., 3 Edw. I. c. 34; 2 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 5; and 12 Rich. II. c. 11. See 4 Bl. Com. 149.

Newspapers, periodical publications containing intelligence of passing events. They have from time to time been the subject of enactments for their general regulation. The principal of these were the 60 Geo. III. and 1 Geo. IV. c. 9; and 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 76. But these and other acts were repealed by the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 24, with the exception of certain sections re-enacted by that act. The 33 & 34 Vict. c. 12, s. 82, abolished stamp duties on newspapers from 1st October, 1870. Under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 2, the defendant in any action for a libel contained in a public newspaper, may plead an apology and payment into court. The Newspaper Libel and Registration Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 60, requires the consent of the Director of Public Prosecutions to the prosecution of a newspaper for libel, allows the defence of justification to be gone into by justices, and allows justices to summarily convict. The same act establishes a register of newspaper proprietors, open to public search. See also PRINTER.

New Year's Day, the 1st of January, and the day on which is commemorated the circumcision of the Saviour as being the eighth from the 25th of December, his supposed day of nativity. The 25th of March was the civil and legal New Year's Day, till the alteration of the style in 1752, when it was permanently fixed as the 1st January.

In Scotland the year was, by a proclamation, which bears date 27th November, 1599, ordered thenceforth to commence in that kingdom on the 1st January instead of the 25th March.—Encyc. Lond. By the 34 Vict. c. 17, New Year's Day is made a bank holiday in Scotland, and bills, etc., becoming due on that day are payable on the following day. See HOLIDAY.

Nexi, among the Romans, persons free-born, who, for debt, were delivered bound to their creditors, and obliged to serve them until they could pay their debts.

Next friend. At law, an infant having a guardian, might sue by his guardian, as such, or by his next friend, though he must always have defended by his guardian. In equity, he sued by next friend, and not by guardian, and defended by guardian ad litem. A married woman, before the Married Women's Property Act, could not sue either at law or in equity, unless her husband were joined.

Infants may sue as plaintiffs by their next friends in the manner practised before the Jud. Acts in the Court of Chancery (as to which see Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., p. 602), and may in like manner defend any action by their guardian appointed for that purpose by Ord. XVI., Rule 8. The next friend of an infant is primâ facie liable to the costs, which are, however, reimbursed to him out of the infant's estate, provided he have acted properly, but the next friend of a feme covert does not incur the like responsibility.

A married woman has, by Ord. XVI., Rule 8, the same right of suing by a next friend as an infant has, but the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, s. 1, subs. 2, by allowing a married woman to sue in all respects as if she were a feme sole, has, it is conceived, rendered the 'next friend' in her case unnecessary.

Lunatics and persons of unsound mind sue by their committee or next friend, and defend by their committees or guardians appointed for that purpose (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XVIII.).

Next of kin. A person, or set of persons, standing nearest in blood relationship to another person.

Nexum, the transfer of ownership of a thing or the mortgage of it.—Civ. Law.

Nicole, an ancient name for Lincoln.—Cowel.

Niece [fr. neptis, Lat.], the daughter of a brother or sister. See NEPHEW, as to the degree of consanguinity.

Nief. See NEIFE.

Nient comprise (not contained), an exception taken to a petition, because the thing desired is not contained in the deed or proceeding upon which the petition is founded.

Nient culpable (not guilty), a plea in criminal prosecutions.

Nient dedire (to disown nothing), to suffer judgment by not denying or opposing it, i.e., by default.

Nient le fait (not his deed).

Niger liber, the black book or register in the Exchequer; chartularies of abbeys, cathedrals, etc.

Night, the time of darkness between sunset and sunrise. Under the act against poaching by night, 9 Geo. IV. c. 69, s. 12, the night begins one hour after sunset, and ends one hour before sunrise. Under the Larceny Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 1, (see BURGLARY), night is between 9 P.M. and 6 A.M. An arrest might be made on a capias on mesne process in the night; and also on a ca. sa.; and a writ of summons may be served during the night.

Night Magistrate, a constable of the night; the head of a watch-house.—Scott.

Night-walkers, vagrants, pilferers, disturbers of the peace. They may be arrested by the police, and committed to custody till the morning.—2 Hale P. C. 90.

Nihil [Lat.] (nothing), a return made by a sheriff, etc., when the circumstances warrant it. See NULLA BONA.

Nihil aliud potest rex quàm quod de jure potest. 11 Rep. 74.—(The king can do nothing except what he can by law do.)

Nihil capiat per breve (that he take nothing by his writ). Where an issue, arising upon a declaration or temporary plea, is decided for the defendant, the judgment is, generally, that the plaintiff take nothing, etc., and that the defendant go thereof without day, etc., which is a judgment of nihil capiat, etc.

Nihil magis justum est quam quod necessarium est. Dav. 12.—(Nothing is more just than what is necessary.)

Nihil perfectum est dum aliquid restat agendum. 9 Rep. 9 b.—(Nothing is perfect while something remains to be done.)

Nihil præscribitur nisi quod possidetur. Lord Hale, 'De jure maris,' 32.—(Nothing is prescribed except what is possessed.)

Nihil quod est contra rationem est licitum. Co. Litt. 97.—(Nothing is permitted which is contrary to reason.)

Nihil quod est inconveniens est licitum. Co. Litt. 66 a.—(Nothing that is inconvenient is allowed.) In other words, the law will sooner suffer a private mischief than a public inconvenience. See Broom's Leg. Max.

Nihil simul inventum est et perfectum. Co. Litt. 230.—(Nothing is invented and perfected at the same moment.) f

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati quam unumquodque dissolvi eo ligamine quo ligatum est. 2 Inst. 359.—(Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as that a thing should be dissolved by the same means by which it was bound.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Nihil tam conveniens est naturali æquitati quam voluntatem domini rem suam in alium transferre ratam habere. 1 Co. 100.—(Nothing is so consonant to natural equity as to regard the intention of the owner in transferring his own property to another.)

Nihil tam naturale est, quam eo genere quidque dissolvere, quo colligatum est; ideo verborum obligatio verbis tollitur, nudi consensus obligatio contrario consensu dissolvitur. D. 56, 17, 35.—(Nothing is so natural as to dissolve anything in the way in which it was bound together; therefore the obligation of words is taken away by words, the obligation of mere consent is dissolved by the contrary consent.) Consult Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 887.

Nihil tam proprium est imperii quam legibus vivere. 2 Inst. 63.—(Nothing is so much the property of sovereignty as to live according to the laws.)

Nihils, or Nichils, debts to the Crown which a sheriff, when making up his accounts for the Exchequer, said were nothing worth and illeivable, for the insufficiency of the parties from whom due. Sheriffs' accounts are now passed by the Commissioners for auditing the public accounts.—3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99.

Nil consensui tam contrarium est quàm vis atque metus. D. 50, 17, 116.—(Nothing is so opposed to consent as force and fear.)

Nil debet (he owes nothing), the old form of the general issue in all actions of debt not founded on a specialty. This plea was not allowed after Reg. Gen. T. T. 1853, r. 11. See PLEADING.

Nil dicit, Judgment by. See JUDGMENT BY DEFAULT.

Nil facit error nominis cum de corpore vel personâ constat. 11 Rep. 21.—(A mistake in the name does not matter when the body or person is manifest.) See 11 C. B. 406.

Nihil or nil habuit in tenementis (he [the landlord] had no interest in the tenements [demised]), a plea denying the lessor's title pleaded in an action of debt only, brought by a lessor against lessee for years, or at will, without deed or occupation by the lessee, for if the lessee had become tenant, he would have been estopped from denying his landlord's title.

Nimia subtilitas in jure reprobat. Wing. 26.—(Too much subtlety in law is blamed.)

Nimium altercando veritas amittitur. Hob. 344.—(By too much altercation truth is lost.)

Nimmer, a thief; a pilferer.

Nisan. See ABIB.

Nisi prius, a common law phrase, which originated thus:—

An action was formerly triable only in the court where it was brought. But it was provided by Magna Charta, in case of the subject, that assizes of novel disseisin and mort-ancestor (which were the most common remedies of that day) should thenceforward, instead of being tried at Westminster, in the superior court, be taken in their proper counties, and for this purpose justices were to be sent into every county once a year to take these assizes there.—1 Reeves, 246. These local trials being convenient, were applied to other actions: for by the statute of Nisi Prius, 13 Edw. I. st. 1, c. 30, as the general course of proceeding, writs of venire for summoning juries to the superior courts are in the following term:—Præcipimus tibi quod venire facias coram justiciariis nostris apud Westm. in Octavis Sancti Michaelis Nisi talis et talis, tali die et loco, ad partes illas venerint duodecim, etc. Thus the trial was to be had at Westminster only in the event of its not previously taking place in the county before the justices appointed to take the assizes. This clause of nisi or nisi prius is not now retained in the venire, but it occurs in the record and the judgment roll. And it is enforced by a subsequent statute of 14 Edw. III. c. 16, which authorizes a trial before the justices of assize, in lieu of the superior court, and gives it the name of a trial at Nisi Prius.—2 Inst. 424.

Nisi prius record. This was an instrument in the nature of a commission to the judges at Nisi Prius for the trial of a cause, written on parchment and delivered to the officer of the court in which the cause was to be tried. Any variance between the record and the issue should have been objected to at the time of trial, but the judges had power to amend variances.—9 Geo. IV. c. 15; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 23; C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 222; and 1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 361. See now RECORD OF NISI PRIUS, and TRIAL.

Nitro-Glycerine. See the Explosives Act, 38 Vict. c. 17, which repeals 32 & 33 Vict. c. 113.

Nizam, an arranger; the superior officer of a province charged with the administration of criminal law.—Indian.

Nizamut, arrangement, government, the office of the Nazam or Nizam.—Ibid.

Nizamut adawlut, the Chief Criminal Court of the British provinces in India.—Ibid.

Nobile officium, the equitable jurisdiction of the Court of Session in Scotland.

N. L. See A. and NON LIQUET.

Nobiles magis plectuntur pecuniâ; plebes vero in corpore. 3 Inst. 220.—(The higher classes are more punished in money; but the lower in person.)

Nobiles sunt, qui arma gentilitia antecessorum suorum proferre possunt. 2 Inst. 595.—(The gentry are those who are able to produce armorial bearings derived by descent from their own ancestors.)

Nobiliores et benigniores præsumptiones in dubiis sunt præferendæ. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(In cases of doubt, the more generous and more benign presumptions are to be preferred.)

Nobilitas est duplex, superior et inferior. 2 Inst. 583.—(There are two sorts of nobility, the higher and the lower.)

Nobility, a division of the people, comprehending dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons. These had anciently duties annexed to their respective honours; they are created either by writ, i.e., by royal summons to attend the house of peers, or by letters-patent, i.e., by royal grant of any dignity and degree of peerage; and they enjoy many privileges, exclusive of their senatorial capacity.—1 Bl. Com. 396.

Noble. See GEORGE-NOBLE

Nocent, guilty; criminal.

Noctanter (by night), an abolished writ which issued out of Chancery, and returned to the Queen's Bench, for the prostration of enclosures, etc.—7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27.

Noctes and Noctem de firmâ, entertainment of meat and drink for so many nights.—Domesday.

Nodfyr, or Nedfri [fr. neb, Sax., necessary], necessary fire. See Spelman.

Nolens volens, whether willing or unwilling.

Nolle prosequi (to be unwilling to prosecute), a proceeding in the nature of an undertaking by the plaintiff when he has misconceived the nature of the action, or the party to be sued, to forbear to proceed in a suit altogether, or as to some part of it, or as to some of the defendants. It differs from a non pros., which puts a plaintiff out of court with respect to all the defendants. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 32; and DISCONTINUANCE.

Nomen collectivum, a singular noun of multitude.

Nomen est quasi rei notamen. 11 Co.—(A name is, as it were, the note of a thing.)

Nomen generalissimum, a most universal term, as land.

Nomina si nescis perit cognitio rerum. Et nomina si perdas, certè distinctio rerum perditur. Co. Litt. 86.—(If you know not the names of things, the knowledge of things themselves perishes. And if you lose the names, the distinction of the things is certainly lost.)

Nomina sunt mutabilia, res autem immobiles. 6 Co. 66.—(Names are mutables, but things immutable.)

Nomina sunt notæ rerum. 11 Co. 20.—(Names are the notes of things.)

Nomina sunt symbola rerum. Godb.—(Names are the symbols of things.)

Nomina Villarum, an account of the names of all the villages and the possessors thereof, in each county, drawn up by several sheriffs, 9 Edw. II., and returned by them into the Exchequer, where it is still preserved.

Nominal damages. See DAMAGES.

Nominal partner, one who has not any actual interest in the trade or business, or its profits; but, by allowing his name to be used holds himself out to the world as apparently having an interest.

Nominate contracts, those distinguished by particular names. Civil Law.

Nominatim, by name; expressed one by one.

Nomination, the act of mentioning by name; especially the power of appointing by virtue, of some manor or otherwise, a clerk to a patron of a benefice, by him to be presented to the ordinary. A nominator must appoint his clerk within six months after avoidance if he do not, and the patron presents his clerk before the bishop has taken any benefit of the lapse, he is obliged to admit such clerk.—Plowd. 529.

Nominativus pendens, a nominative case grammatically unconnected with the rest of the sentence in which it stands. The opening words in the ordinary form of a deed inter partes [This indenture, etc., down to whereas], though an intelligible and convenient part of the deed, are of this kind.

Nomine pœnæ, a penalty incurred for not paying rent, etc., at the day appointed in the lease or agreement for payment thereof.

Strictly no forfeiture is nomine pœnæ, unless for non-payment of rent; but it is usual to mention stipulated penalties for non-payment of a collateral sum, ploughing up ancient meadow, or above a certain number of acres in one year, for changing the character of particular premises, etc., by the general name of nomine pœnæ.

Where a penalty is annexed to the non-payment of rent, and distress given for it, a demand must be made, and the penalty is waived by acceptance of rent.—Cowp. 247.

Nomocanon [fr. νόμος, Gk., law; and κανόν, a rule], a collection of canons and imperial laws relative or conformable thereto. The first nomocanon was made by Johannes Scholasticus in 554. Photius, patriarch of Constantinople, in 883, compiled another nomocanon, or collation of the civil laws with the canons; this is the most celebrated. 2. A collection of the ancient canons of the apostles, councils, and fathers, without any regard to imperial constitutions. Such is the nomocanon by M. Cotelier.—Encyc. Lond.

Nomographer [fr. νόμος, Gk., law; and γράφω, to write], one who writes on the subject of laws.

Nomography, a treatise or description of laws.

Nomotheta [Gk.], a lawgiver, or law commissioner.

Nonomothetical, legislative.

Non-ability, inability; an exception against a person.—F. N. B. 35, 65. See DISABILITY.

Non accipi debent verba in demonstrationem falsum quæ competunt in limitationem veram. Bacon.—(Words which agree in a true meaning ought not to be received in a false sense.)

Non alio modo puniatur aliquis quam secundum quod se habet condemnatio. 3 Inst. 217.—(A person may not be punished differently than according to what the sentence enjoins.)

Nonæ et decimæ, payments made to the church, by those who were tenants of church-farms. The first was a rent or duty for things belonging to husbandry, the second was claimed in right of the church.

Non-acceptance, the refusal of acceptance.

Non acceptavit [Lat.] (he did not accept). This was a plea which put in issue the fact of a bill of exchange being due at the time of action brought, being a denial of a defendant having accepted such a bill as was described in the declaration.—Hinton v. Duff, 10 W. R. 295. See now Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., rr. 20 & 23; and see PLEADING.

Non-access, when a husband could not, in the course of nature, by reason of his absence, have been the father of his wife's child, the child is a bastard.

Access is presumed during wedlock; but this presumption may be encountered by proof of circumstances showing that sexual intercourse did not take place within such a time that the husband could be the father. The mother of the child whose legitimacy is questioned will not be allowed to prove the non-access of her husband, not even after her husband's death. See ACCESS.

Non-act, a forbearance from action; the contrary to act.

Non-admission, the refusal of admission.

Non-age, minority. See INFANT.

Nonagium, or Non-age, a ninth part of moveables which was paid to the clergy on the death of persons in their parish, and claimed on pretence of being distributed to pious uses.—Blount.

Non aliter à significatione verborum recedi oportet quam cum manifestum est aliud sensisse testatorem. 2 De Gex. M. & G. 313.—(It behoves us not to depart from the literal meaning of words, unless it is evident that the testator intended some other meaning.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 568.

Non-appearance, the omission of timely and proper appearance; a failure of appearance. See APPEARANCE.

Non assumpsit (he did not promise), a plea by way of traverse, which occurred in the action of assumpsit or promises. This plea operated as a denial in point of fact of the existence of any express promise to the effect alleged in the declaration, or of the matters of fact from which the promise alleged would be implied by law; see Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 154, 160. See, too, as to the effect of the plea, Bullen and Leake on Pleading.

Under the present rules of pleading general denials are not allowed, but each party must deal specifically with each allegation of fact which he does not admit (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 20); and when a contract is alleged in any pleading a bare denial of the contract by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial of the making of the contract in fact, and not of its legality or its sufficiency in law, whether with reference to the Statute of Frauds or otherwise (Ibid., r. 23). See PLEADING.

Non assumpsit infra sex annos (he did not promise within six years). This was the form of pleading the Statute of Limitations. See LIMITATION OF SUITS, and PLEADING.

Non bis in idem (not twice tried for the same offence).

Non cepit (he took not). This was a plea by way of traverse, which occurred in the action of replevin. It applied to the case where the defendant had not, in fact, taken the cattle or goods, or where he did not take them or have them in the place mentioned in the declaration; the place being a material point in this action.

Non-claim, the omission or neglect of him that ought to challenge his right within a time limited, as within a year and day; but now no continual or other claim shall preserve any right of making an entry or distress or of bringing an action.—3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, s. 11; Bl. Com. i. 465, and ii. 354.

Non compos mentis, said of a person who is not of sound memory and understanding. See IDIOTS and LUNATICS.

Non concedantur citationes priusquam exprimatur super quâ re fieri debet citatio. 12 Co. 47.—(Summonses should not be granted before it is expressed on what matter the summonses ought to be made.)

Non concessit (he did not grant), a plea resorted to by a stranger to a deed, because estoppels do not hold with respect to strangers. This plea brought into issue the title of the grantor as well as the operation of the deed. See now PLEADING.

Nonconformist, one who refuses to comply with others; one who refuses to join in the established forms of worship.

Nonconformists are of two sorts: (1) such as absent themselves from divine worship in the Established Church through total irreligion, and attend the service of no other persuasion; (2) such as attend the religious service of another persuasion. See DISSENTER and AFFIRMATION.

Any person wilfully or contemptuously disturbing any congregation assembled in any church or permitted meeting-house, or misusing any preacher or teacher there, may be bound over to keep the peace, and incurs a penalty of 20*l.*—1 Wm. & M. st. 1, c. 18.

Non constat (it is not certain), a phrase used by one who insists on logical possibility.

Non culpabilis, sometimes abbreviated Non cul (not guilty).

Non damnificatus (not injured). This was a plea in an action of debt on an indemnity bond, or bond conditioned 'to keep the plaintiff harmless and indemnified,' &c. It was in the nature of a plea of performance; being used where the defendant meant to allege that the plaintiff had been kept harmless and indemnified, according to the tenor of the condition.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 300—1. See now PLEADING.

Non dat qui non habet. Lofft. 258.—(He who has not does not give.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 467.

Non debeo melioris conditionis esse, quàm auctor meus à quo jus in me transit. D. 50, 17, 175, s. 1.—(I ought not to be in a better condition than my author from whom the right passes to me.)

Non debet adduci exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio. Jenk. Cent. 37.—(An exception of the thing whose abolition is sought ought not to be adduced.)

Non debet alteri per alterum iniqua conditio inferri. D. 50, 17, 74.—(An unjust condition ought not to be imposed upon one by another.)

Non debet cui plus licet, quod minus est non licere. D. 50, 17, 21.—(A man having a power may do less than such power enables him to do.)—Consult Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 176.

Non debet dici tendere in prejudicium ecclesiasticæ libertatis quod pro rege et republicâ necessarium videtur. 2 Inst. 625.—(That which seems necessary for the king and the state ought not to be said to tend to the prejudice of spiritual liberty.)

Non decimando, a custom or prescription to be discharged of all tithes, &c.

Non decipitur qui scit se decipi. 5 Co. 60.—(He is not deceived who knows himself to be deceived.)

Non definitur in jure quid sit conatus. 6 Co. 41.—(What an attempt is, is not defined in law.) But see now Russell on Crimes, 4th ed., 83 et seq.

Non detinet, a plea by way of traverse, which occurred in the action of detinue. This plea alleged that the defendant did not detain 'the said goods in the said declaration specified, &c.' It operated accordingly as a denial of the detention of the goods. But, under this plea, the defendant could not deny that they were the plaintiff's. Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 154, 163. See now Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., rr. 20, 23. And see PLEADING.

Non dimisit (he demised not), a plea resorted to where a plaintiff declared upon a demise without stating the indenture in an action of debt for rent. 2. A plea in bar, in replevin, to an avowry for arrears of rent, that the avowant did not demise. See now Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., rr. 20, 23. And see PLEADING.

Non direction, omission on the part of a judge to enforce a necessary point of law upon a jury. See NEW TRIAL; and see Jud. Act, 1875, s. 22, which preserves the right of any party to have the issues for trial by jury left to the jury with a proper and complete direction to the jury upon the law and as to the evidence applicable to such issues.

Non distringendo, a writ not to distrain.—Obsolete.

Non effecit affectus, nisi sequatur effectus. Sed in atrocioribus delictis puniuntur affectus, licet non sequatur effectus. 2 Rol. Rep. 89.—(The intention fulfils nothing unless an effect follow. But in the deeper delinquencies, the intention is punished, although an effect follow not.)

Nones, days in the Roman calendar, so called because they reckoned nine days from them to the Ides.

The seventh day of March, May, July, and October, and the fifth day of all other months.—Kenn. Antiq. 92.

Non est arctius vinculum inter homines quam jusjurandum. Jenk. Cent. 126.—(There is no tighter bond among mankind than an oath.)

Non est consonum rationi, quod cognitio accessorii in curia christianitatis impediatur, ubi cognitio cause principalis ad forum ecclesiasticum noscitur pertinere. 12 Co. 65.—(It is unreasonable that the cognizance of an accessory matter should be impeded in an ecclesiastical court, when the cognizance of the principal cause is admitted to appertain to an ecclesiastical court.)

Non est disputandum contra principia negantem. Co. Litt. 343.—(We cannot dispute against a man who denies first principles.)

Non est factum. This was a plea by way of traverse, which occurred in debt on bond or other specialty, and also in covenant. It denied that the deed mentioned in the declaration was the defendant's deed; under this, the defendant might contend at the trial that the deed was never executed in point of fact; but he could not deny its validity in point of law. See now Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX, rr. 20, 23. And see ASSUMPSIT and PLEADING.

Non est inventus, a sheriff's return to a writ when the defendant is not to be found in his bailiwick.

Non est novum ut priores leges ad posteriores trahantur. D. 1, 3, 36.—(It is no new thing that prior statutes should give place to later ones.)

Non est regula quin fallat. Office of Executor, 212.—(There is no rule which may not fail.)

Non ex opinionibus singulorum sed ex communi usu nomina exaudiri debent. Dig. 33, 10, 7, s. 3.—(Names ought to be regarded not by the opinions of individuals, but by the common use.)

Non facias malum, ut inde veniat bonum. 11 Co. 74.—(You are not to do evil that thence good may arise.)

Non-feasance, an offence of omission.

Non hæc in fœdera veni.—(I did not agree to these terms.)

Non impedit clausula derogatoria quo minus ab eadem potestate res dissolvantur a quâ constituentur. Bacon.—(A derogatory clause does not impede things from being dissolved by the same power by which they are created.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 27.

Non in legendo sed in intelligendo leges consistunt. 8 Co. 167.—(The laws consist not in being read, but in being understood.)

Non jus sed seisinam facit stipitem. Fleta, 1. vi.—(Not right, but seisin, makes a stock.) But see CANONS OF INHERITANCE.

Non licet quod dispendio licet. Co. Litt. 127.—(That which is permitted at a loss is not permitted.)

Non implacitando aliquem de libero tenemento sine brevi, a writ to prohibit bailiffs, etc., from distraining or impleading any man touching his freehold without the king's writ.—Reg. Orig. 171. Obsolete.

Non infregit conventionem, a plea which raised a substantial issue in an action for non-repair according to covenant, whether there was a want of repairs or not. See PLEADING.

Non intromittant clause, a clause of a charter of a municipal borough, whereby the borough is exempted from the jurisdiction of the justices of the peace for the county. See R. v. Swinsbury, 4 T. R. 451.

Non intromittendo, quando breve præcipe in capite subdole impetratur, a writ addressed to the justices of the bench, or in eyre, commanding them not to give one, who under colour of entitling the king to land, etc., as holding of him in capite, had deceitfully obtained the writ called præcipe in capite, any benefit thereof, but to put him to his writ of right.—Reg. Orig. 4. Obsolete.

Non-issuable pleas, those upon which a decision would not determine the action upon the merits, as a plea in abatement. See PLEADING.

Non-joinder of Parties. See PARTIES and ABATEMENT.

Nonjuror, one who (conceiving the Stuart family unjustly deposed) refused to swear allegiance to those who succeeded them.

Non liquet (it does not appear clear), a verdict given by a jury when a matter was to be deferred to another day of trial.

The same phrase was used by the Romans; after hearing a cause, such of the judges as thought it not sufficiently clear to pronounce upon, cast a ballot into the urn with the two letters N.L. for non liquet.

Non merchandizanda victualia, an ancient writ addressed to justices of assize, to inquire whether the magistrates of a town sold victuals in gross or by retail during the time of their being in office, which was contrary to an obsolete statute; and to punish them if they did.—Reg. Orig. 184. Obsolete.

Non molestando, a writ that lay for a person who was molested contrary to the king's protection granted to him.—Reg. Orig. 184.

Non observata forma infertur annullatio actus.—(When form is not observed, a failure of the action ensues.)

Non obstante (notwithstanding), a license from the Crown to do that which could not be lawfully done without it. Also, a clause frequent in statutes and letters-patent, importing a license from the Crown to do a thing, which by common law might be done, but being restrained by act of parliament could not be done without such license.—Plowd. 501; 2 Reeves, c. viii. p. 83.

But the doctrine of non-obstante, which sets the prerogative above the laws, was effectually demolished by the Bill of Rights at the Revolution; for it is enacted by 1 W. & M. st. 2, c. 2, that no dispensation, by non-obstante of or to any statute, or any part thereof, shall be allowed, but that the same shall be held void and of none effect, except a dispensation be allowed in such statute.

Non obstante veredicto, Judgment. Judgment, 'notwithstanding the verdict,' for a plaintiff in a case where a jury has found for the defendant in a manner substantially contrary to law. See JUDGMENT.

Non omittas, the clause 'that you omit not by reason of any liberty in your bailiwick,' which is usually inserted in all processes addressed to sheriffs, which makes the liberty pro hac vice, parcel of the sheriff's bailiwick, and the sheriff must enter and execute the writ within the liberty.

If a writ do not contain a non omittas clause, the sheriff directs his mandate either to the lord or the bailiff of the liberty, by whom the writ is executed and returned.

Non omnium quæ à majoribus nostris constituta sunt ratio reddi potest. Dig. 1, 3, 20.—(A reason cannot be given for all the laws which have been established by our ancestors.) Consult Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 157.

Non pertinet ad judicem secularem cognoscere de iis quæ sunt merè spiritualia annexa. 2 Inst. 488.—(It belongs not to the secular judge to take cognizance of things which are merely spiritual.)

Non plevin, default in not replevying land in due time. See 9 Edw. III. c. 2.

Non ponendis in assisis et juratis, a writ formerly granted for freeing and discharging persons from serving on assizes and juries.—F. N. B. 165.

Non possessori incumbit necessitas probandi possessiones ad se pertinere. Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 714.—(A person in possession is not bound to prove that the possessions belong to him.)

Non potest adduci exceptio ejus rei cujus petitur dissolutio. Bac. Max. 22.—(An exception of the same thing whose avoidance is sought, cannot be made.)

Where the legality of some proceeding is the subject in dispute between two parties, he who maintains its legality, and seeks to take advantage of it, cannot rely upon the proceeding itself as a bar to the adverse party; for otherwise the person aggrieved would be clearly without redress.

Non potest probari quod probatum non relevat. 1 Exch. 91, 92.—(That cannot be proved, which, if proved, is immaterial.)

Non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuriâ et damno aliorum. 3 Inst. 236.—(The king cannot confer a favour on one subject which occasions injury and loss to others.)—Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 6.

Non potest videri desisse habere qui nunquam habuit. Dig. 50, 17, 208.—(One who never did possess cannot be considered to have ceased to possess.)

Non procedendo ad assisam rege inconsulto, a writ to stop the trial of a cause appertaining to one who is in the royal service, etc., until the sovereign's pleasure be further known.—Reg. Orig. 220.

Non pros., abbrev. for non prosequitur (he [the plaintiff] does not pursue [his action]). Where the plaintiff fails to take the proper step in his action in the proper time, the defendant enters what is called a non prosequitur, and signs final judgment against the plaintiff, who is said to be non prosd.

Under Ord. XXIX. the substituted process seems to be for the defendant to apply for a dismissal of the action for want of prosecution.

Non quod dictum est, sed quod factum est, inspicitur. Co. Litt. 36 a.—(Regard is to be had, not to what is said, but to what is done.)

Non refert an quis assensum suum præfert verbis, aut rebus ipsis et factis. 10 Co. 52.—(It matters not whether a man gives his assent by his words, or by his acts and deeds.)

Non refert quid ex æquipollentibus fiat.

5 Co. 122.—(It matters not which of [two] equivalents happen.)

Non refert quid notum sit judici, si notum non sit in forma judicii. 3 Buls. 115.—(It matters not what is known to the judge, if it be not known in a judicial form.) See COGNIZANCE, JUDICIAL.

Non refert verbis an factis fit revocatio. Cro. Car. 49.—(It matters not whether a revocation is made by words or deeds.)

Non-residentio pro clerico regis, a writ, addressed to a bishop, charging him not to molest a clerk employed in the royal service, by reason of his non-residence; in which case he is to be discharged.—Reg. Orig. 58.

Non-resistance. See DIVINE RIGHT.

Non respondebit minor; nisi in causâ dotis, et hoc pro favore doti. 4 Co. 71.—(A minor shall not answer; unless in a case of dower, and this in favour of dower.)

Non-sane memory, a person labouring under mental alienation, which see.

Non sequitur (it does not follow).

Non solent quæ abundant, vitare scripturas. Dig. 50, 17, 94.—(Surplusage is not wont to vitiate writings.) See the maxim, Utile per inutile non vitiatur, in Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 627.

Non solvendo pecuniam ad quam clericus mulctatur pro non-residentiâ, a writ prohibiting an ordinary to take a pecuniary mulct imposed on a clerk of the sovereign for non-residence.—Reg. Writ. 59.

Nonsuit [non est prosecutus, Lat.]. The judge orders a nonsuit when the plaintiff fails to make out a legal cause of action, or fails to support his pleadings by any evidence; whether the evidence which he gives can be considered any evidence at all of a cause of action is a question of law for the judge. When the judge holds that there is no evidence, he directs the plaintiff to be called, and the master thrice calls upon the plaintiff to come into court or lose his writ. If he does not answer, he is non-suited. By the former practice a plaintiff after a non-suit might, on paying all costs, re-commence his action; but by the Rules of the Supreme Court any judgment of nonsuit, unless the court or a judge otherwise directs, has the same effect as judgment upon the merits for the defendant; but in any case of mistake, surprise, or accident, any judgment of non-suit may be set aside on such terms, as to payment of costs and otherwise, as to the Court or a judge shall seem just (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XLI., r. 6), and a similar rule obtains in the County Courts. It is to be observed that the calling of the plaintiff is not an empty form, for he may always prevent a nonsuit by declaring that he is present, and desires to prosecute the suit. In that case the judge will direct the jury to find a verdict for the defendant, and if they find a verdict for the plaintiff it is a perverse verdict, and will be set aside by the court, unless the court see reason to differ from the judge at Nisi Prius, as to the view he has taken of the case. On the other hand a plaintiff is entitled to elect to be nonsuited at any moment before the verdict is given. See TRIAL.

Non sum informatus, a formal answer made of course by an attorney, that he was not informed to say anything material in defence of his client; by which he was deemed to leave it undefended, and so judgment passed against his client. See WARRANT OF ATTORNEY.

Non-summons, wager of law of, the mode in which a tenant or defendant in a real action pleaded, when the summons which followed the original was not served within the proper time.—31 Eliz. c. 3, s. 2; 2 Saund. 45 c.

Non temere credere est nervus sapientie. 5 Co. 114.—(Not to believe rashly is the nerve of wisdom.)

Non tenuit, was a plea in bar to replevin, to avowry for arrears of rent, that the plaintiff did not hold in manner and form, as the avowry alleged. See PLEADING.

Non-tenure, a plea in bar to a real action, by saying that he (the defendant) held not the land mentioned in the plaintiff's count or declaration, or at least some part thereof. It was either general, where one denied ever to have been tenant of the land in question, or special, where it was alleged he was not tenant on the day whereon the writ was purchased.—1 Mod. 181.

The distinction between real and personal actions has now practically ceased to exist.—See ACTION.

Non-terminus, the vacation between term and term, formerly called the time or days of the king's peace. See now title TERMS.

Non user. Neglect of official duty causes forfeiture.—2 Bl. Com. 153; and a right which may be acquired by user may be lost by non-user.

Non valebit felonis generatio, nec ad hæreditatem paternam vel maternam; si autem ante feloniam generationem fecerit, talis generatio succedit in hæreditate patris vel matris à quo non fuerit felonia perpetrata. 3 Co. 41.—(The offspring of a felon cannot succeed either to a maternal or paternal inheritance; but if he had offspring before the felony, such offspring may succeed as to the inheritance of the father or mother by whom the felony was not committed.) This is not now the rule, for descendants can trace through a felon ancestor. See FELONY and FORFEITURE.

Non valet confirmatio nisi ille, qui confirmat, sit in possessione rei vel juris unde fieri debet confirmatio; et eodem modo, nisi ille cui confirmatio fit sit in possessione. Co. Litt. 295.—(Confirmation is not valid unless he who confirms is either in possession of the thing itself, or of the right of which confirmation is to be made, and, in like manner, unless he to whom confirmation is made is in possession.)

Non videntur qui errant consentire.—(They are not considered to consent who commit a mistake.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Non videtur consensum retinuisse si quis ex præscripto minantis aliquid immutavit. Bacon.—(He does not appear to have retained consent, who has changed anything through menaces.)

Non videtur quisquam id capere quod ei necesse est alii restituere. Dig. 50, 17, 51.—(No one is considered entitled to recover that which he must give up to another.)

Nook of land [nocata terræ, Lat.], twelve acres and a half, sed qu.—Dugd. Warwick, p. 665.

Norfolk groat, $\frac{1}{4}d$.

Norfolk Island. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. 35, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 16.

Normal, opposed to exceptional; that state wherein anybody most exactly comports in all its parts with the abstract idea thereof, and is most exactly fitted to perform its proper functions, is entitled normal.

Norman French, the tongue in which several formal proceedings of state are still carried on. The language, having remained the same since the date of the Conquest, at which it was introduced into England, is very different from the French of this day, retaining all the peculiarities which at that time distinguished every province from the rest. A peculiar mode of pronunciation (considered authentic) is handed down and preserved by the officials, who have, on particular occasions, to speak the tongue. Norman-French was the language of our legal procedure till the 36 Edw. III.

Norroy [fr. nord and roy, Fr.], the title of the third of the three kings-at-arms, or provincial heralds. See HERALDS.

Northampton, Statutes made at, 2 Edw. III. A.D. 1328, respecting pardons for felonies, conduct of assizes, etc.: in part repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863.

North Britain, Scotland.

Noscitur ex socio, qui non cognoscitur ex se. Moore, 817.—(He who cannot be known from himself may be known from his associate.)

Noscitur a sociis: a test of construction of a single word; where there is a string of words in an Act of Parliament, and the meaning of one of them is doubtful, that meaning is given to it which it shares with the other words. So, if the words 'horse, cow, or other animal' occur, 'animal' is held to apply to brutes only. See ETJUSDEM GENERIS.

Nosocomi, managers of pauper hospitals.—Civ. Law.

Notarial, taken by a notary.

Notary, or Notary public [fr. notaire, Fr.; fr. notarius, Lat.], an officer who takes notes of anything which may concern the public; he attests deeds or writings to make them authentic in another country; but principally in mercantile affairs, as to make protests of bills of exchange, etc. He cannot permit another to act in his name, and in London he must be free of the Scriveners' Company. See 41 Geo. III. c. 79; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 70; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 90; and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42. Consult Brooke on the Office, etc., of a Notary, 3rd ed., by Levi.

Note a Bill, to. When a foreign bill has been dishonoured, it is usual for a notary public to present it again on the same day, and if it be not then paid to make a minute, consisting of his initials, the day, month, and year, and reason, if assigned, of non-payment. The making of this minute is called noting the bill. See Smith's Merc. Law; Byles on Bills.

Note of a fine, a brief of a fine made by the chirographer before it was engrossed. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

Note of allowance. This was a note delivered by a master to a party to a cause, who alleged that there was error in law in the record and proceedings allowing him to bring error. See C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 149. Error has now, however, been abolished (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LVIII., r. 1).

Proceedings in error in law were deemed a supersedeas of execution from the service of the copy of such note, together with the statement of the grounds of error intended to be argued.—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 150.

Note of hand, a promissory note. See PROMISSORY NOTE.

Notes, memoranda made by a judge on a trial, as to the evidence adduced, and the points reserved, etc. A copy of the judge's notes may be obtained from his clerk.

Not found, no true bill. See IGNORAMUS.

Not guilty, a plea by way of traverse which occurred in actions ex delicto, and amounted to a denial only of the breach of duty or wrongful act alleged to have been committed by the defendant.—H. T. 1853, r. 16.

The plea of not guilty, in criminal proceedings, is the proper form wherever a prisoner means either to deny or justify the charge in the indictment; the effect of which plea is, that on the one hand it puts the prosecutor to the proof of every material fact alleged in the indictment or information, and on the other it entitles the defendant to avail himself of any defensive circumstances as amply as if he had pleaded them in a specific form.

Not guilty by statute. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 16, and GENERAL ISSUE.

Nothus [fr. vóthos, Gk.], a natural child, or a person of spurious birth.

Notice, the making something known to a person of which he was or might be ignorant. Notice is either (1) statutory, i.e., made so by legislative enactment; (2) actual, which brings the knowledge of a fact directly home to the party; or (3) constructive or implied, which is no more than evidence of facts which raise such a strong presumption of notice that equity will not allow the presumption to be rebutted. Constructive notice may be subdivided into: (a) where there exists actual notice of matter, to which equity has added constructive notice of facts, which an inquiry after such matter would have elicited; and (b) where there has been a designed abstinence from inquiry for the very purpose of escaping notice. See CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

Notice, whether actual or constructive, in order to be binding, must be received during the transaction (in re gestá), sought to be affected by it. Where judgments have been registered, the fact that searches have been made in the judgment book of the court, where such judgments were entered up, will fix the party searching with notice.—Proctor v. Cooper, 2 Eq. Rep. 450 (1853). Whatever is sufficient to put a person upon inquiry (provided there is a reasonable certainty as to time, place, circumstances, and persons), is good notice to bind him. The mere registration of a conveyance is not deemed constructive notice to subsequent purchasers; and actual notice must be established against them. To constitute constructive notice, it is sufficient to affect the conscience of the agent, attorney, or counsel of the party; for in such cases the law presumes notice in the principal, since it would be a breach of trust in the former not to communicate the fact to the latter. A clerk who searches the register for judgments against A. B. will, in the absence of proof to the contrary, be presumed to have seen a judgment which was at the time registered against A. B. Whether this is notice to his principal, if it be proved that the clerk did not communicate to him the result of his search, quere.—Proctor v. Cooper, 3 Eq. Rep. 364. A public act of parliament binds all mankind; but a private act of parliament is not, of itself, notice to a purchaser. A lis pendens, of which a purchaser has not express notice, will not bind him, unless the title of the case with other particulars be registered.—2 Vict. c. 11, s. 7. Any dealing with a bankrupt bonâ fide and for valuable consideration is protected, if by a person at the time of the dealing having no notice of an act of bankruptcy available for adjudication. See Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 94—5; see also ss. 6 and 11. The mere fact of attesting the execution of a deed is not of itself notice of that deed, for a witness is not as such privy to its contents.

A purchaser with notice may protect himself by purchasing the title of another bonâ fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice; for, otherwise, such bonâ fide purchaser would not enjoy the full benefit of his own unexceptionable title. If a person, who has notice (except in the case of a charity), sell to another, who has no notice, and is a bonâ fide purchaser for valuable consideration, the latter may protect his title, although it was effected with the equity arising from notice, in the hands of the person from whom he derived it; for, otherwise, no man would be safe in any purchase, but would be liable to have his own title defeated by secret equities, of which he could have no possible means of making a discovery.—Le Neve v. Le Neve, Amb. 436 (1747); 2 Tud. Lead. Cas. 21—48.

A purchaser for valuable consideration, without notice of a prior equitable right, who obtains the legal estate at the time of his purchase, is entitled to priority in equity, as well as at law, according to the maxim—where conflicting equities are equal, the law shall prevail. Nor will equity prevent a bonâ fide purchaser, without notice, from protecting himself against a person claiming under a prior equitable title, by a getting in the outstanding legal estate, because, as the equities of both are equal, the purchaser should not be deprived of the advantage of his superior activity or diligence. And where he has merely the best right to call for the legal estate, he is entitled to the protection of equity.—Bassett v. Nosworthy, Rep. temp. Finch, 102 (1673); 2 Tudor's Lead. Cas. 1—20.

Notice in lieu of service. See SUMMONS.

Notice of action. By several statutes,—e.g., by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, s. 9,—both public and private, it is enacted that no action shall be brought against persons acting in pursuance of these statutes, until the expiration of a certain time after notice in writing has been given to the defendant that such action will be brought. The time limited has been made one month in all cases by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 97.

Notice of admission. Any party to an action may give notice, by his own statement or otherwise, that he admits the truth of the whole or any part of the case stated or referred to in the statement of claim, defence, or reply of any other party (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXII., r. 1).

Notice of appearance. See APPEARANCE.

Notice of dishonour. The 49th section of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, contains 15 rules as to notice of dishonour, of which the more important are these:—

The notice must be given by or on behalf of the holder or of an indorser himself liable (subs. 1).

The notice may be given in writing or by personal communication. If written it need not be signed, and an insufficient written notice may be supplemented by a verbal communication (subs. 5, 7).

The notice may be given as soon as the bill is dishonoured, and must be given within a reasonable time thereafter. 'In the absence of special circumstances notice is not deemed to have been given within a reasonable time, unless—

'Where the person giving and the person to receive notice reside in the same place, the notice is given or sent off in time to reach the latter on the day after the dishonour of the bill.

'Where the person giving and the person to receive notice reside in different places, the notice is sent off on the day after the dishonour of the bill if there be a post at a convenient hour on that day, and if there be no such post on that day, then by the next post thereafter.'

Notice of inquiry. The plaintiff must give a written notice of executing a writ of inquiry to the defendant or his attorney. Ten days' notice must be given, unless it is to be short notice, and then four days are sufficient.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac. See further INQUIRY, WRIT OF; and NOTICE OF TRIAL.

Notice of Motion. See MOTION.

Notice of Trial. A plaintiff may, with his reply, or at any time after the close of the pleadings, give notice of trial of the action, and thereby specify one of the modes mentioned in Rule 2 (See TRIAL); and the defendant may, upon giving notice within four days from the time of the service of the notice of trial, or within such extended time as a Court or judge may allow, to the effect that he desires to have the issues of fact tried before a judge and jury, be entitled to have the same so tried (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 3). 'If the plaintiff does not within six weeks after the close of the pleadings, or within such extended time as a Court or judge may allow, give notice of trial, the defendant may, before notice of trial given by the plaintiff, give notice of trial, and thereby specify one of the modes mentioned in Rule 2; and in such case the plaintiff, on giving notice within the time fixed by Rule 3 that he desires to have the issues of fact tried before a judge and jury [shall?], be entitled to have the same so tried' (r. 4). Ten days' notice of trial must be given, unless the party to whom it is given has consented to take short notice; in which case four days are sufficient.

Notice of Writ, against defendant out of jurisdiction. See SUMMONS.

Notice to admit. The parties to a suit frequently, by their attorneys, agree to admit at the trial documents and facts; and such agreement often saves trouble and expense, where there is no ground for disputing them.

'Either party may call on the other by notice to admit any document saving all just exceptions, and in case of refusal, or neglect to admit, the costs of proving the document shall be paid by the party neglecting or refusing, whatever the result of the cause may be, unless at the hearing or trial the judge shall certify that the refusal was reasonable; and no costs of proving any document are allowed unless notice be given, except where the omission to give the notice is a saving of expense.' (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXII., r. 2).

Notice to plead. This was necessary in all cases before the plaintiff could sign judgment for want of a plea. It was usually indorsed on the declaration when delivered, and was generally a notice to plead within eight days. The Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXII., r. 1, requires a defendant to deliver his statement of defence within eight days from the delivery of the statement of claim, or from the time limited for appearance, whichever shall be last, unless such time is extended by the Court or a judge.

Notice to produce. If one party be in possession of any written instrument which would be evidence for the other if produced, a notice to produce it at the trial may be served either upon him, his solicitor, or agent. The notice must specify the instrument with a particularity sufficient to inform the opposite party what he is called upon to produce. It must be served a reasonable time before trial, so as to enable the party served to make an effectual search, and produce the same at the proper time.

It is optional with the party upon whom the notice has been served to produce the instrument required or not. If he do not, then, upon proving the service of the notice, which is done by affidavit pursuant to C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 119, it will be permitted to prove the contents of the instrument by a copy or other secondary evidence, in the same manner as if it had been lost.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Notice may also be given (under the Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXI., rr. 14—15) by any party to an action to any other party in whose pleadings or affidavits any document is referred to, to produce such document for inspection, and to permit copies to be taken thereof. For a form of such notice, see Ibid., Appendix B., No. 10. The party receiving such notice is to give notice of his readiness to produce for inspection, or of his grounds of objection to the production for inspection (Ibid., Ord. XXXI., r. 16). As to when the judge at Chambers is to be appealed to, see Ibid., r. 17. See also INSPECTION.

Notice to quit. Where there is a tenancy from year to year subsisting, it can only be put an end to by a notice to quit, which may be given by either party, and must be given one half year previously to the expiration of the current year of tenancy, so as to expire at the same period of the year in which the tenant entered upon the premises. This rule is to be invariably followed in all cases, except where there is some special agreement between the parties to a different effect, or where a particular local custom intervenes, or where the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, applies, in which case, by s. 51 of that Act, the half-year's notice required at common law is extended to a year's notice.

Where the relation of landlord and tenant does not exist, a notice to quit is out of the question. Where the term of a lease is to end on a precise day, there is no occasion for a notice to quit previously to bringing an action of ejectment, because both parties are equally apprised of the determination of the term. If a tenant continue in possession for a year after his lease has expired, or rent has been received, a notice must be given before he can be ejected; for where, by consent of both parties, a tenant continues in possession after the expiration of his term the law implies a tacit renovation of the contract, and in such cases the tenant holds upon the former terms. No fresh notice, however, is necessary where a tenant, after having given a notice, holds over for a year, and pays double rent according to 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 18. Where a lessee holds under a void demise, no notice is necessary; but where a lease granted by a tenant for life under a limited power of leasing, which exceeded his power, was void, and not capable of being confirmed by the remainder-man, yet the remainder-man receiving money as rent after the death of the tenant for life, it was held to be an admission of a tenancy from year to year, and that a notice to quit must be given before any ejectment could be brought. And though a lease be void by the Statute of Frauds as to the duration of the term, it is considered that the tenant holds under the terms of the lease in other respects, and therefore that the landlord can only put an end to the tenancy at the expiration of the year. In the case of a tenancy from year to year, so long as both parties please, if the tenant die his personal representatives have the same interest in the land which their testator or intestate had, and are, therefore, entitled to the same notice to quit; for such tenancy is a chattel interest, and whatever chattel the deceased had must vest in them as his legal representatives. Where the reversion has been conveyed by the lessor during the existence of the tenancy from year to year, the tenant is entitled to a notice to quit before he can be ejected by the grantee of the reversion. Where an infant becomes entitled to the reversion of an estate, leased from year to year, he cannot eject the tenant without giving the same notice as the original lessor must have given. No notice to quit is necessary where the tenant does an act which amounts to a disavowal of the title of the lessor; as where the tenant has attained to some other person, or answered an application for rent by saying that his connection as tenant with the party applying has ceased. It is not necessary for a mortgagee to give a notice previously to bringing an ejectment either to the mortgagor or to a tenant who claims under a lease from the mortgagor, granted after the mortgage without the privity of the mortgagee. And a mortgagee need not give notice to a tenant to quit, before bringing his ejectment, if he mean only to get into the receipt of the rents and profits of the estate, though the mortgage be made subsequently to the tenant's lease; but in such case he shall not be suffered to turn the tenant out of possession by the execution. A tenant from year to year, whose tenancy commenced before a mortgage or grant of the reversion, is entitled to a notice to quit before he can be ejected by the mortgagee or grantee.

A parol notice to quit by a tenant under a parol lease is sufficient, but where a power is given to determine a lease on giving a notice in writing, it cannot be determined on giving a parol notice. The notice should, however, in all cases be in writing, as being more susceptible of proof, and it may be attested by a witness, who, however, need not be called to prove it.—C. L. P. Act (1854), s. 26.

A notice to quit, signed by one of several joint-tenants on behalf of the others, is sufficient to determine a tenancy from year to year, as to all. A notice given by a mortgagor before default, was held a good notice to determine the tenancy; and a notice given by a steward of a corporation is sufficient, without evidence that he had an authority under seal from the corporation for such purpose. A receiver appointed by the Court of Chancery, with a general authority to let the lands to tenants from year to year, has authority to determine such tenancies by a regular notice to quit. A mere agent to receive rents has no implied authority to give a notice to quit, but an agent to receive rents and let has authority to determine a tenancy. An agent ought to have authority to give such notice at the time when it begins to operate; for a subsequent recognition of the authority will not make the notice good. And a notice to quit by an agent of an agent is not sufficient without a recognition. A notice on an undertenant, given by the original lessor, is not good.

The notice should be clear and certain, neither ambiguous nor optional. Leaving a notice to quit at the tenant's house with a servant, without further proof of its having been explained to the servant, or that it came to the tenant's hands, is not sufficient.

In the ordinary case of a tenancy from year to year, there must be half-a-year's notice to quit, ending at that period of the year at which the tenancy commenced; and where the rent is reserved quarterly, it does not dispense with the regular half-year's notice to quit required by law. Where the time of the commencement of the tenancy is doubtful, it is always safest to give a general notice to quit at the end of the year of tenancy, which shall expire after one half-year from the time of service of the notice. Where premises are let from year to year, upon an agreement that either party may determine the tenancy by a quarter's notice, the notice must expire at the period of the year when the tenancy commenced.

If a landlord receive or distrain for rent due after the expiration of a notice to quit it is a waiver of that notice, and giving a second notice to quit amounts to waiver of a notice previously given. If a landlord have given a notice to quit, and the tenant holds over, the landlord cannot waive his notice and distrain for rent subsequently accruing. If, at the end of the year (where there has been a tenancy from year to year), the landlord accept another person as his tenant in the room of the former tenant, without any surrender in writing, such acceptance is also a waiver of a notice to quit.—See Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 12th ed., ch. viii., sect. 7.

Notice to third party, i.e., to a person not being a party to the writ of summons in an action. See Jud. Act, 1873, s. 24 (3), Jud. Act, 1875, Orders XVI. and XXII. See also PARTIES.

Noting. It is usual, in cases of non-payment of bills of exchange, for London bankers after six o'clock on the day upon which the bills fall due, to cause inland bills to be noted, which is merely the first part of the duty required by law of a notary in protesting a bill. This duty consists of three parts: (1) noting; (2) demanding; and (3) protesting. In the case of inland bills, a protest being totally useless, it follows that noting is almost equally so; and the expense usually charged stands merely upon the custom, there being no law or decision in its favour.

Although, in the case of inland bills of exchange, neither noting nor protesting is necessary, the case is widely different in the case of a dishonoured foreign bill, which should certainly be taken to a notary the day it is refused acceptance or payment, and it is his business to note, demand, and protest it; and notice of this must be sent the same day to the drawer and indorsers, with a copy of the bill, if the drawer and indorsers are abroad, but mere notice is sufficient if they are in England. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 51.

Novæ Narrationes (new counts). The collection called Novæ Narrationes contains pleadings in actions during the reign of Edward III. It consists principally of declarations, as the title imports; but there are sometimes pleas and subsequent pleadings. The Articuli ad Novas Narrationes is usually subjoined to this little book and is a small treatise on the method of pleading. It first treats of actions and courts, then goes through each particular writ, and the declaration upon it, accompanied with directions, and illustrated by precedents.—3 Reeves, c. xvi. 152.

Novale, land newly ploughed and converted into tillage, and which had not been tilled before within the memory of man ; also fallow land.—Chambers.

Novation, the substitution, with the creditor's consent, of a new debtor for an old one, as in the case of amalgamated life assurance companies, under 35 & 36 Vict. c. 41, s. 7. See Bouvier's Law Dictionary.

Novatio non presumitur.—(A novation is not presumed.)

Novel disseisin (recent disseisin). See ASSISE OF NOVEL DISSEISIN.

Novellæ, those constitutions of the Civil Law which were made after the publication of the Theodosian code ; but sometimes the Julian edition only is meant.

Novellæ, or Novellæ Constitutiones, form a part of the Corpus Juris. Most of them were published in Greek, and their Greek title is Ἀποκράτορος Ἰουστινιανῶν Ἀγγούρου Νεπαὶ Διατάξεις. Some of them were published in Latin, and some in both languages.

The first of these Novellæ of Justinian belongs to the year A.D. 535 (Nov. 1), and the latest to the year A.D. 565 (Nov. 137), but most of them were published between the years 535 and 539. These Constitutiones were published after the completion of the second edition of the Code, for the purpose of supplying what was deficient in that work. Indeed it appears that on the completion of his second edition of the new Code, the emperor designed to form many new constitutions which he might publish into a body by themselves, so as to render a third revision of the Code unnecessary, and that he contemplated giving to this body of law the name of Novellæ Constitutiones.—Const. Cordi. s. 4.

It does not, however, appear that any official compilation of these new constitutions appeared in the lifetime of Justinian. The Greek text of the Novellæ, as we now have them, consists of 168 Novellæ, of which 159 belong to Justinian, and the rest to Justin the Second and to Tiberius ; they are generally divided into chapters. There is a Latin epitome of these Novellæ by Julian, a teacher of the law at Constantinople, which contains 125 Novellæ. The epitome was probably made in the time of Justinian, and the author was probably Antecessor at Constantinople. There is also another collection of 134 Novellæ, in a Latin version made from the Greek text. This collection is generally called Liber Au- thenticorum, the compiler and the time of the compilation are unknown. This collection has been made independently of the Greek compilation. It is divided into nine collationes, and the collationes are divided into tituli. The most complete work on the history of the Novellæ is by Biener, Geschichte der Novellen. See also Beytrag zu Litterar-Geschichte des Novellen Auszugs von Julian Von Haubold, Zeitschrift, etc., iv. ; Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Nuda pactio obligationem non parit. Dig. 2, 14, 7, s. 4.—(A naked agreement (i.e., without consideration) does not beget an obligation.)

Nudum Pactum (a naked agreement), an agreement made without any consideration, upon which, therefore, unless it be made by deed, no action will lie, in conformity with the maxim ex nudo pacto non oritur actio.

Nudum pactum est ubi nulla subest causa præter conventionem ; sed ubi subest causa, fit obligatio, et parit actionem. Plow. 309.—(A naked contract is where there is no consideration except the agreement ; but where there is a consideration, it becomes an obligation, and gives a right of action.)

Nuisance, or Nusance [fr. nuire, Fr., to hurt], something noxious or offensive.

It is of two kinds : (1) private ; (2) public.

(1) Private. It is a principle that every man should so use his own property as not to injure another ; and if he act otherwise he subjects himself to an action. An action lies as well against him who continues a nuisance as against him who originally erected it.

(a) Watercourses. An action is maintainable for any diversion or obstruction of a watercourse to which the party complaining has a right.

(b) Commons. The most usual acts of nuisance to commons are by injury to the soil, by digging turf, or injuring the pasture, or by surcharging the common by overstocking it with cattle. In any of these cases an action is maintainable either by the lord or by the commoners.

(c) Lights. An action may be maintained even by a reversioner, for obstructing the lights of an ancient messuage, or for continuing the obstruction by erecting buildings so near that the light and air cannot have access to the rooms.

The proper form of remedy for an injury sustained by a private nuisance is an action on the case. Besides the remedy by action, the party injured may, in a clear case, take the law into his own hands and abate the nuisance, but it is never advisable to pursue this course.

(2) Public or common, which are classed amongst crimes and misdemeanours; and are annoyances to all the Queen's subjects, whether by act of commission or omission; and when they annoy private individuals only, they form the subject of a civil action. But they are generally indictable only, and not actionable, for it would be unreasonable to multiply suits, by giving every man a separate right of action for what damnifies him in common only with all others.

Public nuisances are:—

(a) Annoyances in the highways, bridges, and public rivers, by rendering the same inconvenient or dangerous to pass, either positively, by actual obstructions, or negatively, by want of reparations.

(b) All those kinds of nuisances (such as offensive trades and manufactures), which, when injurious to a private person, are actionable, are, when detrimental to the public, punishable by public prosecution, and subject to a fine according to the nature of the offence.

(c) All disorderly inns, alehouses, bawdy-houses, gaming-houses, betting-houses (see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 1), stage-plays unlicensed, booths, and stages for rope-dancers, mountebanks, and the like.

(d) All lotteries (see 10 & 11 Wm. III. c. 17).

(e) The making and selling of fireworks in unlicensed places, or throwing them about in any street, on account of the danger that might ensue to thatched or timber buildings.

As to the equitable jurisdiction in granting injunctions:—An action lies, in cases of public nuisances, at the suit of the Attorney-General, to redress the grievance by way of injunction; but the interposition of the court is principally confined to actions seeking preventive relief. In regard to private nuisances, the interference of equity, by way of injunction, goes upon the ground of restraining irreparable mischief, or of suppressing oppressive and interminable litigation, or of preventing multiplicity of suits. There must be such an inquiry as from its nature is not susceptible of being adequately compensated by damages at law, or such as from its continuance or permanent mischief must occasion a constantly recurring grievance, which cannot be prevented otherwise than by an injunction. When the injury is irreparable, as where loss of health, loss of trade, destruction of the means of subsistence, or permanent ruin to property, may or will ensue, from the wrongful act or erection; in every such case equity will interfere by injunction, in furtherance of justice and the violated rights of the party.—2 Story's Eq. Jurisp. 180. See INJUNCTION; and as to the removal of nuisances, see next title.

Nuisances Removal Acts.—These Acts were the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 117; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 41; and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 79, repealed and replaced by the Public Health Act, 1875. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

Nummus [ἀπὸ τοῦ νόμου] quia lege fit non naturâ. Co. Litt. 207.—(Money [from the Greek νόμος], because created by law, not by nature.)

Nummus est mensura rerum commutandarum.—(Money is the measure of things to be exchanged.)

Nunc pro tunc, a proceeding taken now for then, i.e., the proper time when it should have been taken. See Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 526, 1572.

Nuncio, a messenger, servant, etc.; a spiritual envoy from the Pope.

Nuncupate, to declare publicly and solemnly.

Nuncupative will, an oral or word-of-mouth testament, declared by a testator in extremis before a sufficient number of witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing.

The 29 Car. II. c. 3, restricted nuncupative wills, except when made by mariners at sea, and soldiers in actual service. See 1 Wms. Exors., 7th ed., p. 116. Nuncupative wills are abolished by 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9, but with a provision by s. 11, that any soldier being in actual military service, or any mariner or seaman being at sea may dispose of his personal estate, as he might have done before the making of this act. See 11 Geo. IV. & Wm. IV. c. 20; and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 72.

Nundination, traffic at fairs and markets; any buying and selling.

Nunquam indebitatus. See NEVER INDEBTED.

Nunquam concluditur in falso.—(We never conclude with a fiction.)

Nunquam crescit ex post facto præteriti delicti æstimatio. Bac. Max. Reg. 8.—(The estimation of a past offence is never increased by an after fact.)

Nunquam decurritur ad extraordinarium sed ubi deficit ordinarium. 4 Inst. 84.—(Recourse is never had to what is extraordinary, till what is ordinary fails.)

Nunquam res humane prosperè succedunt ubi negliguntur divine. Co. Litt. 15.—(Human things never prosper where divine things are neglected.)

Nuper obit (he lately died), an abolished writ that lay for a sister and co-heir, deforced by her coparcener of lands or tenements, whereof their father, brother, or any other common ancestor died seised of an estate in fee simple.—F. N. B. 197.

Nuptial, pertaining to marriage; constituting marriage; used or done in marriage.

Nuptias non concubitus sed consensus facit. Co. Litt. 33.—(Not cohabitation but consent makes the marriage.)

Nurture, Guardianship of. See GUARDIAN.

Nurus [Lat.], a daughter-in-law.

Nuzzer, a vow, an offering, a present made to a superior.—Indian.

Nymphomania. See EROTOMANIA.

O.

Oath [fr. aieth, Goth.; ath, Sax.; eid, Iceland; ehe, eid, Germ.], an appeal to God to witness the truth of a statement. It is called sacramentum, a holy band or tie, and corporal oath, where a witness, when he swears, places his right hand on the Holy Evangelists.

The laws of all civilized states require the security of an oath for evidence given in a court of justice, and on other occasions of high importance; and the Christian religion, though it prohibits swearing, excepts oaths required by legal authority (Art. Ch. of Engl. xxxix.). All who believe in a God, the avenger of falsehood, have always been admitted to give evidence. The old rule was, that all witnesses, unless they be in extremis, must take an oath before giving testimony (Willes' Rep. 550). Gradually, however, the legislature has relaxed this rule, and the privilege of affirming without an oath is now extended to all witnesses and to most other persons who object to take an oath. See the various acts of parliament cited under AFFIRMATION.

The 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 62, abolishes unnecessary and extra-judicial oaths, and empowers any justice of the peace, notary-public, or other officer authorized to administer an oath to take voluntary declarations in the form specified in the act. And any person wilfully making such declaration false in any material particular, is guilty of a misdemeanour.

Witnesses are allowed to swear in that particular form which they consider binding on their conscience. See Omichund & Barker 1 Smith's L. C., and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105.

Promissory oaths are those required to be taken by persons on their appointment to certain offices, as the oath of allegiance, of which the present form is, 'I, ———, do swear that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, her heirs and successors, according to law.'

These oaths have undergone much revision of late years by parliament. By the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 72), a number of unnecessary oaths have been abolished, and declarations substituted. That act also provides new forms of the Oath of Allegiance, Judicial Oath, and Official Oath to be taken by particular officers. The Promissory Oaths Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 48), expressly repeals a number of acts already impliedly repealed.

The Parliamentary Oaths Act, 1866, 29 Vict. c. 19, requires the oath of allegiance to be taken by members of parliament before sitting or voting, and the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, substitutes a new form of oath, but does not otherwise alter the Act of 1866. By the Act of 1866 a quaker or other person permitted a law to affirm may make affirmation instead of oath, but an atheist, although permitted by law (see AFFIRMATION) to affirm in a court of justice, cannot affirm under this act (Clarke v. Bradlaugh, 7 Q. B. D. 38), and in Mr. Bradlaugh's case the House of Commons refused to allow him to make oath; but the Attorney-General, on the first day of the session of 1883, gave notice of a Bill to amend the Act of 1866, by allowing all members who should desire it to affirm instead of making oath.

As to the powers of committees of both Houses of Parliament to administer oaths, see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 78, and 34 & 35 Vict. cc. 3, 83. And as to the Court of Referees, see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 136, s. 1.

The administering of unlawful oaths is an offence against the Government, and punishable by penal servitude. The following statutes relate to this offence: 37 Geo. III. c. 123; 39 Geo. III. c. 79; 52 Geo. III. c. 104; 57 Geo. III. c. 19; 1 Vict. c. 91.

Obedientia, an office, or the administration of it.—Canon Law.

Obedientia est legis essentia. 11 Co. 100.—(Obedience is the essence of law.)

Obedientiarius, a monastic officer.—Du Cange.

Ob infamiam non solet juxta legem terræ aliquis per legem apparentem se purgare, nisi prius convictus fuerit vel confessus in curiâ. Glanv. lib. 14, c. ii.—(On account of evil report, it is not usual, according to the law of the land, for any person to purge himself, unless he have been previously convicted, or confessed in court.)

Obit [a corruption of the Latin obit, or obivit, he died], a funeral solemnity or office for the dead; the anniversary office.

The tenure of obit, or obituary, or chantry lands is taken away by 1 Edw. VI. c. 14, and 15 Car. II. c. 9.

Obiter dictum (a saying by the way), an opinion of a judge not necessary to the judgment given of record, in contradistinction to a judicial dictum, which is necessary to the judgment.

This last is of much greater authority than the former, because delivered upon deliberation, under sanction of the judge's oath, while an extra-judicial opinion is no more than the prolatum or saying of him who gives it, a gratis dictum.

Objection to evidence. If a document, or question to a witness, tendered by one party, be objected to, all the counsel on the side objecting may be heard against the admissibility, and all on the other side may be heard in support; the senior counsel on the first side is heard in reply.

Objection to indictment. On this being taken, the same course is followed as set out under the last title.

Objurgatrices, scolds, or unquiet women, punished with the cucking-stool. See CAS-TIGATORY.

Oblata, gifts or offerings made to the king by any of his subjects; old debts, brought as it were together from preceding years, and put on the present sheriff's charge.

Oblata terræ, half an acre, or, as some say, half a perch of land.—Spelm.

Oblationes dicuntur quæcunque a piis fidelibusque Christianis offeruntur Deo et ecclesiæ, sive res solidæ sive mobiles. 2 Inst. 389.—(Those things are called oblations which are offered to God and to the church by pious and faithful Christians, whether they are moveable or immoveable.) See next title.

Oblations, offerings to God and the church, fees payable to the clergy for marrying, burying, and by way of 'Easter Offerings.' See Reg. v. Hall, L. R. 1 Q. B. 338.

tismal fees were abolished by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 36.

Obligation, an act which binds a person to some performance; also a bond containing a penalty, with a condition annexed for paying of money at a certain time; or for the performance of a covenant, etc. As to the divisions of obligations in the civil law, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., liv.; Rutherf., vol. i., pp. 31, 33, 34; and Notes, c. ix.

Obligee, the person in whose favour an obligation or bond is entered into; a creditor.

Obligor, he who enters into an obligation or bond, a debtor.

Obligua oratio, the manner of reporting a speech in which 'he' not 'I' stands for the speaker in giving his words; and hence the words 'you,' 'your,' never occur, and every sentence begins with the word that expressed or understood, but generally expressed in the first sentence only. It is opposed to the oratio directa, sometimes called a speech in the first person, in which the very words of the speaker are given.

Obreption, the obtaining a gift of escheat by a false suggestion.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Obscene Publication Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83. See INDECENT PRINTS.

Obsignatory, ratifying and confirming.

Obstetricante Manu [by the hand of a mid-wife, Lat.], said of evidence of a child helped out by its nurse, etc.

Obstriction, obligation; bond.

Obtemperandum est consuetudini rationabili tanquam legi. 4 Co. 38.—(A reasonable custom is to be obeyed as a law.)

Obtest, to protest.

Obventions, offerings; tithes and oblations.

Occasio, a tribute which the lord imposed on his vassals or tenants for his necessity.

Occasionari, to be charged or loaded with payments or occasional penalties.

Occasiones, assarts.—Spelm. voce 'Essurtum.' See ASSART.

Occultatio thesauri inventi fraudulosa. 3 Inst. 133.—(The concealment of discovered treasure is fraudulent.)

Occupancy, taking possession of those things which before did not belong to anybody.

The right of occupancy has been confined by the laws of England within a very narrow compass, and was extended only to a single instance; namely, where a person was tenant pur autre vie, or had an estate granted to himself only (without mentioning his heirs) for the life of another man, and died without alienation, during the life of the cestui que vie, or him by whose life it was holden; in this case, he that could first enter on the land might lawfully retain the possession so long as the cestui que vie lived, by right of occupancy. The title of common occupancy is now, in effect, abolished, for it is enacted by 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 3, that an estate, pur autre vie, of whatever tenure, and whether it be an incorporeal or corporeal hereditament, may in all cases be devised by last will and testament; and by s. 6, that if no disposition by will be made of an estate pur autre vie of a freehold nature, it shall be chargeable in the hands of the heir, if it come to him by reason of special occupancy as assets by descent (as in the case of freehold land, in fee-simple); and should there be no special occupant of any estate pur autre vie, it shall go to the executor or administrator of the party that had the estate by virtue of the grant; and in every case where it comes to the hands of such personal representative, shall be assets in his hands, to be applied and distributed in the same manner as personal estate.

If an estate pur autre vie had been granted to a man and his heirs during the life of the cestui que vie, and the grantee died without alienation, while the life for which he held continued, there could not be a title by common occupancy, but the heir would succeed as special occupant, which law is now in force.

A property in goods and chattels may be acquired by occupancy, for

(1) It has been said, that anybody authorized by the Crown may seize to his own use such goods as belong to an alien enemy.

(2) All persons may, on their own lands, or in the seas, generally exercise the right to pursue and take any fowl or insect of the air, any fish or inhabitant of the waters, and any beast or reptile of the field. The exceptions to this right are royal fish, such as whales, sturgeons, etc., animals of forest, chase, or free warren, fish belonging to a free fishery, and game.

(3) Property arising from accession. See ACCESSION, PROPERTY BY.

(4) Property arising from confusion. See CONFUSION, PROPERTY BY.

Occupant, he who is in possession of a thing. See OCCUPANCY.

Occupatile, that which has been left by the right owner, and is now possessed by another.

Occupation, possession; act of taking possession; also, trade or mystery.

Occupative, possessed, used, employed.

Occupavit, a writ that lay for him who was ejected from his freehold in time of war, as the writ of novel disseisin lay for one disseised in time of peace.

Occupier, a possessor.

Ochiern, a name of dignity; a freeholder.

—Skene. Obsolete.

Ochlocracy [fr. ὄχλος., Gk., a multitude.

and κράτος, power or command], a form of government wherein the populace has the whole power and administration in its own hand; a democracy; mob-rule.

Octo tales. See DECEM TALES.

Oderunt peccare boni, virtutis amore; oderunt peccare mali, formidine pœne.—(Good men hate sin through love of virtue; bad men through fear of punishment.)

Odhal, alodial, which see.

Odio et atia, a writ anciently called breve de bono et malo, addressed to the sheriff to inquire whether a man committed to prison upon suspicion of murder, were committed on just cause of suspicion, or only upon malice and ill-will; and if, upon the inquisition, it were found that he was not guilty, then there issued another writ to the sheriff to bail him.—Reg. Orig. 133. But the practice now is to issue a habeas corpus.

Odiosa et inhonesta non sunt in lege presumenda; et in facto quod se habet ad bonum et malum, magis de bono quam de malo presumendum est. Co. Litt. 78.—(Odious and dishonest things are not to be presumed in law; and in an act which partakes both of good and bad, the presumption should be more in favour of what is good than what is bad.)

Œconomicus, an executor.

Œcumenical. See ECUMENICAL.

Off-going crop. See AWAY-GOING CROPS.

Offence, crime; act of wickedness. It is used as a genus, comprehending every crime and misdemeanour, or as a species, signifying a crime not indictable, but punishable summarily, or by the forfeiture of a penalty.

There are certain acts which are heinous sins and odious in the public eye, and are punishable in the Ecclesiastical Courts—as incest—but not being punishable at common law, and the proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Courts being held to be pro salute animæ, and not to entail any temporal injury, they cannot be classed with ordinary common law and statutory offences; and it is no slander to impute them unless special damage follows.

Other offences are divided into three classes, viz. :—

(1) Treasons; (2) Felonies; and (3) Misdemeanours. See these several titles.

In 1861, six acts were passed for the consolidation and amendment of the statute law of England and Ireland relating to certain criminal offences. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 95, several previous acts were repealed; c. 96 dealt with larceny and other similar offences; c. 97 with malicious injuries to property; c. 98 with forgery; c. 99 with offences relating to the coin; and c. 100 with offences against the person.

Consult Russell on Crimes; Archbold's or Roscoe's Criminal Evidence; and Pritchard on Quarter Sessions. For a list of offences punishable on summary conviction and on indictment respectively, see Oke's Magisterial Synopsis.

As to offences against religion, such as blasphemous libels, etc., see Cripps on the Church and Clergy, 5th ed., 859 et seq.

Offerings, personal tithes, payable by custom to the parson or vicar of a parish, either occasionally, as at sacraments, marriages, churching of women, burials, etc.; or at constant times, as at Easter, Christmas, etc.—2 & 3 Edw. IV. cc. 13, 20, 21.

Offertorium, the offerings of the faithful, or the place where they are made or kept; the service at the time of Communion.

Office, that function by virtue whereof a person has some employment in the affairs of another, whether judicial, ministerial, legislative, municipal, ecclesiastical, etc.—Cowel. It is a species of incorporeal hereditament.—2 Bl. Com. 36.

Office, Inquest of. SEE INQUEST OF OFFICE.

Office-copy, a transcript of a proceeding filed in the proper office of a court under the seal of such office. As to when office-copies are receivable in evidence, see Taylor on Evidence, s. 1322 et seq.

Office-found, the finding of a jury in an inquest of office of a fact which entitles the Crown to the possession of lands or tenements, goods or chattels. See INQUEST OF OFFICE, and see FORFEITURE.

Office of a Judge: the prosecutor in an ecclesiastical criminal suit is called the promotor officii judicis. He is either necessarius when the prosecution is ex mero motu judicis, or voluntarius.—Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum.

Officers of the Supreme Court. By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 77, the officers of the various courts, whose jurisdiction is by that Act transferred to the High Court of Justice, or the Court of Appeal, were attached to the Supreme Court; by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LX., r. 1, these officers were attached to the divisions which represented the courts of which they were formerly officers; and by the Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 78, they were transferred to the Central Office of the Supreme Court.

Offices of the Supreme Court. The several offices of the Supreme Court are to be opened on every day of the year except Sundays, Good Friday, Monday and Tuesday in Easter week, Whit Monday, Christmas-day and the next following working day, and all days appointed by proclamation to be observed as days of general fast, humiliation, or thanksgiving.—Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LXI., r. 4.

As to the vacations in the Offices of the Supreme Court, see VACATION.

Officia magistratus non debent esse venalia. Co. Litt. 234.—(The offices of magistrate ought not to be sold.)

Official, pertaining to a public charge.

In the civil law, he is the minister of, or attendant upon, a magistrate. In the canon law, he is the person to whom a bishop commits the charge of his spiritual jurisdiction; there is one in every diocese, called officialis principalis, i.e., chancellor; the rest, if there are more, are officiales foranei, i.e., commissaries. In our statutes, he is the person whom the archdeacon appoints as his substitute.—Wood's Inst. 30, 505.

Official assignees, certain persons from the class of merchants or accountants who were appointed by the Lord Chancellor under the Bankruptcy Act, 1849 and 1861, to act in bankruptcies; one of whom must have been an assignee of the bankrupt's estate and effects, together with the assignee or assignees chosen by the creditors. All the personal estate, the profits of the realty, and the proceeds of all such estates as were sold, were received by such official assignees alone, and paid into the Bank of England to the credit of the accountant in Bankruptcy. These officials have ceased to exist under the present system of bankruptcy. See 32 & 33 Vict. cc. 71 and 83.

Official liquidators, officers appointed to conduct the proceedings and to assist the court in winding up a joint-stock company.—25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, s. 92.

Official log-book, a log-book in a certain form, and containing certain specified entries required by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 280—282, to be kept by all British merchant ships, except those exclusively engaged in the coasting trade.

Official Managers, persons formerly appointed, under statutes now repealed, to superintend the winding up of insolvent companies under the control of the Court of Chancery.

Official oath. By the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 72, a form of 'official oath' is prescribed, to be taken by each of the officers named in the schedule annexed thereto, as soon as may be after his acceptance of office by the officer.

Official Referee. See REFERENCE.

Official trustees of charities, appointed by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, amended by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 24.

Official use, an active use before the Statute of Uses, which imposed some duty on the legal owner or feoffee to uses, as a conveyance to A. with directions for him to sell the estate and distribute the proceeds amongst

B., C., and D. To enable A. to perform this duty, he had the legal possession of the estate to be sold.

Officialty, the court or jurisdiction of which an official is head.

Officiarius non faciendis vel amovendis, a writ addressed to the magistrates of a corporation, requiring them not to make such a man an officer, or to put one out of the office he has, until inquiry is made of his manners, etc.—Reg. Orig. 126.

Officina justitiæ, a department of the common law jurisdiction of Chancery, out of which original writs issued.

Officio, ex. By virtue of his office; e.g., the Lord Chief Justice of England is a member of the Court of Appeal, ex officio.

Officio, ex, Oath of, an oath whereby a person may be obliged to make any presentment of any crime or offence, or to confess or accuse himself of any criminal matter or thing whereby he may be liable to any censure, penalty, or punishment.—3 Bl. Com. 447.

Officious will, a testament by which a testator leaves his property to his family.—Sand. Just., 5th ed., 207.

Officium nemini debet esse damnosum.—(An office ought to be injurious to no one.)

Old Bailey Sessions. These were superseded by the Central Criminal Court, which see.

Old metal, Dealers in. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 110; and see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99, s. 17.

Old style. See NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Old tenures, a treatise, so called to distinguish it from Littelton's book on the same subject, which gives an account of the various tenures by which land was holden, the nature of estates, and some other incidents to landed property in the reign of Edward III. It is a very scanty tract, but has the merit of having led the way to Littelton's famous work.—3 Reeves, 151.

Oleron, an island lying in the Bay of Aquitaine, at the mouth of the river Charente, formerly in the possession of England. The inhabitants of Oleron have been able mariners for seven or eight hundred years past. They are said to have drawn up the laws of the navy still called the Laws of Oleron. According to the French writers, these maritime laws were digested as the Règle des Jugemens d'Oleron, by direction of Queen Eleanor, wife of Henry II. as Duchess of Guienne, and enlarged and improved by her son Richard I. Selden (de Dom. Mar. c. xiv.), maintains that they were compiled and promulgated by Richard I. as King of England. Writers, as Mons. Boucher, of Paris, and the English Luders, consider the whole account fallacious. The former calls the story of our Richard I.

and Queen Eleanor, une chimère des plus invraisemblables.—Monthly Review, Dec. 1811. The laws of Oleron were to a great extent the foundation of the maritime laws of most states of Europe.

Oligarchy, a form of government wherein the administration of affairs is lodged in the hands of a few persons.

Olympiad, a Grecian epoch; the space of four years.

Omissio eorum quæ tacite insunt nihil operatur. 2 Buls. 131.—(The omission of those things which are silently understood is of no consequence.)

Omittance, forbearance.

Omne actum ab intentione agentis est judicandum. A voluntate procedit causa vitii atque virtutis. Jur. Civ.—(Every act is to be estimated by the intention of the doer. The cause of vice and virtue proceeds from the will.)

Omne crimen ebrietas et incendit et detegit. Co. Litt. 247.—(Drunkenness both kindles and uncovers every crime.)

Omne jus aut consensus fecit, aut necessitas constituit aut firmavit consuetudo. Dig. 1, 3, 40.—(Every right is either made by consent, or is constituted by necessity, or is established by custom.)

Omne magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum, quamvis minus dignum sit antiquius. Co. Litt. 355.—(Everything more worthy draws to it the less worthy, although the less worthy be the more ancient.)

Omne magnum exemplum habet aliquid ex iniquo, quod publicâ utilitate compensatur. Hob. 279.—(Every great example has some portion of evil, which is compensated by the public utility.)

Omne majus continet in se minus, minus in se complectitur. Jenk. Cent. 208.—(The greater contains or embraces the less.)

Omne majus dignum continet in se minus dignum. Co. Litt. 43.—(The more worthy contains in itself the less worthy.)

Omne quod solo inædificatur solo cedit. Dig. 47, 3, 1.—(Everything which is built upon the soil belongs to the soil.)

Omnes licentiam habent his, quæ pro se introducta sunt, renunciare. Broom's Leg. Max.—(Every one has the right to renounce those things which have been granted for his own benefit.)

Omne testamentum morte consummatum est. 3 Co. 29.—(Every will is completed by death.)

Omnes sorores sunt quasi unus hæres de undâ hæreditate. Co. Litt. 67.—(All sisters are, as it were, one heir to one inheritance.—(See COPARCENERS.)

Omni exceptione majus. 4 Inst. 262.—(Above all exception.)

Omnia delicta in aperto leviora sunt. 8 Co. 127.—(All crimes done openly are lighter.)

Omnia præsumuntur solemniter esse acta. Co. Litt. 6.—(All things are presumed to have been done rightly.)

Omnia præsumuntur contra spoliatorem.—(All things are presumed against a wrongdoer.) See Broom's Legal Maxims.

Omnia præsumuntur legitimè facta donec probetur in contrarium. Co. Litt. 232.—(All things are presumed legitimately done, until it be proved contrariwise.)

Omnia præsumuntur ritè et solemniter esse acta donec probetur in contrarium. Co. Litt. 232.—(All things are presumed to have been rightly and duly performed until it is proved to the contrary.)

Omnia quæ jure contrahuntur contrario jure pereunt.—(All things which are contracted by law perish by a contrary law.)

Omnia quæ sunt uxoris sunt ipsius viri; non habet uxor potestatem sui, sed vir. Co. Litt. 112.—(All things which belong to the wife belong to the husband; the wife has not power over herself, but the husband.) But see HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Omnia ritè acta præsumuntur. Broom's Leg. Max.—(All things are presumed to have been rightly done.)

Omnis conclusio boni et veri judicii sequitur ex bonis et veris præmissis et dictis juratorum. Co. Litt. 226.—(Every conclusion of a good and true judgment arises from good and true premises, and the words of the jury.)

Omnis consensus tollit errorem. 2 Inst. 123.—(Every assent removes error.)

Omnis innovatio plus novitate perturbat quam utilitate prodest. 2 Bulstr. 338.—(Every innovation occasions more harm by its novelty than benefit by its utility.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Omnis interpretatio si fieri potest ita fienda est in instrumentis, ut omnes contrarietates amoveantur. Jenk. Cent. 96.—(Every interpretation, if it can be done, is to be so made in instruments, that all contradictions may be removed.)

Omnis nova constitutio futuris temporibus formam imponere debet, non præteritis. 2 Inst. 95.—(Every new enactment should affect future, not past times.)

Omnis querela et omnis actio injuriarum limita est infra certa tempora. Co. Litt. 114 b.—(Every plaint, and every action for injuries, is limited within certain times.) See LIMITATION OF SUITS.

Omnis ratihabitio retro-trahitur et mandato priori equiparatur. Co. Litt. 207.—(Every consent given to what has been already done has a retrospective effect, and is equivalent to a previous request.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Omnium, the aggregate of certain portions of different stocks in the public funds.—Com. term.

Omnium contributione sarciatur quod pro omnibus datum est. 4 Bing. 121.—(That which is given for all is recompensed by the contribution of all); a principle of the law of general average.

Ouncunne, accused.—Du Cange.

One hundred thousand pounds clause, a precautionary stipulation inserted in a deed making a good tenant to the præcipe in a common recovery. See 1 Prest. Conv. 110.

Onerando pro ratâ portionis, a writ that lay for a joint-tenant, or tenant-in-common, who was distrained for more rent than his proportion of the land comes to.—Reg. Orig. 182.

Onerari non debet (he ought not to be burdened), a form of commencement of a pleading, substituted in some few cases for actionem non. But see 1 Saund. 290 n. b.

Onerous cause, a good and legal consideration.—Scotch term.

O. Ni. It was the course of the Exchequer, as soon as the sheriff entered into and made up his account for issues, amerciaments, etc., to mark upon each head O. Ni.; which denoted oneratur, nisi habeat sufficientem exonerationem, and presently he became the king's debtor, and a debet was set upon his head; whereupon the parties paravaile became debtors to the sheriff, and were discharged against the king, etc.—4 Inst. 116.

But sheriffs now account to the commissioners for auditing the public accounts.

Onus episcopale, ancient customary payments from the clergy to their diocesan bishop, of synodals, pentecostals, etc.

Onus importandi, the charge of importing merchandise, mentioned in 12 Car. II. c. 28.

Onus probandi, the burden of proof. See BURDEN OF PROOF.

Opening biddings. Before 1867, where estates were sold, under the decree of a court of equity, the court considered itself to have a greater power over the contract than if the contract were made between party and party; and as the aim of the court was to obtain as great a price as possible for the estate, it would open the biddings after the estate was sold, and put up the estate for sale again.

But the 'Sale of Land by Auction Act,' 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48, has, by s. 7, abolished this inconvenient practice (under which biddings were opened even more than once), with an exception for cases of fraud or improper management of a sale, in which, upon the application of any person interested in the land, the Court may either open the biddings, holding such bidder bound by his bidding, or discharge him from being the purchaser, and order the land to be resold.

Opening the case. On a trial before a jury the party who upholds the affirmative of the issue begins, in conformity with the civil law maxim: ei incumbit probatio, qui dicit, non qui negat; cum, per rerum naturam, factum negantis probatio nulla sit.—Cod. 4. See RIGHT TO BEGIN.

Opening the pleadings, stating briefly at a trial before a jury the substance of the pleadings. This is done by the junior counsel for the plaintiff at the commencement of the trial.

Open law [lex manifesta, Lat.], the making or waging of law.—Magna Charta, c. 21.

Open policy, one in which the value of the ship or goods insured is to be ascertained in case of loss.

Open theft [open theof, Sax.], a theft that is manifest.—Leg. Hen. I. c. 13.

Opentide, the time after corn is carried out of the fields.—Brit.

Operarii, such tenants, under feudal tenures, as held some little portions of land by the duty of performing bodily labour and servile works for their lord.

Operatio, one day's work performed by a tenant for his lord.

Opetide, the ancient time of marriage, from Epiphany to Ash-Wednesday.

Opinio est duplex: scilicet, opinio vulgaris, orta inter graves et discretos, et quæ vultum veritatis habet: et opinio tantum orta inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis. 4 Co. 107.—(Opinion is of two kinds, namely, common opinion, which springs up among grave and discreet men, and which has the appearance of truth; and opinion which springs up only among light and foolish men, without the semblance of truth.)

Oportet quod certæ personæ, terræ, et certi status, comprehendantur in declaratione usum. 9 Co. 9.—(It is right that given persons, lands, and estates should be comprehended in a declaration of uses.)

Oportet quod certa res deducatur in iudicium. Jenk. Cent. 84.—(A thing certain must be brought to judgment.)

Opposer, an officer formerly belonging to the Green-wax in the Exchequer. Abolished.

Opposita juxta se posita magis elucescunt. Bacon.—(Things opposite are more conspicuous when placed together.)

Opposite, an old word for opponent.

Oppression, the trampling upon or bearing down a person, under pretence of law.

Optima est legis interpretatio consuetudo. Lofft. 237; Dig. 1, 3, 37.—(Custom is the best interpreter of the law.) Consult Broom's Legal Maxims, 5th ed., 931.

Optima est lex quæ minimum relinquit arbitrio judicis; optimus iudex qui minimum sibi. Bac. Aphor. 46.—(That system of law is best which confides as little as possible to the discretion of a judge; that judge the best who relies as little as possible on his own opinion.) See Broom's Legal Maxims, 5th ed., 84.

Optima statuti interpretatio est (omnibus particulis ejusdem inspectis) ipsum statutum 8 Co. 117.—(The best interpreter of a statute is [all the separate parts being considered] the statute itself.)

Optimacy, nobility; men of the highest rank.

Optimus interpret rerum usus. 2 Inst. 282.—(Custom is the best interpreter of things.) See Broom's Legal Maxims, 5th ed., 917.

Optimus interpretandi modus est sic leges interpretari ut leges legibus concordant. 8 Co. 169.—(The best mode of interpretation is so to interpret laws that they may accord with each other.)

Optimus legum interpret consuetudo. 4 Inst. 75.—(Custom is the best interpreter of the laws.)

Option. (1) When a new suffragan bishop is consecrated by the archbishop of the province, by a customary prerogative, the archbishop claims the collation of the first vacant dignity or benefice in that see, at his own choice, i.e., option.—Covel. Options are now disused. (2) The word is also used on the Stock Exchange to express a right to effect a certain dealing or not at a certain date, at the option of the person bargaining, who pays a premium for the right. See Fenn on the Funds (ed. 1869), p. 135.

Optional writ, a præcipe, so called because it was in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or show the reason wherefore he had not done it.

Or [Fr.], gold, called sol by some heralds when it occurs in the arms of princes, and topaz or carbuncle when borne by peers. Engravers represent it by an indefinite number of small points.—Heraldic term.

Ora, a Saxon coin, valued at sixteen pence, and sometimes at twenty pence.—Domesday.

Oraculum, a decision by a Roman emperor.

Oral, delivered by the mouth; not written.

Oral pleading, pleadings by word of mouth in presence of the judges. This was the original mode of pleading; it was, however, except in criminal cases, superseded by written pleadings in the reign of Edward III.

Orando pro rege et regno, an ancient writ which issued, while there was no standing collect for a sitting parliament, to pray for the peace and good government of the realm.

Orangemen, a party in Ireland who keep alive the views of William of Orange.

Oratio obliqua. See OBLIQUA ORATIO.

Orator, a petitioner; a plaintiff in a bill, or information, in Chancery was formerly so called.

Oratrix, or Oratress, a female petitioner; a female plaintiff in a bill in Chancery was formerly so called.

Orbation, privation of parents or children; poverty.

Orchards. See GARDENS.

Ordeal [fr. ordal, Sax., from or, great, and dele, judgment], an ancient manner of trial in criminal cases, practised amongst our Saxon ancestors who affected to believe that God would actively interpose to establish an earthly right. There were four sorts: (1) campfight, duellum, or combat; (2) fire ordeal; (3) hot water ordeal; (4) cold water ordeal; which titles see.—Verstegan's Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, 64; Turner's Ang. Sax., vol. ii., 532; 2 Hallam's Mid. Ages, 466. They are all abolished.

Ordeffe, or Ordelfe, a liberty whereby a man claims the ore found in his own land; also, the ore lying under land.—Cowel.

Ordels, the right of administering oaths and adjudging trials by ordeal within a precinct or liberty.—Cowel.

Order, mandate, precept, command; also a class or rank.

General Orders are promulgated by courts for the proper regulation of their own proceedings, and particular orders are made to enforce a payment of money, to enforce obedience to justice, and compel that which is right to be performed.

Order and disposition of goods and chattels; when goods are in the order and disposition of a bankrupt, they go to his trustee, and have gone so since the time of James I. See BILL OF SALE, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 15.

Order of discharge, an order made under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 48, by a court of bankruptcy, the effect of which is to discharge a bankrupt from all debts, claims, or demands, proveable under the bankruptcy.

Order of revivor, an order as of course for the continuance of an abated suit. It superseded the bill of revivor. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52, and Cons. Ord. 1860, xxxii., r. 1, and title ABATEMENT.

Ordering witnesses out of court. See WITNESSES.

Orders of the clergy. See HOLY ORDERS.

Ordinance, law, rule, prescript.

Ordinance of the forest, a statute made touching matters and causes of the forest.—33 & 34 Edw. I.

Ordinance of Parliament, Act of Parliament during the Commonwealth.

Ordinarius ita dicitur quia habet ordinariam jurisdictionem, in jure proprio, et non propter deputationem. Co. Litt. 96.—(The ordinary is so called because he has an ordinary jurisdiction in his own right, and not a deputed one.)

Ordinandi lex, the law of procedure as distinguishing from the substantial part of the law.

Ordinary, a judge who has authority to take cognizance of causes in his own right, and not by deputation.—Civ. Law.

By the common law, one who has exempt and immediate jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical.

Also, a bishop; and an archbishop is the ordinary of the whole province, to visit and receive appeals from inferior jurisdictions. Also, a commissary or official of a bishop or other ecclesiastical judge having judicial power; an archdeacon; officer of the royal household.

Ordinary of assize and sessions, a deputy of the bishop of the diocese, anciently appointed to give malefactors their neck-verses, and judge whether they read or not: also, to perform divine services for them, and assist in preparing them for death. See NECK-VERSE.

Ordinary conveyances, those deeds of transfer which are entered into between two or more persons, without an assurance in a superior court of justice. See DEED.

Ordinary of Newgate, the clergyman who is attendant upon condemned malefactors in that prison to prepare them for death; he records the behaviour of such persons. Formerly, it was the custom of the ordinary to publish a small pamphlet upon the execution of any remarkable criminal.

Ordinatio Forestæ, 33 Edw. I. stat. 5; 34 Edw. I. stat. 5.—2 Reeves, c. ix., 104, 106.

Ordinatio pro statu Hiberniæ, 17 Edw. I.—2 Reeves, c. ix., 99.

Ordination, the conferring holy orders. The first thing necessary, on application for holy orders, is the possession of a title, that is, a sort of assurance from a rector to the bishop, that, provided the latter finds the person fit to be ordained, the former will take him for his curate, with a stated salary. The candidate is then examined by the bishop or his chaplain respecting both his faith and his erudition; and various certificates are necessary, particularly one signed by the clergyman of the parish in which he has resided during a given time. The candidate has to comply with the requirements of the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 122 (see SUBSCRIPTION); and a clerk must have attained his twenty-third year before he can be ordained a deacon; and his twenty-fourth to receive priest's orders.—44 Geo. III. c. 43. The ceremony of ordination is performed by the bishop, by the imposition of hands on the person to be ordained. In the English church, and in most Protestant countries where the church is connected with the state, ordination is a requisite to preaching; but, in some sects, ordination is not considered necessary for that purpose, although it is considered proper, previously to the administration of the sacraments.

In the Presbyterian and Congregational churches, ordination means the act of establishing a licensed preacher over a congregation with pastoral charge and authority, or the act of conferring on a man the powers of a settled minister of the gospel, without the charge of a particular church, but with general powers wherever he may be called upon to officiate.

As to the ordination of priests and deacons for or in the colonies, see 59 Geo. III. c. 60; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 33; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 52.

Ordinatione contra servientes, a writ that lay against a servant for leaving his master, contrary to the ordinance of statute 23 & 24 Edw. III.—Reg. Orig. 189.

Ordine placitandi servato, servatur et jus. Co. Litt. 303 a.—(The order of pleading being preserved, right is preserved.)

Ordines, a general chapter or other solemn convention of the religious of a particular order.

Ordines majores et minores, the holy orders of priest, deacon, and sub-deacon, any of which qualified for presentation and admission to an ecclesiastical dignity or cure, were called ordines majores; and the inferior orders of chanters, psalmists, ostiary, reader, exorcist, and acolyte, were called ordines minores; persons ordained to the ordines minores had their prima tonsura, different from the tonsura clericalis.—Cowel.

Ordinum fugitivi, those of the religious who deserted their houses, and, throwing off the habits, renounced their particular order in contempt of their oath and other obligations.—Par. Antiq. 388.

Ordinance debentures, bills which were issued by the Board of Ordinance on the Treasurer of that office for the payment of stores, etc.

Ordinance Office, or Board of Ordinance, an office which was kept within the Tower of London, and which superintended and disposed of all the arms, instruments, and utensils of war, both by sea and land, in all the magazines, garrisons, and forts of Great Britain. It is divided into two distinct branches, the civil and the military.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 24. But by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 117, the powers, duties, etc., of the Board, were transferred to the Secretary of State for War.

Ordinance survey. This 'survey of Great Britain and the Isle of Man' was first authorized in 1841 by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 30, an act which expired in 1846, but has been continued from time to time, and, finally, until 31st December, 1885, by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 32.

Ordo, that rule which monks were obliged to observe.

Ordo Albus, the white friars or Augustines; the Cistercians also wore white.

Ordo Niger, the black friars. The Cluniacs likewise wore black.

Ore tenuis (by word of mouth).

Orgild [fr. orf., Sax., cattle, and gild, recompense], a delivery or restitution of cattle. But Lambarde says it is a restitution made by the hundred or county for any wrong done by one who was in pledge, or rather a penalty for taking away cattle.—Lamb. Arch. 125.

Orgild, without recompense; as where no satisfaction was to be made for the death of a man killed, so that he was judged lawfully slain.—Spelm.

Orige. See ORWIGE.

Original bills in equity. See BILL IN CHANCERY.

Original charter, is one by which the first grant of land is made. On the other hand, a charter by progress is one renewing the grant in favour of the heir or singular successor of the first or succeeding vassals.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Original and derivative estates. An original is the first of several estates, bearing to each other the relation of a particular estate and a reversion. An original estate is contrasted with a derivative estate; and a derivative estate is a particular interest carved out of another estate of larger extent.—Prest. on Est. 125.

Original writ, or Original (breve originale, Lat.), was the beginning or foundation of a real action at common law. It is also applied to processes for some other purposes.

It was a mandatory letter issuing out of the common law or ordinary jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery (see now CHANCERY), under the Great Seal, and in the sovereign's name, addressed to the sheriff of the county where the injury was committed, containing a summary statement of the cause of complaint, and requiring him to command the defendant to satisfy the claim, and, on his failure to comply, then to summon him to appear in one of the superior courts of common law. In some cases it simply required the sheriff to enforce the appearance. Original writs differed from each other in their tenor, according to the nature of the plaintiff's complaint, and were conceived in fixed and certain forms. Many of these are of a remote antiquity; others are of later origin, and their history is as follows:—The ancient writs had provided for the most obvious kinds of wrong; but, in the progress of society, cases of injury arose new in their circumstances, so as not to be reached by any of the writs then known in practice; and it seems that either the clerks of the Chancery (who prepared the original writ) had no authority to devise new forms for such cases, or they were remiss in its exercise. Therefore, by the statute of West. 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 24, it was provided, 'That as often as it shall happen in the Chancery that in one case a writ is found, and in a like case, falling under the same right, and requiring like remedy, no writ is to be found, the clerks of the Chancery shall agree in making a writ or adjourn the complaint till the next parliament, and write the cases in which they cannot agree, and refer them to the next parliament,' etc. This statute, while it gave to the officers of the Chancery the power of framing new writs in a like case with those that formerly existed, did not give or recognise any right to frame such instruments for cases entirely new. It seems, therefore, that for any such case, no writ could be lawfully issued except by authority of parliament. But, on the other hand, new writs were copiously produced, according to the principle sanctioned by this act, i.e., in a like case or upon the analogy of actions previously existing; and other writs, also, being added from time to time, by express authority of the legislature, large accessions were thus on the whole made to the ancient stock of brevia originalia. All forms of writs once issued were entered from time to time, and preserved in the Court of Chancery in 'The Register of Writs,' which in the reign of Henry VIII. was first printed and published. This book is still an authority, as containing in general an accurate transcript of the forms of all original writs as then framed. But a variation from the register is not conclusive against the propriety of a form, if other authority can be adduced to prove its correctness. It was essential to the institution of all actions in the superior courts that they should commence by original writs, and in real actions more recently than in personal actions.—2 Wm. IV. c. 39; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110. But a different mode of commencement of real actions was afterwards provided by the C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26. [See REAL ACTIONS.] These instruments, however, had the effect of limiting and defining the right of action itself, and no cases were considered within the scope of judicial remedy, but those to which some known original writ would have applied, or for which some new original writ, framed on the analogy of those already existing, might under the provisions of the statute Westminster 2nd, have been lawfully devised. Some authorities declare that these writs had their origin in the Roman law, and were in use before the Conqueror; others assert that we derived them, through Normandy, from a Francic source.—Steph. on Plead. app. n. 2.

The following original writs were issued, not ex debito justitiæ but ex merâ gratiâ, and were sometimes denominated discretionary writs; De ventre inspiciendo; supplicavit; certiorari; prohibition; writs of error in criminal cases; ad quod damnum; scire facias, to repeal letters-patent, etc. See 1 Mad. Eq. b. 8.

As to the mode of commencing actions in the Supreme Court, see ACTION and SUMMONS.

Originalia, transcripts sent to the Remembrancer's Office in the Exchequer out of the Chancery, distinguished from recorda, which contain the judgments and pleadings in actions tried before the barons.

Origine propriâ neminem posse voluntate suâ eximi manifestum est. Cod. 10, 38, 4.—(It is evident that no one is able of his own pleasure, to do away with his proper origin.) For the application of this maxim, see Broom's Legal Maxims, 5th ed., 77.

Ornamental grounds. The Act 26 & 27 Vict. c. 13, provides for the protection of gardens and ornamental grounds in cities and boroughs. See GARDENS.

Ornest, the trial by battle which does not seem to have been usual in England before the time of the Conqueror, though originating in the kingdoms of the north, where it was practised under the name of holmgang, from the custom of fighting duels on a small island or holm.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Orphan, a fatherless child or minor, or one deprived of both father and mother.

The Lord Chancellor is the general guardian of all orphans and minors throughout the realm.

In London the Lord Mayor and Aldermen have in their court of orphans the custody of the orphans of deceased freemen, and also the keeping of their lands and goods; accordingly the executors and administrators of freemen leaving such orphans, are to exhibit inventories of the estate of the deceased, and give security to the Chamberlain for the orphan's part or share.

Orphanotrophi, managers of houses for orphans.—Civ. Law.

Ortelli, the claws of a dog's foot.—Kitch.

Ortologium, a garden plot or hortilage.

Orwige—sine witâ, without war or feud, such security being provided by the laws, for homicides under certain circumstances, against the fehth, or deadly feud, on the part of the family of the slain.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Osculum pacis, a former custom of the church, so called because in the celebration of the mass, after the priest had spoken these words, Pax Domini vobiscum, the people kissed each other; afterwards, when this custom was abrogated, another was introduced, which was that whilst the priest spoke the afore-mentioned words, a deacon offered the people an image to kiss, which was commonly called pacem.—Matt. Paris, A.D. 1100.

Ostensible partner, one whose name is made known, and appears to the world as a partner, and is really such. See NOMINAL PARTNER.

Ostensio, a tax anciently paid by merchants, etc., for leave to show or expose their goods for sale in markets.—Du Cange; Anc. Inst. Eng.

Ostium ecclesiæ, Dower ad. See AD OSTIUM ECCLESIE.

Oswald's Law, the law by which was effected the ejection of married priests, and the introduction of monks into churches, by Oswald, Bishop of Worcester, about A.D. 964.

Oswald's Law Hundred, an ancient hundred in Worcestershire, so called from Bishop Oswald, who obtained it from King Edgar, to be given to St. Mary's Church in Worcester. It was exempt from the sheriff's jurisdiction, and comprehends 300 hides of land.—Camd. Brit.

Orlop, the lierwite or fine paid to the lord by the inferior tenant when his daughter was debauched.—Cowel.

Oust (v. a.), to dispossess.

Ouster, dispossession.

A wrong or injury that may be sustained in respect of hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, carrying with it the amotion of possession; for thereby the wrong-doer gets into the actual occupation of the land or hereditament, and obliges him that has a right, to seek his legal remedy, in order to gain possession and damages for the injury sustained. Such dispossession may be either of the freehold or of chattels real.

Ouster of the freehold is effected by various methods: 1st, abatement; 2nd, intrusion; 3rd, disseisin; 4th, deforcement; and 5th, discontinuance.

Ouster of chattels real consists: 1st, of amotion of possession from estates held by statute, recognizance, or elegit, which happens by a species of disseisin or turning out of the legal proprietor before his estate is determined by raising the sum for which it is given to him in pledge; and 2nd, of amotion, of possession from an estate of years, which also takes place by a like kind of disseisin ejection, or turning out of the tenant from the occupation of the land during the continuance of his term.

For remedies for ouster, see EJECTMENT, and FORCIBLE ENTRY.

Ousterlemain [amovere manum, Lat.], the delivery of the lands out of the guardian's hands, upon the male heir attaining twenty-one, or the female heiress sixteen years of age. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Also, a livery of land out of the sovereign's hands on a judgment given for him that sued out a monstrans de droit.—Staunf. Prærog. c. 24.

Ouster le mer, beyond the sea; a cause of excuse, if a person, being summoned, did not appear in court.—Cowel. See SEAS, BEYOND.

Outer House, the name given to the great hall of the Parliament House in Edinburgh, in which the Lords Ordinary of the Court of Session sit as single judges to hear causes. The term is used colloquially as expressive of the business done there in contradistinction to the Inner House, the name given to the chambers in which the First and Second Divisions of the Court of Session hold their sittings.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict. See SESSION, COURT OF.

Out of court, a plaintiff in an action at common law must have declared within one year after the service of a writ of summons, otherwise he was out of court, unless the court had, by special order, enlarged the time for declaring. See now Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXI., r. 1, and Ord. LVII., r. 6.

Outfangthef, a liberty in the ancient common law, whereby a lord was enabled to call any man dwelling in his manor, and taken for felony in another place out of his fee, to judgment in his own court.—Du Cange.

Outhest, or Outhom, a calling men out to the army by sound of horn.—Jacob.

Outhouses, buildings belonging to and adjoining dwelling houses.

Outland, land lying beyond the demesnes, and granted out to tenants at the will of the lord, like copyholds. Subdivided into theodans, or lesser thanes, disposed amongst those who attended the lord, and those parts allotted to their husbandmen or churls.—Spelm.

Outlaw [fr. utlaghe, Sax.; utlagatus, Lat.], a person put out of the law, or deprived of its benefits (see next title).

Outlawry [fr. utlagaria, Lat.], the being put out of the law for contempt in wilfully avoiding the execution of the process of the Queen's Court. Outlawry has long been ob-solely in civil proceedings, and is formally abolished by the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 59, in civil proceedings. In criminal proceedings it is but little used, but is formally kept alive by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, which act, while abolishing forfeiture for felony, expressly provides that nothing therein shall affect the law of forfeiture consequent on outlawry. The following is a short sketch of the law :—

I. Civil actions. It was a proceeding adopted against a defendant who had absconded and could not be found. If the defendant were a woman the proceeding was called a waiver; for as women were not sworn to the law by taking the oath of allegiance in the leet (as men anciently were when of the age of twelve years and upwards), they could not properly be outlawed, but were said to be waived, i.e., derelicta, left out, or not regarded. And for the same reason an infant could not be outlawed under the age of twelve years. Members of either House of Parliament were exempt from outlawry.

(a) Before judgment. Since the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 24, proceedings to outlawry could not be taken for the purpose of compelling an appearance by a defendant where the action was commenced by writ of summons.

(b) After judgment. If non est inventus was returned to a ca. sa. an exigi facias was sued out. The exigi facias was a judicial writ commanding the sheriff to demand the defendant from county court to county court, until he was outlawed. It seems it ought to have been tested on the quarto die post of the return of the ca. sa., and in term time. It must have been returnable on a day certain, on some day being either the third inclusive before the commencement of term, or between that day and the third day exclusive before the last day of the term. It could not be made returnable in a term after the term following that in which the writ was tested; and there must have been fifteen days at least between the teste and return.

By the Debtors' Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), imprisonment for debt has been abolished, except in certain cases; but by the same act power is given to Courts to commit debtors contumaciously refusing to pay judgment debts.

II. Criminal prosecutions. If a defendant cannot be arrested on a capias bench warrant or warrant of a magistrate, he is liable, on his non-appearance to an indictment, to be outlawed. In misdemeanours, the first process is a venire facias, which is for the party's appearance, upon the return of which, if it appear that he have lands in the county, a distress infinite issues from time to time, till he appears; if he have no lands, then a capias issues, and then an alias and pluries. In treason and felony, a capias is the first process. The exigent is then issued, and a writ of proclamation, and on his not appearing at the fifth exaction or inquisition, he is outlawed, and incapable of availing himself of the benefit of the law.

The forfeiture upon indictments for misdemeanours is the same as in civil actions; but in treason or felony, it amounts to a conviction and attainder of the offence, and he may be arrested by any one in order to be brought to execution.

The outlawry may be reversed by plea or by proceedings in error.—4 Steph. Com.

The maxim applicable to outlaws is, 'Let them be answerable to all, and none to them.' Accordingly, any person outlawed is civilitér mortuus. He can hold no property given or devised to him; and all the property which he held before is forfeited. He can neither sue on his contracts, nor has he any legal rights which can be enforced; while, at the same time, he is personally liable upon all causes of action. He can, however, bring actions in autre droit, as executor, administrator, etc., because in such actions he only represents persons capable of contracting, and under the protection of the law.—Ex parte Franks, 7 Bing. 767.

Outparters, stealers of cattle.—Cowel.

Outputers, such as set watches for the robbing any manor-house.—Cowel.

Outriders, bailiffs-errant employed by sheriffs or their deputies, to ride to the extremities of their counties or hundreds to summon men to the county or hundred court.

Outstanding term, a term in gross at law, which, in equity, may be made attendant upon the inheritance, either by express declaration or by implication. See 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112.

Outsucken multures, quantities of corn paid by persons voluntarily grinding corn at any mill to which they are not thirled or bound by tenure. See INSUCKEN MULTURES.

Ovelty, a kind of equality of service in subordinate tenures.—F. N. B. 36.

Overcyted, or Overcyhsed, proved guilty or convicted.—Blount.

Overdue, past the time of payment.

When bills of exchange are indorsed after they are overdue, the indorsee is liable to suspicion; and it behoves him to use every precaution, and make every inquiry, for he takes the bill with all its faults on the credit of the indorser, and must stand in the same situation as the holder when the bill first became payable. This rule, however, does not apply to cheques.—9 B. & C. 388. Consult Byles on Bills.

Overhernissa, contumacy or contempt of court.—Leg. Ethel. c. 25.

Overrule, to set aside the authority of a former decision.

Oversamessa, a forfeiture for contempt or neglect in not pursuing a malefactor.—3 Inst. 116.

Overseers of the Poor, public officers created by the 43 Eliz. c. 2, to provide for the poor of every parish. There are two or more, according to the extent of the parish. Churchwardens are, by this statute, overseers of the poor, and they join with the overseers in making poor rates; but the churchwardens, having distinct business of their own, usually leave the care of the poor to the overseers, though anciently they were the sole overseers of the poor.—Wood's Inst. 98.

Assistant overseers may be appointed with a salary, by 59 Geo. III. c. 12, s. 7. See Burn's Justice, tit. 'Poor.'

Overwesnesse. See OVERHERNISSA.

Overseman, an umpire.—Scotch term.

Overt, open. See next title.

Overt act, an open act by law must be manifestly proved.—3 Inst. 12.

Overt word, an open, plain word, not to be misunderstood.—Cowel.

Overture, an opening; a proposal.

Ovragés, or Ouvrages, day's works.

Ovres, acts, deeds, or works.—8 Rep. 131.

Owel, equal.

Owelry, equality.—Co. Litt. 169.

Owlers, persons who carried wool, etc., to the seaside by night, in order that it might be shipped off contrary to law.—Jacob.

Owling, the offence of transporting wool or sheep out of the kingdom. Abolished by 5 Geo. IV. c. 107.

Oxfield, a restitution anciently made by a hundred or county for any wrong done by one that was within the same.—Lamb. Arch. 125.

Oxford. See UNIVERSITY.

Oxgang, or Oxgate, fifteen acres of land. Corrupted, in the north, to osken.—Kelm, Domes. Illustr.

Oyer (to hear), the ancient word for assizes; oyer of a deed is abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 55.

Oyer de record, a petition made in court that the judges, for better proof's sake, will hear or look upon any record.—Cowel.

Oyer and terminer, a commission directed to the judges and other gentlemen of the county to which it is issued, by virtue whereof they have power to hear and determine treasons, and all manner of felonies and trespasses. Terminer is sometimes written determiner.

When any sudden insurrection takes place, or any public outrage is committed, which requires speedy reformation, or there is a press of business, then a special commission is immediately granted.

Oyer and Terminer, Courts of, and general gaol delivery. See ASSIZES.

Oyez (hear ye), the introduction to any proclamation or advertisement given by the public criers both in England and Scotland. It is pronounced, oh! yes! See NORMAN FRENCH.

Oysters. As to punishment for stealing oysters, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 26, s. 26. The 29 & 30 Vict. c. 85, was passed to facilitate the establishment, improvement, and maintenance of oyster and mussel fisheries in Great Britain. See also 32 & 33 Vict. c. 26.

P.

Paage [Old Fr., fr. paagium, low Lat.], a toll for passage through another's land. Obsolete.

Pacare, to pay.

Pacatio, payment.—Mat. Par. A.D. 1248.

Pace, a measure of length containing two feet and a half. The geometrical pace is five feet long; the common pace is the length of a step, the geometrical is the length of two steps, or the whole space passed over by the same foot from one step to another.

Paceatur (let him be freed or discharged).

Paci sunt maximè contraria vis et injuria. Co. Litt. 161.—(Violence and injury are the things chiefly hostile to peace.)

Pacific Ocean (Islands in). See 35 & 36 Vict. c. 19, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 51.

Pack of wool, a horse load, which consists of 17 stone and two pounds, or 240 pounds weight.—Fleta, I. lib. 2, c. xii; Cowel.

Package, scavage, bailage, and portage, duties charged in the port of London on the goods imported and exported by aliens, or by denizens being the sons of aliens.

The Act 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 66, authorized the Lords of the Treasury to purchase these duties from the city. This was done at an expense of about 140,000*l.*, and the duties were abolished.—McCull. Com. Dict.

Packed parcels, the name for a consignment of goods, consisting of one large parcel made up of several small ones (each bearing a different address) collected from different persons by the immediate consignor (a carrier), who unites them into one for his own profit, at the expense of the railway by which they are sent, since the railway company would have been paid more for the carriage of the parcels singly than together. The charging by a railway company of a higher rate for 'packed' than other parcels, has been determined frequently to be illegal; see G. W. Ry. Co. v. Sutton, L. R. 4 H. L. 226.

Packet Service. See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 6.

Packing. As to false packing of hay and straw in the metropolis see 19 & 20 Vict. c. 114, which inflicts a penalty of 10*l*.

Pact [fr. pacte, Fr.; pactum, Lat.], a contract, bargain, covenant.

Pacta conventa quæ neque contra leges neque dolo malo inita sunt omnimodo observanda sunt. Dig. 2, 14, 27, s. 4.—(Agreements which are neither illegal nor founded on fraud must in all respects be observed.)

Pacta dant legem contractui. Hob. 118.—(The stipulations of parties constitute the law of the contract.)

Pacta privata juri publico derogare non possunt. 7 Co. 23.—(Private compacts cannot derogate from public right.)

Pacta quæ contra leges constitutiones quæ vel contra bonos mores sunt nullam vim habere, indubitati juris est.—(It is undoubted law that agreements have no force which are contrary to law or the constitutions or to good morals.)

Pacta quæ turpem causam continent non sunt observanda. Dig. 2, 14, 27, s. 4.—(Agreements founded on an immoral consideration are not to be observed.)

Paction [fr. pactio, Lat.], a bargain or covenant.

Pactis privatorum juri publico non derogatur.—(Private contracts cannot derogate from public right.)

Pacto aliquod licitum est, quod sine pacto non admittitur. Co. Litt. 166.—(By special agreement things are allowed which are not otherwise permitted.)

Pactum constitutæ pecuniæ, an agreement by which a person appointed to his creditor a certain day, or a certain time, at which he promised to pay; or an agreement by which a person promises to pay a creditor.—Civ. Law.

Pactum de non petendo, an agreement made between a creditor and his debtor that the former will not demand from the latter the debt due. By this agreement the debtor is freed from his obligation.—Civ. Law. This is not unlike the covenant not to sue of our common law.

Pactum de quotâ litis, an agreement by which a creditor promised to pay a portion of a debt difficult to recover, to a person who undertook to recover it.—Civ. Law.

Padder, a robber, a foot highwayman.

Paddock [fr. panne, Sax., a park], a small inclosure for deer or other animals.

Pagarchus [fr. pagus, Lat., village, and ἀρχή, Gk., command], a petty magistrate of a pagus or little district in the country.

Pagoda, a temple; also a gold coin in the south of India valued at 8*s*.—Indian.

Pagus, a county.—Jacob.

Pagus, derived from the Doric παγᾱ, a fount; because villages were originally formed round springs of water. 'Religion did first take place in cities, and in that respect was a cause why the name of Pagans, which properly signifieth a country people, came to be used in common speech for the same that infidels and unbelievers were.'—Hooker, E. P. v. 80.

Pains and Penalties, acts of parliament to attain particular persons of treason or felony, or to inflict pains and penalties beyond or contrary to the common law, to serve a special purpose. They are in fact new laws, made pro re natâ. It is an incident of such bills that persons who are to be affected by them are entitled by custom to be heard at the bar of the House in person or by counsel. But on a bill to disfranchise the borough of St. Albans, this claim was disallowed.

Paintings, as to the copyright in, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68; and see COPYRIGHT.

Pairing-off, a practice which is said to have originated in the time of Cromwell, whereby two members of the House of Commons of opposite opinions agree to absent themselves from voting during a given period. See PROXY.

Pais, or Pays, the people out of whom a jury is taken; a corruption of pagus.—Spelm.

Pais, Conveyances in, ordinary conveyances between two or more persons in the country, i.e., upon the land to be transferred.

Pais, Estoppel in. See ESTOPPEL.

Pais, Trial by, a trial by the country, i.e., a jury.—3 Steph. Com.

Passio, pasnage, a liberty for hogs to run in forests or woods to feed upon mast.—Mon. Angl. 1, 682.

Palagium, a duty to lords of manors for exporting and importing vessels of wine at any of their ports.—Jacob.

Palatine, possessing royal privileges. See COUNTY PALATINE.

Palfridus, a palfry, a horse to travel on.

Paling-man, a merchant denizen, or one born within the English pale.—Cowel.

Palmer Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16, enabling a person accused of a crime committed out of the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, to be tried in that Court.

Pallio cooperire, an ancient custom, where children were born out of wedlock, and their parents afterwards intermarried; the children, together with the father and mother, stood under a cloth extended while the marriage was solemnized. It was in the nature of adoption. The children were legitimate by the civil, but not by the common law.—Jacob.

Pamphlet [fr. par un filet, Fr., by a thread], a small book, usually printed in the octavo form, and stitched.—The Act 10 Anne c. 19, s. 113, as to the printers of pamphlets, was repealed by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 99. See now PRINTERS.

Pandectæ, or Digesta. In the last month of the year A.D. 530, Justinian, by a constitution addressed to Tribonian, empowered him to name a commission for the purpose of forming a code out of the writings of those jurists who had enjoyed the Jus respondendi, or, as it is expressed by the emperor, 'antiquorum prudentium quibus auctoritatem conscribendarum interpretandarumque legum sacratissimi principes præbuerunt.' The compilation, however, comprises extracts from some writers of the republican period.—Const. Deo. Auctore. Ten years were allowed for the completion of the work. The instructions of the emperor were, to select what was useful, to omit what was antiquated or superfluous, to avoid unnecessary repetitions, to get rid of contradictions, and to make such other changes as should produce out of the mass of ancient juristical writings a useful and complete body of law (jus Antiquum);—the work was to be named Digesta, a Latin term, indicating an arrangement of materials; or Pandectæ, a Greek word, expressive of the comprehensiveness of the work. It was also declared that no commentaries should be written on this compilation, but permission was given to make paratitla, or references to parallel passages, with a short statement of their contents (Const. Deo Auctore, s. 12). It was also declared, that abbreviations (sigla) should not be used in forming the text of the Digest. The work was completed in three years (17 Cal. Jan. A.D. 533), as appears by a constitution, both in Greek and Latin, which confirmed the work, and gave to it legal authority.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

The number of writers from whose works extracts were made is thirty-nine.

Justinian's plan embraced two principal works, one of which was to be a selection from the jurists, and the other from the Constitutions. The first, the Pandects, was very appropriately intended to contain the foundation of the law; it was the first work since the date of the Twelve Tables, which in itself, and without supposing the existence of any other, might serve as a central point of the whole body of the law. It may be properly called a code, and the first complete code since the time of the Twelve Tables, though a large part of its contents is not law, but is dogmatic, or is taken up with the investigation of particular cases. Instead of the insufficient rules of Valentinian III., the excerpts in the Pandects are taken immediately from the writings of the jurists in great numbers, and arranged according to their matter. The code also has a more comprehensive plan than the earlier codes, since it comprises both rescripts and edicts. These two works, the Pandects and the Code, ought properly to be considered as the completion of Justinian's design. The Institutiones cannot be viewed as a third work; independent of both, it serves as an introduction to them, or as a manual. Lastly, the Novellæ are single and subsequent additions or alterations, and it is merely an accidental circumstance that a third edition of the code was not made at the end of Justinian's reign, which would have comprised the Novellæ that had a permanent application.—Savigny, as quoted in Smith's Dict. of Antiq., voce 'Pandectæ.'

The Pandects are divided into fifty Books, each book containing several Titles, divided into Laws, and the Laws generally into several Parts or Paragraphs.

The first is called Principium, being the beginning of the law; the rest are called Paragraphs.

The First Book begins with laying down the general principles of justice, and sets forth its different kinds; it then proceeds to treat of divisions of Persons and Things; Senators are mentioned next; and lastly, Magistrates, their delegates, and assessors. In the Second, we have an account of the power of Magistrates, and their several jurisdictions, continents; how a defendant is to be brought to try an issue; and of Bail for Action. The subject of the latter part of this Book is Covenants and Transactiones, imparlances. The Third Book explains, in the first place, who those persons are that are allowed to sue at law; and as infamous persons are not admitted so to do, the second title treats of them. The following, of those whose assistance is required in legal proceedings, as attorneys, etc.; and lastly, The Third Book treats of the Oath of Calumny. The Fourth Book explains the different causes for restoring a question to its normal state, and of an act done under coercion or fear of death. The next subject it treats of is Compromises and Arbitrations; after which it speaks of Innkeepers and others in whose custody we leave anything. The Fifth states, after having treated of Judgments, who ought to make an Assignment of the demand of Inheritance, and of the Impeachment of a

Will for informality. The Sixth treats of Real Actions by which private persons recover their own; which actions may be civil and direct, or prætorian or equitable. The Seventh respects Burdens termed Personal (servitutes), Usufructs (leases), hirings. The Eighth treats of Real Burdens, prædial and urban. The Ninth treats of Personal assimilated to the Real Actions, as actions for damage or crime committed by a slave, the actions of the Lex Aquilia; and as connected with this last, at the end of the Book, of the Action for Damage done by throwing things into a Highway, and of Noxal Actions. The Tenth Book treats of Mixed Actions, such as the action for bounding and butting, finium regundorum; the action for partition of an inheritance or other particular thing; of the action called Ad Exhibendum, to compel the party 'to produce,' which is preparatory to the Real Action above mentioned. The Eleventh Book treats of Interrogatories upon Facts; of such matters as are to be heard before the same Judge; of Seduced or Run-away Slaves; of Gambling, False Measurements of Land; and lastly, of Burials and Funeral Expenses. The Twelfth Book explains certain Personal Actions, such as the action for a loan, and some others which go by the name of Condictio, which properly signifies the fixing a day for the appointment of a Judge. The Thirteenth Book speaks also of some of these actions, and then of things Lent, and of the Actions relating to Pledges. The Fourteenth and Fifteenth Books treat of Actions arising from Contracts made by Three Persons, but whereby such are bound; and lastly, of Scm. Macedonianum.

The Sixteenth contains Scitum Velleianum, Compensations, and the Actions concerning Deposits. The Seventeenth treats of Commissions (Mandatum), and Partnership. The Eighteenth contains the Law on the Usual Covenants of Contracts of Sale, the mode of their decision, and on what ground these contracts may be receded from, and upon whom the gain or the loss of the thing sold is to fall. The Nineteenth, in the First Part, treats of Actions of Bargain and Sale; of Actions of Hiring; of the Action for Computation of Value, called Estimatio; of Permutation; of the Action on the Terms of the Contract, called Præscriptis Verbis, arising from innominate contracts. The Twentieth Book treats of Pledges, of the Precedence of Creditors, and the subrogation of the Rights of Prior Lien; of the Distractio Pignoris, or sale of things pawned; and the Redemption of the Pledge, or extinguishment of lien. The Twenty-first explains the Ædile's Edict concerning the Sale of Slaves and Animals;

Dispossession, called Evictio; Warranty, and the Exception of the thing Bought and Delivered. The First Part of the Twenty-second treats of Usury, Fruits, Dependencies, Accessaries to things, and Default; the Second, of Proofs and Presumptions, and of Ignorance of the Law or Fact. The Twenty-third is upon Espousals, Marriage, Dowry, Agreements made relatively to that subject, and of Lands given in Dowry. The Twenty-fourth lays down the Law of Gifts between Husband and Wife; of Divorce and Recovery of the Marriage Portion. The Twenty-fifth treats of Expenses laid out upon Dowries; of Actions for the Recovery of things carried away by a Wife or other Person against whom no Action of Theft lies; of the Obligation to acknowledge Children, and provide for their maintenance; and lastly, of Concubines. The Twenty-sixth and Twenty-seventh Books treat wholly of Guardianships, Tutela and Curatela, and of the Actions which result from them; of Exemption from Wardship, and the Alienation of Goods belonging to Wards, Pupillæ, or Minores. The Twenty-eighth Book contains the Law of Wills; the Institution and Disinheritance of Children; of the Institution of an Heir; of Substitutions; of Conditions required in Institutions, and of the Right of Deliberating before Accepting an Inheritance. The Twenty-ninth Book treats of Military Wills; of the Acquisition of an Inheritance, and of the Opening of Wills, etc., and of Codicils. The Thirtieth, Thirty-first, and Thirty-second, treat of Legacies and Bequests in Trust in general. The Thirty-third and likewise the first Titles of the Thirty-fourth, treat of Particular Legacies; the Catonian Regulations; of Legacies reputed never to have been left, and those of which unworthy persons are deprived. The Thirty-fifth speaks of Conditional Legacies, and of the Law Falcidia, reserving a certain portion of the inheritance for the heir. The Thirty-sixth explains the Scm. Trebellianum, regulating Bequests in Trust; the time when Legacies and Fiduciary Bequests become due, and the security the Heir is obliged to give for their Liquidation, if left conditionally; and of their Foreclosure in default of such security. The Thirty-seventh Book speaks first of the succession to a deceased Person's estate, called universal, granted by the prætor, under the name of Bonorum Possessio; after which it treats of Hotch-Pot (Collationes), of Goods and Dowry, and the Right of Patronage. The Thirty-eighth Book lays down the Duties of Freed-Men to their Patrons; the Law of their Succession; of Intestate Succession under the authority of the Prætor; and lastly, of Domestic Heirs, and of the Scdm. Tertullianum and Orphilianum. The Thirty-ninth Book first shows the means which the Law or the Prætor furnishes to prevent any one from receiving Damage, where a Personal, Real, or Mixed Action will not lie; these means are, Caveat against a New Work—Cautio Damni Infecti, and the Action of Eavesdrop—De Aquâ Pluvîâ Arcendâ; it ends with the Explanation of Donations which come into operation during the life of the donor, and of such as are made in contemplation of Death. The Fortieth Book relates to Manumissions, distinguishing between Ingenui, Freed-men, and Slaves, and explaining their rights. The Forty-first treats of the different modes by which Property in Things is acquired by the Law of Nations; of Possession; of Prescriptions; and lastly, of lawful causes authorizing Possession, consequently making it capable of Prescription. The Forty-second treats, in the first place, of things Adjudged; of Definitive and Interlocutory Sentences; of Confessions in Judgment; of the Assignment of Goods; of the causes of Seizure and its effects; and of the privileges of Creditors; it then passes to Curators appointed for the Administration of Goods, and for the Revocation of Acts done to Defraud Creditors. The Forty-third treats of Injunctions and Possessory Actions.

The Forty-fourth first treats of Exceptions and Defences, and then of Obligations and Actions. The Forty-fifth of Stipulations. The Forty-sixth of Sureties, Novations, and Delegations of Payment and Discharges of Acceptilations, Stipulations, and some Bails for Action. The Forty-seventh treats of offences termed Private. The forty-eighth begins with Public Judgments; then follow Accusations, Inscriptions, Prisons, and all Public Offences; thence it passes to the Scdm. Turpillianum and abolition of crimes; and lastly, it treats of Torture, Punishments, Confiscation, Exile, Transportation, and of the bodies of Malefactors executed. The Fortyninth treats of Appeals, and matters relating thereunto; it then gives an account of the Rights of Exchequer; of matter relating to Captives, Military Discipline, Soldiers, and Veterans. The Fiftieth Book treats of the Rights of Cities and Citizens; of Magistrates and their Children; of Public Offices, and the causes which exempt persons from them; and also of the Right of Immunity; after, of Deputies and Ambassadors; of the Administration of Things belonging to Cities; of Public Works, Fairs, Promises (termed Pollicitationes), Judgments given in extraordinary cases by Magistrates; of Brokers and Factors; of Taxes laid upon the Provinces; and lastly, it ends with the Interpretation and signification of Law Terms, and of the Rules of the Law. Besides this distribution of the Digest into Fifty Books, it was divided into Seven Parts, but the reason that induced the Emperor to make this division is not known. Some supposed it was done in order to separate the different matters, and include all that related to one subject in one Part, consisting of several Books. Others attribute it to the superstitious respect of the ancients for the number seven, as the most perfect. The First Part contained the First Four Books. The Second Part, entitled De Judiciis, contained all, beginning with the Fifth to the end of the Eleventh. The Third Part, De Rebus, included all to the end of the Nineteenth. The Fourth Part included the Accessories to Contracts and Actions arising out of Marriage and Guardianship, ending with the Twenty-seventh Book. The Fifth, intituled De Testamentis, began with the Twenty-seventh and ended with the Thirty-sixth. The Sixth is intituled De Bonorum Possessionibus, at the commencement of the Thirty-seventh Book, and ends with the Forty-fourth. The Seventh contains the remaining six Books.

The division of the Pandects into the Digestum Vetus, Digestum Novum, and the Infortiatum, belongs to the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries.

That part of the Pandects from the First Book to Title II. of the Twenty-fourth (De Divortiiis) formed the DIGESTUM VETUS; so called, according to Odofredus, because first compiled—dicitur Digestum Vetus, quia prius fuit in compilatione.

The Infortiatum begins with Title III. of the Twenty-fourth Book (Solutio Matrimonio), and ends with the Thirty-eighth Book; an unnatural division, as it begins not only in the middle of the book, but in the middle of the doctrine of Succession. The word INFORTIATUM is, according to Odofred, so named from its author Infortiatius; or according to Inerius, Aurum vel argentum, nam ab initio fuerent habiti alii libri legales in civitate istâ, postea supervenit Infortiatum unde scientia nostra aucta vel augmentata est, sicut dicitur pannus Infortiatius in quo magis est de lana quam sit de aliis communiter. And again, Ut dicitur de veste de lana, INFORTIATA; i.e., de veste de lana augmentata. Inerius, too, says, Jus nostrum augmentatum Infortiatum est, sic et vestis serica dicitur Infortiatâ, etc., and Odofred explains the word by augmentatum, an augmentation to the parts then already known—the Old and New Digests; that is, found afterwards and inserted in its proper place between those parts already known and in use. But a still more extraordinary subdivision was that of the latter portion of the Infortiatum, termed the TRES PARTES; this begins not only in the middle of a Book, of a Title, and of a Lex, but also in the middle of a sentence of that law. The initiatory words doubtless gave it the name by which it went, Ille pars, quæ dicitur Tres Partes, non est liber, quia est super Infortiato et non est ibilex vel sectio, sed totum sub lege illa querebatur, says Odofredus. That glossator, moreover, informs us, that they had not the Infortiate which was at Rome, and was afterwards brought to Pentapolis in an imperfect state; that is, minus the portion beginning Tres Partes. Savigny, however, clears up the question more satisfactorily. He says that the Digestum Vetus—that portion called the Tres Partes—and the Digestum Novum were discovered; and lastly the remaining part, namely that beginning with Title III. of the Twenty-fourth Book, and ending at 35, 2, 82, where the Tres Partes begin. On this discovery being made, this missing portion was inserted into its proper place, between the end of Title II. of the Twenty-fourth Book of the Tres Partes, until then forming a continuous part of the Digestum Vetus. As for the Digestum Novum, Savigny thinks it only meant pars secunda, and Vetus, pars prior, and is not to be taken in the sense of not new or newly found; both having been found simultaneously.

In order to prevent the circulation of incorrect editions, three Ultramontane and three Citramontane scholars were chosen every year in the University of Bologna, and termed PECIARI; they were excused from all other munera publica, and held their sessions once a week for the purpose of correcting imperfect copies in possession of circulating libraries; a fine of five soldi was imposed on all possessors of defective books, together with the expenses of correction, for which purpose every doctor or scholar was obliged to lend his own perfect copy, under pain of a fine of five lire; hence the term exempla correctæ et bene emendata. Books thus corrected were advertised by the bedel.—1 Colqu. R. C. L. 67—73.

Pandoxator, a brewer.—Old Records.

Pandoxatrix, a woman that brews and sells ale.—Cowel.

Panel [fr. panellum, Lat.; panneau, Fr., a square or panel], a little part, or rather a schedule or page, containing the names of such jurors as the sheriff returns to pass upon a trial; and empanneling a jury is nothing but the entering them into the sheriff's roll or book.

2. In Scotch law, the accused person in a criminal trial.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Pannage [fr. pannagium, low Lat.; panage, Fr.], food that swine feed on in the woods, as mast of beech, acorns, etc., which some have called pawnes. 2. The money taken by the agistors for the food of hogs, fed with the mast of the royal forests.—Cowel.

Pannagium est pastus porcorum, in nemoribus et in silvis, de glandibus, etc. 1 Buls 7. —(A pannagium is a pasture of hogs, in woods and forests, upon acorns, and so forth.)

Pannel. See PANEL.

Pannellation, act of empanneling a jury.

Pannier-man, one who called the members in the Inns of Court to dinner, etc., and provided mustard, pepper, and vinegar for the hall.

Pannus, a garment made with skins.—Fleta, lib. 2, c. xiv.

Pantomime, a dramatic performance in which gestures take the place of words. See Lee v. Simpson, 3 C. B. 871.

Paper blockade. The state of a line of coast proclaimed to be under blockade in time of war, when the naval force on watch is not sufficient to repel a real attempt to enter.

Paper book, the issues in law, etc., upon special pleadings, formerly made up by the clerk of the papers, who was an officer for that purpose, but latterly by the plaintiff's attorney or agent.

By rule of Hilary Term, 1853, r. 16, 'four days before the day appointed for argument, the plaintiff had to deliver copies of the demurrer-book, special case, special verdict, or appeal cases with the points intended to be insisted on, to the Chief and senior judge of the court in which the action was brought; and the defendant had to deliver copies to the other two judges of the court, next in seniority, etc. See also r. 68. Printed copies of every special case must now be delivered by the plaintiff (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXIV., r. 3). And any party who enters an action for trial must deliver to the officer of the Court a copy of the whole of the pleadings in the action for the use of the judge at the trial (Ibid., Ord. XXXVI., r. 17). See also Ord. XXVIII., r. 6, and Ord. LVIII., rr. 11—13.

Paper. As to the paper on which proceedings in the Supreme Court must be printed, see PRINTING PROCEEDINGS IN AN ACTION.

Paper-credit, credit given on the security of any written obligation purporting to represent property,

Paper-days. In each of the common law courts certain days were appointed in each term, called Special Paper-days, because the court on those days proposed to hear the cases entered in the Special Paper for argument. There was also fixed in the Queen's Bench, Crown Paper-days for disposing of business on the Crown side of the Court.—On these days no motions were heard. Since the coming into force of the Judicature Acts arrangements similar to those above mentioned continue to be made.

Paper duty repeal. This was effected by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 20.

Paper money, bank-notes, bills of exchange, and promissory notes.

Paper office (in the palace of Whitehall), an ancient office where all the public writings, matters of state and council, proclamations, letters, intelligences, negotiations of the Queen's ministers abroad, and generally all the papers and dispatches that pass through the offices of the Secretaries of State, are deposited.

Also an office or room in the Court of Queen's Bench where the records belonging to that court are deposited; sometimes called Paper-mill.

Papism, popery. See next title.

Papist [fr. papa, Lat., a pope], one who adheres to the communion of the Church of Rome. The word seems to be considered by the Roman Catholics themselves as a nickname of reproach, originating in their maintaining the supreme ecclesiastical power of the pope.

By 18 Geo. III. c. 60, 31 Geo. III. c. 32, and 43 Geo. III. c. 30, most of the severer penalties and disabilities to which papists were formerly subject, were removed on condition of their qualifying by such oath and declaration as in those acts respectively provided; and by 10 Geo. IV. c. 7, commonly called the Catholic Emancipation Act, Roman Catholics were restored in general to the full enjoyment of all civil rights, except that of holding ecclesiastical offices and certain high appointments in the state. All enactments by which any declaration against transubstantiation, invocation of saints, or the sacrifice of the mass, were required, etc., as qualifications for sitting in parliament, were repealed; and persons professing the Roman Catholic religion, upon taking and subscribing an oath prescribed by the act (see now title OATH) were relieved from all disabilities and penalties whatever, and made competent to sit in parliament, to vote at parliamentary elections, and to be members of lay corporations, and to exercise any franchise or civil right except that of presenting to benefices, and the office of guardian, justice, or regent of the United Kingdom; lord high chancellor or commissioner or keeper of the Great Seals; lord lieutenant, deputy, or chief governor of Ireland; high commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland; or any office in the church or the ecclesiastical courts, or in the universities, colleges, and public schools.

Doubts having been still entertained as to the right of Roman Catholics to hold property for the support of religious worship, and for educational or charitable purposes, it was provided by the 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 115, that they should be subject, in this particular, to the same laws as were applicable to Protestant dissenters; and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 102, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 49, repealed all such enactments (although fallen into oblivion), as were calculated to oppress the Roman Catholic subjects of the realm.

'The Ecclesiastical Titles Assumption Act, 1851' (14 & 15 Vict. c. 60), occasioned by and prohibiting the assumption of titles by Roman Catholic Bishops, was never enforced, and has been repealed by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 53.

As to livings in the gift of Roman Catholics, the right to present to them is secured to the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, according to the several counties in which they are situated. See 12 Anne, st. 2, c. 14, s. 4, and 11 Geo. II. c. 17.

Par, state of equality; equal value. See EXCHANGE.

Parachronism, error in the computation of time.

Paracium, the tenure between parceners, viz., that which the youngest owes to the eldest without homage or service.—Domesday.

Parage, or Paragium, an equality of blood or dignity; but more especially of land, in the partition of an inheritance between co-heirs; more properly, however, an equality of condition among nobles, or persons holding by a noble tenure. Thus, when a fief is divided among brothers, the younger hold their part of the elder by parage, i.e., without any homage or service.—Cowel. Also the portion which a woman may obtain on her marriage.

Paragraph, a part or section of a statute, pleading, affidavit, etc., which contains one article, the sense of which is complete.

Paralogy [fr. παρά, Gk., against; and λόγος, reason], false reasoning.

Paramount, superior; having the highest jurisdiction, as lord paramount, the supreme lord of the fee; the sovereign.

Paraphernalia [fr. παρά, Gk., beyond; and φερνή, dower], something reserved to a wife over and above her dower or dotal portion. It includes all the personal apparel and ornaments of the wife which she possesses, and which are suitable to her rank and condition of life. At law, before the Married Women's Property Act (see title MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY), the husband, in his lifetime, may dispose of his wife's paraphernalia; excepting, indeed, her necessary apparel; and they were liable to the claims of the husband's creditors, with the like exception. But the wife was entituled to her paraphernalia against his representatives; for the husband could not, by will, dispose of them, or leave them to his representatives. Where the husband, either before or after marriage, gave to his wife articles in the nature of paraphernalia, they were not treated as absolute gifts to her as her own separate property; for if they were, she might dispose of them at any time, and he could not appropriate them to his own use. But they were deemed gifts sub modo only, i.e., for the purpose of being worn by the wife as ornaments of her person. But if the like articles were bestowed upon her by her father, or by a relative, or even by a stranger, before or after marriage, they would be deemed absolute gifts to her separate use; and then, if received with the husband's consent, he could not, nor could his creditors, dispose of them, any more than they could of any other property received and held to her separate use.—2 Story's Eq. Jurisp. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Parasceve, the sixth day of the last week in Lent, particularly called Good Friday. It is a dies non juridicus.

Parasitus, a domestic servant.—Blount.

Parasynexis, a conventicle, or unlawful meeting.—Civ. Law.

Paratitla, an abbreviated explanation of some titles or books of the Code or Digest.—Civ. Law. See PANDECTÆ.

Paravail [fr. par, Fr., and avayler, to dismiss], the lowest tenant of a fee; or he who is immediate tenant to one who holds of another.

Paracella terræ (a parcel of land).

Parcel, the legal term for a part.

Parcel makers, two officers in the Exchequer who formerly made the parcels of the escheators' accounts, wherein they charged them with everything they had levied for the sovereign's use within the time of their being in office, and delivered the same to the auditors, to make up their accounts therewith.—Prac. Exch.

Parcels, a description of property, formally set forth in a conveyance, together with the boundaries thereof, in order to its easy identification.

Parcels, Bill of, an account of the items composing a parcel or package of goods, transmitted with them to the purchaser.

Parcenary, the tenure of lands by parceners.

Parceners. See COPARCENARY.

Parchment, skins of sheep dressed for writing [fr. pergamena, Lat.], so called because invented at Pergamus, in Asia Minor, by King Eumenes, when paper, which was in Egypt only, was prohibited by Ptolemy to be transported into Asia. It is used for deeds; and was used for writs of summons previously to November 1, 1875. (See Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. V., r. 5.)

Parco fracto, a writ against him who violently broke a pound, and took away beasts lawfully impounded.—Reg. Orig. 166.

Pardon, forgiveness of a crime; remission of punishment.

The pardoning of criminals is the peculiar prerogative of the Sovereign. See 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 466—477.

The Queen may pardon all offences merely against the Crown and the public, excepting: (1) That to preserve the liberty of the subject, the committing any man to prison out of the realm is, by the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. II. c. 2, made a premunire, unpardonable even by the Crown; nor (2) can the Queen pardon where private justice is principally concerned in the prosecution of offenders 'non potest rex gratiam facere cum injuriâ et damno aliorum.' Therefore she cannot pardon a common nuisance while it remains unredressed, or so as to prevent an abatement of it; though afterwards she may remit the fine. Neither can the Queen pardon an offence against a popular or penal statute after information brought; for thereby the informer has acquired a private property in his part of the penalty. But the 22 Vict. c. 32, enables the Crown to remit penalties for offences, although payable to parties other than the Crown. See also 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 109, and c. 97, s. 67. By 12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2, no pardon under the Great Seal of England is pleadable to an impeachment by the Commons in Parliament. But after the impeachment has been solemnly heard and determined, the prerogative of pardon may be extended to the person impeached.

As to the manner of pardoning, it is enacted by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 13, that where the King's majesty shall be pleased to extend his royal mercy to any offender convicted of any felony punishable with death or otherwise, and by warrant under his royal sign-manual, countersigned by a secretary of state, shall grant to such offender either a free or a conditional pardon, the discharge of such offender out of custody, in the case of a free pardon, and the performance of the condition in the case of a conditional pardon, shall have the effect of a pardon under the Great Seal for such offender as to the felony for which such pardon shall be granted.

By 9 Geo. IV. c. 32, s. 3 (reciting that it is expedient to prevent all doubts respecting the civil rights of persons convicted of felonies not capital, who have undergone the punishment to which they were adjudged), where any offender shall be convicted of any felony not punishable with death, and shall endure the punishment adjudged, the punishment shall have the like consequences as a pardon under the Great Seal, as to the felony whereof the offender was so convicted.

Whenever the Queen has been deceived, the pardon is void. A pardon of all felonies will not pardon a conviction or attainder of felony, but the conviction or attainder must be particularly mentioned; and a pardon of felonies will not include piracy, for that is no felony punishable at the common law. A pardon is taken most beneficially for the subject, and most strongly against the sovereign. A pardon may also be conditional, that is, the Queen may extend her mercy upon what terms she pleases, and annex a condition either precedent or subsequent, on the performance whereof the validity of the pardon will depend, and this by the common law; which prerogative was at one time frequently exercised in the pardon of felons, on condition of being confined to hard labour or of transportation to a foreign country.

A pardon by Act of Parliament is more beneficial than by the Queen's charter; for a man is not bound to plead it, but the court must take notice of it; neither can he lose the benefit of it by his own laches or negligence, as he may of the Queen's charter of pardon. The Queen's charter of pardon must be pleaded specially, and at a proper time. It may be pleaded in bar as at once destroying the end and purpose of the indictment, by remitting the punishment to which the offender is liable. Pleading a pardon in bar or in arrest of judgment before sentence (instead of after sentence or attainder), by stopping the judgment, used to stop the attainder, and prevent the corruption of blood which followed in certain cases on conviction, and which could not afterwards be purged except by act of parliament. Now, since the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, 'no confession, verdict, inquest, conviction, or judgment of or for any treason or felony, or felo de se, shall cause any attainder or corruption of blood or any forfeiture or escheat.' But that act does not affect the law of forfeiture consequent upon outlawry. The 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 13, gives the judges of the court power to bind over the criminal pleading pardon to his good behaviour.

The effect of a pardon is to make the offender a new man (novus homo), to acquit him of all corporal penalties and annexed to the offence pardoned, and not so much to restore his former as to give him new credit and capacity. Nevertheless the judgment remains formally unreversed, and therefore it was proposed by Attorney-General Sir F. Pollock, that when the Crown pardons any adjudged guilty on the ground that the evidence rightly viewed does not warrant the judgment, the prisoner should assign and the Attorney-General should confess error on the record, whereby the judgment would be reversed, and there would remain no record of guilt, which the Crown thinks not proved. This would have been a fiction, for defects in the substance of the evidence do not appear on the record. The former practice continues. A pardon of treason or felony, even after conviction or attainder, will enable a person to maintain an action of slander for calling him a traitor or felon. A pardon, prior to conviction, will prevent any forfeiture either of lands or goods, though on the other hand, it will not, without express words of restitution, divest either the Crown or a subject of any interest already vested in either by force of an attainder or conviction precedent. See CORRUPTION OF BLOOD, and APPROVER.

Pardon, in the canon law, extends beyond the affairs of this world, being an indulgence which the pope grants to supposed penitents for remission, out of the treasury of saints, of the pains of purgatory, which they have merited for the punishment of their sins.

Pardoners, persons who carried about the pope's indulgences, and sold them to any who would buy them.

Parens est nomen generale ad omne genus cognationis. Co. Litt. 80.—(Parent is a name general for every kind of relationship).

Parens Patriæ, the sovereign, as parens patriæ, has a kind of guardianship over various classes of persons, who, from their legal disability, stand in need of protection, such as infants, idiots, and lunatics.

Parent and Child, an universal and natural relationship, derived from the bond of husband and wife.

The duties of parents consist in three particulars—the maintenance of their children, their protection, and their education.

Slight circumstances will raise the presumption of a contract on the part of a father to pay for the necessities provided to his infant child. The poor laws compel maintenance; for the father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, or children of poor persons not able to work, shall maintain them at their own charges, if of sufficient ability, according as the quarter sessions or two justices in petty sessions shall direct; and if a parent run away from his children, the churchwardens and overseers of the parish shall seize his rents, goods, and chattels, and dispose of them towards their relief. See POOR LAWS, 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 110; and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 87.

No person is bound to provide a maintenance for his issue, unless where the children are impotent and unable to work, either through infancy, disease, or accident; and then is only obliged to find them with necessities. Our law has made no provision to prevent the disinheriting of children. As to education, see EDUCATION.

A father is, generally speaking, guardian to his infant children; but this right ceases, in some instances and for some purposes, at fourteen. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 56, whosoever by force or fraud shall take or entice away or detain any child under the age of fourteen, with intent either to deprive its parent or any other person having lawful charge of it, of the possession thereof, or to steal any article about its person, shall be guilty of felony, etc.

A father may correct his infant child in a reasonable manner; for this is for the benefit of his education. His consent to the marriage of his child, if under age, is also required.—4 Geo. IV. c. 76; 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 85.

As to property, where the child has any real estate, his father, in the capacity of guardian, has generally the charge of it, and may receive the rents and profits during the minority of the child, subject to the liability to account for them on the child's attaining full age.

The mother has no legal power over the child in the father's lifetime, except that by 36 Vict. c. 12 (repealing the 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, which enabled the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls to make an order giving a mother, in certain cases, the custody of her child being within the age of 7 years), the Chancery Division may, upon petition by the next friend of the mother of any infant or infants under 16 years of age, order that the mother shall have access to such infant or infants, or that they shall be delivered to or remain in the custody of the mother until sixteen years of age (s. 1). No agreement in a separation deed is to be invalid only because it provides for giving up the custody or control of infants to the mother; but such agreement is not to be enforced unless it be for the benefit of the infant (s. 2). See INFANT. After the father's death, the mother is entitled to the custody of her child, and if she is unmarried, her consent to the marriage of an infant child is necessary (see MARRIAGE); but she cannot appoint a guardian by will (see GUARDIAN). The Divorce Court has power to make such orders as it may think fit with regard to the custody, maintenance, and education of the children of the parties to suits for judicial separation, nullity of marriage, or dissolution of marriage.—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 35; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, s. 4.

Parentela, or de parentela se tollere, signified a renunciation of one's kindred and family. This was, according to ancient custom, done in open court, before the judge, and in the presence of twelve men, who made oath that they believed it was done for a just cause. We read of it in the laws of Henry I. After such abjuration, the person was incapable of inheriting anything from any of his relations, etc.—Encyc. Lond.

Parentthesis, part of a sentence occurring in the middle thereof, and enclosed between marks like (), the omission of which part would not injure the grammatical construction of the rest of the sentence.

Parenticide [fr. parens, Lat., a father, and cædo, to kill], one who murders a parent.

Parergon, one work executed in the intervals of another; a subordinate task. 2. The name of a work on the Canons, in great repute, by Ayliffe.

Pares, a person's peers or equals; as the jury for trial of causes, who were originally the vassals or tenants of the lord, being the equals or peers of the parties litigant; and, as the lord's vassals judged each other in the lord's courts, so the sovereign's vassals, or the lords themselves, judged each other in the sovereign's courts.—3 Bl. Com. 349.

Paria copulantur paribus. Bacon.—(Like things unite with like.)

Pariah, Pariah, an outcast of the Hindoo tribes.—Indian.

Paribus sententiis reus absolvitur. 4 Inst. 64.—(Where the opinions are equal, a defendant is acquitted.)

Par in parem imperium non habet. Jenk. Cent. 174.—(An equal has no power over an equal.)

Paripassu [Lat.] (by the same gradation), equally, without preference.

Parish [fr. parochia, low Lat.; paroisse, Fr., fr. παροικία, Gk., habitation], the particular charge of a secular priest. It is that circuit of ground which is committed to the care of one parson or vicar, or other minister having permanent cure of souls therein.—As to the origin of parishes, see 2 Hallam's Mid. Ages, c. vii., pt. 1, p. 144.

Parish Apprentices, persons who are bound out by the overseers of parishes, or by the guardians of the poor. The children of poor persons may be apprenticed out by the overseers, with consent of two justices, and by the guardians without such consent, till twenty-one years of age, to such persons as are thought fitting; who are no longer, however, compellable to take them.—7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 13; and see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 11, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 141—145; and see Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii. 230; iii. 54, n.

Parish Boundaries. See 1 Vict. c. 69, s. 2; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62, ss. 34—6; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15, s. 28; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, ss. 39—45; and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 83, ss. 1, 9. See also 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 278; and as to the better arrangement of divided parishes, see 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61.

Parish-clerk. This office is of extreme antiquity; next in dignity to the clergy, says Leland. He is generally appointed by the incumbent, but by custom may be chosen by the inhabitants; his appointment may be by word of mouth only; and his remuneration depends altogether upon the custom of the particular parish.—58 Geo. III. c. 45; 59 Geo. III. c. 134; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104. He may be suspended or removed by the arch-deacon for misconduct or neglect.—7 & 8 Vict. c. 59. The Company of Parish Clerks is the most ancient in the City of London; yet they stand at the bottom of the list, and have neither livery nor the privilege of making their members free of the city. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 700.

Parish Constables. See CONSTABLES, and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 92, by which provision is made for their abolition.

Parishes (New) Acts, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94; and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104; and see 28 & 29 Vict. c. 42, and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 117, s. 2.

Parish officers, churchwardens, overseers, and constables.

Parish priest, the parson; a minister who holds a parish as a benefice. If the predial tithes are appropriated, he is called rector; if impropriated, vicar.

Parish registers. See BILLS OF MORTALITY.

Parishioner, one that belongs to a parish. Parishioners are a body politic for many purposes; as to vote at a vestry if they pay scot and lot; and they have a sole right to raise taxes for their own relief, without the interposition of any superior court. They may make bye-laws to mend the highway, and to make banks to keep out the sea, and for repairing the church, and making a bridge, etc., or any such thing for the public good.—Encyc. Lond.

Paritor [fr. apparitor, Lat.], a beadle; a summoner to the courts of civil law.

Parium eadem est ratio, idem jus.—(Of things equal, the reason is the same, and the same is the law.)

Park [fr. parcus, Lat., from parco, to spare], a place of privilege for wild beasts of venery, and other wild beasts of the forest and chase; who are to have a firm place and protection there, so that no man may hurt or chase them without license of the owner. A park differs from a forest, in that, as Compton observes, a subject may hold a park by prescription or royal grant. It differs from a chase because a park must be enclosed; if it lie open, it is a good cause of seizing it into the sovereign's hands, as a free chase may be if it lie enclosed. To a park three things are required—1st, a grant thereof; 2nd, enclosure by pale, wall, or hedge; 3rd, beasts of a park, such as buck, doe, etc.—Cro. Car. 59.

As to the management of the royal parks, see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 42, and 'The Parks Regulation Act, 1872,' 35 & 36 Vict. c. 15; as to Victoria Park, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 46, and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 53; as to Battersea Park, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 77; and as to Kennington Park, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 29. As to Ireland, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 28, and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 6.

By 34 Vict. c. 13, proceeding on the preamble that it is expedient to facilitate gifts of land for the purpose of forming public parks, schools, and museums, it is provided that all gifts and assurances of land of any tenure, and whether made by deed, or by will or codicil, for such purposes, and all bequests of personal estate to be applied in or towards the purchase of land for such purposes, shall be valid, notwithstanding the Statutes of Mortmain. But see restrictions contained in ss. 5 and 6 of the act.

Parke-bote (to be quit of enclosing a park or any part thereof).—4 Inst. 308.

Parker, a park-keeper.

Parkhurst Prison, established in the Isle of Wight for the confinement and correction of young offenders, male or female, as well those under sentence of penal servitude as those under sentence of imprisonment. See PENTONVILLE PRISON.

Parliament, the Imperial, the Legislature of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, consisting of the Queen, the lords spiritual and temporal, and the knights, citizens, and burgesses.

The word is generally considered to be derived fr. the French parler, to speak. 'It was first applied,' says Blackstone, 'to general assemblies of the state, under Louis VII., in France, about the middle of the twelfth century.' The earliest mention of it in the statutes is in the preamble to the Statute of Westminster 1st, A.D. 1272.

The origin of any ancient institution must be difficult to trace, when, in the course of time, it has undergone great changes; and few subjects have afforded to antiquaries more cause for learned research and ingenious conjecture than the growth of our Parliament into the form which it had assumed when authentic records of its existence and constitution are to be found. Great councils of the nation existed in England both under the Saxons and Normans, and appear to have been common among all the nations of the north of Europe. They were called by the Saxons michel-synoth, or great council; michel-gemote, or great meeting; and wittena-gemote, meeting of wise men, by the last of which they are now most familiarly known. There appear to have been wittena-gemotes in each of the kingdoms composing the Saxon Heptarchy, and these, after the union of the kingdoms, became united into one great assembly or council.

The constitution of these councils cannot be known with any certainty, and there has been much controversy on the subject, and especially as to the share of authority enjoyed by the people.

The late Mr. Sharon Turner says, that 'after many years' consideration of the question, he is inclined to believe that the Anglo-Saxon wittena-gemote very much resembled our present Parliament in the orders and persons that composed it, and that the members who attended as representatives were chosen by classes analogous to those who now possess the elective franchise.'—History of the Anglo-Saxons, vol. iii., p. 180. As there are no records which can be held as conclusive upon this point of history, we must be satisfied with conjecture, and the liberal character of the other Saxon institutions inclines us to infer that whether there was representation or not, the commonalty had a share in the government.

From the haughty character of the Norman barons, Mr. Turner infers the improbability of an elective Parliament having been instituted since the Conquest. Here, again, no positive evidence is supplied by our records. The laws and charters of the early Norman kings constantly mention councils of bishops, abbots, barons, and the chief persons of the kingdom, but are silent as to the commons.

In the 22nd year of Henry II., A.D. 1176, Benedict Abbas, one of our monkish annalists, relates that, about the feast of St. Paul, the king came to Northampton, and there held a great council concerning the statutes of his realm, in the presence of bishops, earls, and barons of his dominions, and with the advice of his knights and men. This is the first record which appears to include the commons in the national councils.

Forty years afterwards, the Great Charter of King John throws a light upon the constitution of Parliament, which no earlier record had done: but even there the origin of a representative system is left in obscurity. It reserves to the city of London, and to all other cities, boroughs, and towns, and to the Cinque Ports, and other ports, all their ancient liberties and free customs; but whether the summons to Parliament, which is there promised, was then first instituted, or whether it was an ancient privilege confirmed and guaranteed for the future, the words of the charter do not sufficiently explain. From this time, however, may be clearly traced the existence of a Parliament similar to that which has continued to our own days. 'The main constitution of Parliament, as it now stands,' says Blackstone, 'was marked out so long ago as the seventeenth year of King John, A.D. 1215, in the Great Charter granted by that prince, wherein he promises to summon all archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and greater barons, personally, and all other tenants-in-chief under the Crown, by the sheriffs and bailiffs, to meet at a certain place, with forty days' notice, to assess aids and scutages when necessary; and this constitution has subsisted, in fact, at least from the year 1266 (49 Hen. III.), there being still extant writs of that date to summon knights, citizens, and burgesses to Parliament.' There are writs of an earlier date than that mentioned by Blackstone, in the 49 Hen. III., which involve the principle of representation, though not to the same extent. One, in the 38th year of that reign, requires the sheriff of each county to cause to come before the king's council two good and discreet knights of his county, whom the men of the county shall have chosen for this purpose, in the stead of all and each of them, to consider, along with the knights of other counties, what aid they will grant the king.—2 Prynne's Register, p. 23. This, however, was for a particular occasion only; and to appear before the council is not to vote as an estate of the realm. Nevertheless, representation of some kind there existed; and it is interesting to observe how early the people had a share in granting subsidies. Another writ, in 1261, directs the sheriffs to cause knights to repair from each county to the king at Windsor. It only remains to notice a statute passed 15 Edw. II., 1322, which declares that 'the matters to be established for the estate of the king, and of his heirs, and for the estate of the realm, and of the people, should be treated, accorded, and established in Parliament by the king, and by the assent of the prelates, earls, and barons, and the commonalty of the realm, according as had been before accustomed.' In reference to this statute, Mr. Hallam observes 'that it not only establishes, by a legislative declaration, the present constitution of Parliament, but recognises it as already standing upon a custom of some length of time.'—1 Const. Hist. p. 5 ; and see 3 Hallam's Mid. Ages, c. viii. pt. 3, p. 4.

The authority of Parliament extends over the United Kingdom, and all its colonies and foreign possessions. There are no other limits to its power of making laws for the whole empire than those which are common to it, and to all other sovereign authorities, the willingness of the people to obey, or their power to resist them. It has power to alter the constitution of the country ; for that is the constitution which the last act of Parliament has made. It can take away life by acts of attainder, and make an alien to be as a natural-born subject. See now ATTAINDER and ALIEN.

Parliament does not, in the ordinary course, legislate directly from the colonies. For some, the Queen in Council legislates, and others have legislatures of their own, and propound laws for their internal government, subject to the approval of the Queen in Council, but these may afterwards be repealed or amended by statutes of the Imperial Parliament.

The very prayers and services of the church are prescribed by statute. Parliament has changed the professed religion of the country, and has altered the hereditary succession to the throne. To conclude, in the words of Sir Edward Coke, the power of Parliament 'is so transcendent and absolute that it cannot be confined, either for causes or persons, within any bounds.'

It is by the act of the Sovereign alone that Parliament can be assembled.

There have been only two instances in which the lords and commons have met of their own authority, namely, previously to the restoration of King Charles II., and at the Revolution in 1688.

There is one contingency upon which the Parliament may meet without summons under the authority of an act of parliament. It was provided by the 7 Anne c. 7, that 'in case there should be no parliament in being at the time of the demise of the Crown, then the last preceding Parliament should immediately convene and sit at Westminster, as if the said Parliament had never been dissolved.' By the 37 Geo. III. c. 127, a Parliament so revived would only continue in existence for six months, if not sooner dissolved. But now by the Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 51, it is provided that the parliament in being at any future demise of the Crown shall not be determined or dissolved by such demise, but shall continue so long as it would have continued but for such demise, unless it should be sooner prorogued or dissolved by the Crown.

By the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 81, s. 2, it is provided that Parliament may be summoned by a royal proclamation in manner provided by the acts therein recited (37 Geo. III. c. 127 ; 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 14) to meet on any day not less than six days from the day of the date of such proclamation.

As the Sovereign appoints the time and place of meeting, so also at the commencement of every session she declares to both houses the cause of summons by a speech delivered to them in the House of Lords by herself in person, or by commissioners appointed by her. Until she has done this, neither house can proceed with any business, except the election of a speaker by the House of Commons and the swearing of the members ; the form of oath was settled by the 29 & 30 Vict. c. 19 ; but that form has now been superseded by the form of Oath of Allegiance prescribed by the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 72 (see s. 8).

After the speech any other business may be commenced, and the Commons, in order to assert their right to act without reference to any authority but their own, invariably read a bill a first time pro forma before they take the speech into consideration. See BILL.

Parliament can only commence its deliberations at the time appointed by the Sovereign, neither can it continue them any longer than she pleases. She may prorogue Parliament by having her command signified in her presence by the Lord Chancellor or speaker of the House of Lords to both houses, or by writ under the Great Seal, or by commission. The effect of a prorogation is at once to suspend all business until Parliament may be summoned again. Not only are the sittings of Parliament at an end, but all proceedings pending at the time, except impeachments by the Commons, are quashed.

Adjournment is solely in the power of each house respectively.

The Sovereign may also put an end to the existence of Parliament by a dissolution. She is not, however, entirely free to define the duration of a parliament, for after seven years it ceases to exist under the statute of George I., commonly known as the Septennial Act. Parliament is usually dissolved by proclamation after having been prorogued to a certain day.

The judicial functions of the Lords and their right to pass bills affecting the peerage, which the Commons may not amend, are the only properties peculiar to them apart from their personal rights and privileges.

The chief powers vested in the House of Commons are those of imposing taxes and voting money for the public service. Bills for these purposes can only originate in that house, and the Lords may not make any alterations in them, except for the correction of clerical errors.

The power of administering oaths is exercised by the Lords and Commons. See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 78, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 3. And as to the Court of Referees, see 30 & 31 Vict. c. 136, s. 1.

Both Houses of Parliament possess various rights and privileges for the maintenance of their collective authority, and for the protection, convenience, and dignity of individual members. The power of commitment for contempt has always been exercised by both houses. The House of Lords, in addition to the power of commitment, may impose fines. Freedom of speech is one of the privileges claimed by the Speaker on behalf of the Commons; but it has long since been confirmed as the right of both Houses of Parliament by statutes. As also the privilege of causing the votes, proceedings, papers, etc., and the reports of any committee of either house to be published without responsibility to the law of libel on the part of the publisher or of any other person (3 & 4 Vict. c. 9); but should a member publish his speech, he is viewed as an author only; and if it contain libellous matter, he will not be protected by the privilege of Parliament.

The persons of members are free from arrest or imprisonment in civil actions, but their property is as liable to the legal claims of all other persons as that of any private individual. Their servants do not enjoy any privilege or immunity whatever.

The privilege of freedom from arrest has always been subject to the exception of cases of 'treason, felony, and surety of the peace.' Peers are always free from arrest; and as regards the Commons, their privilege is generally held to exist for forty days after every prorogation, and forty days before the next appointed meeting. See now IMPRISONMENT.

Each House of Parliament is acknowledged to be the judge of its own privileges.

In the House of Lords, business may proceed, however small may be the number of peers present; but forty members are required to assist in the deliberations of the Lower House.

When any question arises upon which a difference of opinion is expressed, it becomes necessary to ascertain the numbers on each side. In the Lords, the parties in favour of the question are called 'content,' and those opposed to it 'non-content.' In the Commons, those parties are described as the 'ayes' and 'noes.' When the Speaker cannot decide by the voices which party has the majority, or when his decision is disputed, a division takes place.

In addition to the power of expressing dissent by a vote, peers may record their opinion, and the grounds of it, by a protest, which is entered in the journals, together with the names of all the peers who concur in it.

When matters of great interest are to be debated in the Upper House, the Lords are summoned; and in the House of Commons an order is occasionally made that the house be called over, and members not attending when their names are called are reported as defaulters, and ordered to attend on another day, when if they are still absent, and no excuse be offered, an order is sometimes made for their commitment to the custody of the serjeant-at-arms.

See May's Parliamentary Practice, and Chitty's Statutes, vol. iv., tit. 'Parliament,' and the titles HOUSE OF LORDS, HOUSE OF COMMONS, IMPEACHMENT, ACTS OF PARLIAMENT, PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE, BALLOT.

Parliamentary agents, persons professionally employed in the promotion of or opposition to private bills, and otherwise in relation to private business in Parliament. A solicitor may act as a parliamentary agent. As to the delivery, taxation, and recovery of their costs, see 10 & 11 Vict. c. 69, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 78.

The Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 125), s. 57, provides that any person who at the time of the passing of that act was entitled to practise as agent, according to the principles, practice, or rules of the House of Commons, in cases of election petitions, and matters relating to the election of members of the House of Commons, shall be entitled to practise as an attorney or agent in cases of election petitions and all matters relating to elections, before the court and judges prescribed by this act: provided that every such person so practising as aforesaid shall, in respect of such practice, and everything relating thereto, be subject to the jurisdiction and orders of the court, as if he were an attorney of the said court, and further provided that no such person shall practise as aforesaid until his name shall have been entered in a roll to be made and kept, and which is thereby authorized to be made and kept, by the prescribed officer in the prescribed manner.

Parliamentary committee, a committee of members of the House of Peers, or of the House of Commons, appointed by either house for the purpose of making inquiries, by the examination of witnesses or otherwise, into matters which could not be conveniently inquired into by the whole house. Not only any bill, but any subject that is brought under the consideration of either house, may, if the house thinks proper, be referred to a committee; and when the inquiry is ended, the committee, through their chairman, make a report to the house of the result. All private bills, such as bills for railways, canals, roads, or other undertakings, in which the public is concerned, are referred to committees of each house before they are sanctioned by that house. Their reports are not absolutely binding upon the house. Great weight is always attached to them, and the house seldom reverses their decision upon such matters. See REFEREES. As to the power of such committees to administer oaths to witnesses, see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 78, and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 3.

Parliamentary grants for education. See 7 & 8 Vict. c. 37; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 131; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 116; and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, ss. 96—99.

Parliamentum indoctum (the unlearned parliament). The parliament of 6 Hen. IV., into which no lawyer was admitted as a knight of the shire.

Paroche, a parish.

Parochia est locus quo degit populus alicujus ecclesie. 5 Co. 67.—(A parish is a place in which the population of a certain church resides.)

Parochia, a parish.

Parochial, belonging to a parish. See POOR LAWS.

Parochial Assessment Act, 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 96, whereby poor-rates are made on the net annual value of the rateable property, etc.

Parochial chapels, places of public worship in which the rites of sacrament and sepulture are performed. See CHURCH BUILDING COMMISSIONERS ACTS.

Parochian, a parishioner.

Parol, or Parole [fr. parole, Fr.], by word of mouth; but the expression is also made use of to denote writings not under seal.

The pleadings in an action were, when they were given viva voce in court, frequently termed the parol.

As to parol leases, assignments, contracts, etc., see 29 Car. II. c. 3, commonly called 'The Statute of Frauds,' and title FRAUDS.

Parol agreements, such as are either by word of mouth or are committed to writing, but are not under seal. The common law draws only one great line between things under seal and not under seal. See Leake on Contracts, ch. iv.

Parol arrest, any justice of the peace may, by word of mouth, authorise any one to arrest another who is guilty of a breach of the peace in his presence.

Parol demurrer, abolished by 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 74, s. 10.

Parol evidence, testimony by the mouth of a witness. It is a general rule that oral evidence cannot be substituted for a written instrument, where the latter is required by law, or to give effect to a written instrument, defective in any particular essential to its validity; nor contradict, alter, or vary a written instrument, required by law, or agreed upon by the parties, as the authentic memorial of the facts which it recites. But parol evidence is admissible to defeat a written instrument on the ground of fraud, mistake, etc., or to apply it to its proper subject, or, in some instances, as ancillary to such application to explain the meaning of doubtful terms, or to rebut presumptions arising extrinsically. In these cases the parol evidence does not usurp the place of written evidence, but either shows that the instrument ought not to be allowed to operate at all, or is essential in order to give to the instrument its legal effect.—3 Stark. Evid. 752. The general rule with regard to the admission of parol evidence to explain the meaning of, or to add to, vary, or alter the express terms of deed, is, that it shall not be admitted, except: (1) where, although the deed is clearly enough expressed, some ambiguity arises from extrinsic circumstances; (2) where the language of a charter or deed has become obscure from antiquity; (3) where the grant is uncertain owing to a want of acquaintance with the grantor's estate; (4) where it is important to show a different consideration consistent with, and not repugnant to, that stated in the deed itself; (5) where it becomes necessary to show a different time of delivery from that at which the deed purports to have been made; (6) where it is sought to prove a customary right not expressed in the deed, but not inconsistent with any of its stipulations; or, lastly, where fraud or illegality in the formation of the deed is relied on to avoid it. If a clause in a deed be so ambiguously or defectively expressed that a court of justice cannot, even by reference to the context, collect the meaning of the parties, it would be void on account of uncertainty. Consult Taylor on Evidence.

Parol lease, a verbal lease. See 29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 2.

Parole, the promise made by a prisoner of war, when he has leave to go anywhere, of returning at a time appointed, or not to take up arms till exchanged.

Parricide, same as patricide, q. v. Our laws, unlike the ancient laws, distinguish in no respect between parricide, killing a husband, wife, or master, and simple murder.

Parson [fr. persona, Lat., because the parson omnium personam in ecclesia sustinet; or from parochianus, the parish-priest.—Johnson. It was anciently written persone.—Todd], the rector or incumbent of a parish; one that has a parochial charge or cure of souls.

A parson has the freehold in himself of the parsonage-house, the glebe, the tithes, and other dues; but these are sometimes appropriated. The benefice is perpetually annexed to some spiritual corporation, either sole or aggregate, being the patron of the living, which the law esteems equally capable of providing for the service of the church as any clergyman. Many appropriations, however, are now in the hands of lay persons, who are usually styled, by way of distinction, lay impropiators. In all appropriations there is generally a spiritual person attached to the church, under the name of vicar, to whom the spiritual duty or cure of souls belongs, in the same manner as to the rector in parsonages not appropriate, or rectories, and to whom a portion of the tithes, etc., is assigned.

The method of becoming a parson or a vicar is much the same. There are four requisites: holy orders, presentation, institution, and induction. A parson or vicar may cease to be so by death, by cession, or by taking another benefice, by consecration to a bishopric, by resignation, or by deprivation.—3 Steph. Com.

Parsonage, the benefice of a parish. 2. The parson's house. As to borrowing money for building, rebuilding, or repairing a parsonage, see 'Gilbert Act,' 17 Geo. III. c. 53.

Parson imparsonee [fr. persona impersonata, Lat.], a clerk in complete and full possession of a spiritual benefice.

Parson mortal [fr. persona mortalis, Lat.], a rector instituted and inducted for his own life. But any collegiate or conventional body, to whom a church was for ever appropriated, was termed persona immortalis.

Pars pro toto, the name of a part used to represent the whole; as the roof for the house, ten spears for ten armed men, etc.

Pars rationabilis, the ancient division of a man's goods into three equal parts, of which one went to his heirs or lineal descendants, another to his wife, and the third was at his own disposal; or if he died without a wife, he might then dispose of one moiety, and the other went to his children, and so è converso; but if he died without either wife or issue, the whole was at his own disposal. The shares of the wife and children were called their reasonable parts; and the writ de rationabili parte bonorum was given to recover them. This law has been altered by imperceptible degrees, and any person may by will bequeath all his property as he pleases.

Partem aliquam recte intelligere nemo potest, antequam totum, iterum atque iterum, perlegerit. 3 Co. 52.—(No one can rightly understand any part until he has read the whole again and again.)

Partes finis nihil habuerunt, etc. (the parties to the fine had nothing, etc.), an exception taken against a fine levied.—3 Rep. 88.

Partial insanity, mental unsoundness always existing, although only occasionally manifest; in fact, monomania.—Dew v. Clark, 3 Addams, 79; Waring v. Waring, 6 Moore P. C. 341; and Smith v. Tibbett, L. R. 1 P. & M. 398.

Partial loss. See ABANDONMENT.

Particeps criminis, or fraudis (a partner in crime, or fraud).

Participes plures sunt quasi unum corpus in eo quod unum jus habent, et oportet quod corpus sit integrum, et quod in nulla parte sit defectus. Co. Litt. 4.—(Many partners are as one body, inasmuch as they have one right, and it is necessary that the body be perfect, and that there be a defect in no part.

Particula, a small piece of land.

Particular estate, that interest which is granted or carved out of a larger estate, which then becomes an expectancy either in reversion or remainder. See 3 Prest. Conv. 169.

Particular Average. Every kind of expense or damage, short of a total loss, which regards a particular concern, and which is to be borne by the proprietors of that concern alone. (Stevens and Benecke on Average, by Phillips, 341.) A loss borne wholly by the party upon whose property it takes place.—2 Phillips on Insurance, s. 1422 et seq. See L. R. 1 C. P. 535, and 2 C. P. 357.

Particular lien, a right of retaining possession of a chattel from the owner, until a certain claim upon it be satisfied. See LIEN.

Particular tenants, Alienation by, when they conveyed by a feoffment, fine, or recovery, a greater estate than the law entitled them to make, a forfeiture ensued to the person in immediate remainder or reversion. As if a tenant for his own life aliened by feoffment for the life of another or in tail or in fee, these being estates which either must or may last longer than his own, his creating them was not only beyond his power, and inconsistent with the nature of his interest, but was also a forfeiture of his own particular estate to him in remainder or reversion, who was entitled to enter immediately.

The same law which is thus laid down with regard to tenants for life held also with respect to all tenants of mere chattel-interests.

This forfeiture differed materially from forfeiture by breach of condition in deed, for in that case the reversioner is in as of his former seisin, and consequently not only the estate of the tenant himself, but all interests derived out of it (even though derived before the forfeiture) were defeated; but in case of such forfeiture by particular tenants, all legal estates by them created (as if tenant for twenty years grant a lease for fifteen), and all charges by him lawfully made on the lands, would have been good and available in law. But fines and recoveries having been abolished and a feoffment having no longer a tortious operation (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 4), a tenant, by creating a larger interest than he has in the property, does not incur a forfeiture, for such a creation is now void as to the excess, and good for his own interest.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 463.

Particulars: the courts have a general jurisdiction, independently of statute, to order a detailed statement of the demand in any litigation, or of any defence, to be given that surprise may be avoided, and substantial justice promoted.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac. The necessity for applications for particulars will now be less frequent, as the Judicature Acts have substituted a statement of claim for the declaration of the old practice, which only contained a legal statement of the plaintiff's cause of action.

Particulars of breaches. Where an ejectment was brought for a forfeiture, the court, or a judge upon application, were used to order the plaintiff to give the defendant particulars of the covenants and breaches, etc., on which he meant to insist that the defendant had forfeited his term, and that he should not be allowed to give evidence at the trial of anything not contained in such particulars.—C. L. P. Act (1852), s. 175; 2 Chit. Arch. Prac. Under the Judicature Acts, the plaintiff must now deliver a statement of claim as in ordinary actions. See STATEMENT OF CLAIM and EJECTMENT.

Particulars of breaches of Patent. These are provided for by the statute as to patents, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 41.

Particulars of payment. A defendant was not in general compellable to give particulars of his payment under the plea.—Phipps v. Sothorn, 8 Dowl. 208. See 2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Particulars of premises, etc. A defendant, if there was any reasonable doubt as to the lands, etc., for which an ejectment was brought, might take out a summons before a judge, and obtain an order requiring the plaintiff to give him a bill of particulars. The court or a judge might also order the defendant to give a particular of the premises for which he defended.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Particulars of residence. Where a plaintiff was not known to a defendant, the latter might call for particulars of his profession, etc., and of his place of abode from the opposite attorney, and if he refused to give it, he was guilty of contempt, and the Court or a judge might stay proceedings.—C. L. P. Act (1852), ss. 7 and 169. See now INDORSEMENT OF ADDRESS.

Particulars of set-off. Where a defendant pleaded a set-off, the plaintiff might obtain particulars of the set-off in the same cases as a defendant would be entitled to it, if the matter so set-off were declared upon; and if the defendant in such a case did not deliver the particulars within the time limited in the judge's order for that purpose, he would not be allowed to give evidence of his set-off at the trial.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac. The defendant in an action must now deliver a statement of his set-off (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 2).

Particulars of the plaintiff's demand. These were required, and the delivery of them by the plaintiff with the declaration regulated by Rules 19—21 of R. H. T. 1853.

Where the declaration contained special counts, it may be laid down as a general rule, that in all actions in which the plaintiff did not specify in the declaration the particulars of his cause of action, a judge, upon summons, would make an order upon him to give the defendant the particulars in writing, and that all proceedings be stayed in the meanwhile.

In actions for torts, it was not usual to allow particulars of demand, which in most cases were comprised in the declaration. But they were sometimes ordered on an affidavit that the defendant did not know for what the plaintiff was proceeding.

See now, since the Judicature Acts, the titles, INDORSEMENT OF CLAIM, STATEMENT OF CLAIM, and PARTICULARS.

Particulars of sale. See CONDITIONS OF SALE.

Parties, persons jointly concerned in any act; litigants.

The Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XVI., has made very full provisions as to the joinder of parties and the consequences of misjoinder and nonjoinder. All persons may be joined as plaintiffs in whom the right to any relief claimed is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally, or in the alternative. Where two or more defendants may be joined, in case the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to redress (r. 6), trustees, executors, and administrators may sue and be sued on behalf of or as representing the property or estate of which they are trustees or representatives, without joining any of the parties beneficially interested in the trust or estate. Where there are numerous parties having the same interest in one action, one or more of such parties may sue or be sued, or may be authorized by the Court to defend in such action, on behalf or for the benefit of all parties so interested (r. 9). 'No action shall be defeated by reason of the mis-joinder of parties, and the Court may in every action deal with the matter in controversy, so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it. The Court or a judge may, at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the Court or a judge to be just, order that the name or names of any party or parties, whether as plaintiffs or as defendants, improperly joined, be struck out, and that the name or names of any party or parties, whether plaintiffs or defendants, who ought to have been joined, or whose presence before the Court may be necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the action, be added.' (r. 13).

The same Order, Rules 17—19, allows the introduction of 'third parties' in cases where the defendant claims any remedy over against any other person.

If a person not a party to the action served under these Rules appears pursuant to the notice, the party giving the notice may apply to the Court or a judge for directions as to the mode of having the question in the action determined: and the Court or judge, upon the hearing of such application, may, if it shall appear desirable so to do, give the person so served liberty to defend the action upon such terms as shall seem just, and may direct such pleadings to be delivered, or such amendments in any pleadings to be made, and generally may direct such proceedings to be taken, and give such directions as to the Court or a judge shall appear proper for having the question most conveniently determined; and as to the mode and extent in or to which the person so served shall be bound or made liable by the decision of the question (r. 21).

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 100, the word 'party' shall include every person served with notice of, or attending any proceeding, although not named on the record.

As to change of parties by death, etc., see ABATEMENT, and Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. L.

The order in which the parties to a conveyance are set out is as follows: (1) The owner of the legal inheritance; (2) Persons having equitable or beneficial interests in the inheritance; (3) Persons possessed of chattel interests; (4) The grantee or releasee; (5) Trustees for the grantee or releasee.

In criminal cases the parties are the prosecutor and the prisoner or defendant.

Parties to a cause, civil or criminal, have a right to be present, in any case, throughout the trial. See WITNESSES.

Partition, the act of dividing.

Partition, Bill for a, a proceeding in Chancery which resembled the action communi dividendo of the civil law.

Since the abolition of the inadequate writ of partition at common law, by the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, s. 36, equity has enjoyed the exclusive jurisdiction of dividing the estates of joint tenants, tenants in common and coparceners, which is effected by first ascertaining the rights of the several persons interested, and then issuing a commission, which is an equitable process to make the partition required; and upon the return of the commissioners, and confirmation of that return by the court, the partition is finally completed by mutual conveyances of the allotments made to the several parties. Where the object is the partition of an advowson it is done by the decree (without a commission), directing alternate presentations. Equity is now empowered by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 85, to decree a partition of copyholds. Where one of the parties interested is an infant, the court will now order such infant to execute the necessary deeds instead of waiting till his majority.—Cole v. Sewell, 17 Sim. 40 (1849).

With a view to the more convenient and perfect partition or allotment of the premises, equity frequently decrees a pecuniary compensation to one of the parties for owelty or equality of partition, so as to prevent any injustice or unavoidable inequality, as where one party has laid out large sums in improvements on the estate.

On a partition, not every part of the estate need be divided. If there be three houses, it would not be right to divide every house, as that would be to spoil them; but some recompense is to be made, either by a sum of money or rent for owelty of petition, to those that have the houses of least value.

The commissioners are not limited as to time in executing the commission; the proceedings under it are open, and may take place in, or within twenty miles of, London, all parties having a right to be present, as the commissioners, act in a judicial capacity. They proceed without a jury. It is not usual to give any costs of a petition until the commission; but the costs of issuing and executing it, and of confirming the return of the commissioners, are borne by the parties in proportion to the value of their respective interests, no costs of the subsequent proceedings being given. See Dan Ch. Pr., 5th ed., 1019 et seq.; and see next title.

By the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 40, it is provided (s. 3) that in a suit for petition where, if this act had not been passed, a decree for partition might have been made, then if it appear to the court that, by reason of the nature of the property to which the suit relates, or of the number of the parties interested or presumptively interested therein, or of the absence or disability of some of these parties, or of any other circumstance, a sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds would be more beneficial for the parties interested than a division of the property between or among them, the court may, if it thinks fit, on the request of any of the parties interested, and notwithstanding the dissent or disability of any other of them, direct a sale of the property accordingly, and may give all necessary or proper consequential directions.

The partition and sale of real estates is one of the matters assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34).

Partition, Deed of, a primary or original conveyance. When an estate is held in community by joint tenants, tenants in common, coparceners, or joint heirs in gavelkind, and they are desirous of dividing it into distinct portions, to be exclusively enjoyed by each, and are not under legal disability, they can accomplish this object by this deed. Sometimes, instead of agreeing as to their several allotments, a reference is made to a person by them to divide the estate into the required portions, and a good plan of effecting this division is to convey the whole estate to the proposed referee upon trust to convey the several allotments to the respective parties according to his award. A partition of any tenements or hereditaments, not being copyhold, is void at law, unless made by deed (8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3), and it is no longer to imply any condition in law (Ibid., s. 4), so that a declaration negating implied mutual warranty is now unnecessary.

There are two methods of carrying out a partition; one is by separate conveyances of the several allotments, when every party has the custody of his own title-deed; the other is by including the several allotments in one conveyance executed in several parts, one for each party. And this is the better method of the two, since it obviates the necessity of covenants to produce the respective conveyances.

A partition of copyholds should be by surrender and admittance, and thus the lord's consent is had.

It is frequently expedient, from the difficulties and intricacy of settlements, to effect a partition of property by a private act of parliament, which operates as a conveyance, and binds persons under disability. The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, s. 90, enacts that the appointed valuer upon the written request of any person interested in land to be inclosed in undivided shares, or as a joint tenant, coparcener, or tenant in common, is to make partition of, and allot the same in severalty to the persons interested, who are to hold the allotments, subject to the same uses as if the partition had not been made. Such valuer is also to apportion the costs and expenses (s. 91).

In Kent, where the land is of gavelkind tenure, they call these partitions shifting, from the Saxon, shiftan, to divide.

Partition, Writ of, abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, s. 36.

Partner, partaker, sharer; one who has part in anything; associate. See next title.

Partnership is the result of a contract whereby two or more persons agree to combine property or labour, or both, for the purpose of a common undertaking and the acquisition of a common profit.—Smith's Merc. Law.

Every person except a married woman can at common law contract a partnership. Married women at common law are legally incapable of this contract, and although they are frequently entitled to shares in banking-houses and other mercantile concerns, their husbands in their stead become partners in the concern. But see now the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, noticed fully under title HUSBAND AND WIFE. An infant partner is entitled to all the benefits, although not liable for the losses of the partnership, if he avail himself of his minority; but if, on attaining majority, he do not disaffirm the partnership, he is responsible on contracts subsequently made by the firm.

Partnerships are either public or private.

Public partnerships are usually denominated companies or societies. They consist of a large number, definite or indefinite, of persons who have joined together to carry on some undertaking. Some of them are incorporated by letters-patent or by act of parliament or under the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1862 and 1867 ; while others are unincorporated, and are, in fact, ordinary partnerships. They usually, however, divide their capital into shares, each partner holding one or more of them up to a certain restricted number, transferable under certain regulations ; the business is intrusted to officers, generally under the superintendence of directors, elected from the general body, for whose acts the whole company is responsible. As to companies established with limited liability under the ' Joint-Stock Companies Acts,' see JOINT-STOCK COMPANY.

The Queen can charter a society, or public company, for the advantage of trade, but not for a total restraint thereof. A royal charter is necessary to enable a company to hold lands, to have a common seal, and to enjoy the other privileges of a corporation. Trading companies sometimes obtain acts of parliament which confer exclusive privileges not grantable, according to the principles of the common law, by the Queen's charter. A charter is sometimes procured to limit the risk of the partners, for when societies are incorporated, the members are liable to the extent of their shares only, but when unincorporated, their liability is unlimited.

Public incorporated trading companies are not regulated by the same legal principles as ordinary partnerships. Thus, the members, as such, are not, as a general rule, subject to the bankrupt laws ; nor are they liable in their individual capacities ; nor for the debts or engagements of other members ; in short, they are only liable in respect of the trade and contracts carried on and made in the corporate character, to the extent of their respective shares or interests in the joint stock.

Private partnerships are contracted by the mere consent of the parties, no charter or license being necessary. Consent may be expressly testified by articles of copartnership, or positive agreement ; or it may be implied from the acts and conduct of the parties, which is equally effective. Persons having a mutual interest in the profits of any business carried on by them, or appearing ostensibly as joint traders, may be treated as partners by the world, whatever may be the nature of the agreement under which they act, or whatever motive or inducement may have prompted them so to act. But as to money lent to be employed in trade, on the terms of the lender receiving a share of the profits in payment of interest or otherwise, see 28 & 29 Vict. c. 36, by which such an agreement is allowed, on certain conditions, without constituting the lender a partner.

It is so essentially necessary that the parties exercise their choice freely and voluntarily, that the joint donees, or joint legatees, of one and the same thing, or those chancing, through other causes, to hold something undivided between them to be possessed in common, without any mutual agreement, cannot be treated as partners, for they hold not by force of their own free election ; nor can the executors and representatives of deceased partners, in their representative characters, be deemed partners ; a community of interest, however, exists between them and the surviving partners, until the affairs of the concern are wound up. And one partner cannot introduce a stranger into the concern as a partner without the consent of the rest, although he has a right to charge his own undivided interest to any extent he pleases in favour of such stranger.

A partnership may be limited to a particular transaction or branch of business, without comprehending all the adventures in which any one partner may embark. And where this limitation is distinctly defined, and in the absence of any power, expressed or implied, enabling a part of the firm to bind the whole to the responsibility of any new project, it is not competent for any number of the firm, short of the whole partnership, to embark it in any undertaking not contemplated by the original contract. Each partner has a right to hold his copartners to the specified purposes of their union whilst the partnership continues, and not to rest upon indemnities with respect to what he has not contracted to engage in, and he cannot be compelled to part with his shares, although he might sell them for double what he originally gave for them : his principal reason for keeping them may be that the partnership concern should be carried on according to the contract. The original contract, and the loss which his partners would suffer by a dissolution, is his security that it shall be so carried on for him and them, beneficially, and with augmented improvement, in the value of his and their shares.

Partners, upon entering into partnership, usually execute articles of agreement by the terms and stipulations of which the concern is regulated, and the rights, duties, and obligations of the partners, inter se, are defined ; and such terms, etc., cannot be impeached unless they contravene any rule or principle of law. In the absence of any express agreement, the partnership is regulated by the contract implied by law from the relation of the parties. And where a partnership is constituted by the mere act of trading jointly, each person so trading, although liable to creditors for the whole amount of the losses, is only responsible, inter se, for his own proportion of them, and each will be considered, as to the profits, as equally interested, unless the contrary appear.

Partners are ordinarily divided as follows :

- (1) ostensible partners; (2) nominal partners;
- (3) dormant partners; which see.

Except in an action of account, which has practically become obsolete, it is a general rule that between partners (whether they are so in general, or for a particular transaction only) no account can be taken at law, nor can one partner sue another at law unless the cause of action is so distinct from the partnership accounts as not to involve their consideration.—2 Lindley on Partnership.

A dissolution of a partnership may take place,

(1) By the act, or agreement, or consent of the parties, including all cases where the partnership is merely at will, or is for a prescribed period, which expires by efflux of time or otherwise, according to its own limitation, or is voluntarily dissolved by mutual consent within the prescribed or limited period;

(2) By the decree of a court which may be made on account of—

(a) Causes arising subsequently to the formation of the contract, founded upon the alleged misconduct, or fraud, or violation of duty of one partner; or of—

(b) Causes arising subsequently to the formation of the contract, where no blame, laches, or impropriety of conduct necessarily attaches to any of the partners, as ill health, sudden incapacity, insanity.

(3) By mere operation of law; as—

(a) By the change of the state or condition of one or more of the partners.

(b) By the transfer of the property of one or more of the partners by his or their own act or by the act of the law.

(c) By the bankruptcy and insolvency of one or more of the partners.

(d) By a public war between the countries of which the partners are respectively subjects.

(e) By the death of one or more of the partners. Consult Lindley on Partnership; Smith's Merc. Law. See JOINT-STOCK COMPANIES.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34, the dissolution of partnerships or the taking of partnership or other accounts is assigned to the Chancery Division.

By the Partnership Act, 1865 (Bovill's Act), 28 & 29 Vict. c. 86, it is provided that the advance of money on contract to receive a share of profit shall not constitute the lender a partner (s. 1); that the remuneration of agents or servants by share of profits shall not make them partners (s. 2); that no person being a widow or child of a deceased partner of a trader, and receiving by way of annuity a portion of the profits made by such trader in his business, shall, by reason only of such receipt, be deemed to be a partner of such trader (s. 3); that no person receiving by way of annuity or otherwise, a portion of the profits of any business, in consideration of the sale by him of the goodwill of such business, shall, by reason only of such receipt, be deemed to be a partner of the person carrying on such business (s. 4); and that in the event of any such trader as aforesaid being adjudged a bankrupt, or entering into an arrangement to pay his creditors less than 20s. in the pound, or dying in insolvent circumstances, the lender of any such loan as aforesaid shall not be entitled to recover any portion of his principal, or of the profits or interest payable in respect of such loan, nor shall any such vendor of a goodwill as aforesaid be entitled to recover any such profits as aforesaid, until the claims of the other creditors of the said trader for valuable consideration in money or money's worth have been satisfied (s. 5).

By the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, a member of a copartnership guilty of stealing or embezzling partnership property, may be tried, convicted, and punished, as if he were not a partner.

Partners may now sue in the name of their firm, subject to a right in other parties to obtain the names of the partners (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. VII., r. 2, and Ord. XVI., r. 10). See too DISCLOSURE. As to service of writ where partners are sued in the partnership name, see Ord. IX., r. 6.

As to appearance by partners, see Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XII., r. 12, and APPEARANCE.

Where a judgment is against partners in the name of their firm, execution may issue in manner following:—(a) Against any property of the partners as such; (b) Against any person who has admitted on the pleadings that he is, or has been adjudged to be a partner; (c) Against any person who has been served, as a partner, with the writ of summons, and has failed to appear, and a party who has obtained a judgment may get leave to issue execution against any person alleged to belong to the firm against which the judgment stands, and an issue may be directed to try such person's liability (Ord.

XIII. r. 8).

Partnership property. It makes no difference whether partnership property, held for the purposes of a trade or business, consists of personal or moveable property, or of real or immoveable property, or of both, so far as the ultimate rights and interests of the partners are concerned. It is true, that at law, real or immoveable property is deemed to belong to the person in whose name the title by conveyance stands. If it is in the name of a stranger, or of one partner only, he is deemed the sole owner at law; if it is in the names of all the partners, or of several strangers, they are deemed joint-tenants, or tenants in common, according to the true interpretation of the terms of the conveyance. But however the title may stand at law, or in whose name or names soever it may be, the real estate of the partnership will in equity be treated as belonging to the partnership, and disposable and distributable in like manner as its personal property, and the parties in whose names it stands as owners of the legal title will be held to be trustees for the partnership, and accountable accordingly to the partners, according to their several shares, rights, and interests in the partnership as cestuis que trust or beneficiaries of the same. Hence, in equity, in case of the death of one partner, there is no survivorship in the real estate of the partnership, but his share will go to his representatives.—Collyer on Partnership, 82.

Part-owners, or Quasi-partners [quasi associés, Lat., Fr.], joint-owners, or tenants in common, who have a distinct, or at least an independent, although an undivided interest in the property. Neither of them can transfer or dispose of the whole property, or act for the others as partners can in relation thereto; each can merely deal with his own share, and to the extent of his own several right and interest.

Part-owners of ships are tenants in common, holding distinct and undivided interest, and each is deemed the agent of the others, as to the ordinary repairs, employment, and business of the ship, in the absence of any known dissent. A majority in interest of the owners can employ the ship, although the minority may dissent, and they may appoint a master, and the dissenting minority will be bound, unless those dealing with the master have had notice of their dissent, or they have protected themselves by proper proceedings in the Court of Admiralty.—Story's Agency, 37. For indorsements of claims by part-owners of ships, see Jud. Act, 1875, App. A., II., VI.

Partridge, a fowl of warren. See GAME.

Parturition. See DELIVERY. Digitized by Microfilm

Partus ex legitimo thoro non certius noscitur matrem quam genitorem suum. Fortescue, 42.—(The offspring of a legitimate bed knows not his mother more certainly than his father.)

Partus sequitur ventrem. 2 Bl. Com. 390.—(The offspring follows the dam.) This maxim applies to the status of the issue of a female slave by a free father in countries where slavery is recognised.

Party-wall, a wall that separates one house from another.

The common use of a wall separating adjoining lands belonging to different owners is prima facie evidence that the wall and the land on which it stands belong to the owners of those adjoining lands, in equal moieties, as tenants in common. If a house or office be separated from other premises by a wall, and that wall belongs to the owner of the house or office, he is of common right bound to repair it; and an action will lie against him for not doing it. As to the repair of party structures and the rights of building and adjoining owner under the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855, see Part III. of that Act.

Parum differunt quæ re concordant. 2 Bulst. 86.—(Things which agree in substance differ but little.)

Parum est latam esse sententiam nisi mandetur executioni. Co. Litt. 289.—(It is not enough that sentence be given unless it be ordered into execution.)

Parvise, an afternoon's exercise or moot for the instruction of young students—bearing the same name originally with the Parvisæ (little-go) of Oxford.—Selden's Notes on Fortescue, c. li.

Pas (French), precedence; right of going foremost.

Pasch [fr. pasahh, Heb.], the passover.

Pascha clausum, the octave of Easter, or Low-Sunday, which closes that solemnity.

Pascha floridum, the Sunday before Easter, called Palm-Sunday.

Pascha rents, yearly tributes paid by the clergy to the bishop or archdeacon at their Easter visitations.

Pascua, a particular meadow or pasture land set apart to feed cattle.

Pascuage, the grazing or pasturage of cattle.

Pasnage, or Pathnage in woods, etc. See PANNAGE.

Passage, properly a way over water.

Passagio, an ancient writ addressed to the keepers of the ports to permit a man who had the king's leave to pass over sea.—Reg. Orig., 193.

Passagium regis, a voyage or expedition to the Holy Land made by the Kings of England in person.—Cowel.

Passator, he who has the interest or command of the passage of a river ; or a lord to whom a duty is paid for passage.

Passengers, persons conveyed for hire from one place to another. Passenger-ships are those peculiarly appropriated to the conveyance of passengers. In some respects, passengers by ship may be considered as a portion of the crew. They may be called on by the master or commander of the ship, in case of imminent danger, either from tempest or enemies, to lend their assistance for the general safety ; and in the event of their declining, may be punished for disobedience. This principle has been recognised in several cases ; but as the authority arises out of the necessity of the case, it must be exercised strictly within the limits of that necessity.—Boyce v. Bayliffe, 1 Camp. 58.

A passenger is not, however, bound to remain on board a ship in the hour of danger, but may quit it if he have an opportunity ; and he is not required to take upon himself any responsibility as to the conduct of the ship ; if he incur any responsibility, and perform extraordinary services, in relieving a vessel in distress, he is entitled to a corresponding reward. The goods of passengers contribute to general average.—Abbot on Shipping, 3, c. x.

Passengers Acts, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 119 ; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 84 ; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 51 ; 33 & 34 Vict. c. 95 ; and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 73. These acts regulate the inspection of passenger ships, the provisions and boats which they are to carry, etc., and are especially directed to the control of emigrant ships.

Passenger-ship. For definition of, see 26 & 27 Vict. c. 51, s. 3, and see preceding title.

Passiagiarius, a ferry-man.—Jacob.

Passing-ticket, a kind of permit, being a note or check which the toll-clerks on some canals give to the boatmen, specifying the lading for which they have paid toll.

Passive debt, a debt upon which, by or without agreement between the debtor and creditor, no interest is payable, as distinguished from active debt, i.e., a debt upon which interest is payable. In this sense, the terms active and passive were long applied to certain debts due from the Spanish Government.

Passive trust, a trust as to which the trustee has no active duty to perform. Passive uses were resorted to before the Statute of Uses, in order to escape from the trammels and hardships of the common law, the permanent division of property into legal and equitable interests being clearly an invention to lessen the force of some pre-existing law. For similar reasons, equitable interests were after the statute revived under the form of trusts. As such, they continued to flourish, notwithstanding the singular amelioration effected at a later period in the law of tenure, because the legal ownership was attended with some peculiar inconveniences. For, in order to guard against the forfeiture of a legal estate for life, passive trusts, by settlement, were resorted to, and hence, trusts to preserve contingent remainders ; and passive trusts were and are created in order to prevent dower.

Where an active trust was created, without defining the quantity of the estate to be taken by the trustee, the courts endeavoured to give by construction the quantity originally requisite to satisfy the trust in every event, but if a larger estate was expressly given, the courts could not reject the excess ; and, although the estate taken, whether expressly or constructively, might not have exceeded the original scope of the trust, yet, if eventually no estate, or a less estate, were actually wanted, the legal ownership remained wholly or partially vested in the trustee as a merely passive trustee.—1 Hayes' Conv. 103.

Passive use, a permissive use, which see.

Passport, a license for the safe passage of any one from one place to another, or from one country to another. The duty on passports was reduced from 5s. to 6d. by 21 Vict. c. 24. The same rate is continued by the Stamp Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 97).

Pastitium, pasture land.—Domesday.

Pastor [Lat., a shepherd], applied to a minister of the Christian religion, who has charge of a congregation, hence called his flock.

Pasture, land on which cattle feed.

It is of two sorts ; the one is low meadow-land, which is often overflowed, and the other is upland, which lies high and dry. See COMMON.

Pastus, the procuration or provision which tenants were bound to make for their lords at certain times, or as often as they made a progress to their lands. It was often converted into money.

Patent ambiguity, a doubt apparent upon the face of an instrument. See AMBIGUITY.

Patent Letters. See LETTERS-PATENT.

Patent-right, the exclusive privilege granted by the Crown to the first inventor of a new manufacture of making articles according to his invention. See LETTERS-PATENT.

Patent-rolls, registers in which letters-patent are recorded.

Patentee, one who has a patent. The offices of patentee and deputy patentee of the Subpoena office are abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 27.

Pater est quem nuptie demonstrant. Co.

Litt. 123.—(He is the father whom the nuptials indicate.)

Paterfamilias, one who was sui juris and the head of a family.—Civ. Law; Sand. Just., 5th ed., 26.

Paternity. It becomes a question, when a widow marries immediately after the death of her husband, and she is delivered of a child at the expiration of ten months from the death of the first husband, as to the paternity of the child. Blackstone and Coke say, that if a man die, and his widow soon after marry again, and a child is born within such a time as that by the course of nature it might have been the child of either husband, in this case he is said to be more than ordinarily legitimate, for he may, when he arrives at years of discretion, choose which of the fathers he pleases. But Hargrave suggests, that the circumstances of the case, instead of the choice of the issue, should determine who is the father. The Romans forbade a woman to marry until after the expiration of ten months from her husband's decease, which term was prolonged to twelve by Gratian and Valentinian. The French code has adopted the same rule, viz., after ten months. It was also established under the Saxon and Danish governments. It was the law in this country until the Conquest.—Beck's Med. Jurisp. 382.

Patibulary [fr. patibulum, Lat.], belonging to the gallows.

Patibulated, hanged on a gibbet.

Patria, the country; the men or jury of a neighbourhood.

Patria potestas, paternal power.—Civ. Law. For the extent of this great power see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 28. The modes in which the patria potestas was ended were: (1) the death of the parent; (2) the parent or son suffering loss of freedom or citizenship; (3) the son attaining certain dignities; (4) emancipation.

Patriarch, the chief bishop over several countries or provinces, as an archbishop is of several dioceses.—God. 20.

Patricide, one who has killed his father. As to the punishment of that offence by the Roman law, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 496.

Patricius, a title of the highest honour, conferred on those who enjoyed the chief place in the emperor's esteem.—Civ. Law.

Patrimony, an hereditary estate or right descended from ancestors.

Patrinus, a godfather.

Patriotic Fund Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 98).

Patritius, an honour conferred on men of the first quality in the time of the English Saxon kings.

Patron, one who has the disposition of an ecclesiastical benefice; 2, among the Romans an advocate or defender. See CLIENT.

Patronage, the right of presenting to a benefice. A disturbance of patronage is a hindrance or obstruction of a patron to present his clerk to his benefice, the remedy for which was the real action of quare impedit. But see now the C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26.

As to the abolition of patronage in Scotland see 37 & 38 Vict. c. 82.

Patronatus, patronage.

Patronum faciunt dos, edificatio, fundus. Dod. Adv. 7.—(Endowment, building, and land make a patron.)

Patruelis, a cousin-german by the father's side; the son or daughter of a father's brother.—Civ. Law.

Patruus, an uncle by the father's side, a father's brother; magnus, a grandfather's brother, grand-uncle; major, a great grandfather's brother; maximus, a great grandfather's father's brother.

Pauper. See CASUAL PAUPER; POOR-LAWS; and IN FORMA PAUPERIS; and as to education of pauper children, see EDUCATION.

Pauper Lunatic Asylums. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 110.

Pavage, money paid towards paving the streets or highways.

Paving Acts. As to Local Government Districts, see the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55); and as to the Metropolis, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61, s. 7, and c. 102, s. 73, which applies 57 Geo. III. c. xxix., 'Michael Angelo Taylor's Act.'

Pawn, or Pledge [fr. pignus, Lat.], a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt is discharged.

A mortgage of goods is in the common law distinguishable from a mere pawn. By a mortgage the whole legal title passes conditionally to the mortgagee; and if the goods be not redeemed at the stipulated time, the title becomes absolute at law although equity allows a redemption. But in a pledge, a special property only passes to the pledgee, the general property remaining in the pledgor. Also, in the case of a pledge, the right of the pledgee is not consummated, except by possession; and, ordinarily, when that possession is relinquished, the right of the pledgee is extinguished or waived. But, in the case of a mortgage of personal property, the right of property passes by the conveyance to the mortgagee, and possession is not or may not be essential to create or support the title.

As to things which may be the subject of pawn: These are, ordinarily, goods and chattels; but money, debts, negotiable instruments, choses in action, and indeed any other valuable thing of a personal nature, such as patent-rights and manuscripts, may by the common law be delivered in pledge. It is not indispensable that the pledge should belong to the pledgor; it is sufficient if it is pledged with the consent of the owner. By the pledge of a thing, not only the thing itself is pledged, but also as accessory, the natural increase thereof. If the pledgor have only a limited title to the thing, as for life or for years, he may still pawn it to the extent of his title; but when that expires, the pledgee must surrender it to the person who succeeds to the ownership. See 6 Geo. IV. c. 94, and 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, enabling factors, in certain cases, to pledge the goods of their principals.

It is of the essence of the contract that there should be an actual delivery of the thing to the pledgee: for until delivery, the whole contract is executory, however strong may be the engagement to deliver it; and the pledgee acquires no right of property in it. But there need not be an actual manual delivery, as it is sufficient if there are any of those acts or circumstances which, in construction of law, are deemed sufficient to pass the possession of property, as the key of a warehouse. As possession is necessary to complete the title, so by the common law the title determines if the pledgee lose the thing pledged or deliver it back to the pledgor unless for a temporary or special purpose.

It is of the essence of the contract that the thing should be delivered as a security for some debt or engagement. It may be delivered as security for a future debt or engagement, as well as for a past debt; for one or for many debts and engagements; upon condition or absolutely; for a limited time or for an indefinite period. It may also be implied from circumstances, as well as arise by express agreement, and it matters not what is the nature of the debt or the engagement. The pledge is understood to be a security for the whole and for every part of the debt or engagement. It is indivisible; individua est pignoris causa.

As to the pledgee or pawnee's rights and duties: The pawnee acquires, in virtue of the pawn, a special property in the thing, and is entitled to the exclusive possession of it, during the time and for the objects for which it is pledged. In regard to the expenses which have been incurred by the pledgee about the pledge, if they are necessary, then the pledgor is bound to reimburse them to the pledgee, but if they are merely useful, then he is not bound to reimburse them unless incurred by his own express or implied authority. The pledgee has a right to sell the pledge, when the pledgor fails to perform his engagement. He might have filed a bill in equity against the pledgor for a foreclosure and sale, or he may proceed to sell ex mero motu, upon giving due notice of his intention to the pledgor. If several things be pledged, each is deemed liable for the whole debt or engagement; and the pledgee may proceed to sell them from time to time, until the debt or other claim be completely discharged. The possession of the pawn does not suspend the right to sue for the whole debt or other engagement without selling the pawn, for it is only a collateral security. A pawnee cannot become the purchaser at the sale. A pledgee cannot alienate the property absolutely, nor beyond the title actually possessed by him, unless in special cases. He may deliver the pawn into the hands of a stranger for safe custody, without consideration; or he may sell or assign all his interest in the pawn, or he may convey the same interest conditionally, by way of pawn, to another person, without destroying or invalidating his security.

The following rules elucidate the principles as to the pawnee's title to use the pawn:—

(1) If the pawn is of such a nature that the due preservation of it requires some use, there such use is not only justifiable, but it is indispensable to the faithful discharge of the duty of the pawnee.

(2) If the pawn is of such a nature that it will be worse for the use, such, for instance, as clothes, the use is prohibited to the pawnee.

(3) If the pawn is of such a nature that the keeping is a charge to the pawnee, as a cow or horse, there the pawnee may milk the cow and use the milk, and ride the horse by way of recompense for the keeping.

(4) If the use will be beneficial to the pawn, or it is indifferent, there it seems that the pawnee may use it.

(5) If the use will be without any injury, and yet the pawn will thereby be exposed to extraordinary perils, there the use is impliedly interdicted.

The pawnee is liable for ordinary neglect in keeping the pawn. He must return the pledge and its increments, if any, after the debt or other duty has been discharged. He must render a due account of all the income, profits, and advantages derived by him from the pledge, in all cases where such an account is within the scope of the bailment.

As to the pledgor's rights and duties:

If the pledge is conveyed by way of mortgage, so that the legal title passes, unless the pledge is redeemed at the stipulated time, the title of the pledgee becomes absolute at the expiration of the term, and the pledgor has only an equitable right to redeem. If, however, it be a mere pledge, as the pledgor has never parted with the general title, he may, at law, redeem, notwithstanding he has not strictly complied with the condition of his contract. If, when the pledgor applies to redeem, the pledge has been sold by the pledgee without any proper notice to the former, no tender of the debt due need be made before bringing an action therefor; for the party has incapacitated himself to comply with his contract to return the pawn. Subject to the pledgee's right, the owner has a right to sell or assign his property in the pawn. As the general property of goods pawned remains in the pawnor, and the pawnee has a special property only, either may maintain an action against a stranger for any injury done to it, or for any conversion of it. Goods pawned are not liable to be taken in execution in an action against the pawnor, at least not unless the bailment is terminated by payment of the debt, or by some other extinguishment of the pawnee's title, except in case of the Crown, and then subject to the pawnee's right. By the act of pawning, the pawnor enters into an implied engagement of warranty that he is the owner of the property pawned. The pawnor is responsible for all frauds, not only in the title but in the concoction of the contract. The pawnor must reimburse to the pawnee all expenses and charges which have been necessarily incurred by the latter in the preservation of the pawn, even though by some subsequent accident these expenses and charges may not have secured any permanent benefit to the pawnor.

The contract of pledge is put an end to or extinguished :—

(1) By the full payment of the debt, or the discharge of the other engagements for which the pledge was given ;

(2) By the satisfaction of the debt in any other mode, either in fact or by operation of law; as, for instance, by receiving other goods in payment or discharge of the debt ;

(3) By taking a higher or different security for the debt, without any agreement that the pledge shall be retained therefor (this is called a novation in the Roman law) ;

(4) By extinguishing the debt, which also extinguishes the right to the pledge ;

(5) By the thing perishing ;

(6) By any act of the pledgee which amounts to a release or waiver of the pledge. —Story on Bailments, c. v. See PAWN-BROKERS' ACTS.

Pawnage, or Pannage. See PANNAGE.

Pawnbroker, one who lends money on goods which he receives upon pledge.

Pawnbrokers. The rate of interest which pawnbrokers may take has been fixed by law since 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 48, which Act placed their whole business under various other restrictions. By the Pawnbrokers' Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 93, this Act, together with a large number of amending acts, is repealed, and the statute law of the subject consolidated. Consult Turner on the Contract of Pawn, and Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Clark, 5 Ex. D. 37.

Pawnee, the person with whom a pawn is deposited. See PAWN.

Pawner, or Pawnor, the person depositing a pawn. See PAWN.

Pax regis, the king's peace—verge of the court.

Payee, one to whom a bill of exchange or promissory note or cheque is made payable : he must be named or otherwise indicated therein, with reasonable certainty. The bill, note, or cheque may be made payable to one or more payees jointly, or in the alternative to one of two or one or some of several payees, or to the holder of an office for the time being ; but where the payee is a fictitious or non-existing person, it may be treated as payable to bearer.—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 7.

Paymaster General. Under the 35 & 36 Vict. c. 44, the office of Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery has been abolished, and the duties transferred to Her Majesty's Paymaster General. Rules with respect to the Paymaster General are authorized to be made by the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 24, and see further s. 30 of that Act.

Payment. The payment of money before the day appointed is in law payment at the day; for it cannot, in presumption of law, be any prejudice to him to whom the payment is made to have his money before the time; and it appears, by the party's receipt of it, that it is for his own advantage to receive it then, otherwise he would not do it.—5 Rep. 117. See the notes to Cumber v. Wane, in 1 Smith's L. C.

Payment of money into Court. By the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 70, the defendant in all actions (except for assault and battery, false imprisonment, libel, slander, malicious arrest, or prosecution, or seduction) might pay into court a sum of money by way of compensation or amends. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, permitted money to be paid into court in actions of libel. See LIBEL. In actions against mail-coach contractors, stage-coach proprietors, or common carriers, for the loss of or injury to goods, the defendants might pay into court, as of course.—1 Wm. IV. c. 68; and so under the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, with leave of the judge or the court.—R. 7, 31st January, 1855.

In actions against justices of the peace, or officers of the excise or customs, and other persons acting in the performance of certain public functions for anything done in the execution of their offices, if they had not made a tender, or if they conceived the amends tendered to be insufficient, they might pay into court a sum of money.

By paying money into court on the whole of a claim the defendant admits the contract declared on, and all the breaches on which it is paid in, and the only question to be determined is the amount of the damages.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

It is now provided by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXX., that where any action is brought to recover a debt or damages, any defendant may at any time after service of the writ, and before or at the time of delivering his defence, or by leave of the Court or a judge at any later time, pay into Court a sum of money by way of satisfaction or amends. Money paid into Court as aforesaid may, unless otherwise ordered by a Judge, be paid out to the plaintiff, or to his solicitor on the written authority of the plaintiff. The plaintiff, if payment into Court is made before delivering a defence, may within four days after receipt of notice of such payment, or if such payment is first stated in a defence delivered, then may before reply, accept the same in satisfaction of the causes of action in respect of which it is paid in: in which case, upon notice to the defendant, he is at liberty, in case the sum paid in is accepted in satisfaction of the entire cause of action, to tax his costs, and, in case of non-payment within forty-eight hours, to sign judgment for his costs so taxed (r. 4).

Peace, a quiet behaviour towards the Queen and her subjects. It is one of the prerogatives of the Crown to make war and peace.

Peace, Bill of. This equitable remedy sought repose from perpetual and useless litigation, and protection from a multiplicity of suits, either by establishing and perpetuating a right which the plaintiff claimed and which, from its nature, might be controverted by different persons at different times and by different actions: or where separate attempts had already been unsuccessfully made to overthrow the same right, and justice required that the plaintiff should be quieted in the right if it was already, or if it should be thereafter established under the direction of the court.

This bill was usually filed where there was one general right to be established against a great number of persons; or where one person claimed or defended a right against many; or where many claimed or defended a right against one. Thus it was filed by a parson for tithes against his parishioners; by parishioners against a parson to establish a modus; by a lord of a manor against the tenants for an encroachment under colour of a common right; or by the tenants against the lord for disturbance of a common right by a party interested to establish a toll due by custom; for a right to the profits of a fair, there being several claimants; by a lord to establish an inclosure which he has approved under the Statute of Merton (20 Hen. III. A.D. 1236), and which his tenants threw down, although sufficient common of pasture was left. Another class of cases to which this bill was applicable, was where the plaintiff had, after repeated and satisfactory trials, established his right at law, and yet was in danger of further litigation and obstruction to his right from new attempts to controvert it. Under such circumstances courts of equity would interfere and grant a perpetual injunction to quiet the possession of the plaintiff, and to suppress future fruitless litigation.

This bill usually prayed special relief, as that the plaintiff might be quieted in the possession till the right was tried at law, as well as relief in the premises, or a perpetual injunction.—Sto. Eq. Jur. c. xxii.; and 1 Madd. Ch. 231; 4 Dan. Ch. Pr.

The results obtained by this bill may now be obtained by an action in the High Court of Justice.

Peace, Breach of the, a violation of that quiet, peace, and security which is guaranteed by the laws for the personal comfort of the subjects of this kingdom. An ordinary subject of the Crown must act as a peace-officer to arrest an offender if a felony is committed, or a bad wound given in his presence; and an ordinary subject may arrest another who is on the point of committing murder, and may break and enter a house to do so; and may arrest a lunatic about to do a mischief, and may arrest one against whom an indictment has been found; or may arrest one to put a stop to a breach of the peace committed in his presence. See also BREACH OF THE PEACE.

Peace, Clerk of the, an officer who acts as clerk to the court of quarter sessions, and records all their proceedings.—7 Wm. IV. c. 1 Vict. c. 83. As to the remuneration, see 57 Geo. III. c. 9; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, s. 9; and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, s. 18. As to their removal, see 27 & 28 Vict. c. 65.

Peace, Commission of the, a special commission under the Great Seal, appointing justices of the peace. It is one of the authorities, by virtue of which the judges sit upon circuit.—3 Bl. Com. 60. See ASSIZE and JUSTICES.

Peace of God and the Church [pax Dei et ecclesie, Lat.], was anciently used to signify that cessation which the king's subjects had from trouble and suit of law between the terms, and on Sundays and holidays.—Cowel.

Peace, Justices of. See JUSTICES.

Peace of the Queen [pax reginæ, Lat.], that security for life and goods which the Queen promises to all her subjects, or others taken into her protection. See PEACE, BREACH OF.

Peace Preservation (Ireland) Acts, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 9; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 25; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 24; and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 14.

Peccata contra naturam sunt gravissima. 3 Inst. 20.—(Crimes against nature are the most heinous.)

Peccatum peccato addit qui culpæ quam facit patrocinia defensionis adiungit. 5 Co. 49.—(He adds fault to fault who sets up a defence of a wrong committed by him.)

Pecia, a piece or small quantity of ground. —Paroch. Antiq. 240.

Peck, a measure of two gallons; a dry measure.

Peculatus, embezzling public money.

Peculiar, a particular parish or church that has jurisdiction within itself, and exemption from that of the ordinary. There are several sorts:—(1) Royal peculiars, which are the sovereign's free chapels, and are exempt from any jurisdiction but that of the sovereign. (2) Peculiars of the archbishops, exclusive of the bishops and archdeacons, which arose from a privilege they had to enjoy jurisdiction in such places where their seats and possessions were. (3) Peculiars of bishops, exclusive of the jurisdiction of the bishop of the diocese in which they are situate. (4) Peculiars of bishops in their own dioceses, exclusive of archidiaconal jurisdiction. (5) Peculiars of deans, deans and chapters, prebendaries, and the like, which are places wherein, by ancient compositions, the bishops have parted with their jurisdiction as ordinaries to these corporations.

Peculiars, Court of, a branch of, and annexed to the Court of Arches. It has a jurisdiction over all those parishes dispersed through the province of Canterbury in the midst of other dioceses, which are exempt from the ordinary's jurisdiction, and subject to the metropolitan only. All ecclesiastical causes arising within these peculiar or exempt jurisdictions are originally cognizable in this court, from which an appeal lies to the Court of Arches.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 306. See now 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85, and title PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT.

Peculium, the savings of a son or slave accumulated with the father or master's consent. —Civ. Law.

Pecunia [fr. pecus, Lat., cattle], properly money, but anciently cattle, and sometimes other goods as well as money.

Pecunia dicitur à pecus, omnes enim veterum divitiæ in animalibus consistebant. Co. Litt. 207.—(Money (pecunia) is so called from cattle (pecus), because all the wealth of our ancestors consisted in cattle.) So chattels (cattle) means all tangible personalty.

Pecunia sepulchralis, money anciently paid to the priest at the opening of a grave for the good of the deceased's soul. See MORTUARY.

Pecuniary causes, such as arise either from the withholding of ecclesiastical dues, or the doing or neglecting to do some act relating to the church whereby damage accrues to the plaintiff, to obtain satisfaction for which he is permitted to institute a suit in the spiritual court.

Pecuniary legacy, a testamentary gift of money.

Pedage, money given for the passing of foot or horse through any country.—Spelm.

Pedigree [fr. per and degré, Fr.—Skinner], genealogy; lineage; account of descent. Falsifying a pedigree upon which title does or may depend, is punishable under 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 24. As to the admissibility of hearsay evidence in questions of pedigree, see Taylor on Evidence, s. 571 et seq.

Pedis abscissio, cutting off a foot; a punishment anciently inflicted instead of death.—Fleta, l. 1, c. xxxviii.

Pedis possessio, an actual possession or foothold.

Pedlars, persons who carry their goods from place to place for sale. The 50 Geo. III. c. 41, imposed a license duty on them, and made various provisions in regard to their trade. See also 52 Geo. III. c. 108; 6 Geo. IV. c. 80, ss. 138—142; 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 22; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 36; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 21, ss. 4—9; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 18, s. 8, and c. 56, s. 7; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 64, ss. 11—14. By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 72, it was provided that no one should act as a pedlar without a certificate from the chief officer of police of his district, and this certificate, it was provided, should only be granted on such officer being satisfied that the applicant was a person of good character. This act is repealed and replaced by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 96 ('The Pedlars' Act, 1871'), by which power is given to extend the certificate by endorsement to other districts than that for which it was granted; an appeal is given against the refusal of a certificate by the chief officer of police. By s. 23, it is enacted that nothing in that act shall render it necessary for a certificate to be obtained by the following persons:—

(1) Commercial travellers or other persons selling or seeking orders for goods, wares, or merchandise to or from persons who are dealers therein, and who buy to sell again, or selling or seeking orders for books as agents authorized in writing by the publishers of such books; (2) sellers of vegetables, fish, fruit, or victuals; (3) persons selling, or exposing to sale, goods, wares, or merchandise in any public mart, market, or fair legally established.

Pedones, foot soldiers.

Peel's (Sir R.) Acts, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37, otherwise called 'The New Parishes Act,' amended by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, making better provision for the spiritual care of populous parishes, by the establishment of district churches therein; and 7 & 8 Geo. IV. cc. 27—29, abolishing benefit of clergy, and otherwise amending the criminal law.

Peer, an equal; one of the same rank; a member of the House of Lords.

Peerage, the dignity of the lords, or peers of the realm. In what sense one individual can hold several peerages, may be seen from Lord Fermoy's case, 5 H. L. Cases, 716.

Peeress. Women may acquire peerages by creation, descent, or marriage. The 20 Hen. VI. c. 9, declares that peeresses, either in their own right or by marriage, shall be tried before the same judicature as peers of the realm. This statute is said to be remarkable, as being the only instance of a legislative explanation of any part of Magna Charta. If a woman, noble in her own right, marry a commoner, she still remains noble, and shall be tried by her peers; but if she be only noble by marriage, then, by a second marriage with a commoner she loses her dignity: for as by marriage it is gained, so by marriage it is also lost. Yet, if a duchess-dowager marry a baron, she continues a duchess still, and so forth; for all the nobility are pares, and therefore it is no degradation. A woman, noble in her own right or by her first marriage, marrying a commoner, communicates no rank or title to her husband.—1 Inst. 326.

Peers of fees, vassals or tenants of the same lord, who were obliged to serve and attend him in his courts, being equal in function; these were termed peers of fees, because holding fees of the lord, or because their business in court was to sit and judge, under their lords, of disputes arising upon fees; but if there were too many in one lordship, the lord usually chose twelve, who had the title of peers, by way of distinction; whence, it is said, we derive our common juries and other peers.—Cowel.

Peers of the realm [proceres, Lat.], the nobility of the kingdom and lords of parliament, who are divided into dukes, marquises, earls, viscounts, and barons. They are called peers, because, although there is a distinction of dignity among them, they are equal in all public actions, as in votes of parliament, and trial of any nobleman.—Selden's Titles of Honour.

Peers are created either by writ or by patent. The claim by prescription is founded upon the presumption that an ancestor of the claimant was created a peer by writ or patent, which has been lost. The creation by writ, or the Queen's letter, is a summons to attend the House of Lords, by the style and title of that barony which the Queen is pleased to confer. That by patent is a royal grant to a subject of any dignity or degree of peerage. The creation by writ is the more ancient way, but a man is not ennobled thereby, unless he actually take his seat in the House of Lords; and some are of opinion, that there must be at least two writs of summons and a sitting in two distinct parliaments to evidence an hereditary barony; and therefore the most usual, because the surest way, is to grant the dignity by patent, which enures to a man and his descendants, according to the limitations thereof, though he never himself make use of it. The eldest son of a peer is frequently called up to the House of Lords by writ of summons, in the name of his father's barony, because in that case there is no danger of his children losing the nobility in case he never takes his seat, for they will succeed to their grandfather. In cases of treason and felony, a nobleman is tried by his peers, but in mere misdemeanours, he is tried, like a commoner, by jury. He cannot be arrested in civil cases, but he is not exempted from arrest in criminal matters. A peer loses his nobility by death or attainder.—1 Bl. Com. 227.

During bankruptcy peers are disqualified from sitting or voting in the House of Lords.—34 & 35 Vict. c. 50.

Peine forte et dure (the strong and hard pain) [peine (or penance), probably a corrupted abbreviation of prisonne.—3 Bl. Com. 325], a punishment, now happily abolished, by which a prisoner indicted for felony was compelled to put himself upon his trial. If, when arraigned, he stood mute, he was remanded to prison, and placed in a low dark chamber, and there laid on his back on the bare floor naked, unless where decency forbade; upon his body was placed as great a weight of iron as he could bear; on the first day he received no sustenance, save three morsels of the worst bread, and on the second day three draughts of standing water that should be nearest to the prison-door, and such was alternately his daily diet till he died or answered.—3 Bl. Com. 327; 2 Reeves, c. ix., 134; 4 Steph. Com.

By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 2, if a prisoner refuse to plead, the court may order a plea of 'not guilty' to be entered.

Pela, a peal, pile, or fort.—Cowel.

Peles, issues arising from or out of a thing.—Jacob.

Pelfe or Pelfre, booty; also the personal effects of a felon convict.—Cowel.

Pellage, the custom or duty paid for skins of leather.

Pelliparius, a leatherseller or skinner.—Jacob.

Pellicia, a pilch or surplice.—Spelm.

Pellota, the ball of a foot.—4 Inst. 308.

Pells, Clerk of the, an officer in the Exchequer, who entered every seller's bill on the parchment-rolls, the roll of receipts, and the roll of disbursements. Abolished.

Pelt-wool, the wool pulled off the skin or pelt of dead sheep.—8 Hen. VI. c. 22.

Pembrokeshire, originally a county palatine, but dispalatinated in the reign of Henry VIII.

Pen (Welsh), a high mountain.—Camd. Brit.

Penal laws, those laws which prohibit an act, and impose a penalty for the commission of it. They are of three kinds: pena pecuniaria, pena corporalis, and pena exilii.—2 Cro. Jac. 415.

Penal servitude, a punishment in the United Kingdom which has superseded transportation beyond the seas; but is in all respects as to hard labour, etc., similar to it. It ranges in duration from five years to the life of the convict. See 16 & 17 Vict. c. 92; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112; and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 55.

The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861, frequently authorize a minimum term of three years penal servitude, but this minimum of three years was altered to five by the Penal Servitude Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, s. 2. A minimum term of seven years in case of a previous conviction was fixed by the same section, but that part of it was repealed by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 55, s. 1. See TRANSPORTATION.

Penal statutes, those which impose penalties or punishments for an offence committed. As to the Crown's power of remitting these penalties, see 22 Vict. c. 32. See next title.

Penal statutes, Actions on. The penalties or forfeitures under these statutes are generally made recoverable by the Crown, or the party aggrieved, or a common informer, as the case may be. See 7 Hen. VIII. c. 3; 31 Eliz. c. 3; 18 Eliz. c. 5; 21 Jac. I. c. 4; and 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 3. And see 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 434, 479.

This remedy is generally designated a penal action; or where one part of the forfeiture is given to the Crown and the other part to the informer, a popular or qui tam action.

Penalty, where a certain gross sum of money is reserved on an agreement to be paid in case of the non-performance of such agreement, it is generally to be considered as a penalty, the legal operation of which is, not to create a forfeiture of that entire sum, but only to cover the actual damages occasioned by the breach of contract. Wherever the payment of a small sum is secured by the payment of a much larger sum, it must be considered as a penalty, and calling a sum liquidated damages will not change its character as a penalty, if upon the true construction of the instrument it must be deemed to be a penalty.

A general principle adopted in equity is, that wherever a penalty is inserted merely to secure the performance or enjoyment of a collateral object; the latter is considered as the principal intent of the instrument, and the penalty is deemed only as accessory; and, therefore, as intended only to secure the due performance thereof, or the damage really incurred by the non-performance. In every such case, the true test by which to ascertain whether relief can or cannot be had in equity is to consider whether compensation can be made or not. If it cannot be made then the courts of equity will not interfere; if it can be made, then, if the penalty is to secure the mere payment of money, courts of equity will relieve the party upon paying the principal and interest. If it was to secure the performance of some collateral act or undertaking, then courts of equity used to retain the bill, and direct an issue quantum damnificatus, and when the amount of damages was ascertained by a jury upon the trial of such an issue, they granted relief upon the payment of such damages. But see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27. They will not interfere in cases of liquidated damages, but will deem the parties entitled to fix their own measure of damages.

Equity will decree to the obligee of a bond interest beyond the penalty, wherever the obligor has unreasonably deprived him of his power to enforce it, until it is no longer adequate to secure his rights.—2 Story's Eq. Jurisp. 497. See LIQUIDATED DAMAGES. See further EQUITY.

The 22 Vict. c. 32 enables the Crown to remit penalties although payable to parties other than the Crown. As to small penalties, see 28 & 29 Vict. c. 127.

Penance [fr. penitentia, Lat.], an ecclesiastical punishment used in the discipline of the primitive church, which affected the body of the penitent, by which he was obliged to give a public satisfaction to the church for the scandal he had given by his evil example. See Godolph. Repert. Canon. App. 18.

Pendente lite (during litigation).

Administration pendente lite is sometimes granted when an action is commenced in the Probate Court touching the validity of a will.

An injunction will be granted to restrain a party from making vexatious alienations of real property pendente lite.

Pendente lite, Alimony. See ALIMONY.

Pendente lite nihil innovetur. Co. Litt. 344.—(During a litigation nothing new should be introduced.)

Pendentes, ungathered fruits.—Civ. Law.

Penerarius, an ensign-bearer.—Cowel.

Penitentiary-houses, prisons where criminals are confined to hard labour.—19 Geo. III. c. 74. See GAOL.

Pennon, a standard, banner, or ensign carried in war.

Penny Postage Act. See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96.

Pennyweight, twenty-four grains.

Pensam, the full weight of twenty ounces.

Pension, an annual allowance made to any one, usually in consideration of past services.

By 6 Anne c. 7, and 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 56, no person having a pension under the Crown during pleasure, or for any term of years, is capable of being elected or sitting in the House of Commons.

As to the assignment and payment of pensions, see 47 Geo. III. sess. 2, c. 25; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 51; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 73, ss. 4, 5. And as to the commutation of pensions, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 32; and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 36; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 83; and see further SUPER-ANNUATION ACTS.

Taking a pension from any foreign prince, without the consent of the Crown, is an offence against the government, and punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Pension of churches, certain sums of money paid to clergymen in lieu of tithes. A spiritual person may sue in the spiritual court for a pension originally granted and confirmed by the ordinary; but where it is granted by a temporal person to a clerk, he cannot; as if one grant an annuity to a parson, he must sue for it in the temporal courts.—Cro. Eliz. 675.

Pension of the Inns of Court, an annual payment made by each member to the houses. Also, that which in the two Temples is called a parliament, and in Lincoln's Inn a council, is, in Gray's Inn, termed a pension, being an assembly of the benchers, to consult upon the affairs of the society. See INNS OF COURT.

Pensioner, one who is supported by an allowance at the will of another; a dependant; he who receives an annuity from government without filling any office.

2. A band of gentlemen who attend as a guard on the royal person. It was instituted A.D. 1539; each gentleman has an allowance of 150*l.* per annum, and two horses. This band is now called the Honourable Body of Gentlemen-at-Arms.

3. A member of a college at Cambridge who is not on the foundation.

Pension-writ, a process formerly issued against a member of an Inn of Court, when he was in arrear for pensions, commons, or other duties, etc.—Cowel.

Pentecostals, pious oblations made at the feast of Pentecost by parishioners to their priests; and sometimes by inferior churches or parishes to the principal mother churches. They are also called Whitsun-farthings.

Pentonville Prison, a place provided for the confinement of male convicts under sentence of penal servitude, until otherwise disposed of. It is under 'The Directors of Convict Prisons,' who appoint officers, consisting of a governor, chaplain, medical officer, and others. They make annual reports to the Secretary of State as to the prison discipline and management, to be laid before parliament.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 29; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 39; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, s. 6; and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 3.

Peon, a footman, a soldier, an inferior officer, a servant employed in the business of the revenue, police, or judicature.—Indian.

People [peuple, Fr.; populo, It.; pueblo, Sp.; fr. populus, Lat.]; the many, the multitude, the inhabitants of a nation, state, town, etc.; the commonalty or common folk, as distinguished from the higher classes; men; individuals.—Richard. Dict.

Per and Post. To come in the per is to claim by or through the person last entitled to an estate, as the heirs or assigns of the grantee: to come in in the post is to claim by a paramount and prior title, as the lord by escheat.

Perambulation, a travelling through or over.

Perambulation of parishes is to be made by the minister, churchwardens, and parishioners, by going round them once a-year, in or about Ascension week; and the parishioners may well justify going over any man's land in their perambulation, according to usage, and it is said may abate all nuisances in their way.—Cro. Eliz. 441. Manors are also perambulated.—Wheat. Com. Pr. 234.

Perambulatione faciendâ, a writ which lay where any encroachments have been made by a neighbouring lord, etc., to the sheriff to perambulate or settle the bounds. Equity grants commissions to perambulate.

Actions upon writs of perambulation were authorized in Scotland, by the Act 1597, c. 79, to settle the bounds of disputed properties adjoining each other.

Perangaria. See ANGARIA.

Perca, a perch of land, 16½ feet. SEE PERCH.

Per capita (by number of individuals), opposed to per stirpes, by the number of families; if a man die and leave all his goods 'among my grandsons,' having nine grandsons, one of whom was an only son, and the other eight brethren; then if the division be per stirpes, the only son shall take half the goods as representing one of his grandsire's two children; if the division be per capita, he shall take a ninth part only as being one of nine grandsons.

Percaptura, a place in a river properly banked for the better preserving and taking of fish.—Par. Ant. 120.

Perch, a measure of land, consisting of five yards and a half of the standard measure.

Per, Cui, and Post, writs of entry, now abolished.

Perdings, men of no substance.—Leg. Hen. I. c. 29.

Perdonatio utlagariæ, a pardon for a man who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of a court, is outlawed, and afterwards of his own accord surrenders.—Reg. Orig. 28.

Perduellio, treason.—Civ. Law.

Peregrini, foreigners commorant or sojourning in Rome.—Civ. Law.

Peremption, a nonsuit, also a quashing or killing. SEE NONSUIT.

Peremptory [fr. perimo, Lat., to cut off], final and determinate.

Peremptory challenge, an arbitrary species of challenge to a certain number of jurors without showing any cause.

This privilege is granted to a prisoner in criminal cases, but denied to the Crown by 6 Geo. IV. c. 50. In treason a prisoner can challenge without cause thirty-five jurors, and in felony twenty. See also 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28, s. 3. See 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 422.

Peremptory day, a precise time when certain business by rule of court ought to be spoken to; but if it cannot be spoken to then, the court, at the prayer of the party concerned, will give a further day without prejudice to him.

Peremptory mandamus, a second mandamus, which issues where the return which has been made to the first writ is found either insufficient in law or false in fact. To this writ no other return will be admitted, but a certificate of perfect obedience and due execution. See MANDAMUS; and 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 632.

Peremptory order for time to plead. A further time to plead is after such an order usually refused. But see 1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 250.

Peremptory paper, a court paper containing a list of all motions, etc., which are to be disposed of before any other business.

Peremptory pleas, or pleas in bar, those which were founded on some matter tending to impeach the right of action.

Peremptory Rule. Formerly a defendant might obtain a peremptory rule to declare within a certain time, absolute in the first instance. This was abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 53, and a four-day notice substituted. See now PLEADING, STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Peremptory undertaking. The court will, in some cases, set aside a judgment for not proceeding to trial, upon payment of costs, and a peremptory undertaking to try at the next sittings or assizes, especially where the plaintiff had been delayed on account of his witnesses, or the like.—2 Ch. Arch. Pr.

Peremptory writ, a class of original writs.

Per eundem is commonly used to express, 'by, or from the mouth of, the same judge.'

Per eundem, in eadem [subaudi, 'causâ'], by the same judge, in the same case.

Perfect trust, an executed trust. SEE EXECUTED TRUST.

Perfectum est cui nihil deest secundum suæ perfectionis vel naturæ modum. Hob. 151.—(That is perfect which wants nothing, according to the measure of its perfection or nature.)

Periculum rei venditæ, nondum traditæ, est emptoris.—(The risk of a thing sold, and not yet delivered, is the purchaser's.)

Perils of the sea. They are strictly the natural accidents peculiar to the water, but the law has extended this phrase to comprehend events not attributable to natural causes, as captures by pirates, and losses by collision, where no blame is attachable to either ship, or at all events to the injured ship. The word peril, like periculum, Lat., from which it is derived, is in itself ambiguous, and sometimes denotes the risk of inevitable mischance, and sometimes the danger arising from the want of due circumspection.—Jones on Bailments, 98. Consult 2 Arnould on Marine Insurance, 3rd ed.

Per incuriam, through want of care.

Perinde valere, a dispensation granted to a clerk, who, being defective in capacity for a benefice or other ecclesiastical function, is de facto admitted to it.—Gibb. 87; 25 Hen. VIII. c. 21; Cowel.

Perindinare, to stay, remain, or abide in a place.

Per infortunium, by mischance.

Periodical Payments, Apportionment of.

See APPORTIONMENT.

Periphrasis, circumlocution; use of many words to express the sense of one.

Perjuri sunt qui servatis verbis juramenti decipiunt aures eorum qui accipiunt. 3 Inst. 166.—(They are perjured, who, preserving the words of an oath, deceive the ears of those who receive it.)

Perishable goods, goods which decay and lose their value if not consumed soon; fish, fruit, and the like. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LII., r. 2, such goods, when the subject of an action, may, by order of the court or a judge, be sold.

Perjury, when a lawful oath is administered by one that has authority, in a judicial proceeding, and the witness swears falsely in a matter material to the issue; in some cases a false oath taken not in judicial proceedings amounts to perjury, and is visited by penalties.

A mere voluntary oath, that is, an oath administered in a case for which the law has not provided, is not one on which perjury can be assigned; for as such a proceeding is not required, so neither is it protected by the law. But voluntary oaths are now prohibited by 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 62, which provides that a certain form of declaration may be substituted for them, and that any party falsely making such declaration shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

It is necessary, in order to constitute the offence of perjury:—(1) That the false oath be taken wilfully, i.e., with some degree of deliberation, and malò animo. It must also be positive and absolute, not merely owing to surprise or inadvertency, or a mistake of the true state of the question. (2) The oath must be taken either in a judicial proceeding, or in some other public proceeding of the like nature, except in certain cases expressly provided for by statute. (3) It must be taken before persons lawfully authorized to administer it. (4) It must be taken by a person sworn to depose the truth. (5) It is not material that the person who swears it in truth knows nothing of it, if he takes a false oath that he knows it to be true. (6) It must be taken absolutely and directly, therefore if a man only swears as he thinks, remembers, or believes, he is not guilty of perjury; but, if he swears that he believes a fact to be true, which he knows to be false, he is guilty of perjury. (7) The thing sworn ought to be in some way material, for if it be wholly foreign to the purpose or immaterial, and neither pertinent to the matter in question nor tending to aggravate or extenuate the damages, nor likely to induce the jury to give credit to the substantial part of the evidence, it cannot amount to perjury, because it is wholly insignificant. (8) It is not material whether the false oath were credited or not, or whether the party in whose prejudice it was taken was in the event damaged by it, for the prosecution is not grounded on the damage to the party, but on abuse of public justice.

Subornation of perjury is the offence of procuring another to take such a false oath as constitutes perjury in the principal.

In prosecutions for perjury, some one or more of the assignments of perjury must be proved by two witnesses, or by one witness, and the proof of other material and relevant facts confirming his testimony. Where the perjury consists in the defendant's having contradicted what he swore on a former occasion, the testimony of a single witness in support of the defendant's own original statement will support a conviction. By 23 Geo. II. c. 11, any judge of assize, while the court is sitting, or 24 hours after, may direct a witness to be prosecuted for perjury; and in an indictment for perjury or subornation, it is sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence. See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9.

Perjury and subornation of perjury are both misdemeanours, and their punishment at common law is by fine and imprisonment. But additional punishments have been enacted. By 5 Eliz. c. 9 (made perpetual by 29 Eliz. c. 5, s. 2, and 21 Jac. I. c. 28, s. 8), the offender for perjury may be imprisoned six months and fined 20*l.*, and for subornation fined 40*l.*, and in default imprisoned for six months. By 2 Geo. II. c. 25, s. 2, he may be sent to hard labour for seven years; or to penal servitude for not more than seven, nor less than five years (16 & 17 Vict. c. 99; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, s. 2). And by 3 Geo. IV. c. 114, the offender may be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour for any term for which he may be imprisoned, either in addition to or in lieu of any other punishment.

The following statutes relate to perjury in particular cases: government annuities, 48 Geo. III. c. 142, ss. 4, 26; 52 Geo. III. c. 129, ss. 2, 7; exchequer bills, 51 Geo. III. c. 15, ss. 9, 10; stamps, 55 Geo. III. c. 184, ss. 52, 53; excise, 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 53, ss. 29, 30, 31; naval stores, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 89, s. 36; quarantine, 6 Geo. IV. c. 78, s. 29; pilotage, 6 Geo. IV. c. 125, s. 80; vessels carrying passengers, 43 Geo. III. c. 56, s. 20; registry acts, 2 & 3 Anne c. 4, ss. 18, 19; inclosure act, 41 Geo. III. c. 109, s. 43; elections, 2 Wm. IV. c. 45, s. 58; 26 Vict. c. 29, s. 7; naval and military pay, etc., 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 20, ss. 85, 86; slave trade, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 42, s. 7; oaths sworn abroad, 6 Geo. IV. c. 87; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42; Court of Probate, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 27; and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 34; Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 50; and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 23; parliamentary committee, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 78, s. 3; Court of Referees in Parliament, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 136, s. 3; witnesses examined at the bar of the House of Commons, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 83. By the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, s. 1, no indictment for perjury, subornation of perjury, etc., is to be presented or found, unless the person presenting it has been bound to prosecute or give evidence, or the accused has been in custody, or bound to appear and answer to the indictment, or unless the indictment be preferred by the direction or with the consent, in writing, of a judge of the superior courts, or of the attorney or solicitor-general, etc. See the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 19 et seq. See 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 242—4.

As to taking false affirmations, declarations, etc., see 9 Geo. IV. c. 32; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. cc. 49, 82; 1 and 2 Vict. c. 77; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 20, 21, 103; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 26; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 4.

If perjury be committed in a spiritual cause, the spiritual judge has authority to inflict canonical punishment, and prohibition will not go.

As to the evidence by which a charge of perjury must be supported, consult Archbold's Criminal Evidence.

Perkins, the author of the 'profitable boke' on the learning of conveyancing; as valuable a performance as any, perhaps, of the reign of Hen. VIII. This was first printed in 1532, with the following title: 'Incipit perutilis Tractatus Magistri Jo. Perkins Interioris Templi Socii, etc.' This book is in French. —4 Reeves, c. xxx., 120.

Permissions, negations of law, arising either from the law's silence, or its express declaration. —Ruth. Nat. Law, b. 1. c. 1.

Permissive use, a passive use which was resorted to before the Statute of Uses, in order to avoid a harsh law, as that of mortmain or a feudal forfeiture; it was a mere invention in order to evade the law by secrecy, as a conveyance to A. to the use of B. A. simply held the possession, and B. enjoyed the profits of the estate. See USES.

Permissive waste, the neglect of necessary repairs. See 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 257, 288, n., 290, 293; and iii. 408, and WASTE.

Permit, a license or instrument granted by the officers of excise, certifying that the excise duties on certain goods have been paid, and permitting their removal from some specified place to another. The acts relative to permits were consolidated by 2 Wm. IV. c. 16. The commissioners of excise provide moulds or frames for making the paper used in the printing of permits, which has the watermark 'Excise Office,' visible in its substance; and the counterfeiting of such frames or paper, or the possession of the latter without being able satisfactorily to account for it, are felonies, punishable by penal servitude. Permits are not delivered except on the receipt of 'request-notes,' specifying the place from and to which the goods are to be conveyed. A penalty of 500*l.* is imposed on all persons counterfeiting 'request-notes,' or fraudulently procuring or misapplying permits; and all goods for the removal of which permits are necessary, if they be removed without them, are to be forfeited, and the various parties engaged in their removal are each to be amerced in a penalty of 200*l.* They are not wholly dispensed with, except in the case of a very few articles. —McCull. Comm. Dict. See CUSTOMS.

Permutatione, etc., a writ to an ordinary, commanding him to admit a clerk to a benefice upon exchange made with another. —Reg. Orig. 307.

Permutation, or Barter, the exchange of one moveable subject for another.

Per my et per tout (by the half and the whole). Joint tenants, by reason of the combination of entirety of interest with the power of transferring in equal shares, are said to be seised per my et per tout. See 1 Steph. Com., bk. ii., pt. i., ch. viii.

Pernancy [fr. prendre, Fr., to take], the taking or receiving of anything, e.g., tithes.

Pernor, he who receives the profits of lands, etc.; the cestui que use. —1 Rep. 123; Co. Litt. 589 b.; Cowel.

Per pais, Trial, trial by the country (i.e., by jury). See 3 Steph. Com.

Perpars, a part of the inheritance. —Fleta.

Perpetua lex est, nullam legem humanam ac positivam perpetuam esse; et clausula quæ abrogationem excludit, ab initio non valet. Bacon. —(It is an everlasting law, that no positive human law shall be perpetual; and any part of an enactment which purports to admit of no repeal, is void from the first.)

Perpetual curate, a minister in holy orders, who is charged with the permanent care of a parochial church, which, although an appropriation, has no endowed vicar. He is entitled to emolument for his services.

By 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 38, churches or chapels built and endowed by particular individuals, shall have districts assigned to them, and be deemed perpetual curacies, and the right of nomination thereto shall be vested in the person so building and endowing. See 2 Steph. Com.

Perpetual injunction, opposed to an injunction ad interim; an injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time. See INJUNCTION.

Perpetuating testimony. When evidence is likely to be irrecoverably lost, by reason of a witness being old, or infirm, or going abroad before the matter to which it relates can be judicially investigated, equity will, by anticipation, preserve and perpetuate such evidence in order to prevent a failure of justice. Also any person who would become entitled, upon the happening of any future event, to any honour, title, dignity, or office, or to any estate or interest in any property, real or personal, the right or claim to which cannot by him be brought to trial before the happening of such future event, may obtain the perpetuation of any testimony which may be material for establishing such claim or right; but the attorney-general must be joined should the Crown be interested (5 & 6 Vict. c. 69).

This jurisdiction emanates from the anxiety of equity to ward off litigation, where it may be oppressively exercised, by preserving the evidence in maintenance of an unpossessed legal right, or where an adversary with an apparent right is postponing his attack against the lawful possessor, until the death of witnesses who can give evidence against his claim. A common case is that of a devisee establishing a will against the heir-at-law, by compelling him to litigate the question at once or not at all, and by perpetuating the evidence of the attesting witnesses. It is not necessary that the devise should be coupled with a trust. Read Boyse v. Rossborough, 2 Eq. Rep. 675, (1854).

An order for the examination of a plaintiff in a cause as a witness on his own behalf might be obtained under 1 Wm. IV. c. 22, and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, before appearance, and on an affidavit that a party was a material witness, about to leave the country immediately, and not likely to return until after the cause, provided no facts, stated in answer, suggest a suspicion of an improper object.—Brown, v. Mollett, 3 Com. L. Rep. 925 (1855). The rule appears to be different as to defendants. See now also the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVII., r. 4. See DE BENE ESSE.

The suit for declaration of legitimacy is in the nature of a suit for perpetuating testimony. See LEGITIMACY DECLARATION ACTS.

The 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 6, provides, in criminal cases, for the taking of the depositions of persons dangerously ill and not likely to recover, and the making of the same evidence in certain events after the death of such persons.

Perpetuity, unlimited duration; exemption from intermission or ceasing, where though all who have interest should join in a covenant, they could not bar or pass the estate. It is odious in law, destructive to the commonwealth, and an impediment to commerce, by preventing the wholesome circulation of property. Consult Lewis on the Law of Perpetuity.

The rule against perpetuities, or the doctrine of remoteness, applies to the corpus of property, whether real or personal, and whether limited by deed or will, and may be thus stated: that the vesting of property cannot be postponed, or the alienation of it restricted, beyond any number of lives in being [whether interested or not is quite immaterial (Duke of Norfolk's case, 3 Cha. Ca. 1; 33 Car. II., called 'the Case of Perpetuities'; and Stephens v. Stephens, Ca. tem. Talb. 228 (1736))], and twenty-one years from the death of the surviving life, absolutely and wholly independent of infancy (i.e., a gross term of twenty-one years), together with one or two periods of actually existing gestation (read the arguments in Bengough v. Edridge, 1 Sim. 173 et seq. (1837)), either at the commencement or at any intermediate part of the period of postponement, or at both the periods, should two gestations really occur (Cadell v. Palmer, 7 Bl. N. S. 202).

Any word or phrase, however sounding in remoteness, will not of itself invalidate a limitation; there must exist an illegal remoteness in the contingency contemplated by the limitation, as also a possibility of such a contingency operating in fact remotely, in order to render a limitation void. For example, a limitation to A. on the death of B. without issue sounds invalid for remoteness, but if B. be already dead issueless, remoteness does not really exist, and the limitation to A. is valid.

The rule requires a limitation, whether of an absolute or partial interest, positively and necessarily to vest within the period prescribed, and not to depend upon a mere possibility.

If the rule be exceeded, the limitation is wholly void and cannot be validated by the happening of any event subsequently to its creation. When a limitation might have included objects too remote, it is invalid, notwithstanding the objects may actually be ascertained within the verge of the rule.

The period presented by the rule is to be computed from the date or delivery of the deed creating the limitations; or from the testator's death, when given by will, that being the period at which a will takes effect.

The following limitations are exempt from the perpetuity rule:—

(1) A limitation expectant upon an entail, for it can be destroyed by barring the entail, but should the entail be preceded by a term for years, and its trusts be postponed until the failure of the issue in tail, they will be void, because limited to arise on an indefinite failure of issue.

(2) Limitations, the nature of whose subject-matter is such as to render it necessary for them to take effect, if at all, within the period prescribed by the perpetuity rule.

(3) Limitations in mortmain, and to charitable uses. Church property is not embraced by the law of perpetuity.

(4) Perpetuities allowed or created by act of parliament, such as Blenheim, settled upon the renowned Duke of Marlborough and his posterity (3 & 4 Anne c. 6; 4 Anne c. 4; and 5 Anne c. 3); and Strathfieldsaye on the great Duke of Wellington and his descendants (41 Geo. III. c. 59; 42 Geo. III. c. 113; and 54 Geo. III. c. 161).

For the detailed learning of this abstruse doctrine, see Lewis on Perp., and Supp.; and Catlin v. Brown, 1 Eq. Rep. 550 (1853).

Compare also title 'ACCUMULATION.'

Per quæ servitia, a judicial writ issuing from the note of a fine; it lay for cognisee of a manor, seignior, chief rent, or other services, to compel him who was tenant of the land as to the time of the note of the fine levied, to attorn unto him.—O. N. B. 155.

Perquisite, something gained by a place or office over and above the stated wages; anything gotten by industry or purchase with money different from that which descends from a father or ancestor; also, fines of copyholds, heriots, amerciements, etc.

Perquisitor, a searcher.

Per quod (whereby), a phrase formerly made use of by a plaintiff in a declaration alleging special damage, without which an action would not have been maintainable.

Per quod consortium amisit [Lat.] (whereby he lost the benefit of her society). An allegation of special damage introduced into the declaration in actions by husbands for injuries to their wives, as for beating, false imprisonment, etc.

Per quod servitium amisit [Lat.] (whereby he lost the benefit of her service). An allegation analogous to the above in an action for seduction. See SEDUCTION.

Per rationes pervenitur ad legitimam ra-tionem. Litt. s. 386.—(By reasoning we come to true reason.)

Per se, by itself, taken alone.

Person [fr. persona, Lat.], the individuality of a human being; individual character or station; bodily form or substance.—Rich. Dict.

Persons are divided into: (1) natural, such as God formed them; and (2) artificial, such as are created and devised by human laws for purposes of society and government, which are called corporations or bodies-politic.—1 Bl. Com. 123.

As to offences against the person, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, and 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 46—98.

Person, indecent exposure of, an offence against the public morality, punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, with hard labour, at the court's discretion.—14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29.

Persona, anybody capable of having and becoming subject to rights.—Civ. Law. See Sand. Just., 5th ed., 13.

Persona conjuncta æquiparatur interesse proprio. Bacon.—(The interest of a man's kindred is equivalent to his own.)

Persona ecclesiæ, the parson or personation of the church.

Personæ regis mergitur persona ducis. Jenk. Cent. 160.—(The person of duke merges in that of king.)

Personable, the being able to hold or maintain a plea in court; also, capacity to take anything granted or given.—Plowd.

Personal, any moveable thing, either living or dead.

Personal action, one brought for the specific recovery of goods and chattels, or for damages or other redress for breach of contract, or other injuries, of whatever description, the specific recovery of lands, tenements, and hereditaments only excepted. The term is often used in a narrower sense to express an action for injury to the person, as for slander, assault, injury by accident, as distinguished from injury to property. It is in this sense that it is said, 'Actio personalis moritur cum persona.' See that title, and EXECUTOR, and NEGLIGENCE.

Personal Acts of Parliament, Statutes confined to particular persons, e.g., authorizing a person to change his name, etc.

Personal chattels, goods, money, or moveables.

Personal identity. See IDENTITY.

Personal property, chattels which include whatever wants either the duration or the immobility attending things real. They are distributed into chattels real and chattels personal. See CHATTELS. Property in personalty is either in possession, which is absolute, where a person has such an exclusive right in the thing that it cannot cease to be his without his own act or default, or qualified, arising where the subject is incapable of absolute ownership, or from the peculiar circumstances of the owners; or, in action, where a man has not the actual occupation of the thing, but only a right to it, arising upon some contract, and recoverable by an action at law. (See now Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (6)). The property of chattels personal is liable to remainders, expectant on estates for life; to joint-tenancy, and to tenancy-in-common.

The title to things personal may be acquired or lost by occupancy, prerogative, forfeiture, custom, succession, marriage, judgment, gift or grant, invention, contract, bankruptcy, testament, and administration.—2 Bl. Com. 384.

Any person shall have power to assign personal property, now by law assignable, including chattels real, directly to himself and another person or other persons or corporation, by the like means as he might assign the same to another.—22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 21. See also CHOSE.

Personal representatives, executors or administrators.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 198.

Personal rights, the right of personal security, comprising those of life, limb, body, health, reputation, and the right of personal liberty.

Personal tithes, those that are paid out of such profits as come by the labour of a man's person, as by buying and selling, gains of merchandise, handicrafts, etc.

Personality, said of an action when it is brought against the right person.—O. N. B. 92.

Personality of laws. All laws concerning the condition, state, and capacity of persons, as distinguished from the reality of laws, which means all laws concerning property or things. Whenever foreign jurists wish to express that the operation of a law is universal, they compendiously announce that it is a personal statute; and whenever, on the other hand, they wish to express that its operation is confined to the country of its origin, they simply declare it to be a real statute.

Livermore uses the words personality and reality. Henry, the words personality and reality. Story preferred the former, as least likely to lead to mistakes, as personalty in our law is confined to personal estate, and reality to real estate.—Conf. of Laws, 23.

Personalty, personal property; that which relates to the person.

Personation. Pretending to be some other particular person.

Personation in order to obtain property is made felony by 'The False Personation Act, 1874,' 37 & 38 Vict. c. 36. Personation of a voter is made felony by the Ballot Act, 1872, and personation of a master for the purpose of giving a false character to a servant is a misdemeanour, by 32 Geo. III. c. 56.

Perspicua vera non sunt probanda. Co. Litt. 16.—(Plain truths need not be proved.)

Per stirpes (by the right of representation—literally, according to the stocks). See PER CAPITA.

Perticata terræ, the fourth part of an acre.—Cowel.

Perticulas, a pittance; a small portion of alms or victuals. Also, certain poor scholars of the Isle of Man.—Cowel.

Pertinents, appurtenants.—Scotch term.

Per totam curiam, by the voice or judgment of the whole court.

Perturbatrix, a woman who breaks the peace.

Per varios actus legem experientia fecit. 4 Inst. 50.—(By various acts experience framed the law.)

Per verba de futuro.—Per verba de presenti, when a man and woman contract marriage in Scotland by the interchange of words, in which each saith, in the presence of two or more witnesses, that he takes the other for husband or wife respectively; this is a complete marriage per verba de presenti; in contradistinction to the marriage, per verba de futuro; in which case there is a contract or promise to marry, each saying I promise, etc., and this promise is ratified and the marriage is completed by the mere act of cohabitation, or the 'subsequens copula.'

Perverse verdict, a verdict whereby the jury refuse to follow the direction of the judge on a point of law. See NEW TRIAL.

Pervise, the palace-yard at Westminster.—Somner.

Pesa, a weight of 256 lb.—Cowel.

Pesage, a custom or duty paid for weighing merchandise or other goods.—Cowel.

Peshcush, a present, particularly to government, in consideration of an appointment, or as an acknowledgment of a tenure. Also tribute, fine, quit-rent, or advance or stipulated revenues.—Indian.

Peshura, Paishura, guide, leader, the prime minister of the Mahratta government.—Ibid.

Pessimi exempli: of the worst example.

Pessona, mast of oaks, etc., or money taken for mast, or feeding hogs.—Cowel.

Pessurable, Pestable, or Pestorable wares, merchandise which takes up a good deal of room in a ship.—Cowel.

Peter pence, an ancient levy or tax of a penny on each house throughout England paid to the pope. It was called Peter-pence, because collected on the day of St. Peter, ad vincula; by the Saxons it was called Rome-feoh, Rome-scot, and Rome-pennyng, because collected and sent to Rome; and lastly, it was called hearth-money, because every dwelling-house was liable to it, and every religious house, the abbey of St. Albans alone excepted.

It was not intended as a tribute to the pope, but chiefly for the support of the English school or college at Rome; the popes, however, shared it with the college, and at length found means to appropriate it to themselves.

At first it was only an occasional contribution, but it became at last a standing tax; being established by three laws of King Canute, Edward the Confessor, and the Conqueror. Edward III. first forbade the payment, but it soon after returned, and continued to the time of Henry VIII., when Polydore Vergil resided here as the pope's receiver-general. It was abolished under that prince, and restored again under Philip and Mary, but was finally prohibited under Queen Elizabeth.—Chamber's Cyc.

Petit Cape. See CAPE.

Petitio, a count or declaration.—Glanv.

Petition, a supplication made by an inferior to a superior, and especially to one having jurisdiction.

The subject has a right to petition the Sovereign, or the two Houses of Parliament, and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal. But see TUMULTUOUS PETITIONING.

There are several regulations respecting petitions to Parliament, which if neglected in any one particular, will prevent their reception. When intended for the House of Lords, a petition must be addressed 'To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled'; when addressed to the House of Commons, it may be directed, 'To the Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland in Parliament assembled,' but it is more usually in this form, 'To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom in Parliament assembled.' Its commencement must describe the petitioners thus: 'The Humble Petition of the Electors of the Parish of —— sheweth that,' etc.; or, in the case of an individual, his name and occupation must be stated thus, 'The Humble Petition of A. B., of, etc., sheweth that,' etc. The statement of grievance must then follow, and the whole must conclude with a specific prayer. The omission of a prayer has often proved fatal to the reception of a petition, for no petition strance or detail of grievance will be received. The prayer may be thus introduced: 'Wherefore your Petitioners humbly pray that your Honourable House will be pleased to,' etc.; the particular relief expected being here stated. To the whole petition, should be added the words, 'And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, etc.'; and immediately thereupon must follow the signatures; of which one at least must be on the same sheet of paper, or skin of parchment, as the petition, not pasted or otherwise appended. The signatures or marks must be original, not copies nor signatures of agents on behalf of others; thus no chairman of a public meeting can sign for the whole meeting; by such an informality the petition becomes that of an individual. But the common seal of a corporation is received as the petition of the whole corporate body. A printed or lithographed petition will not be received; it must be in writing on parchment, or on paper, free from erasures or interlineations, and composed in English, or accompanied by a translation, which the presenting member certifies to be correct; but no letters, affidavits, or other documents, can be annexed. Petitions are uniformly rejected, if not respectful and temperate in language, free from imputations upon the character and conduct of Parliament, the courts of justice, or other constituted authorities. No reference is permitted to any debates or to any motions supposed to be in preparation; while petitions for the remission (not abolition) of customs, stamps, or other duties, can only be received on the recommendation of the Crown. The presenting member is expected to examine whether these conditions have been complied with; and the committee on public petitions subsequently subject all those documents to a severe scrutiny. Petitions for presentation may be forwarded by post, free of charge to any member of either House, in parcels open at the ends, marked outside 'Parliamentary Petitions,' and not exceeding thirty-two ounces in weight.—Dod's Parl. Comp.

A petition in Chancery was a written document setting forth a series of facts, and containing a prayer for the direction or order of the judge to whom it was addressed. These petitions will still continue to be used, as they are not matters for which an action will now be substituted; see Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. I., r. 1.

A petition should be brief and in the accustomed form. It is intitled in the court and cause or matter, and addressed to the House of Lords, or to the High Court of Justice. It sets forth the name and description of the petitioner, and states concisely the facts and circumstances, which are necessary in order that the court may be enabled to decide whether the prayer (which concludes the petition) should be granted or not.

A petition does not require a signature, except in certain charity cases, when it must bear the Attorney-General's signature, or formerly for a rehearing or appeal, when it must have been signed by counsel (see APPEAL); or by a pauper, which must be signed by his solicitor or a clerk of records and writs.

A petition, being engrossed on plain paper, is presented to the judge, to whom the hearing of the petition is assigned.

A copy of the petition, unless it be for an order as of course, must be served upon the solicitors of the adverse parties on their town agents, showing the original petition and answer thereto, unless personal service on the parties themselves is requisite. Two clear judicial days must intervene between the service of, and the day appointed for hearing, the petition. If it is not intended to serve the petition a note to that effect should be appended to it.

Petitions for special orders are set down in the Paper of Petitions appointed for the day, and called on in their order. A petition is heard by its being opened and argued by the petitioner's counsel; counsel are then heard for the respondents, and the senior counsel for the petitioner replies; whereupon the proper order is made. Should the petitioner not appear, his petition is dismissed with costs, on producing to the register in court an office-copy of an affidavit that the respondent has been served with a copy of the petition. Should the respondent not appear, the petitioner, upon an affidavit of service upon all necessary parties, is entitled to an order so far as the case made out by him will justify. Every party who is served with a copy of a petition is entitled to his costs of appearing upon it, whether he is interested in the matter or not.

The original petition having been filed with the Clerk of Reports, the order thereon is drawn up, passed, entered, and served in a manner similar to decrees or orders made upon a hearing. Such orders can only be altered, varied, or discharged by petition; and if new facts occur after a petition has been answered, a supplemental petition must be presented. See Smi. Ch. Pr. 149 et seq.; Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., 1434—7, 1451—61.

Petitions at common law were presented for various purposes, as for leave to sue or be sued by guardian, or to sue in forma pauperis or to the Lords of the Treasury. By the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 34 (commonly ceeds of an outlaw's goods, or to resist an extent, and will be still used (vide supra).

In bankruptcy, proceedings are commenced by one or more creditors of the debtor filing a petition in the Court of Bankruptcy, praying that the debtor may be adjudged bankrupt. The 'Bankruptcy Act,' 1869 (s. 6), provides that a single creditor, or two or more creditors, if the debt due to such single creditor, or the aggregate amount of debts due to such several creditors, from any debtor amount to a sum of not less than 50*l.*, may present a petition from the court, praying that the debtor be adjudged a bankrupt, and alleging as the ground for such adjudication any one or more of the acts or defaults, thereafter deemed to be and included under the expression, 'Acts of Bankruptcy.' See ACT OF BANKRUPTCY. As to proceedings in relation to a debtor's summons, see DEBTOR'S SUMMONS.

Divorce and matrimonial suits, and suits instituted under the Legitimacy Declaration Act are commenced by petition.

The mode of obtaining redress for an improper election of a member of parliament is by petition, formerly to the House of Commons, but under the temporary Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 125, as amended by subsequent Acts, now to two judges of the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court. Municipal Election Petitions are tried by a barrister under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882.

Petition de droit (Petition of right), one of the common law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the Crown of either real or personal property. It is said to owe its origin to Edward I. It might have been preferred or prosecuted either on the common law side of the Court of Chancery, or in the Exchequer. It is of use when the Crown is in full possession of any hereditaments or chattels, and the petitioner suggests such a right as controverts the title of the Crown, grounded on facts disclosed in the petition; the petitioner must be careful to state truly the whole title of the Crown, otherwise the petition will abate; upon the answer being endorsed or underwritten by the Crown, soit droit fait al partie (let right be done to the party), a commission shall issue to inquire into the truth of the suggestion, after the return to which the Queen's attorney is at liberty to plead in bar, and the merits are determined upon issue or demurrer as in suits between subject and subject. If the right be determined against the Crown, the judgment is that of ouster le main, or amoveas manus.—Chitty's Prerog. of the Crown, 345.

called Bovill's Act), a petition of right might, if the suppliant thought fit, be instituted in any of the superior courts of law or equity in which the subject-matter of the petition would have been cognizable if it had been in dispute between subject and subject. (See now, as to the matters assigned to the different divisions of the High Court, Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34.) And such petition shall be left with the Secretary for the Home Department for Her Majesty's consideration, who, if she shall think fit, may grant her fiat that right be done, whereupon, after service of the fiat on the Solicitor to the Treasury, an answer, plea, or demurrer, shall be made on behalf of the Crown, and the subsequent proceedings assimilated as far as practicable to the course of an ordinary action. A judgment that the suppliant is entitled to the whole or some portion of the relief sought by his petition, or to such other relief, and in such terms and conditions as the court may think right, shall have the same effect as a judgment of amoveas manus. Costs are made payable both to and by the Crown, and nothing in the act is to prevent any suppliant from proceeding as he might have done before the act passed.

Petition of Right, 3 Car. I. c. 1, a parliamentary declaration of the liberties of the people, assented to by Charles I. in the beginning of his reign.

In the first parliament of Charles I., which met in 1626, the Commons refused to grant supplies until certain rights and privileges of the subject which they alleged had been violated, should have been solemnly recognised by a legislative enactment. With this view they framed a petition to the king, in which, after reciting various statutes by which their rights and privileges were recognised, they prayed the king 'that no man be compelled to make or yield any gift, loan, benevolence, tax, or suchlike charge, without common consent by Act of Parliament; that none be called upon to make answer so to do; that freemen be imprisoned or detained only by the law of the land, or by due process of law, and not by the king's special command, without any charge; that persons be not compelled to receive soldiers and mariners into their houses against the laws and customs of the realm; that commissions for proceeding by martial law may be revoked: all which they pray as their rights and liberties, according to the laws and statutes of the realm.'

To this petition the king at first sent an evasive answer: 'The king willeth that right be done according to the laws and customs of the realm, and that the statutes be put in due execution, that his subjects may have no cause to complain of any wrongs and oppressions contrary to their just rights and liberties, to the preservation whereof he holds himself in conscience obliged as of his own prerogative.' This answer being rejected as unsatisfactory, the king at last pronounced the formal words of unqualified assent, Soit droit fait comme est désiré, 'Let right be done as it is desired' (3 Car. I. c. 1). Notwithstanding this, however, the ministers of the Crown caused the petition to be printed and circulated with the first insufficient answer.

Petitioning Creditor, one who applies for an adjudication in bankruptcy against his debtor.

By the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 6), it is provided that a single creditor or two or more creditors, if the debt due to such single creditor, or the aggregate amount of debts due to such several creditors from any debtor, amount to a sum of not less than 50*l.*, may present a petition to the court, praying that the debtor be adjudged a bankrupt, and alleging as the ground for such adjudication any one or more of the acts or defaults thereafter deemed to be, and included under the expression, 'acts of bankruptcy' (see ACT OF BANKRUPTCY).

Petitio principii, begging the question, which is the taking of a thing for true or for granted, and drawing conclusions from it as such, when it is really dubious, perhaps false, or at least wants to be proved, before any inferences ought to be drawn from it. For a discussion on the question, 'Is the syllogism a petitio principii?' see 1 Mill's Log., b 2, c. iii., s. 1, p. 206.

Petit jury, a jury in criminal cases who try the bills found by the grand jury.

Petit larceny, stealing of goods to the value of a shilling or under. The distinction between grand and petit larceny was abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 2.

Petit serjeanty, holding lands of the Crown by the service of rendering annually some small implement of war, as a bow, a sword, a lance, an arrow, flag, or the like. See TENURE.

Petit treason, treason of a lesser kind, as if a servant killed his master, a wife her husband, a secular or religious man his prelate. But by the 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 2, every offence which, before the passing of the act, would have amounted to petit treason, shall be deemed murder only. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 8; 4 Steph. Com.

Peto's Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 28, whereby property conveyed for religious or charitable purposes vests in the trustee, etc., from time to time without any further conveyance, etc.

Petra, a stone weight.—Cowel.

Petroleum. The landing, carriage, and storage of petroleum, a highly inflammable oil, is regulated by the Petroleum Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 105 (repealing 25 & 26 Vict. c. 66; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 56), amended and changed from a temporary to a perpetual act by the Petroleum Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 47. The hawking of petroleum is regulated by the Petroleum (Hawkers) Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 67. See also EXPLOSIVE SUBSTANCES.

Pettifogger [fr. petit, Fr., little, and vogueur, a rower], a dishonest lawyer in a mean way of business.—Cant term.

Petty-bag Office, an office belonging to the common law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, for suits for and against solicitors and officers of that court, and for process and proceedings by extents on statutes, recognisances, ad quod damnum, scire facias to repeal letters-patent, etc.—Termes de la Ley. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 94; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 109; and Orders of 26th December, 1848, and 3rd August, 1849; and 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 322.

By the 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81, s. 5, provision is made for the abolition of the office of clerk of the Petty Bag, and the transfer of his duties.

The Common Law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery is now transferred to the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 16).

Petty Constables, inferior officers in every town and parish, subordinate to the high constable of the hundred. See CONSTABLE.

Petty jury, see PETTIT JURY.

Petty sessions, sittings of justices of the peace, empowered by a series of particular statutes relating to particular offences, and also by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, relating to juvenile offenders and adults pleading guilty, to try in a summary way, and without jury, certain minor offences. As to Ireland, see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 100; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 96. As to the hearing of appeals from petty sessions, see Judicature Act, 1873, s. 45.

Pew [fr. puye, Dut; appui, Fr.], an enclosed seat in a church. It is somewhat in the nature of an heir-loom, and may descend by immemorial custom, without any ecclesiastical concurrence, from an ancestor to his heir. Consult Cripps' Law of the Church and Clergy, 5th ed., 467.

The right to sit in a particular pew in the church arises either from prescription as appurtenant to a messuage, or from a faculty or grant from the ordinary, for he has the disposition of all pews which are not claimed by prescription. All other pews and seats in the body of a church are the property of the parish; and the churchwardens, as the officers of the ordinary, and subject to his control, have authority to place the parishioners therein. See 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 314; 3 Hagg Ec. Rep. 733; 1 Phil. Rep. 324. And see 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, ss. 5—8; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 94.

Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, as to examinations by, see 15 & 16 Vict. c. 56; and see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121, and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 74. A similar society is formed for Ireland by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 57.

Pharmacopœia (British), a book containing a list of medicines and compounds, and the manner of preparing them, together with the true weights and measures by which they are to be prepared and mixed, published by the Medical Council under the Medical Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 54, as amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 91.

Pharmacy Acts, Act of 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 56, and Act of 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121, regulating the examination, etc., of chemists by the Pharmaceutical Society. The Act of 1868 also regulates the sale of poison. See POISON.

Pharos, a watch-tower, or sea-mark, which cannot be erected without lawful warrant and authority.—3 Inst. 204.

Phatuk, a gaol or prison.—Indian.

Pheasant, a fowl of warren. See GAME.

Photographs, as to copyright in, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 68; and see COPYRIGHT.

Phylasist [fr. φυλάσσω, Gk., to keep], a jailer.

Physician, one who professes the art of healing.

The necessity of placing under supervision the practitioners of physic and surgery appears early in the statute-book: for by the still unrepealed 3 Hen. VIII. c. 1, it is enacted, that no person within London or seven miles thereof, shall practise as a physician or surgeon without examination and license of the Bishop of London or Dean of St. Paul's (duly assisted by the faculty); or beyond these limits without license from the bishop of his diocese or his vicar-general similarly assisted, saving the privileges of the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford. The superintendence of the bishops was taken away by a royal charter, dated 23rd Sept., 10 Hen. VIII., which incorporated the physicians. By 14 & 15 Hen. VIII. c. 5, this charter was confirmed, and a perpetual college of physicians established, with a constitution of eight elects, etc. The subsequent history of the college is sufficiently traced in 23 & 24 Vict. c. 66, which provides for the style of the new charters allowed to be granted by the Medical Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, s. 47.

Nothing disclosed to a physician in the course of his profession is privileged from inquiry in a court of justice. See CONFESSION.

At common law, a physician could not maintain an action for his fees—4 T. R. 317; but by the Medical Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, a physician who is registered under the act may do so if not precluded by any bye-law of the College of Physicians. That college has passed a bye-law prohibiting fellows of the college from suing, but that does not apply to members.—Gibbon v. Budd, 2 H. & C. 92. See MEDICAL ACT.

Piacle [Lat. piaculum], an enormous crime. Obsolete.

Picaron [fr. picare, Ital.], a robber; a plunderer.

Pick of land, a narrow slip of land running into a corner.

Pickage [fr. picagium, Low Lat.], money paid at fairs for breaking ground for booths.

Pick-lock, an instrument by which locks are opened without a key.

Pick-pocket, or Pick-purse, a thief who steals by putting his hand privately into the pocket or purse of another.

Pickery, petty theft, or stealing things of small value.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Pickle, Pycle, or Pightel [fr. piccolo, Ital.], a small parcel of land enclosed with a hedge, which in some countries is called a pingle.—Encyc. Lond.

Piedpoudre, Court of [curia pedis pulverizati, Lat., so called, either from the dusty feet of the suitors, or because justice is there done as speedily as dust can fall from the foot, or derived fr. pied puidreux, Old Fr., a pedlar or petty chapman, such as resorts to fairs or markets], a court of record incident to every fair and market, though fallen into disuse, and now in a manner forgotten; of which the steward of him who owns, or has the toll of the market, is the judge; its jurisdiction extends to administer justice for all commercial injuries done in that very fair or market, and not in any preceding one; so that the injury must be done, complained of, heard and determined, within the compass of one and the same day, unless the fair continue longer. The court had cognizance of all matters of contract that could possibly arise within the precinct of that fair or market, and the plaintiff must make oath that the cause of action arose there. A writ of error lay in the nature of an appeal to the courts at Westminster.—3 Reeves, c. xx., p. 293.

Pierage, the duty for maintaining piers and harbours.

Piers and Harbours. As to the formation, management, and maintenance of piers and harbours in Great Britain and Ireland, see 'The General Pier and Harbour Act, 1861' (24 & 25 Vict. c. 45), amended by 25 Vict. c. 19. See also 'The Harbours, Docks, and Piers Act, 1847' (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), and 'The Harbours Transfer Act, 1862' (25 & 26 Vict. c. 69). See HARBOURS.

Pietantia, a pittance, a portion of victuals distributed to the members of a college.—Encyc. Lond.

Pietantiarius, the officer in a college who distributed the pietantia.—Cowel.

Pigeons. As to stealing, see 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 29, s. 33.

Pightel, a little enclosure.—Cowel.

Pignoration [fr. pignus, Lat.], the act of pledging.

Pignorative, Pignorary, pledging; pawning.

Pignus, a pledge or security for a debt or demand, is derived, says Gaius (Dig. 50, tit. 16, s. 238), fr. pignus, 'quia quæ pignori dantur, manu traduntur.' This is one of several instances of the failure of the Roman jurists when they attempted an etymological explanation of words. The element of pignus (pig) is contained in the word pa(n)go and its cognate forms. A pledge was called pignus when the possession of the thing was transferred to the pledgee, and hypotheca, when the pledgor retained it in his possession. See Sand. Just., 5th ed., 132, 152, 325. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 21 n.

Pigott's Act, 14 Geo. II. c. 20, relating to recoveries, which are abolished. Repealed by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 59.

Pila, that side of money which was called pile, because it was the side on which there was an impression of a church built on piles.—Fleta, lib. 1, c. xxxix.

Pilettus [fr. pila, Lat., a ball], in our ancient forest laws, an arrow which had a round knob a little above the head, to hinder it from going far into the mark.—Cowel.

Pileus supportationis (the cap of maintenance).—Cowel.

Pilferer, one who steals petty things.

Pillory, rapine; robbery. Obsolete.

Pillory, a frame erected on a pillar, and made with holes and moveable boards, through which the heads and hands of criminals were put.

The punishment of the pillory, abolished by 56 Geo. III. c. 138, except for perjury and subornation, was altogether abolished by 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 23.

Pilot, a particular officer serving on board a ship during the course of a voyage, and having the charge of the helm and the ship's route; or a person taken on board at any particular place for the purpose of conducting a ship through a river, road, or channel, or from or into a port. It is to the latter description of persons that the term pilot is now usually applied, and pilots of this sort are established in various parts of the country, by ancient charters, of incorporation or by particular statutes. The most important of these incorporations are those of the Trinity House; Deptford Strond; the fellowship of the Pilots of Dover, Deal, and the Isle of Thanet, commonly called the Cinque Port Pilots; and the Trinity Houses of Hull and Newcastle. The 5 Geo. IV. c. 73, established a corporation for the regulation and licensing of pilots in Liverpool. The statute 6 Geo. IV. c. 125, consolidated the laws with respect to the licensing, employment, etc., of pilots. See 'The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854,' 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 330—388, pt. v. 'Pilotage'; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 39—42; and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 73; and Maude and Pollock on Shipping, 3rd ed., 194 et seq. By 'The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854,' s. 388, no owner or master of any ship shall be answerable to any person whatever for any loss or damage occasioned by the fault or incapacity of any qualified pilot acting in charge of the ship in any district where the employment of the pilot is compulsory by law.

Pilotage, the compensation of a pilot.

Pimp-tenure a very singular and odious kind of tenure mentioned by our old writers, 'Wilhelmus Hoppeshort tenet dimidiam virgatum terre per servitium custodiendi sex damisellas, scil. meretrices ad usum domini regis.'—12 Ed. I.

Pin-money, an annual sum settled on a wife, to defray her personal expenses in dress and pocket-money.

Courts of equity refuse to call upon a husband to pay beyond the arrears of a year, although stipulated for by a marriage settlement, for the money is meant to dress the wife during the year, so as to keep up the dignity of the husband, and not for the accumulation of the fund. The personal representatives of the wife are not allowed to make any claim for the arrears of pin-money, not even for arrears of a year. If, however, the wife live separate, and have no allowance, an account of the arrears of pin-money will be decreed.—Aston v. Aston, 1 Ves. 269; Spect. No. 295; Jodrell v. Jodrell, 9 Beav. 45.

There was a very ancient tax in France for providing the queen with pins.

Pinnage [fr. pin or pen], poundage of cattle.

Pinner, a pounder of cattle, a pound-keeper.

Pint, a measure of half a quart, or the eighth part of a gallon.

Pipe, a roll in the Exchequer; otherwise called the great roll. The Pipe-office was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99.

Piracy [fr. pirata, Lat.], the commission of those acts of robbery and violence upon the sea, which if committed upon land would amount to felony. Pirates hold no commission or delegated authority from any sovereign or state empowering them to attack others. They can, therefore, be only regarded in the light of robbers. They are, as Cicero has truly stated, the common enemies of all (communes hostes omnium); and the law of nations gives to every one the right to pursue and exterminate them without any previous declaration of war; but it is not allowed to kill them without trial, except in battle. Those who surrender or are taken prisoners must be brought before the proper magistrates, and dealt with according to law. By the ancient common law of England, piracy, if committed by a subject, was held to be a species of treason, being contrary to his natural allegiance; if by an alien, to be felony only; but since the statute of treason, 25 Edw. III. c. 2, it is held to be only felony in a subject. Formerly this offence was only cognizable by the Admiralty Courts, which proceed by the rules of the civil law, but it being inconsistent with the liberties of the nation that any man's life should be taken away, unless by the judgment of his peers, the statute 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15, established a new jurisdiction for this purpose, which proceeds according to the course of the common law.

By the 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 88 (which repealed various previous enactments) it is provided (s. 1) that whosoever shall be convicted of any offence which, by any of the acts thereinbefore referred to, amounts to the crime of piracy, and is thereby made punishable with death, shall be liable at the discretion of the court to be transported for the term of the natural life of such offender or for any term not less than fifteen years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years. See 9 & 10 Vict. c. 24; s. 1. As to the punishment of principals in the second degree and accessories before or after fact, see s. 4 of the 7 Wm. IV., & 1 Vict. c. 88. As to the jurisdiction of the Admiralty in regard to piracy, see 13 & 14 Vict. c. 26, 27. As to the Colonies, see 12 & 13 Vict. c. 96; and as to India, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 88.

Piracy of works, an offence against the law of copyright or an author's right to his works, which consists in an exclusive right to the sequence of the words as they stand; and if any one else reprint these without addition, subtraction, or transposition, it is an inroad on the author's right. But, on the one hand, the sentences and words may be so rearranged, that, although nothing be added to, or taken from them, they give a substantially new idea to the public, and are therefore no infringement of the law. And, on the other hand, although parts may be omitted, and new passages introduced, yet, if these alterations be merely colourable, and it is really an attempt to profit by taking the ideas of another, the publication is a piracy.

The remedies for piracy are, an action at law for damages; and an injunction to restrain its continuance. See INJUNCTION and COPY-RIGHT.

Pirata est hostis humani generis. 3 Inst. 113.—(A pirate is an enemy of the human race.)

Piscary, Common of, a right or liberty of fishing in the waters of another person. See FISHERY.

Pit, a hole wherein the Scots used to drown women-thieves.—Skene.

Pitching-pence, money; commonly a penny, paid for pitching or setting down every bag of corn or pack of goods in a fair or market.—Cowel.

Pittance, a slight repast or refection of fish or flesh more than the common allowance; and the pittance was the officer who distributed this at certain appointed festivals.—Cowel.

Pitt Press, the University Press at Cambridge.

Fixing the coin, ascertaining whether coin is of the proper standard. The trial of the pix takes place before a jury of members of the Goldsmiths' Company. It is now regulated by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 10, ss. 12—13, which see.

Placard, or Placart [fr. plakaert, Dut.; placard, Fr.; fr. plague, a flat piece of metal, stone, or wood; πλάξ, Gk.], an edict, a declaration, a manifesto; also an advertisement or public notification.

Placeman, one who exercises a public employment, or fills a public station.

Placit, or Placitum, decree, determination.

Placita, the public assemblies of all degrees of men where the sovereign presided, who usually consulted upon the great affairs of the kingdom. Also, pleas, pleadings, or debates, and trials at law; sometimes penalties, fines, mulcts, or emendations; also, the style of the court at the beginning of the record at nisi prius; but this is now omitted.—Cowel.

Placita de transgressionem contra pacem regis, in regno Angliæ vi et armis facta, secundum legem et consuetudinem Angliæ sine placitari non debent. 2 Inst. 311.—(Pleas of trespass against the peace of the king in the kingdom of England, made with force and arms, ought not, by the law and custom of England, to be pleaded without the king's writ.)

Placitare, to plead.

Placitator, a pleader.—Cowel.

Placitory, relating to pleas or pleading.

Placitum. See PLACITA.

Placitum nominatum, the day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead and make his defence.—Leg. H. I. c. xxix.; Cowel. Placitum fractum, when the day is past.

Placitum aliud personale, aliud reale, aliud mixtum. Co. Litt. 284.—(Pleas are personal, real, and mixed.)

Plagiarist, or Plagiary, one who publishes the thoughts and writings of another as his own.

Plagiarius, one who knowingly kept in irons, or confined, sold, gave, or bought a citizen (whether freeborn or a freedman), or the slave of another; the offence being called plagium.—Civ. Lav.

Plagiary [fr. plagiarius, Lat.], a man-stealer.

Plagii crimen, or Plagium, the stealing and retaining the children of freemen and slaves.—Civ. Lav.

Plague [fr. πληγή, Gk., a wound], pestilence; a contagious and malignant fever.

By 1 Jac. I. c. 31, if any infected with the plague, or dwelling in an infected house, shall be commanded by the mayor or constable, etc., to keep house, and should disobey such direction, he should be enforced with violence, by the watchmen, to obey; and if any hurt ensued by such enforcement, the watchmen were not to be impeached. And if such person went abroad and in company, if he had any infectious sore upon him uncured, he should suffer death as a felon; but if no such sore should be found upon him he should be punished as a vagabond, and bound to good behaviour. This act was abolished by 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 91, s. 4. See now 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, ss. 134—140; and tits. PUBLIC HEALTH, QUARANTINE, post.

Plaideur, an attorney who pleaded the cause of his client; an advocate. Obsolete.

Plainant, a plaintiff.

Plaint [fr. plainte, Fr.; querela, Lat.], the statement in writing of a cause of action. It is the first process in an inferior court,—see the terms expressly used in County Court Act, 1846, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 59,—in the nature of an original writ, because therein is briefly set forth the plaintiff's cause of action, and the judge is bound, of course, to right, to administer justice therein without a special mandate from the Crown.

Plaintiff [abbrev. plt., or plff., fr. plaintif, Fr.], he who commences an action against another, who is called defendant.

Plant, the fixtures, tools, machinery, and apparatus which are necessary to carry on a trade or business.—Ogil. Imp. Tech. Dict.

Plants, as to malicious injuries to, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 20 et seq.; and as to the larceny of, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 32—37.

Plantation, a colony.

With respect to their internal policy our colonies are of three sorts: (1) provincial establishments; (2) proprietary governments; (3) charter governments.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 101 et seq. See COLONY.

Plea [fr. plée, Fr.], this was the name of a defendant's answer of fact to a plaintiff's declaration; anciently a suit or action.

Pleas were divided into common pleas, relating to civil causes, and pleas of the Crown, relating to criminal prosecutions.

At common law pleas were divided into—

(1) Dilatory; which were subdivided into—

(a) To the jurisdiction of the court.

(b) In suspension of the action.

(c) In abatement of the writ or declaration, and—

(2) Peremptory, i.e., in bar of the action.

The distinction between these two classes of pleas was, that the dilatory showed some ground for quashing the declaration, the peremptory, for defeating the action. Consult Bullen and Leake on Pleading, and Ch. Arch. Practice.

In equity, a plea was resorted to by a defendant when an objection was not apparent on the bill itself, or, as the technical phrase was, where it arose from matter dehors the bill. If the defendant meant to take advantage of it, he ought to have shown the matter which created the objection to the court, either by plea or by answer. A plea was a special answer, showing or relying upon one or more things, as a cause why the suit should either be dismissed, delayed, or debarred. Pleas were divided into two sorts: (1) pure pleas, which relied wholly on matter dehors the bill, such as a release or a settled account; and (2) anomalous or negative pleas, which consisted mainly of denials of the substantial matters set forth in the bill. As to the former practice in equity see Story's Equit. Pl. 492; Smith's Ch. Pr. 300; and 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., 520—611.

A defendant now raises his defence in all actions in the High Court of Justice by a statement of defence; see that title and PLEADING.

The order of a prisoner's pleas in criminal law is as follows:—

(1) To the jurisdiction.

(2) In abatement.

(3) Special pleas in bar, as

(a) Autrefois acquit.

(b) Autrefois convict.

(c) Autrefois attain.

(d) Pardon.

(4) General issue of not guilty.

Plead, to make an allegation in a cause; also to argue a cause in court.

Pleader [fr. narrator, Lat.], one who draws pleadings. See SPECIAL PLEADER, and INNS OF COURT.

Pleading, in its general sense, the proceedings from the statement of claim to issue joined, i.e., the opposing statements of the parties. 2. Any part of these proceedings.

The science of pleading was no doubt derived from Normandy. The use of stated forms of pleading is not to be traced among the Anglo-Saxons. Pleading was cultivated as a science in the reign of Edward I. The object of pleading is to ascertain, by the production of an issue, the subject for decision. As to the former mode of pleading at Common Law, see Dav's C. L. P. Acts. And as to the former mode of pleading in Equity, see Dan. Ch. Pr. Consult also Bullen and Leake on Pleading, Stephen on Pleading, and Mitford on Pleading. As to Probate suits see Coot's Probate Practice; and as to suits in the Admiralty Court, see Williams and Bruce's Admiralty Practice.

The pleadings in actions in the High Court are now governed by the rules of the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., the more important of which are as follows:—

‘The following rules of pleading shall be substituted for those heretofore used in the High Court of Chancery, and in the Courts of Common Law, Admiralty, and Probate’ (r. 1). ‘Unless the defendant in an action at the time of his appearance shall state that he does not require the delivery of a statement of complaint, the plaintiff shall within such time and in such manner as hereinafter prescribed, deliver to the defendant after his appearance a statement of his complaint and of the relief or remedy to which he claims to be entitled. The defendant shall within such time and in such manner as hereinafter prescribed deliver to the plaintiff a statement of his defence, set-off, or counter-claim (if any), and the plaintiff shall in like manner deliver a statement of his reply (if any) to such defence, set-off, or counter-claim. Such statements shall be as brief as the nature of the case will admit, and the Court in adjusting the costs of the action shall inquire at the instance of any party into any unnecessary prolixity, and order the costs occasioned by such prolixity to be borne by the party chargeable with the same' (r. 2). 'A defendant in an action may set-off, or set up by way of counter-claim against the claims of the plaintiff, any right or claim, whether such set-off or counter-claim sound in damages or not, and such set-off or counter-claim shall have the same effect as a statement of claim in a cross action, so as to enable the Court to pronounce a final judgment in the same action both on the original and on the cross claim. But the Court or a judge may, on the application of the plaintiff before trial, if in the opinion of the Court or judge such set-off or counter-claim cannot be conveniently disposed of in the pending action, or ought not to be allowed, refuse permission to the defendant to avail himself thereof' (r. 3). Every pleading shall contain as concisely as may be a statement of the material facts on which the party pleading relies, but not the evidence by which they are to be proved, such statement being divided into paragraphs, numbered consecutively, and each paragraph containing, as nearly as may be, a separate allegation. Dates, sums, and numbers shall be expressed in figures and not in words. Signatures of counsel shall not be necessary. Forms similar to those in Appendix (C.) hereto may be used' (r. 4). 'Every allegation of fact in any pleading in an action not being a petition or summons, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the opposite party, shall be taken to be admitted, except as against an infant, lunatic, or person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition' (r. 17). 'Each party in any pleading, not being a petition or summons, must allege all such facts not appearing in the previous pleadings as he means to rely on, and must raise all such grounds of defence or reply, as the case may be, as if not raised on the pleadings would be likely to take the opposite party by surprise, or would raise new issues of fact not arising out of the pleadings, as, for instance, fraud, or that any claim has been barred by the Statute of Limitations or has been released' (r. 18). 'No pleading, not being a petition or summons, shall, except by way of amendment, raise any new ground of claim or contain any allegation of fact inconsistent with the previous pleadings of the party pleading the same' (r. 19). 'It shall not be sufficient for a defendant in his defence to deny generally the facts alleged by the statement of claim, or for a plaintiff in his reply to deny generally the facts alleged in a defence by way of counter-claim, but each party must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth' (r. 20). 'Subject to the last preceding Rule, the plaintiff by his reply may join issue upon the defence, and each party in his pleading, if any, subsequent to reply, may join issue upon the previous pleading. Such joinder of issue shall operate as a denial of every material allegation of fact in the pleading upon which issue is joined, but it may except any facts which the party may be willing to admit, and shall then operate as a denial of the facts not so admitted' (r. 21). When a party in any pleading denies an allegation of fact in the previous pleading of the opposite party, he must not do so evasively, but answer the point of substance. Thus, if it be alleged that he received a certain sum of money, it shall not be sufficient to deny that he received that particular amount, but he must deny that he received that sum or any part thereof, or else set out how much he received. And so when a matter of fact is alleged with divers circumstances, it shall not be sufficient to deny it as alleged along with those circumstances, but a fair and substantial answer must be given' (r. 22). 'When a contract is alleged in any pleading a bare denial of the contract by the opposite party shall be construed only as a denial of the making of the contract in fact, and not of its legality or its sufficiency in law, whether with reference to the Statute of Frauds or otherwise' (r. 23). 'Neither party need in any pleading allege any matter of fact which the law presumes in his favour or as to which the burden of proof lies upon the other side, unless the same has first been specifically denied. [E.g.—Consideration for a bill of exchange where the plaintiff sues only on the bill, and not for the consideration as a substantive ground of claim'] (r. 28).

With regard to default in pleading and its effects in any action, it is provided by Ord. XXIX. that if the plaintiff, being bound to deliver a statement of claim, does not deliver the same within the time allowed for that purpose, the defendant may, at the expiration of that time, apply to the Court or a judge to dismiss the action with costs, for want of prosecution; and on the hearing of such application the Court or judge may, if no statement of claim have been delivered, order the action to be dismissed accordingly, or may make such other order on such terms as to the Court or judge shall seem just (r. 1). See further titles STATEMENT OF CLAIM; STATEMENT OF DEFENCE; and REPLY.

The Pleadings in Ecclesiastical cases are—

I. In criminal causes.

(a) The articles.

(b) The issue or litis contestatio, which was—

(α) Affirmative.

(β) Negative.

In the latter case the respondent (as the defendant is called in those courts) follows up his issue by a responsive allegation to the articles; and this is met by a counter allegation from the promoter (or plaintiff), but these documents, although they have something in common with pleadings, are not strictly of that nature. They contain, along with the libel or articles, a summary of all the evidence to be given at the hearing, beyond which none other is received.

In lieu of the affirmative or negative issue the respondent is at liberty to object to the admissibility of the articles or of of them or of the libel as insufficient in law; and if the judge consider them to be so, he rejects them. If he declines to reject them, the respondent proceeds to the issue. The form of the subsequent proceedings is the same in criminal and non-criminal causes.

II. In plenary causes, not criminal.

(a) The libel, and so forth as above.

The pleadings in divorce and matrimonial causes are:—

(1) Petition.

(2) Answer.

(3) Reply, and so on, and also demurrer; see STATEMENT OF CLAIM; STATEMENT OF DEFENCE; REPLY; REJOINDER.

Plead over, to follow up an opponent's pleading by replying, etc., so overlooking some defect to which exception might have been taken.

Pleas of the Crown, the criminal law department of our jurisprudence; so called, because the Sovereign, in whom centres the majesty of the whole community, is supposed by the law to be the person injured by every wrong done to that community, and is, therefore, in all cases, the proper prosecutor for every such offence. See the works, on this subject, of Coke (3rd Institute), Hale, or Hawkins.

Pleasure grounds may be provided by local boards, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 164; this section coming in place of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, s. 74. See RECREATION GROUNDS, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 30, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 31; and as to those on Kennington Common, see 15 & 16 Vict. c. 29.

Plebanus, a rural dean.—Cowel.

Plebeity, or Plebity, the common or meaner sort of people; the plebeians.

Plebiana, a mother church.—Old Record.

Plebiscite, or Plebiscitum, among the Romans, a law enacted by the common people at the request of the tribune or some other plebeian magistrate, without the intervention of the senate; more particularly applied to the law which the people made, when, upon some misunderstanding with the senate they retired to the Aventine mount.

Pledge, anything put to pawn or given by way of warrant or security; also a surety, bail, or hostage. See PAWN, PIGNUS.

Pledgee, one who receives pledges; a pawnee.

Pledgery, suretyship, or an undertaking or answering for another.

Pledgor, one who offers a pledge, a pawner.

Plegii de prosequendo, pledges to prosecute with effect an action of replevin.

Plegii de retorno habendo, pledges to return the subject of distress, should the right be determined against the party bringing the action of replevin.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 422 n.

Plegiis acquietandis, a writ that anciently lay for a surety against him for whom he was surety, if he paid not the money at the day.—F. N. B. 137.

Plena et celeris justitia fiat partibus. 4 Inst. 67.—(Let full and speedy justice be done to the parties.)

Plena forisfactura, a forfeiture of all that one possesses.

Plena probatio, testimony by two witnesses.—Civ. Law.

Plenary, said of a benefice when full, or possessed by an incumbent; opposed to vacancy.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 415, 611.

Plenary, full, complete; an ordinary proceeding through all its gradations and formal steps, opposed to summary.

Plenary causes in the ecclesiastical courts are reduced to the following:—

(1) Suits for ecclesiastical dilapidations.

(2) Suits relating to seats or sitting-places in churches.

(3) Suits for tithes.

Plene administravit (he has fully administered). A defence by an executor or administrator that he has fully administered all the assets that have come to his hands. The plaintiff, if he cannot dispute the defence, and there are other assets to be received, should enter judgment of assets quando acciderint, and, when assets afterwards come to the executor's hands, the plaintiff should sue out a scire facias, or writ of revivor against the executor, and proceed to realise the judgment.—C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 91. Consult Williams on Executors; and 2 Steph. Com.

Plene administravit præter (he has fully administered, except). A defence by an executor or administrator that he has fully administered the assets that have come to his hands, except, etc. The plaintiff, if he cannot dispute the defence, should enter judgment presently of the assets acknowledged to be in the defendant's hands, and of assets in futuro for the residue.

Plenipotentiary, a person who has full power and commission to do anything.

Pleno lumine. See IN PLENO LUMINE.

Plenum dominium, a title combining the right and the corporal possession of property, which possession could not be acquired without both an actual intention to possess, and an actual seisin or entry into the premises, or part of them, in the name of the whole.—Civ. Law.

Plevin [fr. plevina, low Lat.], a warrant or assurance.

Plight, signifieth an estate, with the habit and quality of the land; it extends to a rent-charge and to a possibility of dower.—Co. Litt. 221 b.

Ploek-pennin, a kind of earnest used in public sales at Amsterdam.

Plough-alms [eleemosynæ aratrales, Lat.], the ancient payment of a penny to the church from every plough land.—Mon. Angl. i., 256.

Plough-bote, a tenant's right to take wood for the repairs of ploughs, carts, and harrows, and for making rakes, forks, etc.

Plough-land, a hide of land, a carucate, which see.—Co. Litt. 69 a, 86 b.

Plough-Monday, the Monday after Twelfth-Day.

Plough-silver, money formerly paid by some tenants, in lieu of service to plough the lord's lands.

Plowden's (Edm.) Commentaries or Reports, first published in 1571. They contain cases from 4 Edw. VI. to 20 Eliz. The manner in which Plowden has reported the decisions of courts is peculiarly his own, no one having either set him a model or attempted to rival him. After having stated, in a clear manner, the case and matters of doubt to be resolved, he gives the arguments of the counsel on both sides at length, always following the course of reasoning precisely, with the topics and precedents quoted by each, in the exact style of a former debate. In reporting the judgment of the court, he gives severally the opinions of the judges at length. A case discussed in this ample way, with all the arguments of each side considered, distinguished, and commented on by the experience and learning of the bench, must be so thoroughly sifted as to make it impossible for the reader not to discern the true points involved in it, and the ground upon which it was determined. Most of the cases in this book are upon demurrers or special verdicts and there are generally the pleadings annexed. Whether all arguments and opinions were delivered in court precisely in the detail in which we have found them in Plowden, or whether the reporter, who says that his practice was to make himself master of the case in all its points before he heard it argued, retouched them according to his own fancy afterwards, it is certain that the principles and great leading rules of law are opened and explained with an acuteness rarely discovered in other books; and points are maintained and canvassed with a certain wary closeness of reasoning peculiar to this writer, so that altogether it is one of the most instructive and most entertaining books in the law.—5 Reeves, c. xxxv. 241.

Plunderage, embezzling goods on ship-board.—Mar. Law.

Plurales numerus est duobus contentus. 1 Rol. Rep. 476.—(The plural number is satisfied by two.)

Pluralist, one that holds more than one ecclesiastical benefice, with cure of souls. See next title.

Plurality, two or more benefices.

By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106 (repealing the former statute against pluralities, 21 Hen. VIII. c. 13), and by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 98, it is enacted, that in future (and subject to exception in the case of rights already vested) no spiritual person shall take and hold together any two benefices, except in the case of two benefices the churches of which are within three miles of one another by the nearest road, and the annual value of one of which does not exceed 100*l*.; that no spiritual person holding a benefice, with cure of souls, with a population of more than 3000, shall take to hold therewith any other, having a population of more than 500, nor vice versa; that no spiritual person holding more than one benefice, with cure of souls, shall take to hold therewith any other or any cathedral preferment; and that upon every admission to a new benefice or preferment contrary to the acts, every benefice previously held shall be void ipso facto. These prohibitions, however, in respect of population and yearly value, are subject to a provision enabling the Archbishop of Canterbury to grant a dispensation therefrom in certain cases, on recommendation of the bishop of the diocese. And see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 127, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 142.

Pluries (as often), a writ that issues in the third instance, after the first and the alias have been ineffectual. See EXECUTION.

Plus exempla quam peccata nocent. (Examples hurt more than crimes.)

Plus peccat auctor quam actor. 5 Co. 99.—(The causer offends more than the performer.)

Plus-petitio, or Pluris-petitio, when a demandant includes in his demand (in the intentio of the formula) more than his due. It happens in four ways. See Com. C. L. 347; Sand. Just., 5th ed., 444.

Plus valet quod agitur quam quod simulatè concipitur. (What is done more avails than what is pretended to be done.)

P. O., abbreviation of public officer. See PUBLIC OFFICER.

Poach [fr. pocher, Fr., to thrust or dig, to poch into or encroach upon another man's employment, practice, or trade.—Cot. To thrust into, scil. another man's ground, another man's property, and hence to purloin, to steal, to plunder.—Rich. Dict.], to steal game on a man's land.

Poaching, taking game by trespass.

By 9 Geo. IV. c. 69, s. 1, extended by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 29, it is provided, that if any person shall by night unlawfully take or destroy any game or rabbits in any land (whether open or enclosed), or on any public road, etc., or shall, by night, be in such places with any gun, net, engine, etc., for the purpose of taking or destroying game, he shall be liable to imprisonment, for the first offence, for any period not exceeding three months, with hard labour, and at the expiration of such period to be bound over to his good behaviour by sureties for a year, or in default thereof, to be further imprisoned for six months, or until such sureties are found. For a second offence he is liable to imprisonment for six months, and then to be bound in sureties for two years, and in default thereof, to be further imprisoned for one year, or until such sureties are found. And if he offend a third time, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable to penal servitude between seven and three (now five) years, or to be imprisoned with hard labour for any time not exceeding two years. When any person is found committing such offence, it is lawful for the owner or occupier of the land, or for any person having a right of free warren or free chase therein, or for the lord of the manor, or for the gamekeeper or servant to apprehend such persons: and in case such offender shall assault or offer any violence with any offensive weapon whatsoever towards such person, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable to penal servitude for not more than seven or less than three (now five) years, or to be imprisoned with hard labour for any term not exceeding two years.

By s. 9, if any persons, to the number of three or more, shall by night unlawfully enter such lands or roads, for the purpose of taking or destroying any game or rabbits (any of them being armed with any gun or other offensive weapon), each of them shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and shall be liable to penal servitude for any term between seven and three (now five) years, or imprisonment with hard labour for not more than three years.

By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 114, 'An Act for the Prevention of Poaching,' power is given to any constable or police officer, in any highway, street, or public place, to search any person whom he may have good cause to suspect of coming from any land where he shall have been unlawfully in search or pursuit of game, or aiding and abetting, and having in his possession any game unlawfully obtained, or any gun, part of gun, or net or engines used for the killing or taking game, and also to stop and search any cart, etc., in which such constable, etc., shall have good cause to suspect that any such game, etc., is being carried by any such person, and should there be found any game, etc., upon such person, cart, etc., to seize such game, etc.; and such constable, etc., shall in such case apply to some justice for a summons, citing such person to appear before two justices in England and Ireland, and before a sheriff or two justices in Scotland; and if such person shall have obtained such game by unlawfully going on any land in search or pursuit of game, or shall have used any such article or thing as aforesaid for unlawfully killing or taking game, or shall have been accessory thereto, such person shall, on being convicted thereof, forfeit any sum not exceeding 5*l.*, and shall forfeit such game, guns, parts of guns, etc. (s. 2). An appeal against a summary conviction is given to the quarter sessions (s. 6). The word 'game' includes hares, pheasants, partridges, eggs of pheasants and partridges, woodcocks, snipes, rabbits, grouse, black or moor game, and eggs of grouse, black or moor game (s. 1). See also 27 & 28 Vict. c. 67, and title GAME.

Pocket-judgment, a statute-merchant which was enforceable at any time after non-payment on the day assigned, without further proceedings. See STATUTE-MERCHANT.

Pocket-sheriff, when the sovereign appoints a person sheriff who is not one of the three nominated in the Exchequer, he is called a pocket-sheriff.—1 Bl. Com. 342.

Pœna, ex delicto defuncti, hæres teneri non debet. 2 Inst. 198.—(The heir ought not to be bound in a penalty for the crime of the defunct.)

Pœna non potest, culpa perennis erit. (Punishment cannot be, crime will be lasting.)

Pœne potius mollendæ quam exasperandæ sunt. 3 Inst. 220.—(Punishments should rather be softened than aggravated.)

Poining, the Scotch term for taking goods, etc., in execution, or by way of distress. It is defined to be 'the diligence (process) which the law has devised for transferring the property of the debtor to the creditor in payment of his debt.' It is either real or personal; not that any inheritance is conveyed by a poining, but real poining is a power of carrying off the effects on the land in payment of such debts as are debita fundi, or heritable; personal poining is the poining of moveables for debt or for rent, etc. There is also a species of poining by attaching cattle trespassing.—See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Poining of the ground, a poining in Scotland, founded on a heritable security or other debitum fundi, for poining or taking in execution all the goods on the lands over which the security extends. See ACTION FOR POINING OF THE GROUND.

Points: in the paper books were the chief grounds or heads of argument on which each party relied, on an argument in the special paper. See PAPER BOOKS.

Poison [poison, Fr.; ponzona, Sp.; fr. potia, Lat., a drink,—applied originally to a medicated drink or draught; a drink in which some venomous morsel or deadly ingredient is mixed; and now to any venomous morsel or deadly ingredient. See Rich. Dict.], a substance which, on being applied to the human body, internally or externally, is capable of destroying the action of the vital functions, or of placing the solids and fluids in such a state as to prevent the continuance of life.

The means of ascertaining the traces of poison, either on the living or dead body, is one of the most important subjects in legal medicine, and its importance is only equalled by its difficulty.—Beck's Med. Jurisp.; Taylor's Med. Jur.; Christison on Poisons, and Taylor on Poisons.

As to the administering, or causing to be administered, poison or other destructive thing, if the offence is committed with intent to commit murder it is a felony, punishable with penal servitude for life, or any term not exceeding three (now five) years, or with imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 11), and so is the attempt to administer with a like intent, whether any bodily injury be effected or not (s. 14).

The unlawful and malicious administering, or causing to be administered, any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, so as thereby to endanger life or to inflict grievous bodily harm, is a felony punishable by penal servitude for any term not exceeding ten nor less than three years, or imprisonment (s. 23).

The unlawful or malicious administering, or causing to be administered, any poison or other destructive or noxious thing with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy, is a misdemeanour, punishable by penal servitude, for three years, or imprisonment (s. 24).

If the jury be satisfied that a person charged with felony under the 23rd sect. is guilty of misdemeanour under the 24th sect., but not guilty of felony, he may be found guilty of misdemeanour accordingly (s. 25).

As to the taking or administering poison or other noxious thing, with intent to procure miscarriage, see s. 58, and ABORTION.

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 13, certain restrictions—as that name and address, etc., of the purchaser is to be registered by the seller—are placed upon the sale of arsenic; and by the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121), persons selling or compounding poisons, or assuming the title of chemist or druggist, must be qualified as by that act is required. For the purposes of that act the following are to be deemed poisons:—Arsenic and its preparations, prussic acid, cyanides of potassium and all metallic cyanides, strychnine, and all poisonous vegetable alkaloids and their salts, aconite and its preparations, emetic tartar, corrosive sublimate, cantharides, savin and its oil, ergot of rye and its preparations, oxalic acid, chloroform, belladonna and its preparations, essential oil of almonds, unless deprived of its prussic acid, opium and all preparations of opium, or of poppies. The act makes it unlawful to sell any poison, either by wholesale or by retail, unless the box, bottle, vessel, wrapper, or cover in which such poison is contained, be distinctly labelled with the name of the article and the word 'poison,' and with the name and address of the seller of the poison; and various other restrictions are placed on the sale of poisons, as to which see s. 17. See also ADULTERATION.

Poisoned flesh. Penalties are imposed on placing poisoned flesh upon land, unless properly protected, by 27 & 28 Vict. c. 115.

Poisoned grain or seed. The Poisoned Grain Prohibition Act (26 & 27 Vict. s. 113) imposes penalties upon persons selling or exposing for sale, and upon persons sowing or causing to be sown, poisoned grain, seed, or meal (ss. 2, 3), but solutions or infusions, or materials for preparing any grain or seed for bona fide use in agriculture are not within the act (s. 4).

Poisonous Drugs. The Drugging of Animals Act, 1875, 39 Vict. c. 13, imposes a penalty on any person (without the authority of the owner) administering poisonous drugs to horses or other animals.

Pole, a measure of five and a half yards.

Police [fr. πόλις, Gk., a city], the regulation and government of a country or city; the constabulary of a locality. See 2 & 3 Vict. c. 93; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 88; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 65; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 87; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 69; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 32; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 101; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 65; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 35; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 58; and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 48. Police Courts (Metropolis), courts in which stipendiary magistrates, chosen from barristers of a certain standings fit for the despatch of business. Their general duties and powers are the same as those of the unpaid magistracy, except that one of them may usually act in cases which would require to be heard before two other justices.

There are several police courts in and about the metropolis, severally situated in Bow Street, Covent Garden; Vincent Square, Westminster; Great Marlborough Street; Clerkenwell; Worship Street, Shoreditch; Kennington Lane, Lambeth; High Street, Marylebone; Blackman Street, Southwark; Thames Police Court at Stepney; Greenwich and Woolwich; Hammersmith and Wandsworth; besides the Mansion House and Guildhall in the City. Policies of Insurance, Court of. It was erected in pursuance of 43 Eliz. c. 12 (repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863), which enabled the Lord Chancellor yearly to grant a standing commission to the Judge of the Admiralty, the Recorder of London, two doctors of the civil law, two common lawyers, and eight merchants; any three of whom, one being a civilian or a barrister, were thereby, and by 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 23 (also repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863) empowered to determine in a summary way all causes concerning policies of insurance in London, with an appeal by way of bill to the Court of Chancery; but the jurisdiction being somewhat defective, as extending only to London, and to no other assurances but those on merchandise, and to suits brought by the assured only, and not by the insurers, such commissions had been long wholly disused in Blackston's time.—3 Bl. Com. 74.

Policy, the general principles by which a government is guided in its management of public affairs; or the legislature in its measures. See PUBLIC POLICY.

Policy of insurance, a contract between A. and B., that upon A.'s paying a premium equivalent to the hazard run, B. will indemnify or insure him against a particular event.

Upon a policy of marine or fire insurance, the remedy of the assured, in case of breach of contract by the insurer, is by covenant, where the policy is under seal; by assumpsit where it is not. On a policy of life insurance under seal, the remedy is by debt or covenant; on one not under seal, indebitatus assumpsit. See INSURANCE.

The 'Policies of Insurance Act, 1867' (30 & 31 Vict. c. 144), enabled assignees of life policies to sue thereon in their own names. The 'Policies of Marine Assurance Act, 1868' (31 & 32 Vict. c. 86), made a like provision in regard to marine policies. See also CHOSE.

Politice legibus non leges polititis adaptandæ. Hob. 154.—(States are to be adapted to the laws, and not the laws to States.)

Political arithmetic, an expression sometimes used to signify the art of making calculations on matters relating to a nation; the revenues, the value of land and effects, the produce of lands and manufactures, the population, and the general statistics of a country.

Political economy, the science which treats of the administration of the revenues of a nation; or the management and regulation of its resources, and productive property and labour. See Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations and Mill's Pol. Eco.

Political or Civil liberty, natural liberty, restrained by human law so far as is necessary and expedient for the public advantage. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 466.

Political Offices Pension Act, 1869. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 60.

Politics [fr. πολιτική, Gk.], the science of government; the art or practice of administering public affairs.

Polity [fr. πολιτεία, Gk.], the government of a city], the form of government; civil constitution.

Poll [fr. polle, pol., Dut., the top; fr. the Su. Goth. bolur, a globe], the head; a catalogue or list of persons; a register of heads. Also the act of registering votes at an election. See also DEED POLL.

Poll, to give a vote at an election; also to receive a vote. As to taking a poll under the Public Health Act, 1875, see sched. 3 to that Act.

Pollah, a government lease granted to a cultivator, either written on paper or engraved with a style on a leaf of the Fan-palm tree.—Indian.

Pollards, or Pollengers, trees which have been lopped, distinguished from timber-trees.—Plowd. 649.

Policitation, a promise before it is accepted.—Civ. Law.

Polligar, Polygar, the head of a village or district; also a military chieftain in the peninsula, answering to a hill zemindar in the northern circars.—Indian.

Polling places. As to these for the election of Members of Parliament, see 2 Wm. IV. c. 45; 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 102; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 168; and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 95; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102, ss. 34, 35; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 33.

Poll-money, Poll-silver, Poll-tax, a capitation-tax. It was formerly assessed by the head on every subject according to rank.

Polls, Challenge to the. See CHALLENGE.

Polyandry, the state of a woman who has several husbands. See BIGAMY.

Polygamy [fr. πολύς, Gk., many; and γάμος, marriage], plurality of wives or husbands. See BIGAMY.

It is prohibited by the Christian religion, but permitted by some others.

Polygarchy [fr. πολύς, Gk., many; and ἀρχή, government], that kind of government which is in the hands of many.

Pondus, poundage, i.e., a duty paid to the Crown according to the weight of merchandise.

Pondus regis, the standard weight appointed by our ancient kings.—Cowel.

Pone. If goods had been replevied by virtue of a replegiari facias (which was rarely if ever the case), the plaint in a county court was removed by writ of pone. It was an original writ obtained from the cursor, bearing teste after the entry of the plaint in the county court, and returnable on a general day in term, wheresoever, etc. It was also the proper writ to remove all suits which were before the sheriff by writ of justices. Obsolete.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 280.

Pone per vadium, an obsolete writ to the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear and answer the plaintiff's suit, on his putting in sureties to prosecute: it was so called from the words of the writ, pone per vadium et salvos plegios—‘put by gage and safe pledges, A. B., the defendant.’ It issued out of the Common Pleas, being grounded on the non-appearance of the defendant, at the return of the original writ; and thereby the sheriff was commanded to attach him by taking gage, i.e., certain of his goods which he should forfeit if he did not appear; or by making him find safe pledges or sureties, who should be amerced in case of his non-appearance.—3 Bl. Com. 210. Previous to the Uniformity of Process Act (2 Wm. IV. c. 39), it was also the first and immediate process, without any previous summons upon actions of trespass vi et armis, or for other injuries which, though not forcible, were trespasses against the peace, as deceit and conspiracy, where the violence of the wrong required a speedy remedy; and therefore the original writ commanded the defendant to be at once attached without any warning. These actions are now commenced by a writ of summons.—1 & 2 Vict. c. 110.

Ponendis in assisis, an abolished writ to empanel juries.—F. N. B. 165.

Ponendum in ballium, a writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable.—Reg. Orig. 133.

Ponendum sigillum ad exceptionem, a writ by which justices were required to put their seals to exceptions exhibited by a defendant against a plaintiff's evidence, verdict, or other proceedings before them, according to the stat. West. 2, 13 Ed. I. st. 1, c. 31. See BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Pontage [fr. pons, Lat., a bridge], duty paid for the reparation of bridges; also, a due to the lord of the fee for persons or merchandises that pass over rivers, bridges, etc.—Cowel.

Pontibus reparandis, a writ directed to the sheriff, etc., requiring him to charge one or more to repair a bridge.—Reg. Orig. 153.

Pool, a small lake of standing water. By the grant of a pool, both the land and water will pass.—Co. Litt. 5.

Poor Law Amendment Act, 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76. See POOR LAWS.

Poor Law Board. See POOR LAWS.

Poor Laws. The poor of England, till the time of Henry VIII., subsisted entirely upon private benevolence, and the charity of well-disposed Christians. See 5 Reeves, 18.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2 (generally considered the foundation of the modern poor law) overseers of the poor are appointed in every parish; the churchwardens of every parish are to be overseers of the poor; and besides these, there are appointed, as overseers in each parish, two, three, or four, but not more, of the inhabitants, such last-mentioned overseers to be substantial householders, and to be nominated yearly on the 25th March, or within 14 days after, by two justices dwelling near the parish.—54 Geo. III. c. 91.

Their duty, according to this statute, was 1st, to provide work for all who had no means to maintain themselves, and used no trade; and 2ndly, to raise sums for the relief of the lame, impotent, old, blind, and other poor not able to work. For these purposes they had power to levy rates upon the inhabitants of the parish.

By 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76 (the Poor Law Amendment Act), the administration of the parochial funds, and the management of the poor throughout the country, were placed for five years under the control of a central board of three (the Crown being empowered to appoint a fourth, by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, s. 119), called 'The Poor Law Commissioners,' who had power to make preparations for the guidance of the parochial authorities (whether consisting of guardians, select vestries, or overseers), and who were aided by a certain number of assistant commissioners. This commission was subsequently extended to the year 1847, and was then superseded. But in lieu thereof a new board of commissioners was established (for five years), by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 109, as 'Commissioners for administering the Laws for the Relief of the Poor in England,' to consist of the Lord President of the Council, Lord Privy Seal, Home Secretary, and Chancellor of the Exchequer, and such other as Her Majesty by letters-patent or commission shall appoint; and, to this board, afterwards called the 'Poor Law Board' (12 & 13 Vict. c. 133, s. 21), and perpetuated, after many continuances, by the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1867, all the powers and duties of the former Poor Law Commissioners were transferred. The person first named in such letters-patent or commission was 'President'; and all general rules—a term which extends to all rules directed to affect more than one union—promulgated by this commission, must have been under the seal of the body, and under the hands of a quorum, of whom the president must have been one, and any such rule might be disallowed by Her Majesty in Council. They were, moreover, directed once a year to submit to parliament a report of their proceedings. By the act in question (10 & 11 Vict. c. 109) the commissioners had power to direct that the relief of the poor in any parish be administered by a board of guardians, elected by the owners of property and ratepayers in the parish, and to appoint inspectors to visit workhouses, and to be present at meetings of guardians, etc. They also possessed the power of consolidating several parishes into one united body under a single board of guardians, elected by the owners and ratepayers of the parishes; and the united parishes have a common workhouse, and all the cost of the relief of the poor, and the expenses of burial and vaccination and registration, are charged upon the common fund of the union (28 & 29 Vict. c. 79, s. 1). In unions or incorporations, where there is no common fund, where the common fund is not calculated on an equal basis, they may, if they desire, adopt the foregoing provisions (s. 14). By 'The Local Government Board Act, 1871' (34 & 35 Vict. c. 70), all powers and duties vested in or imposed on the Poor Law Board became vested in the 'Local Government Board,' to consist of a president to be appointed by Her Majesty, and of the following ex officio members, that is to say, the Lord President of Her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, all Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State for the time being, the Lord Privy Seal, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer (s. 3).

The following are the principal statutes passed since 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 76, for the continuation and amendment of the modern poor-law system: 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 69; 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 107; 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 50; 1 & 2 Vict. cc. 25 & 56; 2 & 3 Vict. cc. 83, 84; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 42; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 57; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 109; 11 & 12 Vict. cc. 31, 82, 110, 111; 12 & 13 Vict. cc. 13, 103; 13 & 14 Vict. cc. 11, 101; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 105; 15 & 16 Vict. cc. 14, 59; 20 Vict. c. 13, which expired in 1860; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55, amended by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 113; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 106; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 45; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 2; 39 & 40 Vict. c. 61. Consult Chitty's Statutes, vol. v., tits. 'Poor'; Poor (Apprentices), Poor (Bastards), Poor (Rating), Poor (Settlement and Removal), and Poor (Metropolis).

The 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 113; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 105, amend the laws relating to the removal of the poor. By the temporary Act of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 110, continued by 26 & 27 Vict. cc. 4 and 91, the guardians of certain unions in the counties where great distress was then existing, in consequence of the failure in the cotton supply, are enabled, in certain cases, to throw a portion of the rates of a particular parish upon the union in which it is situated; and power is given to the Poor Law Board to authorize the borrowing of a sum of money on the credit of the common fund of the union; or to call on the several unions in the county for contributions. See also 26 & 27 Vict. cc. 70 and 81.

The duty of making and levying the poor-rate or parochial fund, out of which the relief is to be afforded, still belongs, as before the late changes in the law of relief, to the churchwardens and overseers; and the concurrence of the inhabitants is not necessary. But for the better execution of these duties, the recent acts relating to the amendment of the poor law authorize the appointment of collectors and assistant overseers. The rate is raised prospectively for some given portion of the year, and upon a scale adapted to the probable exigencies of the parish; and the Act of Elizabeth directs that it should be raised by 'taxation of every inhabitant,' parson, vicar, and other, and of every occupier of lands, houses, tithes impropriate, appropriations of tithes, coal mines, or saleable underwoods in the parish.' Now by the 'Rating Act, 1874' (37 & 38 Vict. c. 54), the liability to rates is extended to (1) land used for a plantation or wood, or for the growth of saleable underwood, and not subject to any right of common; (2) rights of fowling, shooting, taking, or killing game or rabbits, and fishing, when severed from the occupation of the land; and (3) mines of every kind not mentioned in the Act of Elizabeth. As an occupier, a man is rateable for all lands which he occupies in the parish, whether he is resident or not; but the tenant and not the landlord is considered as the occupier within this statute.

By 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 1, no rate can be deemed valid unless it be allowed by two justices, and by 17 Geo. II. c. 3, public notice thereof is to be given at the parish church on the Sunday next after the same has been allowed. The allowance by the justices is a mere matter of form; but after allowance and publication, any person aggrieved by the rate, and having reasonable objection to it, as irregular or unequal, may appeal against it to the next practicable quarter sessions of the county, riding, or division, or, in some cases, of the corporation or franchise in which the parish is situate. As to the recovery of poor rates, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 82.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 63—69. By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 116, provision is made for giving shelter to the casual poor (wanderers, etc.) each night. And see 34 & 35 Vict. c. 108. Consult Burn's Justice, voce 'Poor.'

The poor in Ireland had, till of late years, no relief but from private charity. But by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 56, intituled 'An Act for the more effectual Relief of the destitute Poor in Ireland,' the authority of the poor law commissioners was extended to that part of the realm. There is now an Irish Board of Commissioners. This Act has been amended by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 1; 4 & 5 Vict. c. 41; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 92; 10 & 11 Vict. cc. 31, 90; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 25; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 68; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 37. As to the relief of the poor in Scotland, see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 83; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86, s. 6; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 117.

Pope [anciently pape, fr. πάππας, Gr., father], the bishop of Rome, and supreme head of the Roman Catholic Church.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 168—185.

Populace, or Populacy [fr. populous, Lat.], the vulgar; the multitude.

Popular action, brought by one of the public to recover some penalty given by statute to any one who chooses to sue for it. See QUI TAM ACTION.

Populous parishes. For their spiritual improvement, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94; and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104.

Portecting, producing for examination or taxation, as portecting a bill of costs, by a proctor.

Portatica, port-duties charged on ships.

Porter, an officer who carries a white or silver rod before the justices in eyre, so called à portando virgam; also, a person employed to carry messages, parcels, etc. Porters in the City of London are regulated by the corporation.

Porterage, a kind of duty formerly paid at the custom-house to those who attended the water-side, and belonged to the package-office; but it is now abolished; also, the charge made for sending parcels.

Portgreve, or Portreeve, a magistrate in certain sea-coast towns.—Cowel.

Portion, that part of a person's estate which is given or left to a child.

There are two ways of raising portions, one by sale or mortgage, the other by perception of profits. Interest is payable on portions from the time they become due. All causes and matters connected with the raising of portions or other charges on lands, are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34).

Portioner, a minister, who serves a benefice, together with others, so called because he has only a portion of the tithes or profits of the living; also, an allowance which a vicar commonly has out of a rectory or impropriation.—Cowel.

Portmen, the burgesses of Ipswich and of the Cinque Ports.—Camden.

Portmote, a court held in haven towns or ports, and sometimes in inland counties.

Portoria, duties paid in ports on merchandise.—Civil Law.

Ports, harbours; safe stations for ships.—16 & 17 Vict. c. 107. See HAVENS; and 1 Br. & Had. Com. 314, and 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 499.

Portsale, a public sale of goods to the highest bidder; also a sale of fish as soon as it is brought into the haven.—Cowel.

Positio, a claim.

Positive evidence, proof of the very fact, opposed to negative evidence.

Positive law. Law which is not an enforcement of the moral law, and to which disobedience is malum prohibitum, not malum in se. See MALA PROHIBITA; MALA IN SE.

Posito uno oppositorum negatur alterum. 3 Rol. Rep. 422.—(One of two opposite positions being affirmed, the other is denied.)

Posse, a possibility. A thing is said to be in posse when it may possibly be; in esse when it actually is.

Posse comitatus, the power of a county, including the aid and attendance of all knights and other men above the age of fifteen within the county; but ecclesiastical persons, peers, and such as labour under any infirmity are not compellable to attend. It is called out when a riot is committed, a possession is kept on a forcible entry, or any force is used or rescue made contrary to the commandment of the Queen's writ, or in opposition to the execution of justice. See 1 Br. & Had. Com. 410.

Possessio. Paulus (Dig. 41, tit. 2; s. 1) observes, 'Possessio appellata est, ut et Labeo ait, à pedibus, quasi positio; quia naturaliter tenetur ab eo qui insistit.' The absurdity of the etymology and of the reason are equal. The elements of possidere are either pot (potis) and sedere; or the first part of the word is related to apud, and the cognate Greek form of πορί (πρός).

Possessio, in its primary sense, is the condition or power by virtue of which a man has such a mastery over a corporeal thing as to deal with it at his pleasure, and to exclude other persons from meddling with it. This condition or power is detention; and it lies at the bottom of all legal senses of the word possession. This possession is no legal state or condition, but it may be the source of rights, and it then becomes possessio in a juristical or legal sense. Still, even in this sense, it is not in any way to be confounded with property (proprietas). A man may have the juristical possession of a thing without being the proprietor, and a man may be the proprietor of a thing without having the juristical possession of it, and consequently, without having the detention of it (Dig. 41, tit. 2, s. 12). Ownership is the legal capacity to operate on a thing according to a man's pleasure, and to exclude everybody else from doing so. Possession, in the sense of detention, is the actual exercise of such a power as the owner has a right to exercise. The term possessio occurs in the Roman jurists in various senses. There is possessio generally, and possessio civilis, and possessio naturalis.

Possessio denoted, originally, bare detention; but this detention, under certain conditions, becomes a legal state, inasmuch as it leads to ownership through usucapio. Accordingly the word possessio, which required no qualification so long as there was no other notion attached to possessio, requires such qualification when detention becomes a legal state. This detention, then, when it has the conditions necessary to usucapio, is called possessio civilis, and all other possessio as opposed to civilis is naturalis.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.; Sand. Just., 5th ed., 135 et seq.

Possessio fratris, a seisin to turn the descent away from the brother of the half-blood to the sister of the whole blood; thus, if a father had two sons, A. and B., by different wives, these two brethren were not brethren of the whole blood, and therefore could never inherit to each other, but the estate rather escheated to the lord. Nay, even if the father died, and his lands descended to his eldest son, A., who entered thereon, and died seised without issue, still B. could not be heir to this estate, because he was only of the half-blood to A., the person last seised; but it descended to a sister (if any) of the whole blood to A.; for in such cases the maxim was, that the seisin, or possessio fratris, made the sister the heiress. Yet, had A. died without entry, then B. might have inherited, not as heir to A., his half-brother, but as heir to their common father, who was the person last actually seised. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 421.

Possessio fratris de feodo simplici facit sororem esse hæredem. 3 Rep. 41.—(The brother's possession of an estate in fee simple makes the sister to be heir.) Consult Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 532.

Possession, the state of owning or having a thing in one's own hands or power; the thing possessed.

It is either actual, where a person enters into lands or tenements descended or conveyed to him; apparent, which is a species of presumptive title where land descended to the heir of an abator, intruder, or disseisor, who died seised; in law, when lands, etc., have descended to a man, and he has not actually entered into them; or naked, that is, mere possession, without colour of right.

Possession is nine-tenths of the law. This maxim is not to be taken to be true to the full extent, so as to mean that the person in possession can only be ousted by one whose title is nine times better than his, but it places in a strong light the legal truth that every claimant must succeed by the strength of his own title and not by the weakness of his antagonist's. For instance, if the claimant be able to show a descent from the grantor of the estate, perfect except in one link of the chain, and the man in possession be a perfect stranger, the latter shall keep the estate; and so, also, if the claimant be a natural son of the last owner and adopted by him, and declared by him to be designed as his heir, yet if he die without making a will in his favour, a stranger in possession has a better title.

Possession, Writ of, the process of execution in an action of ejectment. A judgment for the recovery, or for the delivery of the possession, of land may be enforced by writ of possession (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XLII., r. 3); and this in the manner formerly used in actions of ejectment in the Superior Courts of Common Law (Ord. XLVIII., r. 1). Where by any judgment any person therein named is directed to deliver up possession of any land to some other person, the person prosecuting such judgment shall, without any order for that purpose, be entitled to sue out a writ of possession on filing an affidavit showing due service of such judgment and that the same has not been obeyed (r. 2). See EJECTMENT; HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM.

Possessory action, the action of trespass, the gist of which is the injury to the possession; a plaintiff, therefore, cannot maintain it, unless at the moment of the injury he was in actual, or constructive, immediate, and exclusive possession.—3 Br. & Had. Com. 268, 273.

Possibilitas post dissolutionem executionis nunquam reviviscatur. 1 Rol. Rep. 321.—(Possibility is never revived after the dissolution of the execution.)

Possibilitas, an act wilfully done, as impossibilitas is a thing done against the will.

Possibility, expectation, an uncertain thing, which may or may not happen.

It is either near, or ordinary, as where an estate is limited to one after the death of another; or remote, or extraordinary, as where it is limited to a man, provided he marries a certain woman, and that she shall die and he shall marry another.

Possibility on a possibility, a remote possibility, as if a remainder be limited in particular to A.'s son John, or Edward, it is bad if he have no son of that name, for it is too remote a possibility that he should not only have a son, but a son of that particular name.—Cholmley's case, 2 Rep. 51.

Post, after: occurring in a report or a textbook, is used to send the reader to a subsequent part of the book.

Post, a conveyance for letters or dispatches. The word is derived from positi, the horses carrying the letters or despatches being kept or placed at fixed stations. The word is also applied to the person who conveys the letters to the houses where he takes up and lays down his charge, and to the stages or distances between house and house. Hence the phrases, post-boy, post-horse, post-house, etc. See POSTAGE.

Post, Writs of entry in, an abolished writ given by statute of Marlbridge, 52 Hen. III. c. 30, which provided, that when the number of alienations or descents exceeded the usual degrees, a new writ should be allowed, without any mention of degrees at all.

Postage, the duty or charge imposed on letters or parcels conveyed by post. See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 85; and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 79. As to the postage on letters to seamen and soldiers whilst on active service, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 65. By 34 & 35 Vict. c. 30, reduction of rates of postage between places in the United Kingdom may be effected by warrant of the Treasury. A warrant of the Treasury has since been issued accordingly. See 33 & 34 Vict. c. 79, and title POST OFFICE. A treaty has now been made, regulating the postage between England and various other countries. See POSTAL CONVENTION.

Postal Convention, a treaty made at Berne in October, 1874, for the regulation of rates of postage and other matters connected with the Post Office, between England and various other countries. See 38 & 39 Vict. c. 22.

Post and Per. See PER AND POST.

Post Conquestum (after the Conquest).

Post dating bills or notes. A bill or note or cheque may be post-dated.—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 13, subs. 2.

Post diem (after the day).

Post disseisin, a writ that lay for him who having recovered lands or tenements by force of novel disseisin, was again disseised by the former disseisor.

Postea (afterwards), the return of the judge before whom a cause was tried, after a verdict, of what was done in the cause. It was endorsed on the nisi prius record by the associate.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 466.

Post entry. When goods are weighed or measured, and the merchant has got an account thereof at the Custom House, and finds his entry already made too small, he must make a post or additional entry for the surplusage, in the same manner as the first was done. As a merchant is always in time, prior to the clearing of the vessel, to make his post, he should take care not to over-enter. However, if this be the case, and an over-entry has been made, and more paid or bonded for customs than the goods really landed amount to, the land-waiter and surveyor must signify the same upon oath, and a statement be made and subscribed by the person so over-entered, that neither he, nor any other to his knowledge, had any of the said goods over-entered on board the said ship, or anywhere landed them without payment of custom; which oath must be attested by the collector or comptroller, or their deputies, who then compute the duties and set down on the back of the certificate the several sums to be paid.—McCull. Com. Dict.

Posteriora derogant prioribus.—(Things subsequent supersede things prior.)

Posteriority, coming after, the correlative of priority.

Posterity, succeeding generations, descendants, opposed to ancestry.

Post executionem status lex non patitur possibilitatem. 3 Buls. 108.—(After the execution of the estate the law suffers not a possibility.)

Post-fine, a duty formerly paid to the king for a fine acknowledged in his court; it was paid by the cognisee after the fine was fully passed. See FINE.

Posthumous child, a child born after its father's death; who by 10 & 11 Wm. III. c. 16, may take an estate as if born in its father's lifetime, although there be no limitation to trustees to preserve the contingent remainder to such child.

Postliminium, the return of a person to his own country, after having sojourned abroad. The right of Postliminy is that by virtue of which persons and things taken by an enemy in war are restored to their former state, upon coming again under the power of the nation to which they belonged.—International Law. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 487.

Post litem motam (after the commencement of litigation), depositions, etc. Where they relate to the subject of suit, they are not admissible when made after the litigation has commenced.—Stark. Evid., 4th ed., 421.

Postman, a barrister in the Court of Exchequer and Exchequer Division of the High Court, who had precedence in motions till the Exchequer was merged in the Queen's Bench Division.—3 Bl. Com. 28.

Postmaster-General. The head of the Post-office. He is usually one of the Ministry. He may now sit in the House of Commons.—29 & 30 Vict. c. 55. There were two before 1822, when one was abolished.

Post-mortem (after death), as a post-mortem examination of a corpse by a surgeon, in order to discover the cause of death. Such an examination may be ordered by a coroner under 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 89, s. 2.

Post-natus, the second son; also one born in Scotland after the accession of James I., and therefore not an alien in England. See also Co. Litt. 391.

Post-note, a bank-note, intended to be transmitted to a distant place by the public mail, and made payable to order; differing in this from a common bank-note, which is payable to the bearer.

Post-nuptial settlement, a settlement made after marriage; it is generally deemed voluntary unless made pursuant to written articles entered into before the marriage. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Post-obit bond. A bond, conditioned to be void on the payment by the obligor of a sum of money upon the death of another person. In most cases the person upon whose death it is so payable is one from whom the obligor expects to derive some property. Post-obit bonds, and other securities of a like nature, are set aside, when made by heirs and expectants, as frauds upon the parents and other ancestors, unless the obligee or person dealing with such heir can prove satisfactorily that the stipulated payment is not more than a just indemnity for the hazard. Even the sale of a post-obit bond at public auction will not necessarily give it validity, or free it from the imputation of being obtained under the pressure of necessity. See BOND; EXPECTANT HEIR.

Post-office. The post-office, or duty of carrying letters, owes its establishment to the Parliament of 1643. There existed post-masters in much earlier times, but their business was confined to the furnishing of post-horses to persons who were desirous to travel expeditiously, and to the despatching of extraordinary packets upon special occasions. King James I. originally erected a post-office under the control of one Matthew de Quester, or de l'Equester, for the conveyance of letters to and from foreign parts, which office was afterwards claimed by Lord Stanhope, but was confirmed and continued to William Frizell and Thomas Witherings by King Charles I., A.D. 1632, for the better accommodation of the English merchants. In 1635 the same prince erected a letter office for England and Scotland, under the same direction of Thomas Witherings, and settled certain rates of postage, but this extended only to a few of the principal roads.

The times of carriage were uncertain, and the postmasters on each road were required to furnish the mail with horses at the rate of twopence halfpenny per mile. Witherings was superseded for abuses in the execution of both his offices, in 1640, and they were sequestered into the hands of Philip Burlmachy, to be exercised under the care and oversight of the King's principal Secretary of State. With the breaking out of the civil war, came confusions and interruptions, occasioned in the conduct of the letter office, and about that time the outline of the present more extended and regular plan seems to have been conceived by Prideaux, Attorney-General to the Commonwealth after the death of King Charles. He was chairman of a committee in 1643 for considering what rates should be set upon inland letters, and afterwards appointed postmaster by an ordinance of both Houses, in the execution of which office he established a weekly conveyance of letters into all parts of the nation, thereby saving to the public the charge of maintaining postmasters; and his own emoluments being probably very considerable, the Common Council of London endeavoured to erect another post-office in opposition to his, till checked by a resolution of the House of Commons, declaring that the office of postmaster is and ought to be in the sole power and disposal of the Parliament. This office was afterwards farmed by one Manley, in 1654, but in 1657, a regular post-office was erected by the authority of the Protector and his Parliament, upon nearly the same model as has been ever since adopted, and with the same rates of postage as continued till the reign of Queen Anne. After the restoration a similar office, with some improvements, was established by statute 12 Car. II. c. 35, but, by subsequent statutes, the rates of letters were altered, and some farther regulations added, and penalties enacted to confine the carriage of letters to the public office only, except in some few cases.—1 Bl. Com. 321. The more recent statutes relating to the post-office are 1 & 2 Vict. cc. 97, 98; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 52; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96 (the Penny Postage Act); 7 & 8 Vict. c. 49 (as to Colonial Posts); 10 & 11 Vict. c. 85; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 88; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 66 (enabling Colonial legislature to establish inland posts); 23 & 24 Vict. c. 65; 33 & 34 Vict. c. 79; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 30; and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 22. See POSTAGE and POST-OFFICE TELEGRAPHS. As to offences relating to the Post-office, see LARCENY.

Post-office Lands Act, 1863, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 43. This Act enables the Postmaster-General to sell or otherwise dispose of land.

Post-office Order, a letter of credit furnished by the Government at a small charge, to facilitate the transmission of money. See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96, s. 38; 11 & 12 Vict. c. 88.

Post-office Savings Banks Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 14, amended by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 14, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 73. See also 26 & 27 Vict. c. 87; 29 & 30 Vict. cc. 5, 43; and see SAVINGS BANKS.

Post-office Telegraphs. By 31 & 32 Vict. c. 110, Her Majesty's Postmaster General was authorized to acquire, work, and maintain electric telegraphs, and to purchase the undertakings of existing companies. This Act has been followed by the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 73; 33 & 34 Vict. c. 88; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 83; and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 83.

Postponement of Trial, may be applied for on sufficient grounds, which must appear by affidavit. Such grounds are the absence of an important witness, who can be expected to be produced in a short time; or a state of public feeling in the present which will prevent either party having a fair trial. The postponement should be applied for before the other side has time to try, and will be allowed upon such terms as the court thinks fit. It is a ground for a new trial if a judge improperly refuse to put off a trial.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1521.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 21, the judge may (upon any trial), if he think it expedient for the interests of justice, postpone or adjourn the trial for such time and upon such terms, if any, as he shall think fit. See TRIAL.

No person prosecuted shall be entitled to traverse or postpone the trial of any indictment found against him at any session of the peace, session of oyer and terminer, or session of gaol delivery; provided always, that if the court, upon the application of the person so indicted, or otherwise, shall be of opinion that he ought to be allowed a further time, either to prepare for his defence or otherwise, such court may adjourn the trial of such person to the next subsequent session, upon such terms as to bail or otherwise as to such court shall seem meet, and may respite the recognizances of the prosecutor and witnesses accordingly; in which case the prosecutor and witnesses shall be bound to attend to prosecute and give evidence at such subsequent session without entering into any fresh recognizance for that purpose.—14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 27.

Postulatio, the first act in a criminal proceeding.—Civ. Law.

Postulation, a petition.

Poste-vene, to come after.

Potentia est duplex, remota et propinqua; et potentia remotissima et vana est quæ nunquam venit in actum. 11 Co. 51.—(Possibility is of two kinds, remote and near; that which never comes into action is a power the most remote and vain.)

Potentia propinqua (common possibility).

Potestas suprema seipsam dissolvere potest, ligare non potest. Bac. Max. Reg. 19.—(The supreme power may loose, but cannot bind, itself.)

Potior est conditio defendentis. (The condition of a defendant is the better.)

Potior est conditio possidentis. (The condition of one possessing is the better.)—Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 719. See POSSESSION IS NINE-TENTHS OF THE LAW.

Potwallers, or Potwallopers, persons who cooked their own food, and were on that account in some boroughs entitled to vote for Members of Parliament.—See 2 Steph. Com.

Pound [fr. pund, Sax.; pondo, Lat.], a certain weight, consisting in troy weight of 12, in avoirdupois of 16 ounces; the sum of 20s.;—so called because in Saxon times 240 pence weighed a pound. See Lambard, 219, voce 'Libra.'

Pound [fr. pindan, Sax.], a penfold, an enclosure, a prison in which beasts are enclosed, for any damage or trespass done by them, until they are replevied or redeemed. It is either overt, i.e., open overhead; or covert, i.e., close. A pound-keeper is bound to receive everything offered to his custody, and is not answerable if the thing be illegally impounded.—1 T. R. 62. See 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 12; 11 Geo. II. c. 19; and as to feeding cattle impounded, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 92, ss. 5 & 6. As to pound breach and rescue, see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 30.

Pound of land, an uncertain quantity of land, said to be about 52 acres.

Poundage, a certain sum deducted from a pound. Sheriff's poundage on writs of ca. sa. was abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, s. 3. The amount of their poundage upon a fi. fa. is 1s. for every 20s. if the sum levied does not exceed 100l., and 6d. for every 20s. over and above that sum. The penalty is 40l. if more is exacted.—28 Eliz. c. 4; 7 Wm. IV. c. 1 Vict. c. 55; 2 Steph. Com. As to poundage on the collection of the Income Tax, see 35 & 36 Vict. c. 82.

Pound-breach, breaking open a pound in order to take cattle; it is an indictable offence, and also, in case the cattle were damage feasant, an offence punishable on summary conviction under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 30.

Pour faire proclamer, an ancient writ addressed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring him to make proclamation concerning nuisances, etc.—Fitzherbert's Na. Brev. 176.

Pourparty, to divide the lands which fall to parceners.—O. N. B. 11.

Pourpresture [fr. pourpris, Fr., an enclosure], anything done to the nuisance or hurt of the Queen's demesnes, or the highways, etc., by enclosure or building, endeavouring to make that private which ought to be public. The difference between a pourpresture and a public nuisance is that pourpresture is an invasion of the jus privatum of the Crown; but where the jus publicum is violated it is a nuisance. Skene makes three sorts of this offence: (1) against the Crown; (2) against the lord of the fee; (3) against a neighbour.—2 Inst. 38; 1 Reeves, 156.

Pour seisir terres, an ancient writ whereby the Crown seized the land which the wife of its deceased tenant, who held in capite, had for her dower, if she married without leave; it was grounded on the statute De Prærogativa Regis, 7.—17 Edw. II. st. 1, c. 4. It is abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Poursuivant, a king's messenger; those employed in martial causes were called Poursuivants-at-Arms.

There are, at present, in the Herald's Office, four poursuivants, distinguished by the names following:—

(1) Rouge Croix, instituted at an uncertain period, but generally considered to be the most ancient. The title was doubtless derived from the cross of St. George.

(2) Blue Mantle. An office instituted by Edward III. or Henry V., and named either in allusion to the colour of the arms of France or to that of the robes of the Order of the Garter.

(3) Rouge Dragon. This poursuivance was founded by Henry VII. on the day before his coronation, the name being derived from the ensign of his ancestor, Cadwaladyr. He also assumed a red dragon as the dexter supporter of his arms.

(4) Portcullis. This office was instituted by the same monarch, from one of whose badges the title was derived.

As to the office of poursuivant of the Great Seal, see 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81.

Pourveyance, or Purveyance, the providing necessities for the sovereign, by buying them at an appraised valuation in preference to all others, and even without the owner's consent. Indeed it was a royal right of spoil, and was long since abolished.—12 Car. II.

c. 24; 3 Hallam's Middle Ages, c. viii., part 3, p. 148; and 1 Hallam's Const. Hist. c. vi., p. 304.

Pourveyor, or Purveyor, a buyer; one who provided for the royal household.

Powdikes. Destroying them in the fens of Norfolk and Ely is felony by 22 Hen. VIII. c. 11.

Power, an authority which one person gives to another to act for him, or to do certain acts, as to make leases, raise portions, or the like; also to modify the use of an estate, of which he has the disposal; it is an authority enabling one person to dispose of an interest which is vested in another.—2 Lill. Abr. 339.

Powers are either common-law authorities, declarations, or directions, operating only on the conscience of the persons in whom the legal interest is vested, or declarations or directions deriving their effect from the Statute of Uses. A power given by a will to A., an executor, to sell an estate, to whom no estate is devised, and a power given by an Act of Parliament to sell estates, as in the instance of the Land Tax Redemption Acts, are both common-law authorities. The estate passes by force of the will or Act of Parliament, and the person who executes the power merely nominates the party to take the estate. A power of attorney is also a common-law authority. A power to dispose of an estate or sum of money of which the legal estate is vested in another, is a power of the second sort. The legal interest is not divested by the execution of the power, but equity will compel the person seised of it to clothe the estate created with the legal right. Powers deriving their effect from the Statute of Uses are either given to a person who has an estate limited to him by the deed creating the power, or who had an estate in the land at the time of the execution of the deed; or to a stranger, to whom no estate is given, but the power is to be exercised for his own benefit; or to a mere stranger to whom no estate is given, and the power is for the benefit of others.

Powers are either—

(1) Collateral, which are given to strangers, i.e., to persons who have neither a present nor future estate or interest in the land. These are also called simply collateral, or powers not coupled with an interest, or powers not being interests. These terms have been adopted to obviate the confusion arising from the circumstance that powers in gross have been by many called powers collateral.—Savile v. Blackett, 1 P. Wms. 777.

(2) Relating to the land, which are either—

(a) Appendant or appurtenant, because they strictly depend upon the estate limited to the person to whom they are given. Thus, where an estate for life is limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, a lease granted under the power may operate wholly out of the life-estate of the party executing it, and must in every case have its operation out of his estate during his life. Such an estate must be created, which will attach on an interest actually vested in himself; or,

(β) In gross, which are given to a person who had an interest in the estate at the time of the execution of the deed creating the power, or to whom an estate is given by the deed, but which enable him to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him. Of necessity, therefore, where a man seised in fee settles his estate on others, reserving to himself only a particular power, the power is in gross. A power to a tenant for life to appoint the estate after his death amongst his children, a power to jointure a wife after his death, a power to raise a term of years to commence from his death for securing younger children's portions, are all powers in gross.

A power may, with reference to the particular estates in the land over which it extends, have different aspects; it may, in regard to one, be a power appendant; in respect to another, a power in gross. Thus where an estate is settled to A. for life, remainder to B. in tail, remainder to A. in fee, and A. has a power to jointure his wife after his death, this power is in gross as to the estate for life, but appendant or appurtenant as to the remainder in fee. It may affect the latter, but never can attach on the former.

An important distinction is established between general and particular powers. By a general power we understand a right to appoint to whomsoever the donee pleases. By a particular power it is meant that the donee is restricted to some objects designated in the deed creating the power, as to his own children.

A power is expounded strictly; therefore, if a man have power to make leases generally, this extends to make leases in possession only, and not in reversion.

Powers appendant may be destroyed by release, bargain, and sale, or feoffment; powers in gross, by feoffment or release; but powers simply collateral cannot be destroyed by the act of the person to whom they are given. As the appointor is merely an instrument, the appointee shall be in by the original deed.

Appointments by will are to be executed like other wills, and to be valid, although other required solemnities are not observed.—7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 10.

A deed hereafter executed in the presence of and attested by two or more witnesses in the manner in which deeds are ordinarily executed and attested shall, as respects the execution and attestation thereof, be a valid execution of a power of appointment by deed or by any instrument in writing not testamentary, notwithstanding it shall have been expressly required that a deed or instrument in writing made in exercise of such power should be executed or attested with some additional or other form of execution, or attestation or solemnity. But this provision shall not operate to defeat any direction in the instrument creating the power that the consent of any particular person shall be necessary to a valid execution, or that any act shall be performed in order to give validity to any appointment, having no relation to the mode of executing and attesting the instrument, and nothing shall prevent the donee of a power from executing it conformably to the power by writing or otherwise than by an instrument executed and attested as an ordinary deed, and to any such execution of a power this provision shall not extend.—22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 12.

By the 37 & 38 Vict. c. 37, it is provided that appointments under powers shall be valid notwithstanding one or more objects are excluded, in certain cases.

Poyning's Act, or STATUTE OF DROGHEDA, an act of parliament, made in Ireland, 10 Hen. VII. c. 22, A.D. 1495; so called because Sir Edward Poyning was lieutenant there when it was made, whereby all general statutes before then made in England were declared of force in Ireland, which, before that time, they were not.—12 Rep. 109; 3 Hall. Const. Hist. c. xviii. p. 361; 1 Br. & Had. Com. 112.

The Act was amended by 28 Hen. VIII. c. 4 (Irish), of which the effect is explained by 28 Hen. VIII. c. 20 (Irish): its principle was extended to private estate acts, and certain shipping, etc., acts, by 'Yelverton's Act,' 21 & 22 Geo. III. c. 48 (Irish).

Poyning's Laws. The above Act, and 10 Hen. VII. c. 4 (Irish), whereby bills could not be introduced into the Irish Parliament until they had been certified to, and approved by, the Sovereign of England, amended by 3 & 4 P. & M. c. 4 (Irish), and 11 Eliz. st. 3, c. 8 (Irish), and substantially repealed by 21 & 22 Geo. III. c. 47 (Irish).

Practice, the form and manner of conducting and carrying on suits, actions, or prosecutions at law or in equity, civil or criminal, through their various stages, from the commencement to final judgment and execution, according to the principles and the rules laid down by the several courts. Practice has been said to be a word 'applying to all the proceedings by which a cause is brought to judgment' and execution; but this definition has been questioned in the House of Lords by a member of the House, who thus combats the view propounded by a most learned judge (Willes, J.). 'In its ordinary meaning it is undoubtedly distinguished from the pleadings; no unimportant part of the proceedings by which a cause is brought to judgment. The learned judge also says practice is no word of art. Here again I must beg leave to differ from him. Practice, even standing by itself, applies to a part of the proceedings of a court, which is sufficiently distinguishable from the rest to be the subject of books of practice.'—Per Lord Chelmsford in the case of the Attorney-General v. Sillem, on appeal from the Exchequer Chamber (10 Jur. N. S. 457). See also the judgment of Lord Chancellor Westbury, in the same case.

Practice Court. See BAIL COURT, and QUEEN'S BENCH.

Practitioner, he who is engaged in the exercise or employment of any art or profession.

Præceptories, a kind of benefices, so called because they were possessed by the more eminent Templars, whom the Chief Master by his authority created and called Præceptores Templi.—Mon. Angl. ii. 543.

Præcipe (command), a slip of paper upon which the particulars of a writ are written; it is lodged in the office out of which the required writ is to be issued.

A præcipe must be filed by the party issuing or his solicitor before a writ of execution is issued, which præcipe must contain the title of the action, the reference to the record, the date of the judgment, and of the order, if any, for execution, and the names of those against whom it issued, and must be signed by the party or solicitor issuing it (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XLII., r. 10). For forms of such præcipes, see Ibid., App. E.

Also, an original writ, commanding the defendant, in the alternative, to do the thing required, or show the reason why he has not done it; and the writ is drawn up in the form of a præcipe or command, to do something, or show cause to the contrary, giving the defendant his choice to redress the injury, or stand the suit.—3 Bl. Com. 273. It is abolished.

Præcipe in capite, a writ out of Chancery for a tenant holding of the Crown in capite, viz., in chief.—Mag. Chart. c. 24.

Præcipe quod reddat, the form of a writ, which extended as well to a writ of right as to other writs of entry or possession, beginning, 'Præcipe A., quod reddat B. unum messagium,' etc.—O. N. B. 13. Abolished.

Præcipe quod teneat conventionem, the writ which commenced the action of covenant in fines, which are abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

Præcipe, Tenant to the, a person having an estate of freehold in possession, against whom the præcipe was brought by a tenant in tail, seeking to bar his estate by a recovery. If the latter was tenant in tail in possession, it was usual for him to convey a freehold estate to any indifferent person against whom the præcipe was brought. See RECOVERY; and 2 Br. & Had. Com. 541.

Præcipitium, the punishment of casting headlong from some high place.

Præcognita, things to be previously known in order to the understanding of something which follows.

Præda belli, booty, property seized in war.

Prædia stipendiaria, provincial lands belonging to the people.—Civ. Law.

Prædia tributaria, provincial lands belonging to the emperor.—Ibid.

Prædia volantia. In the duchy of Brabant, certain things moveable, such as beds, tables, and other heavy articles of furniture, were ranked amongst immoveables, and were called prædia volantia, or volatile estates.—2 Bl. Com. 428.

Prædial tithes [fr. prædium, Lat., ground], such as arise merely and immediately from the ground; as grain of all sorts, hops, hay, wood, fruit, herbs.—2 Bl. Com. 23; 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 722.

Prædict (aforsaid).—Hob. 6.

Prædict dominans, an estate to which a servitude is due; the ruling estate.—Colquhoun's Roman Civil Law, s. 937.

Prædium rusticum, heritage which is not destined for the use of man's habitation; such, for example, as lands, meadows, orchards, gardens, woods, even though they should be within the boundaries of a city.—Ibid., s. 937.

Prædium serviens, an estate which suffers or yields a service to another estate.—Ibid. s. 937.

Prædium urbanum, a building or edifice intended for the habitation and use of man, whether built in cities, or in the country.—Ibid. s. 937.

Præfectus Urbi; he was, from the time of Augustus, an officer who had the superintendence of the city and its police, with jurisdiction extending one hundred miles from the city, and power to decide both civil and criminal cases. As he was considered the direct representative of the emperor, much that previously belonged to the prætor urbanus fell gradually into his hands.—Ibid., s. 2395.

Præfectus Vigilum, the chief officer of the night watch. His jurisdiction extended to certain offences affecting the public peace, and even to larcenies. But he could inflict only slight punishments.—Ibid.

Præfectus villæ (the mayor of a town).

Præfine, the fee paid on suing out the writ of covenant, on levying fines, before the fine was passed.—2 Bl. Com. 350.

Præmium pudicitiae, the consideration given by the seducer of a chaste woman for her defilement.—2 P. Wms. 452.

Præmunire [a barbarous word for præmoneri, Lat., to be forewarned]. It is an offence so called from the words of the writ preparatory to the prosecution thereof: præmunire facias A. B. (cause A. B. to be forewarned) that he appear before us to answer the contempt wherewith he stands charged; which contempt is particularly recited in the preamble to the writ.

The statutes of præmunire were framed to encounter papal usurpation. The first of them was made in the twenty-seventh year of the reign of Edward III. (Barr. on Stat. 279), and was the foundation of all the subsequent statutes of præmunire, of which 16 Rich. II. c. 5, still unrepealed, is the 'Statute of Præmunire' generally so called, and incorporated by reference in subsequent statutes.

The original meaning of the offence is, then, introducing a foreign power into this land, and creating imperium in imperio, by paying that obedience to papal process which constitutionally belonged to the sovereign alone long before the Reformation. At that time the penalties of præmunire were indeed extended to more papal abuses than before, as the kingdom then entirely renounced the authority of the see of Rome, though not all the corrupted doctrines of the Church of Rome.

The penalties of præmunire were subsequently applied to other heinous offences in no way connected with papal aggression, e.g.:

By 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 8, to molest the possessors of abbey lands, granted by Parliament to Hen. VIII. and Edward VI. was a præmunire.

To obtain any stay of proceedings, other than by arrest of judgment or error, in any suit for a monopoly, is still a præmunire, by Jac. I. c. 3.

To assert maliciously and advisedly, by speaking or writing, that both or either House of Parliament have or has a legislative authority without the Sovereign, is still a præmunire by 13 Car. II. c. 1.

By the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. II. c. 2, s. 11, it is still a præmunire, and incapable of the royal pardon, besides other heavy penalties, to send any subject of this realm a prisoner, under certain exceptions in the act specified, into parts beyond the seas.

The punishment of the offence is, that, from the conviction, the defendant be out of the Crown's protection, and his lands and tenements, goods and chattels, are forfeited to the Crown; and that his body shall remain in prison during the royal pleasure, or, as some authorities have it, during life. It is not lawful, however, to kill any person attainted in a præmunire.—4 Br. & Had. Com. 101 et seq.; 4 Steph. Com.

Præmuniti, i.e., præmoniti. Co. Litt. 129. —(Forewarned, forearmed.)

Prænomen, the name of a person, distinguishing him from others of the same family. —Civil Law.

Præpositus, an officer next in authority to the alderman of a hundred, called præpositus regius; or a steward or bailiff of an estate, answering to the wicnere.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Also the person from whom descents are traced under the old canons.

Præpositus ecclesiæ, a church-reeve or churchwarden.

Præpositus villæ, a constable of a town, or petty constable.

Præscriptio est titulus ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens ab auctoritate legis. Co. Litt. 113.—(Prescription is a title by authority of law, deriving its force from use and time.)

Præsentia corporis tollit errorem nominis: et veritas nominis tollit errorem demonstrationis. Bac. Max. 224.—(The presence of the body cures error in the name: the truth of the name cures an error of description.)

Præstat cautela quam medela. Co. Litt. 304.—(Caution is better than cure.)

Præsumitur pro negante. (It is presumed for the negative.) The rule of the House of Lords when the numbers are equal on a motion.

Præsumptio, intrusion, or the unlawful taking of anything.—Leg. Hen. I. c. 11.

Præsumptio violenta valet in lege. Jenk.

Cent. 56.—(Strong presumption is valid in law).

Prætor Fidei-Commissarius, the judge at Rome, who enforced the performance of all fiduciary obligations and confidences. See 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 358.

Pragmatic sanction, a rescript or answer of the Sovereign, delivered by advice of his council to some college, order, or body of people, who consult him in relation to the affairs of the community. A similar answer given to an individual is simply called a rescript.—Civ. Law.

Pratique [fr. practica, Ital.], a license for the master of a ship to traffic in the ports of Italy upon a certificate that the place whence he came is not annoyed with any infectious disease.—Encyc. Lond.

Pratum bovis, or Carucæ, a meadow for oxen employed in tillage.

Praxis, use, practice.

Praxis judicum est interpret legum. Hob. 96.—(The practice of the judges is the interpreter of the laws.)

Prayer Book. See ACT OF UNIFORMITY; COMMON PRAYER.

Pray in aid, a petition made in a court of justice for the calling in of help from another that has an interest in the cause in question.

Preamble, introduction, preface; also, the beginning of an act of parliament, etc., serving to pourtray the intents of its framers, and the mischiefs to be remedied. See Maxwell on Stat. 39.

Pre-audience, the right of one to be heard before another.

The pre-audience of the bar is as follows:

- (1) The Queen's Attorney-General.
- (2) The Queen's Solicitor-General.
- (3) The Queen's Advocate-General.
- (4) The Queen's Premier-Serjeant (so constituted by special patent).
- (5) The Queen's Ancient Serjeant or the eldest amongst the Queen's Serjeants.
- (6) The Queen's Serjeants.
- (7) The Queen's Counsel, and those who have patents of precedence from the Crown, with a Queen Consort's Attorney and Solicitor-General.
- (8) Serjeants-at-Law.
- (9) The Recorder of London.
- (10) Advocates of the Civil Law.
- (11) Barristers according to the date of their call. See POSTMAN and TUBMAN, also LAST DAY OF TERM.

It was by a Royal Warrant, issued on the 14th day of December, 1814, that the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General acquired precedence and priority of rank over the Premier and Ancient Serjeants. See 2 Maule & Sel. 254. Before 1862, the Queen's Advocate always retained his precedence before the Attorney and Solicitor-General, since this warrant, as well as before it. He was invariably addressed first when the Secretaries of State, the Lord President of the Council, and other public functionaries communicated with the three law officers; he always signed all cases and reports first; he requested the assistance of the Attorney and Solicitor-General, whenever he thought fit; they never refused to attend consultations at his chambers; and he often appeared with them for the Crown in various courts, and constantly led one or both of them since 1814, as well as before that date. But on a fresh appointment being made in 1862, the Crown directed that for the future the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General should have precedence over the Queen's Advocate.

Consult the manuscript copy of the correspondence relating to the precedence of the law officers of the Crown presented to the Library of the Inner Temple in 1857, by Sir J. D. Harding, the then Queen's Advocate.

Prebend, a stipend granted in cathedral churches; also, but improperly, a prebendary. A simple prebend is merely a revenue; a prebend, with dignity, has some jurisdiction attached to it. The term prebend is generally confounded with canonicate; but there is a difference between them. The former is the stipend granted to an ecclesiastic in consideration of his officiating and serving in the church; whereas the canonicate is a mere title or spiritual quality which may exist independently of any stipend.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 674 n.

Prebenda, or Probanda, provisions, provender.

Prebendary, a stipendiary of a cathedral.

Precariæ, or Preces, day-works which the tenants of certain manors are bound to give their lords in harvest time. Magna precaria was a great or general reaping day.—Cowel.

Precarious loan. See next title.

Precarium, a contract by which the owner of a thing, at another's request, gives him the thing to use as long as the owner shall please. This was distinguished from an ordinary gratuitous loan, and in the Roman Law gave rise to different obligations on the part of the borrower.—See Story on Bail., ss. 227, 253, b.

Precatory words, expressions in a will, praying or recommending that a thing be done; e.g., that the name of a testator be taken by a legatee in addition to a legatee's own.

Preceptarium, the continuance of a suit by consent of both parties.—Cowel.

Precedence, or Precedency, the act or state of going before; adjustment of place.

The rules of precedence may be reduced to the following list, in which those marked * are entitled to the rank here allotted them by 31 Hen. Precedence, Patent of, a grant from the Crown to such barristers as it thinks proper to honour with that mark of distinction, whereby they are entitled to such rank and pre-audience as are assigned in their respective patents.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 274.

Precedent condition, such as must happen or be performed before an estate can vest or be enlarged. See CONDITION PRECEDENT.

Precedents, authorities or examples to be followed by courts of justice. Each of the three superior courts of common law was by the practice of the law bound to follow a decision of its own, or of either of the others on a point of law, and a decision of its own on a point of practice; but it was not bound to follow the decisions of another co-ordinate court on a point of practice. The same rules prevailed in the courts of equity. The Divisions of the High Court being parts of one and the same Court, each Division ordinarily considers itself bound by the decisions of the other Divisions upon points of practice as well as of law; and so of each Divisional Court; but in two cases where there was no appeal, a Divisional Court, inclined to disagree with a prior judgment of another Divisional Court upon the same point, has been strengthened in number, and so strengthened, has declined to follow such prior judgment. See Winyard v. Toogood, 52 L. J. M. C. 25.

The House of Lords is absolutely bound by its own prior decisions, although decided, on an equality of votes, in the negative, and nothing but an act of parliament will remove them. The decisions of a judge at Nisi Prius are not considered binding. Irish decisions and the decisions of foreign tribunals may be cited in default of English authorities, but they are not binding.

Precept, a rule authoritatively given; a mandate; a command in writing by a justice of the peace or other officer, for bringing a person or record before him; the direction of a sheriff to the proper officer to proceed to the election of members of parliament; a command to a sheriff to impanel a jury; also a provocation whereby one incites another to commit a felony.—Cowel.

Preces primariae, or Primæ, a right of the Crown to name to the first prebend that becomes vacant after the accession of the Sovereign, in every church of the empire. This right was exercised by the Crown of England in the reign of Edward I.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 670, n.

Precinct, a constable's district. 2. The immediate neighbourhood of a palace or court.

Precipe. See PRÆCIPE.

Precludi non (not to be barred), was the technical name of the commencement of a replication to a plea in bar (1 Chit. Pl. 627, 752), abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, s. 66.

Precognition, in Scotland, is the 'proof' of a witness committed to writing for use upon his examination. In criminal cases, the preliminary examination of witnesses usually conducted under the superintendence of the procurator fiscal.

Preconization [fr. praeconium, Lat., the office of a crier], proclamation.

Pre-contract. Where one of the parties to a marriage was under a prior agreement to marry a third person, such prior agreement was called a pre-contract. It was a canonical impediment to the marriage of either party. The ecclesiastical courts would formerly enforce this agreement, by compelling the parties to a public marriage, and if one of them had already married, such prior marriage would be void ab initio; but until thus avoided it was good. See 32 Hen. VIII. c. 28, and 2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 23, s. 2; Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, s. 53.

Predecessor, one who has preceded another, Burt. Com. pl. (378); the correlative of successor under the Succession Duty Act (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51, s. 2).

Predial. See PRÆDIAL.

Predicament, the condition of things concerning which a logical proposition may be stated.

Predicate (n. s.), that which is said concerning the subject in a logical proposition, as, the law is the perfection of common sense; perfection of common sense being affirmed concerning the law (the subject), is the predicate or thing predicated.

Predicate (v. a.), to affirm logically.

Pre-emption, Right of, the power of buying a thing before others; a privilege formerly allowed to the royal purveyor, but abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Prefer, to apply, to move for; as, 'to prefer for costs,' is a phrase for 'to apply for costs.'

Preferences, Fraudulent. See FRAUDULENT PREFERENCES

Preferential or preference shares, shares in a company which have priority as to payment of dividends of a fixed amount over the ordinary shares. The dividends are usually contingent upon the profits of each year, or half-year. In some cases, however, the arrears of dividend form an accumulating debt by the ordinary to the preference shareholders, the preference being described as a 'non-contingent' or a 'cumulative' preference.

Pregnancy, the state of having conceived, the most common signs of which are vomiting and suppression of the monthly discharge. It may be an 'illness' preventing the attendance of a witness. (Reg. v. Wellings, 3 Q.B.D. 426.)

Pregnancy, Plea of. When a woman is capitally convicted, and pleads her pregnancy, execution will be respite until she be delivered. See JURY-WOMEN.

Pregnant negative. See NEGATIVE PREGNANT.

Prejudice, Without, is a term given to overtures and communications between litigants before action, or after action, but before trial or verdict. The words import an understanding that if the negotiation fails, nothing that has passed shall be taken advantage of thereafter; so, if a defendant offer, without prejudice, to pay half the claim, the plaintiff must not rely on the offer as an admission of his having a right to some payment.

Prelate, an archbishop or bishop.

Prefector, a reader; a lecturer.

Preliminary Act, a document stating the time and place of a collision between vessels, the names of the vessels, and other particulars required to be filed by each solicitor in actions for damage by such collision unless the Court or a judge shall otherwise order. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 30.

Premier, a principal minister of state; the prime minister.

Premises, propositions antecedently supposed or proved; also houses or lands; also, that part in the beginning of a deed, which sets forth the grantor or grantee, and the land or thing granted or conveyed.

Premium, a consideration; something given to invite a loan or a bargain; as the annual payment upon insurances; the consideration paid to the assignor by the assignee of a lease, or to the transferor by the transferee of shares or stock, etc.

Premunire. See PRÆMUNIRE.

Prender [fr. prendre, Fr.], to take anything as of right before it is offered.

Prender de baron (to take a husband).—Cowel.

Prepense, forethought, preconceived, contrived beforehand. See MALICE.

Prerogative, a peculiar or exclusive privilege. See QUEEN; and 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 465—527; and 1 Br. & Had. Com., 286 et seq.

Prerogative Court. The two archbishops have each of them a prerogative court. The appeal is to the Privy Council.—2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 92. But see 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 4, which took away their jurisdiction in testamentary matters.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 185, 192.

Prerogative writs, processes issued upon extraordinary occasions on proper cause shown. They are the writs of procedendo, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus certiorari.

Presbyter, a priest, elder, or honourable person.

Presbyterians, a sect of Christians chiefly to be found in Scotland and Ireland (see 34 Vict. c. 24), who do not acknowledge the authority of bishops.

Presbyterian, a presbytery; that part of the church where divine offices are performed, applied to the choir or chancel, because it was the place appropriated to the bishop, priest, and other clergy; while the laity were confined to the body of the church.—Mon. Angl. i. 243.

Prescription [fr. prescribo, Lat.], rules produced and authorized by long usage. It is known in the Roman law as usucapio.

Title by prescription arises from a long-continued and uninterrupted possession of property, and is thus defined by Sir Edward Coke (1 Inst. 113 b.), prescriptio est titulus, ex usu et tempore substantiam capiens, ab auctoritate legis.

Every species of prescription, by which property is acquired or lost, is founded on the presumption that he who has had a quiet and uninterrupted possession of anything for a long period of years, is supposed to have a just right, without which he would not have been suffered to continue in the enjoyment of it. For a long possession may be con-considered as a better title than can commonly be produced, as it supposes an acquiescence in all other claimants; and that acquiescence also supposes some reason for which the claim was forborne.—1 Cruise's Dig. tit. xxxi. 'Prescription,' c. i., s. 4, p. 421.

There are two kinds of prescription, viz.: (1) negative, which relates to realty or corporeal hereditaments, whereby an uninterrupted possession for a given time gives the occupier a valid and unassailable title, by depriving all claimants of every stale right and deferred litigation, now mainly governed by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27; and (2) positive, which relates to incorporeal hereditaments, and originated at the common law from immemorial or long usage only. Positive prescription is divided into (1) that which has been exercised by a person and his ancestors, or by a body corporate and their predecessors, and is a personal right; or (2) that which has been attached to the ownership of a certain estate, and is only exercisable by those seised of the fee-simple of such estate, technically denominated a prescription in a que estate.

Positive prescription has been greatly modified by the statutes 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71; 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 100; and 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 88.

Prescription and custom are frequently confounded in common parlance, arising perhaps from the fact that immemorial usage was essential to both of them; but, strictly, they materially differ from one another, in that custom is properly a local impersonal usage, such as Borough-English, or Postremogeniture, which is annexed to a given estate, while prescription is simply personal, as that a certain man and his ancestors, or those whose estate he enjoys, have immemorially exercised a right of pasture-common in a certain parish. Again, prescription has its origin in a grant, evidenced by usage, and is allowed on account of its loss, either actual or supposed, and therefore only those things can be prescribed for which could be raised by a grant previously to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 2; but this principle does not necessarily hold in the case of a custom.

The common law laid down the following rules concerning positive prescription:—

(1) The only property claimable by positive prescription is an incorporeal hereditament.

(2) It must be founded on actual usage or enjoyment; for a mere claim will not establish the right.

(3) The use or enjoyment must have been continuous and peaceable; although an interruption of comparatively short duration will not destroy it.

(4) The usage must have been from time immemorial, or from time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, which is held to be from the beginning of the reign of Richard I.

Richard's predecessor (Henry II.) died on the 6th of July, 1189, and Richard was crowned on the 3rd (or, as some say, 11th) of September, 1189. It is a disputed point whether Richard's reign commenced at his own coronation, or at his predecessor's death. But as to how far this rule has been modified by statute, see 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 689 et seq.

(5) The prescription must be certain and reasonable.

(6) It must be laid either in a man and those whose estate he enjoys in certain property, called, as we have just seen, prescribing in a que estate, or in a man and his ancestors, or in a body corporate and their predecessors.

Here, a distinction should be marked:—

If a person prescribe in a que estate (that is, in himself and those whose estate he holds), nothing is claimable by this prescription, but such things as are incident, appendant, or appurtenant to lands; for it would be absurd to claim anything as the consequence, or appendix of an estate, with which the thing claimed has no connection; but if he prescribe in himself and his ancestors, he may prescribe for anything whatsoever that lies in grant; not only for things appurtenant, but also such as may be in gross.

(7) A prescription in a que estate must always be laid in him that is tenant in fee.

(8) It cannot be for a thing which cannot be raised by grant.

(9) That which arises by matter of record cannot be prescribed for, but must be claimed by grant entered on record; such as, for instance, the royal franchise of felons' goods, and the like. These, not being forfeited till the matter on which they arise is found by the inquisition of a jury, and so made a matter of record, the forfeiture itself cannot be claimed by an inferior title. But the franchises of treasure-trove, waifs, estrays, and the like, may be claimed by prescription; for they arise from private contingencies, and not from any matter of record.

(10) A person cannot prescribe to do a wrong, or anything that would be a nuisance to others; or against an act of parliament, for that is the highest proof and matter of record in law; or against another's prescription.

(11) Where a man prescribes for anything in himself and his ancestors, the prescription will descend only to the blood of that line of ancestors in whom he so prescribes; but if he prescribe for it in a que estate, it will be inheritable precisely in the same manner as that estate, since accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis. See Gale on Easements, by Gibbons; Goddard on Easements; and title LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Prescription, Corporations by, those which have existed beyond the memory of man, and therefore are looked upon in law to be well created, such as the city of London.

Presentation, the showing or delivering of a thing to be presented (1 C. L. Rep. 166). It is also equivalent to corporal seisin of land, and is the offering a person to the ordinary to be instituted to a benefice. It must be in writing (29 Car. II. c. 3), and is in the nature of letters-missive to the ordinary.

The Sovereign, as protector ecclesiarum, is the patron paramount of all benefices which do not belong to other patrons, and usually presents by letters-patent (26 Hen. VIII. c. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 1). The crown possesses the right of revoking its presentation at any time before induction. A revocation may be the consequence either of a formal act, or of the demise of the Crown, or the death of the presentee before induction. The Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, for the time being, has the right to present to all benefices appertaining to the Crown, of or below the value of twenty pounds, in the books of first fruits, according to the valuation in the time of Henry VIII. There is no difference in the form of a presentation by the Crown or Chancellor, except that, for the most part, the one is mandantes, the other rogantes.

With regard to other patrons, the right of presentation is sometimes confounded with that of nomination; but presentation is the offering a person to the bishop, while nomination is the offering such a person to the patron. These two rights may co-exist in different persons; thus, where an advowson is vested in trustees, they have the right of presentation, while the right of nomination is in the cestui que trust. So, in the case of a mortgage of an advowson, the mortgagee has the right of presentation, while the mortgagor has the right of nomination. Yet the trustees or the mortgagee must judge of the qualification of the nominee.—Mirehouse on Advow. 136.

All persons seised in fee, in tail, or for life, or possessed of a term for years of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, or of an advowson in gross, may present; and this right descends by course of inheritance from heir to heir, or passes to a devisee or purchaser, unless the benefice become vacant in the lifetime of the patron, when the void turn devolves upon the personal representatives (Mirehouse v. Rennell, 7 Bli. 241), being, indeed, a personal right or interest disannexed from the estate in the advowson, and vested in the patron simply as an individual. And where the incumbent is also patron, if he die seised of the advowson, without having devised it, his heir, not his executor, is entitled to present, because the descent of the heir, and the fall of the avoidance to the executor happening at the same time, the elder right prevails. If a bishop die, a church being vacant in his lifetime, the Crown exercises its prerogative to present.—Co. Litt. 388 b.

Where a person has a grant of the next presentation to a church, it is considered as a chattel-real, which, if not disposed of, will vest in his personal representatives.

Joint-tenants and tenants in common should present jointly; and if co-parceners cannot agree, the eldest sister is entitled to the first turn, the second sister the second turn, et sic de cæteris, every one in turn according to seniority, and this part which the oldest thus takes by virtue of her priority of age is galled the emita pars.

By 7 Anne c. 18, s. 2, if co-parceners, or joint-tenants, or tenants in common, be seised of an estate of inheritance in the advowson of any church, or vicarage, or other ecclesiastical promotion, and a partition is made between them, to present by turns, every one shall be taken to be seised of his separate part to present in his turn.

An infant at any age may nominate or present.—Hearle v. Greenbank, 3 Atk. 710; Arthington v. Coverly, 3 Abr. Cas. E. 518.

A corporation aggregate presents by the corporate name under their common seal.

A patron may present himself (see Walsh v. Bishop of Lincoln, L. R. 10 C. P. 518).

A presentation may be revoked or varied before admission and institution, since it does not vest any right, and does not confer, before institution, any interest whatever.

The right of a papist to present devolves upon the two Universities.—10 Geo. IV. c. 7, ss. 16, 17, 18.

Consult 1 Br. & Had. Com. 470; Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii. 684; iv. 173.

Presentative advowson. See ADVOWSON.

Presentee, one presented to a benefice.

Presenter, one that presents.

Presentment, generally taken, a very comprehensive term, including not only presentments, properly so called, but also inquisitions of office, and indictments by a grand jury; properly speaking, the notice taken by a grand jury of any offence, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the Crown; as the presentment of a nuisance, a libel, and the like, upon which the officer of the court must afterwards frame an indictment before the party presented can be put to answer it.

Presentments are also made in courts-leet and courts-baron, before the stewards.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 644.

Presentment of bill of exchange, cheque, or promissory note, the presenting of a bill by the holder to the drawee for acceptance, or to the acceptor or an indorser for payment, of a cheque to the banker for payment, and of a note to the maker or indorser for payment.

The law of this subject is regulated by the 'codifying' Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, as follows:—

Presentment of bill for acceptance. Presentment is necessary if the bill is payable after sight, or if it be expressly stipulated for by the bill, or if it be drawn payable elsewhere than at the residence or place of business of the drawee, but in no other case (s. 39). When a bill payable after sight is negotiated the holder must either present or negotiate it within a reasonable time (s. 40).

'The presentment must be made by or on behalf of the holder to the drawee or to some person authorized to accept or refuse acceptance on his behalf at a reasonable hour on a business day and before the bill is overdue.' Presentment must be made to each of many drawees, not being partners or having authorized one to accept for all. 'Where authorized by agreement or usage, a presentment through the post is sufficient.' Presentment is excused by the death or bankruptcy of the drawee, or 'where, after the exercise of reasonable diligence, such presentment cannot be effected,' but 'the fact that the holder has reason to believe that the bill, on presentment, will be dishonoured, does not excuse presentment' (s. 42).

Presentment of bill for payment. Unless a bill be duly presented for payment, or presentment for payment be dispensed with by the drawee being a fictitious person, or by waiver or impracticability of presentment, the drawer and indorsers are discharged.

'Where the bill is not payable on demand, presentment must be made on the day it falls due.' A bill payable on demand must be presented within a reasonable time after its issue in order to render the drawer liable, and within a reasonable time after its indorsement in order to render the indorser liable. Presentment must be made at the proper place at a reasonable hour on a business day. Where authorized by agreement or usage, a presentment through the post office is sufficient' (ss. 45, 46).

Presentment of cheque for payment. A cheque must be presented within a reasonable time after its issue in order to render the drawer liable, and within a reasonable time after its indorsement in order to render the indorser liable (ss. 45, 46, 73); and all the provisions of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, applicable to a bill of exchange payable on demand apply to a cheque also (s. 73). A reasonable time is, in general, if customer and banker reside in the same place, the day after the cheque is received (Alexander v. Burchfield, 7 M. & G. 161).

Presentment of note for payment. Presentment within a reasonable time of indorsement is necessary in order to render an indorser liable, but not in order to render the maker liable, unless the note be made payable at a particular place (ss. 86, 87).

Presentment in copyholds. The 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 89, enacts, that every surrender and deed of surrender to be accepted by the lord, and every will and codicil, a copy whereof shall be delivered to the lord, steward, or deputy, either at the court to be holden without the presence of homages (under s. 86), or out of court, and every gift and administration by the lord or steward (under ss. 87, 88), shall be forthwith entered on the rolls of the manor; and every such entry shall be taken to be made in pursuance of a presentment at a court by the homage assembled. A presentment is not essential to the validity of any administration (s. 90).

When a surrender was taken out of court, the presentment, by the general custom of manors, was to be made at the succeeding general court, or if there were a special custom for it, at the second or third court day or within a year, or alternatively at the next court, or at the next court after a year.—1 Scriv. Cop. 222.

The surrender, and every other document relating to the title, on being presented in court, should have been endorsed thus:— 'Presented and enrolled at a court held for the manor of —, the — day of —,' and then undersigned by at least two of the homage. But presentments are now, as we have seen, abolished. See also 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 644 et seq.

Presents. 'These presents' is the phrase by which a deed mentions itself, the thing then actually made or spoken of.

Present use, one which has an immediate existence, and is at once operated upon by the Statute of Uses.

President, one placed in authority over others; one at the head of others; a governor; a chairman.

President of the Council, a great officer of state; a member of the Cabinet. He attends on the sovereign, proposes business at the council-table, and reports to the Sovereign the transactions there.—1 Bl. Com. 230.

Press, The. There is no censorship over the press, but the author, the printer, and the publisher of a libel are liable to an action for damages at the suit of the party injured, or to an indictment, or in certain cases to a criminal information. See NEWSPAPER AND PRINTERS. Consult 4 Br. & Had. Com. 179; Steph. Com. iii., 7th. ed., 191—193, and iv. 260.

Pressing seamen. See IMPRESSING MEN.

Pressing to death. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

Prest, a duty in money that was to be paid by the sheriff on his account, in the Exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands.—2 & 3 Edw. VI. c. 4; Cowel.

Prestation-money, a sum of money paid by archdeacons yearly to their bishop; also purveyance.—Cowel.

Prestimony, or Præstimonia, a fund or revenue appropriated by the founder for the subsistence of a priest, without being erected into any title or benefice, chapel, prebend, or priory. It is not subject to the ordinary; but of it the patron, and those who have a right from him, are the collators.—Canon Law.

Prest money, a payment which binds those who receive it.—Cowel.

Presumptio juris et de jure See next title.

Presumption, a supposition, opinion, or belief previously formed.—Wood's Inst. 599.

Presumptions are said to be either (1) juris et de jure, or (2) juris, or (3) hominis vel judicis. (1) the presumption juris et de jure is that where law or custom establishes the truth of any point, on a presumption that cannot be overcome by contrary evidence; thus a minor or infant, with guardians, is deprived of the power of acting without their consent, on a presumption of incapacity, which cannot be rebutted. (2) The presumptio juris is a presumption established in law till the contrary be proved, as the property of goods is presumed to be in the possessor; every presumption of this kind must necessarily yield to contrary proof. (3) The presumptio hominis vel judicis is the conviction arising from the circumstances of any particular case. See Best on Presumptions.

Presumption of life or death. Where a person is once shown to have been living, the law will in general presume that he is still alive, unless after a lapse of time considerably exceeding the ordinary duration of human life; but if there be evidence of his continuous unexplained absence from home and of the non-receipt of intelligence concerning him for a period of seven years, the presumption of life ceases. But although a person who has not been heard of for seven years under such circumstances is presumed to be dead, the law raises no presumption as to the time of his death. And, therefore, if any one has to establish the precise time during those seven years at which such person died, he must do so by evidence.—Doe v. Nepean, 5 B. & Ad. 86; Nepean v. Doe, 2 M. & W. 894; Taylor on Evidence, s. 157.

Presumption of survivorship. The devolution of property frequently depends upon the survivorship of one of two or more persons who perish by the same calamity, such as shipwreck, battle, fire, collision of trains, etc., when there is no direct evidence as to the survivorship. In such cases the law of some countries has recourse to artificial presumptions, based upon the probabilities of survivorship resulting from age and sex; but the law of England recognizes no such presumption, but requires proof of survivorship from the person who relies upon it, and, in the absence of evidence, it considers that both or all of the persons so dying perished at the same time, and that neither transmitted his rights to the other or others.—Wing. v. Angrave, 8 H. L. C.

Presumptive evidence. See CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Presumptive heir, one who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would be his heir; but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born.

Presumptive title. A barely presumptive title, which is of the very lowest order, arises out of the mere occupation or simple possession of property (jus possessionis, Lat.), without any apparent right, or any pretence of right, to hold and continue such possession. This may happen when one man disseises another; or where, after the death of the ancestor, and before the entry of the heir, a stranger abates and holds out the heir. The law assumes that the actual occupant of land has the fee-simple in it, unless there be evidence rebutting such presumption, or his possession be properly explained and shown to be consonant with the right of the true proprietor of the reversionary fee. Such a presumption, in the absence of any satisfactory proof to the contrary, will sustain an action for a trespass by a wrong-doer, and will indeed be strengthened, by lapse of time, into a title complete and indefeasible.

This assumption is based on the well-known feudal maxim, that seisin must be the basis or stand-point in the deduction of every title except in the case of descent.

Pret à usage [Fr.], loan for use; commodatum.

Pretensed right: where one is in possession of land, and another, who is out of possession, claims and sues for it; here the pretended right or title is said to be in him who so claims and sues for the same.—Mod. Cas. 302.

Pretensed Title Statute, 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9, s. 2. It enacts that no one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor hath received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant, or hath been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder, on pain that both purchaser and vendor shall each forfeit the value of such land to the king and the prosecutor. See 4 Br. & Had Com. 150.

Preter legal, not agreeable to law.

Preterition, the entire omission of a child's name in the father's will, which rendered it null—exheredation being allowed, but not preterition.—Civ. Law, Colquhoun, s. 1304.

Pretium affectionis, an imaginary value put on a thing by the fancy of the owner in his affection for it.—Bell.

Pretium sepulchri, mortuary, which see.

Pretium succedit in loco rei. 2 Buls. 321.—(The price succeeds in the place of the thing.)

Prevarication, a collusion between an informer and a defendant, in order to a feigned prosecution.—Cowel. Also, any secret abuse committed in a public office or private commission;—also, the wilful concealment or misrepresentation of truth, by giving evasive or equivocating evidence.

Prevention [fr. prevenio, Lat.], the right which a superior person or officer has to lay hold of, claim, or transact an affair prior to an inferior one, to whom otherwise it more immediately belongs.—Canon Law Term.

Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112. This Act, which was amended by the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 5, repealed and replaces the Habitual Criminals Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99, and provides for the keeping of a register of criminals, and the photographing of all persons convicted of crime with a view to their identification, and for subjecting to the supervision of the police persons who have been twice convicted of crime, and for the amendment of the law with regard to licenses under the Penal Servitude Acts. See also PENAL SERVITUDE.

Preventive Service, the Coast Guard. See 19 & 20 Vict. c. 83.

Price Current, a list or enumeration of various articles of merchandise, with their prices, the duties (if any) payable thereon, when imported or exported, with the drawbacks occasionally allowed upon their exportation, etc.

Pricking for Sheriffs. See SHERIFFS.

Pride-gavel, a rent or tribute.—Tayl. Hist. Gavelk. 112.

Priest, a minister of a church (13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4, s. 14). A person under 24 years of age cannot be ordained a priest.—13 Eliz. c. 12, and 44 Geo. III. c. 43. See further title CLERGY.

Primæ, or Primariæ Preces. See PRECES PRIMARIÆ.

Primæ impressionis. A case primæ impressionis (of the first impression) is a case of a new kind, to which no established principle of law directly applies, and which must be decided entirely by reason as distinguished from authority. See COMMON LAW, and the remarks of Parke, B., in Mirehouse v. Rennell, referred to under that title.

Primæ facie evidence, that which not being inconsistent with the falsity of the hypothesis, nevertheless raises such a degree of probability in its favour that it must prevail if it be credited by the jury, unless it be rebutted, or the contrary proved; conclusive evidence, on the other hand, is that which excludes, or at least tends to exclude, the possibility of the truth of any other hypothesis than the one attempted to be established.

Prima tonsura (the first crop).

Primage, a certain allowance paid by the shipper or consignor of goods to the master of a vessel for loading them.—Cowel; 3 Kent Com. 232, n., and see MacLachlan on Shipping.

The amount varies according to the custom of the place.

Primaria Ecclesia, the mother church.—1 Steph Com., 7th ed., 118.

Primary conveyances, original conveyances; they are—

(1) Feoffments. (2) Grants. (3) Gifts. (4) Leases. (5) Exchanges. (6) Partitions. Consult 1 Steph. Com.

Primary Evidence, the best evidence as distinguished from secondary evidence.

Primate, a chief ecclesiastic; part of the style and title of an archbishop; thus the Archbishop of Canterbury is styled Primate of all England; the Archbishop of York is Primate of England.

Primer election, first choice.

Primer fine. On suing out the writ or præcipe, called a writ of covenant, there was due to the Crown, by ancient prerogative, a primer fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for; that was one-tenth of the annual value.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 560.

Primer seisin, a feudal burthen, only incident to the king's tenants in capite, and not to those who held of inferior or mesne lords. It was a right which the king had, when any of his tenants in capite died seised of a knight's fee to receive of the heir (provided he were of full age) one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession; and half-a-year's profits, if they were in reversion, expectant on an estate for life. It was incident to socage-tenants in capite, as well as those who held by knight-service. It was abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Primericarius, the first of any degree of men.—Mon. Angl. i. 838.

Primitiæ, the first fruits which were presented to the gods by the ancients; also, the profits of a living during the first year after avoidance, formerly taken by the Crown.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., i. 199; ii. 532.

Primo Beneficio, etc., a writ directing a grant of the first benefice in the sovereign's gift.—Cowel.

Primo excutienda est verbi vis, ne sermonis vitio obstruat oratio, sive lex sine argumentis. Co. Litt. 68.—(The full meaning of a word should be ascertained at the outset, in order that the sense may not be lost by defect of expression, and that the law be not without reasons.)

Primogeniture, seniority, eldership, state of being first-born.

The right of primogeniture obtaining in the United Kingdom is that right whereby the eldest son succeeds to all the real estate of an intestate parent. An analogous right of succession is also very frequently given by will, and given and preserved by marriage or other settlement. The right was not acknowledged by the Romans; sons and daughters all shared equally the property of their parents; and in continental countries exists in a modified form only, if at all. See Eyre Lloyd's 'Rights of Primogeniture and Succession.' In England the custom of gavelkind and Borough-English are almost the only exceptions to this Norman rule of inheritance. See Br. & Had. Com. i. 227; ii., 383.

Primum decretum, a provisional decree.

Prince [fr. principes, Lat.], a sovereign; a chief ruler of either sex. 'Queen Elizabeth, a prince admirable above her sex for her princely virtues.'—Camden.

Princeps et respublica ex justâ causâ possunt rem meam auferre. 12 Rep. 13.—(The prince and the republic, for a just cause, can take away my property.) For application of this maxim, see LANDS CLAUSES ACT

Princeps mavult domesticos milites quam stipendiarios bellicis opponere casibus. Co. Litt. 69.—(A prince, in the chances of war, had rather employ domestic than foreign troops.)

Prince of Wales, the eldest son of the Sovereign. He is the heir-apparent to the Crown; he is created Earl of Chester, and is Duke of Cornwall by inheritance (during the life of the Sovereign), without any new creation. As to rights of the heir apparent to submarine mines and minerals in Cornwall, see 21 and 22 Vict. c. 109; see also 13 & 14 Vict. c. 78; as to the obligation of his creditors to claim payment of debts within a short period of their being incurred on pain of the debts being barred, see 35 Geo. III. c. 125, and as to the provision for the establishment of His Royal Highness and of the Princess of Wales, see 26 & 27 Vict. c. 1.

Prince of Wales' Island, Singapore and Malacca. As to their Courts of Judicature, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 93.

Princes of the Royal Blood, the younger sons and daughters of the Sovereign, and other branches of the royal family who are not in the immediate line of succession.

Princess Royal, the eldest daughter of the Sovereign.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 450.

Principal, a head, a chief; also, a capital sum of money placed out at interest; also, an heir-loom, mortuary, or corse-present.

Principal and Accessary (or Accessory).

(1) Principals in offences are of two degrees: (a) of the first degree, i.e., the actual perpetrators of the crime; (b) of the second degree, i.e., those who are present, aiding and abetting the fact to be done.

Accessories are not the chief actors in the offence, nor present at its performance, but are in some way concerned therein, either before or after the fact is committed. See ACCESSORY; and 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 38—45.

Principal and Agent, he who being sui generis and competent to do any act for his own benefit on his own account, employs another person to do it, is called the principal constituent, or employer, and he who is thus employed is called the agent, attorney, proxy, or delegate of the principal, constituent, or employer. The relation thus created between the parties is termed an agency. The power thus delegated is called in law an authority. And the act, when performed, is often designated as an act of agency or procuration.—Story on Agency, 2. See AGENT; and consult Evans on Principal and Agent.

Principal challenge, a species of challenge to the array made on account of partiality or some default in the sheriff or his under-officer who arrayed the panel. See CHALLENGE.

Principal and surety. See GUARANTY.

Principia probant, non probantur. 3 Co. 40.—(Principles prove, they are not proved.)
Principiis obsta.—(Oppose beginnings.)

Principium est potissima pars cujusque rei.
 10 Co. 49.—(The principle of anything is its most powerful part.)

Print Works are regulated by the consolidating Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, replacing 8 & 9 Vict. c. 29, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 103.

Printers. Every person who shall print anything which is meant to be published or dispersed, and shall not print upon the front or the first or last leaf, in legible characters, his name and usual place of abode or business, or who shall take any part in publishing or dispersing any printed matter without such name and address, shall forfeit for each copy a sum not more than five pounds (2 & 3 Vict. c. 12, s. 2; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 24, s. 1). To this, too, there are many exceptions. See 32 & 33 Vict. c. 24, and enactments contained in the second schedule thereto.

As to compelling a discovery of the printer, publisher, or proprietor of any newspaper see 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 76, s. 19; and Dixon v. Enoch, L. R. 13 Eq. 394.

Printing, Proceedings in an Action. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 5, every pleading which shall contain less than three folios of seventy-two words each (every figure being as one word), may be either printed or written, or partly printed and partly written, and every other pleading not being a petition or summons, shall be printed, and any pleading which has been amended, must, if the amendment consists of more than 144 words in any one place, be printed (Ord. XXVII., r. 8). An affidavit in answer to interrogatories, must, if over three folios, be printed, unless a judge order otherwise (Ord. XXXI., r. 7). A special case must be printed (Ord. XXXIV., r. 3). All affidavits to be used in a case in which the evidence is by consent to be taken by affidavits, must be printed (Ord. XXXVIII., r. 6; and see Orders in Council August 12th, 1875, Ord. I., etc.). And any evidence, not printed below, may be ordered to be printed for the Court of Appeal (Ord. LVIII., r. 12). By Ord. LVI., r. 2, printing, when required, must be on cream wove paper, etc., in pica type, leaded, etc.

Prior, chief of a convent, next in dignity to an abbot.

Prior tempore potior jure.—(He who is first in time is preferred in law.)

Priority, an antiquity of tenure in comparison with another less ancient; also that which is before another in order of time.—Cowel.

As to priority among creditors, see the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, which provides that in the administration of the estate of any person who shall die on or after the 1st January, 1870, no debt or liability of such person shall be entitled to any priority or preference by reason merely that the same is secured by or arises under a bond, deed, or other instrument under seal, or is otherwise made or constituted a specialty debt.

Prisage, or Butlerage, a custom whereby the prince challenges out of every bark laden with wine, two tuns of wine, at his own price. Abolished by 51 Geo. III. c. 15; also, that share, usually a tenth part, which belongs to the sovereign or admiral out of such merchandises as are taken at sea, by way of lawful prize.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 561, and 1 Br. & Had. Com. 375

Priso, a prisoner taken in war.

Prison, a place of confinement for the safe custody of persons; a gaol.—3 Steph. Com.

The erection, maintenance, and regulation of prisons are provided for by several acts of parliament, for which see Chitty's Statutes, vol. v., tit. 'Prison.'

The Prison Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 21, transferred the management of prisons from counties and boroughs to the government, and put an end to the obligation theretofore existing on the part of the counties and boroughs to maintain prisons of their own.

The Acts as to Convict Prisons abroad are consolidated by 22 Vict. c. 25.

Prisonam frangentibus, Statute de, 1 Edw. II. st. 2 (in the Revised Statutes 23 Ed. I.), a still unrepealed statute, whereby it is felony for a felon to break prison, but misdemeanour only for a misdemeanant to do so.—1 Hale P. C. 612.

Prisoner, one who is being tried for felony; one who is confined in a prison.

Private Acts of Parliament, acts operating upon particular persons and private concerns of which the courts formerly were not bound to take notice if they were not formally pleaded. They were so called to distinguish them from public or general acts which apply to the whole community, and of which the courts must take judicial notice. But now, by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 2, s. 7, every act made after the commencement of the then next session of Parliament is to be taken to be a public one, and judicially noticed as such, unless the contrary be expressly declared. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

A private act of parliament is a mode of transferring an estate frequently resorted to in order to disentangle an estate from a mass of confusion, to unfetter its owner, or to supply careless omissions in a settlement which the judicature cannot cope with; but see SETTLED LAND.

As to awarding costs in certain cases of Private Bills, see 28 & 29 Vict. c. 27, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 1.

Private Bill Office, an office of Parliament where the business of obtaining private acts of parliament is conducted.

Private Chapels Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 66.

Privateers. See LETTERS OF MARQUE.

Privation [an abbreviation, by aphæresis, of the word deprivation], a taking away or withdrawing.—Co. Litt. 239.

Privatio præsupponit habitum. 2 Rol. Rep. 419.—(A deprivation presupposes a possession.)

Privatis pactionibus non dubium est non lædi jus ceterorum. D. 2, 15, 3.—(There is no doubt that the rights of third persons are not prejudiced by private agreements.)

Privatorum conventio juri publico non derogat. 9 Rep. 141, D. 50, 17, 45, s. 1.—(The agreement of private individuals does not derogate from the public right (law).)

Privatum commodum publico cedit. Jenk. Cent. 223.—(Private good yields to public.)

Privatum incommodum publico bono pensatur. Jenk. Cent. 85.—(Private loss is compensated by public good.)

Privement ensient, pregnancy in its earlier stages.—Wood's Inst. 662.

Privies, those who are partakers or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another. They are of six kinds:—

(1) Privies of blood, such as the heir to his ancestor.

(2) Privies in representation, as executors or administrators to their deceased testator or intestate.

(3) Privies in estate, as grantor and grantee, lessor and lessee, assignor and assignee, etc.

(4) Privities, in respect of contract, are personal privities, and extend only to the persons of the lessor and lessee.

(5) Privies, in respect of estate and contract, as where the lessee assigns his interest, but the contract between lessor and lessee continues, the lessor not having accepted of the assignee.

(6) Privies in law, as the lord by escheat, a tenant by the courtesy, or in dower, the incumbent of a benefice, a husband suing or defending in right of his wife, etc.

Privilege, an exemption from some duty, burthen, or attendance, to which certain persons are entitled, from a supposition of law, that the stations they fill or the offices they are engaged in, are such as require all their care; and that, therefore, without this indulgence, it would be impracticable to discharge such offices so advantageously as the public good requires.

The separate privileges of either House of Parliament are extensive, but they are at the same time uncertain and indefinite. Amongst those privileges are, the power of committing persons to prison; the power of publishing matters which, if not issuing from such high authority, might become the subject of proceedings in a court of law; the power of directing the Attorney-General to prosecute persons accused of offences against the law or affecting the privilege of parliament; and finally, a power vested in each House respectively of doing anything not directly contravening an act of parliament which may be necessary for the vindication or protection of itself in the exercise of its own constitutional functions. In the daily proceedings of parliament, questions of privilege take precedence of all other business.

The privileges of individual members of parliament are, freedom of speech and person, including freedom from arrest and seizures under process from the courts of justice; this, however, does not extend to indictable offences, to actual contempts of the courts of justice, or to proceedings in bankruptcy. Members of parliament are exempt from serving the office of sheriff, from obeying subpœnas, and serving on juries. 'Privilege of Parliament' continues to peers at all times, and to commoners for a 'convenient' time after prorogation and dissolution. Peers are exempt from attending courts-leet or the posse comitatus; when arraigned for any criminal offence it must be before their peers, who return a verdict, not upon oath, but upon honour; they have the privilege of sitting covered in courts of justice.

Barristers are privileged from arrest eundo, morando et redeundo, going to, coming from, and abiding in court—this includes judges' chambers: so clergymen as to divine service.

Privilege, Writ of, a process to enforce or maintain a privilege.—Cowel.

Privileged communication, a communication which a witness cannot be compelled to divulge, such as that which takes place between husband and wife (see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, s. 3), between a client and his legal adviser, and which cannot be disclosed without the client's consent; secrets of state, etc. See also CONFESSION. Also a communication which cannot be made the ground of an action for defamation, such as that which is made truthfully and bonâ fide by a master respecting the character of a servant to a person intending to employ him. See LIBEL.

Privileged copyholds, customary copyholds, which see.

Privileged debts, debts which an executor may pay in preference to all others, such as sick-bed and funeral expenses, the expenses of mourning, servants' wages, etc.

Privileged villenage, villein socage, which see.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 188, 223.

Privilegia, or Laws ex post facto, laws which are enacted after an act is committed, declaring it for the first time to have been a crime, and inflicting a punishment upon the person who has committed it.

Of such laws the great Roman orator thus speaks:—Vetant leges sacrata, vetant duodecim tabulae, leges privatis hominibus irrogari; id enim est privilegium. Nemo unquam tulit, nihil est crudelius, nihil perniciosius, nihil quod minus hæc civitas ferre possit.—Cicero Pro Domo, 17.

Privilegia quæ re verâ sunt in præjudicium reipublicæ, magis tamen habent speciosa frontispicia, et boni publici prætextum, quam bonæ et legales concessionēs: sed prætextu liciti non debet admitti illicitum. 11 Co. 88.—(Privileges which are truly in prejudice of public good, have, however, a more specious front and pretext of public good, than good and legal grants: but under pretext of legality, that which is illegal ought not to be admitted.)

Privilegium clericale, the benefit of clergy, which is abolished by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 28.—See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

Privilegium, property propter, a qualified property in animals feræ naturæ, i.e., a privilege of hunting, taking, and killing them, in exclusion of others.—2 Bl. Com. 394; 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 9.

Privilegium est beneficium personale, et extinguitur cum personâ. 3 Buls. 8.—(A privilege is a personal benefit, and dies with the person.)

Privilegium est quasi privata lex. 2 Buls. 189.—(Privilege is, as it were, a private law.)

Privilegium non valet contra rempublicam. Bac. Max. 25.—(A privilege avails not against public good.)

Privy, participation in interest or knowledge. See PRIVIES.

Privy [fr. privé, Fr.], having a participation in interest or knowledge. See PRIVIES.

Privy Council, a great council of state held by the Sovereign with her councillors, to concert matters for the public service, and for the honour and safety of the realm.

The Sovereign nominates privy councillors, and no patent or grant is necessary. The number of the council is indefinite, and is dependent upon the royal will. It is summoned on a warning of forty-four hours, and never held without the presence of a secretary of state; the junior delivers his opinion first, and the Sovereign, if present, last; it is dissolved six months after the demise of the crown, unless sooner determined by the successor. As to deputy-clerk of the council, see 22 & 23 Vict. c. 1. Consult 1 Br. & Had. Com. 271—7; 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 457. See next title. See PRIVY COUNCILLORS.

Privy Council, Judicial Committee of the. See JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Privy Councillors, the Sovereign's advisers. They are made by the royal nomination, without either patent or grant; and on taking the necessary oaths, they become immediately privy councillors during the life of the Sovereign who chooses them, but subject to removal at the royal discretion.

Their duties are: (1) To advise the Sovereign according to the best of their cunning and discretion. (2) To advise for the Sovereign's honour and good of the public; without partiality through affection, love, need, doubt, or dread. (3) To keep the Sovereign's counsel secret. (4) To avoid corruption. (5) To help and strengthen the execution of what shall be resolved. (6) To withstand all persons who would attempt the contrary. (7) To observe, keep, and do all that a true and good councillor ought to do to his Sovereign.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 459; and 1 Br. & Had. Com. 271—7.

Privy Purse, the income set apart for the Sovereign's personal use. See CIVIL LIST.

Privy Seal and Privy Signet. The Privy Seal (privatum sigillum) is a seal of the Sovereign under which charters, pardons, etc., signed by the Sovereign, pass before they come to the Great Seal, and also used for some documents of less consequence which do not pass the Great Seal at all, such as discharges of recognizances, debts, etc. The Privy Signet is one of the Sovereign's seals, used in sealing his private letters, and all such grants as pass his hand by bill signed, which seal is always in the custody of the king's secretaries. There were formerly four clerks of the signet office, but by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 82, s. 3, the offices of the clerks of the signet and of the privy seal are abolished. The practice as to the passing of letters under these seals was altered and simplified by the same statute. See Steph. Com., 7th ed., i. 619; ii. 458; iv. 143. See GREAT SEAL and LORD PRIVY SEAL. As to forgery of the Privy Seal and Privy Signet, see FORGERY.

Privy tithes, small tithes.

Prize Commission. See ADMIRALTY COURT.

Prize of War, property captured in war, which falls to the forces capturing it by grace of the Crown, to which it belongs. See 2 Wm. IV. c. 53. See BOOTY OF WAR, and next article.

Prize Court. This is an international tribunal, existing only by virtue of a special commission under the Great Seal, during war or until the litigations incident to war have been brought to a conclusion. It is frequently confounded with the Court of Admiralty, in consequence, perhaps, of the same judge having usually presided in both courts; but this is a mistake, for the whole system of litigation and jurisprudence in the prize court, though exceedingly important, is peculiar to itself, and is governed by rules not applying to the instance court of the Admiralty (now part of the High Court), which is a mere civil tribunal.

In this court are directly decided, not only questions relating to captures, prize, and booty (being prize on shore), but also questions upon the law of nations; though sometimes the latter, and even the construction of treaties, are collaterally argued and determined in other courts. There is an appeal from this court to the Queen in Council. See 27 & 28 Vict. cc. 24 and 25; and Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii. 18; iii. 343; 3 Br. & Had. Com. 435.

Prizefighting. Public prizefighting is an affray and an indictable misdemeanour on the part of both combatants and backers (see Reg. v. Coney, 8 Q. B. D. 534, in which it was held that the mere presence of persons at a prize fight was not enough to sustain a conviction for assault), and railway companies providing trains for any prize-fights are liable to heavy penalties under 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 21. If death ensue, the surviving combatant is guilty of manslaughter.

Pro [for, or in respect of], in the grant of an annuity pro consilio, showing the cause of a grant amounts to a condition; but in a feoffment or lease for life, etc., it is the consideration, and does not amount to a condition; for the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory.—Plowd. 412.

Proamita, a great paternal aunt, the sister of one's grandfather.

Proamita magna, a great great aunt.

Proavia, a great grandmother.

Proavunculus, a great uncle.

Proavus, a great grandfather.

Probandi necessitas incumbit illi qui agit.
—(The necessity of proving lies upon him who commences proceedings.)

Probate, official proof of a will. This is obtained by the executor in the Probate branch of the High Court of Justice, and is either in common form, or per testes, in solemn form of law. When the will is so proved, the original must be deposited in the registry of the court, and a copy thereof on parchment is made out under its seal, and delivered to the executors, together with a certificate of its having been proved, all which together is usually styled the probate, and a probate office copy is evidence of the will in actions concerning real estate by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 64.

Probate, Court of, a tribunal established by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, and other later acts, to which the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts in testamentary matters was transferred; it was merged in the Supreme Court by the Jud. Act, by which its jurisdiction was assigned to a 'Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division.' As to a site for the court and offices, see 22 & 23 Vict. c. 16. See WILLS.

Probate Duty, a tax upon the gross value of the personal property of a deceased testator. For amount of the duty from 1815 to 1880, see schedule to 55 Geo. III. c. 184. In 1880 a new scale of duties was imposed by 43 Vict. c. 14, s. 9, and in 1881 a further new and increased scale by 44 Vict. c. 12. By 55 Geo. III. c. 184, s. 37, a penalty of 100*l.* and ten per cent. additional duty is payable by a person acting as executor and not obtaining probate within six months.

Probation, proof, evidence, testimony.

Probationer, one who is upon trial.

Probationes debent esse evidentes, scil. perspicue et faciles intelligi. Co. Litt. 283.—(Proofs ought to be evident, to wit, perspicuous and easily understood.)

Probator, an examiner; an accuser or prover, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another. See 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 394.

Probatory term, a term for taking testimony.

Probatum est (it is tried or proved).

Probi et legales homines [Lat.] (good and lawful men).

Procedendo, a writ which issued out of the common law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, when judges of any subordinate court delayed the parties, for that they would not give judgment either on the one side or on the other, when they ought so to do. In such a case, a writ of procedendo ad iudicium was awarded, commanding the inferior court in the Queen's name to proceed to give judgment, but without specifying any particular judgment; for that, if erroneous, might be set aside by proceedings in error, or by writ of false judgment; and upon further neglect or refusal, the judges of the inferior court might be punished for their contempt by writ of attachment, returnable in the courts at Westminster. It also lay where an action had been removed from an inferior to a superior court by habeas corpus, certiorari, or any like writ, and it appeared to the superior court that it was removed on insufficient grounds. A suit once so remanded could not afterwards be removed before judgment in any court whatever.—21 Jac. I. c. 23. See Br. & Had. Com., i. 424, iii. 154. The common law, as well as equity jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, is now transferred to the High Court (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 16).

Procedendo on aid Prayer. If one pray in aid of the Crown in real action, and aid be granted, it shall be awarded that he sue to the Sovereign in Chancery, and the justices in the Common Pleas shall stay until this writ of procedendo de loquellâ come to them. So also on a personal action.—N. N. B. 154.

Procedure, the mode in which the successive steps in litigation are taken. The procedure of the common law courts was regulated by the C. L. P. Acts of 1852, 1854, and 1860; as to which see Day's C. L. P. Acts. As to the procedure in equity, consult Daniell's Chancery Practice; and Morgan's Chancery Acts and Orders. The procedure in actions in the High Court of Justice and the Court of Appeal is now governed for the most part by the rules in the schedule to the Judicature Act, 1875; but where no other provision is made by the Acts or those rules the former procedure and practice remains in force. See PRACTICE and PROCESS.

Proceeds, the sum, amount, or value of goods, etc., sold, or converted into money.

Proceres, chief magistrates. Dom. Proc., Domus Procerum; House of Lords.

Procès verbal [Fr.], an authentic minute of an official act, or statement of acts.

Process: it is largely taken for all the proceedings in any action or prosecution, real or personal, civil or criminal, from the beginning to the end; strictly, the summons by which one is cited into a court, because it is the beginning or principal part thereof, by which the rest is directed.—Brit. 138.

At common law the superior courts at Westminster, in personal actions, differed greatly, before the Uniformity of Process Act, in their modes of process, and even the same court admitted a considerable variety of methods, according to the circumstances of the case.

The varieties as to process in personal actions may be summed up thus:—In each of the courts the proceedings against attorneys and officers—in the Queen's Bench and Exchequer, that against prisoners also—was by bill with process; and in other cases their processes or modes of commencing the suits were as follows:—

In the Queen's Bench.

By original:—

Original writ adapted to the action.

By bill:—

- | | | |
|-----------------------------------|---|---|
| (1) Attachment of privilege . . . | { | (1) With ac etiam , or bailable. |
| (2) Bill of Middlesex | | (2) Not bailable. |
| (3) Latitat . . . | { | (1) Bailable. |
| (4) Bill and summons. | | (2) Not bailable. |

In the Common Pleas.

By original:—

- | | |
|---|-------------------|
| (1) Original writs adapted to the action. | |
| (2) Original writ quare clausum fregit . | |
| (3) Common capias . | { (1) Bailable. |
| | (2) Not bailable. |

By bill:—

- (1) Attachment of privilege.
- (2) Bill and summons.

In the Exchequer of Pleas.

- (1) Venire ad respondendum.
- (2) Subpena ad respondendum.
- (3) Quo minus capias.
- (4) Venire of privilege.
- (5) Capias of privilege.
- (6) Bill of summons.

1st Com. Law. Rep. 74.

The ordinary process in Chancery suits, was service of a copy of the bill or claim, with an endorsed citation, which required the defendant to appear on a certain day. In the case of privilege of peerage, a letter-missive, requesting the defendant to appear, was first obtained and served, and on his default, a copy of the bill was served in the ordinary way.

The process now for the commencement of all actions is the same in all the Divisions of the High Court of Justice, and is called a writ of summons (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. II., r. 1). See SUMMONS.

The mode of commencing an ecclesiastical suit, and bringing the parties before the court, is, by process, called a citation or summons, containing the name of the judge, the plaintiff and defendant, the cause of complaint, and the time and place of appearance. This citation, in ordinary cases, is obtained, as a matter of course, from the registry of the court, and under its seal; but in special cases the facts are alleged in what is called an act of court, and upon those facts the judge or his surrogate decrees the party to be cited; to which, in certain cases, is added an intimation; and if the party do not appear, or appearing, do not show cause to the contrary, the prayer of the plaintiff set forth in the decree will be granted.

Suits in the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, are commenced by citation.

See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LXII.)

In criminal causes, if the offender be not in custody before indictment, the process for treason, felony, or misdemeanour is capias to bring him before the court. But in misdemeanours it is also the practice, upon an indictment found during the sessions or assizes, to issue a bench-warrant, signed by a judge or two justices of the peace, to apprehend the offender.

Processum continuando, a writ for the continuance of process after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer.—Reg. Orig. 128.

Prochein amy [proximus amicus, Lat.], the next friend or next of kin to a child in his nonage, who in that respect is allowed to deal for the infant in the management of his affairs; as to be his guardian if he hold land in socage, and in the redress of any wrong done to him. See NEXT FRIEND.

Prochein avoidance, a power to appoint a minister to a church when it shall next become void.

Prochronism [fr. πρόχρονος, Gk., anterior], an error in chronology; dating a thing before it happened.

Proclaim. See PROCLAMATION.

Proclamation, publication by authority; a notice public. As to royal proclamations, see 1 Edw. VI. c. 12. Proclamation is used particularly in the beginning or calling of a court, and at the discharge or adjourning thereof, for the attendance of persons and despatch of business.

Proclamation, Fine with. To render a fine more universally public and less liable to be levied by fraud or covin, it was directed by 4 Hen. VII. c. 24 (in confirmation of a previous statute), that a fine after engrossing should be openly and solemnly read and proclaimed in court (during which all pleas should cease) sixteen times, viz., four times in the term in which it was made, and four times in each of the three succeeding terms, which was reduced to once in each term by 31 Eliz. c. 2, and these proclamations were endorsed on the record. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74. The 4 Hen. VII. c. 24, was entirely repealed by the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125.

Proclamator, an officer of the Court of Common Pleas.

Pro confesso. See CONFESSO, BILL TAKEN PRO.

Proconsules, justices in eyre.—Cowel.

Proctor [fr. procurator, Lat.], a manager of another person's affairs; also, a functionary having disciplinary power in our universities.

Proctors in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts formerly discharged duties similar to those of solicitors and attorneys in other courts as and being a separate body of pro-tioners. The title still survives, but the separation no longer exists. From the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts in causes matrimonial and testamentary having been abolished, the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, ss. 43, 105, 106, and c. 85, s. 69, awarded compensation to the proctors, and admitted them to practice, not only in the Probate and Divorce Courts, but also in the Courts of Equity and Common Law. See 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 9, and c. 108, s. 13; and see also 23 & 24 Vict. c. 27. The Solicitors' Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 25, s. 17, replacing the repealed s. 20 of the Solicitors' Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 28, allows solicitors to practise as proctors; the 87th section of the Judicature Act, 1878, gives them the title of 'Solicitors of the Supreme Court'; and the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 66, allows solicitors to appear as proctors in the provincial courts of Canterbury and York.

Proctors of the clergy, they who are chosen and appointed to appear for cathedral or other collegiate churches; as also for the common clergy of every diocese, to sit in the convocation-house in the time of parliament.

Procuracion, an agency, the administration of the business of another; also money which parish priests pay yearly to the bishop or archdeacon, ratione visitationis, these are also called proxies, and it is said that there are three sorts—ratione visitationis, consuetudinis, et pacti.—Hardr. 180.

Bills of exchange may be drawn, accepted, or endorsed by procuracion, i.e., by an agent who has an authority for such a purpose, and 'a signature by procuracion operates as notice that the agent has but a limited authority to sign, and the principal is only bound by such signature if the agent in so signing was acting within the actual limits of his authority.'—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 25. See Byles on Bills, 11th ed., 31 et seq.

Procuracion fee, a sum of money or commission taken by scriveners on effecting loans of money.

A solicitor for a mortgagee may take any amount of procuracion money on a loan by way of mortgage, the 12 Anne, st. 2, c. 16, s. 2, limiting it to 5s. in the pound, being abolished by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90.

Procuratio est exhibitio sumptuum necessarium, facta prelati, qui dioceses peragrande, ecclesias subjectas visitant. Dav. 1.—(Procuracion is the providing necessaries for the bishops, who, in travelling through their dioceses, visit the churches subject to them.)

Procuracionem adversus nulla est prescriptio. Dav. 6.—(There is no prescription against procuracion.)

Procurator, one who has a charge committed to him by any person ; an agent.

Procurator Fiscal, the public prosecutor in Scotland, who institutes the preliminary inquiry into crime within his district, and also takes the place of the coroner in England, there being no coroner in Scotland. See Bell's Scotch-Law Dict.

Procuratores ecclesiæ parochialis, church-wardens.—Paroch. Antiq. 562.

Procuratorium, the instrument by which any person or community constituted or delegated their proctor to represent them in any court or cause.

Procuratory of resignation, a proceeding in the law of Scotland, by which a vassal authorizes the fee to be returned to his superior, either to remain the property of the superior, in which case it is said to be a resignation ad remanentiam, or for the purpose of the superior's giving out the fee to a new vassal or to the former vassal and a new series of heirs, which is termed a resignation in favorem. It is somewhat analogous to the surrender of copyholds in England. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Prodes homines, the barons of the realm.

Proditiō, treason, treachery.

Proditor, a traitor. Obsolete.

Proditorie (treasonably).

Producent, the party calling a witness under the old system of the Ecclesiastical Courts.

Production, the creation of objects which constitute wealth. The requisites of production are labour, capital, and the materials and motive forces afforded by nature. Of these, labour, and the raw material of the globe, are primary and indispensable. Natural motive powers may be called in to the assistance of labour, and are a help, but not an essential of production. The remaining requisite, capital, is itself the product of labour ; its instrumentality in production is therefore, in reality, that of labour in an indirect shape.—Mill's Pol. Eco.

Pro eo quo (for this that).

Pro falso clamore suo, a nominal amercement of a plaintiff for his false claim, which used to be inserted in a judgment for the defendant. Obsolete.

Profaneness. See BLASPHEMY.

Profane Swearing. See 19 Geo. II. c. 21, which imposes a penalty of 1s. for each oath on each occasion (Reg. v. Scott, 33 L. J. M. C. 15) in the case of a labourer ; 2s. in the case of a person under the degree of a gentleman ; and 5s. in the case of a person of or above the degree of a gentleman, generally ; and see also Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 28, and Metropolitan Police Act, 1839, s. 12, which impose a penalty of 40s. for using profane language in public streets.

Profer [fr. proferere, Fr.], to produce ; an offer to endeavour to proceed in an action ; also, the time appointed for the accounts of officers in the Exchequer, which was twice a year.—3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99, s. 2.

Profert in curiâ (he produces in court), where either party alleged any deed, he was generally obliged, by a rule of pleading, to make profert of such deed ; that is, to produce it in court simultaneously with the pleading in which it was alleged. This, in the days of oral pleading, was of course an actual production in court. Since then, it consisted of a formal allegation that he showed the deed in court, it being, in fact, retained in his own custody. See OYER. Abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 55.

Profession, calling, vocation, known employment ; divinity, physic, and law are called the learned professions.

Profit à Prendre, a right to enter on the land of another, and take therefrom a profit of the soil. See Gale on Easements, 4th ed., 1, 7, and consult Hall on Profits à Prendre.

Profit and Loss, the gain or loss arising from goods bought or sold, or from carrying on any other business, the former of which, in book-keeping, is placed on the creditor's side, the latter on the debtor's side. Net Profit is the gain made by selling goods at a price beyond what they cost the seller, and beyond all costs and charges.

Profits, the advantages which land yields in the shape of rent, issues, or other emoluments ; also gains, pecuniary advantage, from whatever source derived.

Profits mesne. See MESNE PROFITS.

Prohibetur ne quis faciat in suo quod nocere possit alieno ; et sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas. 9 Co. 59.—(It is prohibited for any to do that on his own property which may injure another's : and so use your own, that you do not hurt another's.)

Pro formâ, as a matter of form.

Pro hac vice, for this occasion.

Prohibition, a writ to forbid any court to proceed in any cause there depending, on the suggestion that the cognizance thereof belongs not to such court. It is a remedy provided by the common law against the encroachment of jurisdiction.

This writ issued not only out of the Queen's Bench, but also out of the Courts of Chancery, Exchequer, and Common Pleas, and now issues out of the High Court of Justice, to any inferior court concerning itself with any matter not within its jurisdiction. If either the judge or a party proceed after such prohibition, an attachment may be had against them for contempt, at the discretion of the court that awarded it; and an action for damages will lie against them, by the party injured. It is doubtful whether a prohibition lay to the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes. See Forster v. Forster, 32 L. J. Q. B. 312.

The proceedings to obtain this writ are the following:—

The party aggrieved in the court below, applies to the superior court, setting forth the nature and cause of his complaint, in being drawn ad aliud examen, by a jurisdiction or manner of process disallowed by the laws of the kingdom. This used formerly to be done by filing, as of record, what was called a suggestion, containing a formal statement of the facts; but by 1 Wm. IV. c. 21, it is not necessary to file any suggestion, but application may be made by affidavits by a rule to show cause; if the matter alleged be sufficient, the writ issues. Sometimes the point is too doubtful to be decided upon motion, and the party applying is directed to declare in prohibition, setting forth concisely so much of the proceeding in the court below as may be necessary to show the ground of the application; this procedure has been directed since the Jud. Act (see South-Eastern R. Co. v. Railway Commissioners, 5 Q. B. D. 217), but where the prohibition applied for is to a county court, it is expressly dispensed with by s. 42 of the County Court Act, 1856, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108. As to the right of a party prohibited to put the plaintiff in prohibition to declare in prohibition, see Worthington v. Jeffries, L. R. 10 C. P. 379.

Prohibitio de vasto, directa parti, a judicial writ which used to be addressed to a tenant, prohibiting him from waste, pending suit.—Reg. Jud. 21; Moor, 917.

Pro indiviso (as undivided), the possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, whereof none knows his several portion; as coparceners before partition.

Pro interesse suo, in respect of his interest.

Project, the draft of a proposed treaty or convention.

Pro læsione fidei. See LESIONE FIDEI.

Prolem ante matrimonium natam, ita ut post legitimam, lex civilis succedere facit in hæreditate parentum; sed prolem, quam matrimonium non parit, succedere non sinit lex Anglorum. Fort. c. 39.—(The civil law permits the offspring born before marriage (provided such offspring be afterwards legitimised) to be the heirs of their parents; but the law of the English does not suffer the offspring not produced by the marriage to succeed.)

Proles, progeny. See S. P.

Proletarius, a person who had no property to be taxed, but paid a tax only on account of his children.—Civil Law.

Prolicide [fr. proles, Lat., offspring, and cædo, to kill], the destruction of human offspring. It is either fœticide or infanticide, which see.—Dungl.

Prolixity, an unnecessary, superfluous, or impertinent statement.

Prolocutor, the foreman; the speaker of a convocation.

Prolocutor of the Convocation House, an officer chosen by ecclesiastical persons publicly assembled in convocation by virtue of the Sovereign's writ; at every Parliament there are two prolocutors, one of the upper house of convocation, the other of the lower house, the latter of whom is chosen by the lower house, and presented to the bishops of the upper house as their prolocutor, that is, the person by whom the lower house of convocation intends to deliver its resolutions to the upper house, and have its own house especially ordered and governed: his office is to cause the clerk to call the names of such as are of that house, when he sees cause, to read all things propounded, gather suffrages, etc.

Prolytæ, students of the civil law during the fifth and last year of their studies.

Promatertera, a great maternal aunt; the sister of one's grandmother.

Promatertera magna, a great great aunt.

Promise, an engagement for the performance or non-performance of some particular thing, which may be made either by deed, or without deed, when it is said to be by parol; promise is usually applied when the engagement is by parol only, for a promise by deed is technically called a covenant. See CONTRACT.

Promisee, one to whom a promise has been made.

Promissor, one who makes a promise.

Promissory note, defined in the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 83, as 'an unconditional promise in writing, made by one person to another, signed by the maker, engaging to pay on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to or to the order of a specified person or to bearer.' The person who makes the note is called the maker, and the person to whom it is payable is called the payee: when it is negotiated by the indorsement of the payee, he is called the indorser, and the person to whom the note is transferred is the indorsee. The Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 'codifies' the law relating to promissory notes, and by s. 89 of that Act all the provisions of the Act (with few exceptions) which relate to bills of exchange relate also to promissory notes. See BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

Promissory oaths. See OATHS.

Promoter, a term anciently sometimes applied to a common informer generally (see 5 Inst. 191), but in modern times applied only to the prosecutor of an ecclesiastical suit, as in Combe v. Edwards, 3 P. D. 103.

Those who obtain, or take the necessary steps for obtaining, the passing of a private Act of Parliament, or the incorporation of a Joint Stock Company under the Companies Acts, are called the promoters.

Promulgation, publication; open exhibition.

Promutuum, a quasi contract, by which he who receives a certain sum of money, or a certain quantity of fungible things, delivered to him through mistake, contracts the obligation of restoring as much.

It resembles the contract of mutuum. (1) That in both a sum of money or some fungible things are required. (2) That in both there must be a transfer of the property in the thing. (3) That in both there must be returned the same amount or quantity of the thing received.—Civ. Law.

Pronepos, a great grandson.

Protonary, first notary. See PROTHONOTARIES.

Pronurus, the wife of a great grandson.

Proof, evidence, testimony, convincing token, means of conviction.

Bracton says, there is probatio duplex, by witnesses, viva voce, and probatio mortua by deeds, writings, etc. See EVIDENCE.

Pro partibus liberandis, an ancient writ for partition of lands between co-heirs.—Reg. Orig. 316.

Propatruus magnus, a great great uncle.

Proper feuds, the original and genuine feuds held by pure military service.

Property, the highest right a man can have to anything, being used for that right which one has to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which does not depend on another's courtesy.

Property is of three sorts: absolute, qualified, and possessory.

Property in reality is acquired by entry, conveyance, descent, or devise; and in personality, by many ways, but most usually by gift, bequest, or bargain and sale.

Consult Williams on Real Property; Williams on Personal Property.

Property qualification, for members of Parliament, abolished by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 26; for members of municipal corporations and local governing bodies by 43 Vict. c. 17.

Property-tax. An annual tax, called also 'Income Tax,' on the income (unless such income fall below 150*l.*) of every man. The incidence of the tax (the amount of which is fixed by an annual statute termed of late years the 'Customs and Inland Revenue Act') is regulated chiefly by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34. The rules for charging property in respect of ownership and occupation are to be found in schedules A. and B. of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35; for charging dividends, in schedule C.; for charging professional and trade profits in schedule D.; and for charging salaries in schedule E. See Chit. Stat., vol. v., tit. 'Property Tax.'

Prophecies. See FALSE PROPHECIES.

Propinqui et consanguinei, the nearest of kin to a deceased person.

Propinquier excludit propinquum; propinquus remotum; et remotus remotiorem. Co. Litt. 10.—(He who is nearer excludes him who is near, he who is near, him who is remote; he who is remote, him who is remoter.)

Propinquity, kindred, parentage.

Proponent, the propounder of a thing.—Eccl. Law.

Proportum, intent or meaning.—Cowel.

Proposal, a statement in writing of some special matter submitted to the consideration of a chief clerk in the Court of Chancery, pursuant to an order made upon an application ex parte, or a decretal order of the court. It is either for maintenance of an infant, appointment of a guardian, placing a ward of the court at the university, or in the army, or apprentice to a trade; for the appointment of a receiver, the establishment of a charity, etc.

Propositio indefinita æquipollet universali. (An indefinite proposition is equivalent to a general one.)

Proposition, a single logical sentence.

Propositus, the person proposed; the person from whom a descent is traced.

Propound, to produce (e.g., a will or model) as authentic.

Proprietary, he who has a property in any thing.

Proprietary chapels, those belonging to private persons who have purchased or erected them with a view to profit or otherwise. See 34 & 35 Vict. c. 66.

Proprietas verborum est salus proprietatum. Jenk. Cent. 16.—(Propriety of words is the salvation of property.)

Proprietate probandâ, de, a writ addressed to a sheriff to try by an inquest in whom certain property, previous to distress, subsisted.—Finch. L. 316.

Proprietates verborum observandæ sunt. Jenk. Cent. 136.—(The proprieties of words are to be observed.)

Proprio vigore [Lat.] (by its own force).

Pro querente [abbrev. pro. quer.] (for the plaintiff).

Pro ratâ, or Pro ratâ parte (in proportion).

Pro re natâ, to meet the emergency.

Prorogated jurisdiction, a power conferred by consent of the parties upon a judge who would not otherwise have jurisdiction.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Prorogation, prolonging or putting off to another day.

A prorogation is the continuance of the Parliament from one session to another, as an adjournment is a continuation of the session from day to day.

Prorogation never extends beyond eighty days, but fresh prorogations may take place from time to time by proclamation. See also 30 & 31 Vict. c. 81, and title PARLIAMENT.

Pro salute animæ [for the good of his soul]. All prosecutions in the ecclesiastical courts are pro salute animæ.

Prosecution, a proceeding either by way of indictment or information, in the criminal courts, in order to put an offender upon his trial. In all criminal prosecutions, the Queen is nominally the prosecutor. See titles PUBLIC PROSECUTOR and ADVOCATE, LORD.

Prostitute. A woman who indiscriminately consorts with men for hire. Solicitation by prostitutes is punishable in towns by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 89, s. 28; in the metropolis by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 54, and generally by 5 Geo. IV. c. 83; and by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 35, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 96, they are subjected to an interference with their liberty and habits on certain military stations. See CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACTS.

Protectio trahit subjectionem, et subjectio protectionem. Co. Litt. 65 a.—(Protection begets subjection, subjection protection.)

Protection, defence, shelter from evil, especially from being arrested; also, an immunity granted by the Crown to a person to be free from lawsuits for a certain time, and for some reasonable cause: it is a branch of the royal prerogative, now very rarely resorted to. Also the giving of advantages in respect of duties to home over foreign commodities. Consult Mill's Pol. Econ.

Protection of Property. See the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86.

Protection Order, A wife deserted by her husband, may obtain from a magistrate or the Court for Divorce an order to protect property acquired and to be acquired by her since desertion, as if she were a feme sole; after the order is granted, she sues and is sued as a feme sole. The husband may apply to the magistrate who made the order, or his successor, for the discharge thereof.—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 51; 27 & 28 Vict.

c. 44; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 43 (Ireland). See also MARRIED WOMAN'S PROPERTY.

Protectionibus, de, the statute 33 Edw. I. stat. 1, allowing a challenge to be entered against a protection, etc.

Protectorate, the period during which Oliver Cromwell ruled in this country; (2) also the office of protector; (3) the relation of the English Sovereign, till the year 1864, to the Ionian Islands.

Protector of the Settlement, the person appointed by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, in substitution for the old tenant to the præcipe, whose concurrence in barring estates-tail in remainder is required in order to preserve, under certain modifications, the control of the tenant for life over the remainder-man.

The protector is thus defined:—‘If, at the time when there shall be a tenant-in-tail of lands under a settlement, there shall be subsisting in the same lands, or any of them under the same settlement, any estate for years determinable on the dropping of a life or lives, or any greater estate (not being an estate for years), prior to the estate-tail, then the owner of the prior estate, or the first of such prior estates (if more than one) then subsisting under the same settlement, or who would have been so if no absolute disposition thereof had been made (the first of such prior estates, if more than one, being, for all the purposes of this act, deemed the prior estate), shall be the protector of the settlement, so far as regards the lands in which such prior estate shall be subsisting, and shall for all the purposes of this act be deemed the owner of such prior estate, although the same may have been charged or incumbered by the owner or the settlor, or otherwise; and although the whole of the rents and profits be exhausted or required for the payment of the charges and incumbrances of such prior estate, and although such prior estate may have been absolutely disposed of by the owner, or by or through the bankruptcy or insolvency or other default of such owner’ (3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74). It is to be observed, that his prior estate must continue to subsist, for if it be merged, surrendered, or determined by forfeiture, it is presumed that he would cease to be the protector. The section then goes on to enact, ‘that an estate by the courtesy, in respect to the estate tail, or of any prior estate created by the same settlement, shall be deemed prior estate under the same settlement within this clause, and that an estate by way of resulting use or trust to or for the settlor, shall be deemed an estate under the same settlement within the meaning of this clause’ (s. 22).

Protest, a solemn declaration of opinion, generally of dissent. Each peer has a right, when he disapproves of the vote of the majority of the House of Lords, to enter his dissent on the journals of the House, with his reasons for such dissent, which is usually styled his protest.

Also, a notification written by a notary upon a foreign bill of exchange of non-acceptance or nonpayment; as to this, see Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 51, by which a foreign bill, dishonoured by non-acceptance or non-payment must be duly protested, otherwise the drawer and indorsers are discharged. All protests made in England must, by the Stamp Act, 1870 (see s. 116 and schedule), be on a stamp, otherwise they cannot be given in evidence without payment of a penalty.

The following is the form of protest for non-payment:—

‘On this day, the first of January, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, at the request of A. B., bearer of the original bill of exchange, whereof a true copy is on the other side written I, Y. Z., of London, notary public, by royal authority duly admitted and sworn, did exhibit the said bill.’

[Here the presentment is stated, and to whom made, and the reason, if assigned, for non-payment.]

‘Wherefore I, the said notary, at the request aforesaid, have protested, and by these presents do solemnly protest as well against the drawer, acceptor, and indorsers of the said bill of exchange, as against all others whom it may concern, for exchange, re-exchange, and all costs, charges, damages, and interests suffered and to be suffered, for want of payment of the said original bill. Thus done and protested in London aforesaid, in the presence of E. F.’

[The expenses of noting and protest are then subscribed.]

Also, a writing attested by a justice of the peace or consul, drawn up by a master of a ship, stating the circumstances under which any injury has happened to the ship, or to the cargo, or other circumstances calculated to effect the liability of the shipowner or the charterer, etc.

Protestando, a word made use of to avoid double pleading in actions; it prevents the party that makes it from being concluded by the plea he is about to make, that issue cannot be joined upon it; and it is also a form of pleading, where one will not directly affirm or deny anything alleged by another or himself. But by rule of court, Hil, 4 Wm. IV., ‘no protestation shall hereafter be made in any pleadings, but either party shall be entitled to the same advantage in that or other actions, as if a protestation had been made.’—1 Chit. Pl. 646.

As to protestation in equity pleadings, see Story's Eq. Pleadings, 669; and consult Daniell's Chancery Practice.

Protestants, those who adhered to the doctrine of Luther; so called, because, in 1529, they protested against a decree of the Emperor Charles V. and of the diet of Spire, and declared that they appealed to a general council. The name is now applied indiscriminately to all the sects, of whatever denomination, who have seceded from the Church of Rome.—Encyc. Lond.

Protestation. See PROTESTANDO.

Prothonotaries, officers in the Courts of Common Pleas and Exchequer, who were superseded by the masters.—7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 30; 1 Steph. Com. They were, however, continued in the Courts of Common Pleas at Durham and Lancaster. See now DISTRICT REGISTRARS.

Protocol [fr. πρωτος, Gk.; and κόλλη], the original copy of any writing.

An original is styled the protocol or scriptura matrix.—Encyc. Lond.

The term is usually applied to writings of a diplomatic character.

Protutor, a quasi tutor.—Civil Law.

Protat patet per recordum (even as it appears by the record). The omission of the words ‘per recordum’ is but form, and so it was twice adjudged, viz., in Hancocke v. Prowd, and Clegat v. Banbury, 2 Sid. 16; 1 Saund. 337 b. n. (4). Rendered unnecessary by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 24.

Prover, an approver (q. v.)

Provident and Industrial Societies. See INDUSTRIAL SOCIETIES.

Province, the district over which the jurisdiction of an archbishop extends: England is divided into two provinces, Canterbury and York; the province of York comprises all north of the Humber, i.e., Yorkshire and Lancashire, etc., and Cheshire, all the rest of the island is in the province of Canterbury; a county; an out-lying county governed by a deputy or lieutenant. Metaphorically, the sphere of duty: as the province of the judge and the province of the jury.

Provincial constitutions, the decrees of provincial synods held under divers Archbishops of Canterbury, from Stephen Langton, in the reign of Henry III., to Henry Chichele, in the reign of Henry V., and adopted also by the province of York in the reign of Henry VI.—Lynd. Provinciale.

Provincial courts, the several archiepiscopal courts in the two ecclesiastical provinces of England.

Provinciale, a work on ecclesiastical law, by William Lyndwode, official principal to Archbishop Chichele in the reign of Edward IV. 4 Reeves, c. xxv. 117.

Proving a will in Chancery. Where lands were devised by will away from the heir, the devisee, in order to perpetuate the testimony of the witnesses to such will, exhibited a bill in Chancery against the heir, and set forth the will verbatim therein, suggesting that the heir was induced to dispute its validity; and then the defendant having answered, they proceeded to issue as in other cases, and examined the witnesses to the will; after which the cause was at an end, without proceeding to any decree, no relief being prayed by the bill; but the heir was always entitled to his costs. See now BILL IN CHANCERY.

Provisional assignees, those who (under a former system of the bankrupt law) were appointed under fiat in bankruptcy in the country to take charge of bankrupts' estates, etc., until the creditors' assignees were appointed.

Provisional committee, a committee appointed for a temporary occasion.

Provisional Order. An order by a Government department authorising a public undertaking, called 'provisional,' because it is of no force unless and until it is confirmed by act of parliament. Provisional Orders may be made by the Local Government Board under the Public Health Act, 1875, for the formation of 'united districts' for the purposes of that act (s. 279), or altering the areas of local government districts (s. 270), or similar purposes after public notice given and objections considered in the manner pointed out by s. 297 of the Act; by the 'confirming authority' for 'improvement schemes' made by a 'local authority' under the Artisans and Labourers Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875; and by the Board of Trade under the Electric Lighting Act, 1882.

Procedure by provisional order is less expensive than procedure by bill direct.

Provisiones, those acts of parliament which were passed to curb the arbitrary power of the Crown.—Mat. Paris.

Proviso, stipulation, caution, a condition, inserted in any deed, on the performance whereof the validity of the deed depends. As to the proviso for re-entry in a lease, see FORFEITURE (5).

The terms proviso and condition are synonymous, and signify some quality annexed to a real estate by virtue of which it may be defeated, enlarged, or created upon an uncertain event. Such qualities annexed to personal contracts and agreements are generally called conditions. A proviso or condition differs from a covenant in this, that the former is in the words of, and binding upon, both parties; whereas the latter is in the words of the grantor only.

Proviso est providere presentia et futura non præterita. Co. 72.—(A proviso is to provide for the present or future, not the past.)

Proviso, Trial by. Where the plaintiff after issue joined, did not proceed to trial where he ought to have done so, the defendant might under the old practice have the action tried by proviso; he might give the plaintiff notice of trial, make up the record, carry it down and enter it, and proceed to the trial as if he were proceeding as plaintiff. This could be done only in cases where the plaintiff had been guilty of some laches or default after issue joined, except in replevin, prohibition, quare impedit, and error in fact: in which case both parties being plaintiffs, the defendant might make up the record, and thereupon proceed to trial, although no laches or default were imputable to the plaintiff. The right to try by proviso was expressly saved by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 116, but a defendant seldom tried by proviso, as the better course was to take proceedings under C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 101.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1492.

Under the Judicature Acts if the plaintiff does not within six weeks after the close of the pleadings, or within such extended time as a Court or judge may allow, give notice of trial, the defendant may, before notice of trial given by the plaintiff, give notice of trial and thereby specify a mode of trial, and in such case the plaintiff on giving notice within four days, or such extended time as a Court or judge may allow, that he desires to have the issues of fact tried before a judge and jury, shall be entitled to have the same so tried (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r 4; see also rr. 2 and 3). See further NOTICE OF TRIAL.

Provisor, a purveyor; also one who sued to the court of Rome for a provision.—Cowel.

Provisors, Statutes against, 25 Edw. III. st. 6; 27 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 3; 38 Edw. III. st. 1, c. 4, and st. 2, cc. 1, 2, 3, 4; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 155, all repealed as obsolete by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1863. See PRÆMUNIRE.

Provost, the principal magistrate of a royal burgh in Scotland; a governing officer of an university or college.

Provost-Marshal, an officer of the royal navy, who had the charge of prisoners taken at sea, and sometimes also on land.—13 Car. II. c. 9.

Proxenetæ, a kind of broker or agent.

All contracts and agreements respecting marriage (commonly called marriage-brokerage contracts), by which a party engages to give another a compensation, if he will negotiate an advantageous marriage for him, are void, as being injurious to or subversive of the public interest. But the civil law does not seem to have held contracts of this sort in such severe rebuke; for it allowed proxenetæ, or match-makers, to receive a reward for their services to a limited extent.—1 Story's Eq. Jurisp. s. 260.

Proxies, annual payments made by the parochial clergy to the bishop, etc., on visitation.

Proxy, a person appointed usually by written authority to vote at the discretion of the proxy, in which the principal confides in the stead of another to represent him.

The stamp-duty on a proxy to vote at a meeting of a joint-stock company is reduced to 1d. by 34 Vict. c. 4.

Prudenter agit qui præcepto legis obtemperat. 5 Co. 49.—(He acts prudently, who obeys the command of the law.)

Pryk, a kind of service of tenure. Blount says it signifies an old-fashioned spur with one point only, which the tenant, holding land by this tenure, was to find for the king.

Psalter, the table of Psalms. See 34 & 35 Vict. c. 37, amending the law relating to the Tables of Lessons and Psalter contained in the Prayer-book.

Pseudograph, false writing.

Pubertas. See AGE.

Puberty [fr. pubertas, Lat.], the age of 14 in men, and 12 in women; when they are held fit for and capable of contracting marriage. See AGE, and 4 Steph. Com. 23; 4 Br. & Had. Com.

Publicans, persons authorized by license to keep a public-house and retail therein for consumption on or off the premises where sold all intoxicating liquors. Publicans (who are also termed 'licensed victuallers') are subjected to a number of restrictions by a series of acts called the 'Licensing Acts.' See INTOXICATING LIQUORS, and as to the duties and the responsibility of innkeepers, see INNKEEPERS.

Publication, confiscation.—Civ. Law.

Publication, divulgence; proclamation; the word is also applied to the uttering of oral slander. Publication of evidence in Chancery is no longer practised, as all parties attend the examination of witnesses.

The publication of fair reports of legal proceedings in court (other than ex parte proceedings) is a common law right exempt from proceedings for libel.

The publication of the state of affairs in a Chancery suit, in a newspaper, is often ordered by the court as a necessary step in a suit.

Publication of a citation in two newspapers is frequently ordered by the Court for Divorce and the Court of Probate as a step to entering an appearance for a party.

As for the publication of an apology for libel in a newspaper, see LIBEL.

As for publication of banns of marriage, see 4 Geo. IV. c. 76: 6 Geo. IV. c. 92; 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 18; and MARRIAGE.

Publication of a will is no longer necessary by 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 13.

Public accounts, the accounts of the expenditure of the nation. They are rendered to the Comptroller and Auditor-General under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 39.

Public Act of Parliament. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Public Appointments, Sale of, the sale or transfer of these is generally contrary to the policy of the law, and prohibited in most cases by the express enactment of the legislature (5 & 6 Edw. VI. c. 16; 49 Geo. III. c. 126; 6 Geo. IV. cc. 82 and 83). See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, s. 42, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 88, making void (except when under the Augmentation and Church Building Acts) any sale or assignment by any spiritual person of any parsonage held in virtue of his office.

Public baths. See BATHS.

Public carriages and conveyances. See STAGE CARRIAGES, RAILWAYS, and CONVEYANCES BY WATER.

Public chapels are chapels founded at some period later than the church itself; they were designed for the accommodation of such of the parishioners as in course of time had begun to fix their residence at a distance from its site; and chapels so circumstanced were described as chapels of ease, because built in aid of the original church.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 745.

Public Health. The first 'Public Health Act' which was only an 'adoptive act' (see ADOPTIVE ACT), was passed in 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), and was followed in subsequent years down to 1874 by a great variety of other Acts (for a list of them see schedule 5 to the Act of 1875, after mentioned), the whole of which, except so far as they relate to the Metropolis, have now been repealed by the Public Health Act, 1875, which consolidates the law relating to public health, and re-enacts the substance of the repealed Acts. It provides that England, except the Metropolis, shall consist of districts to be called 'urban sanitary districts' and 'rural sanitary districts' (s. 1). The urban authority is (1) in boroughs subject to the Municipal Corporation Act, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses acting by the council; (2) in Improvement Act districts, the Improvement Commissioners; and (3) in Local Government Districts, the Local Board (s. 6). In rural districts the guardians are the sanitary authority (s. 9). The Act contains elaborate provisions with reference to sewers and drains (ss. 13—26), the disposal of sewage (ss. 27—31), the making of sewage works without the district (ss. 32—34), privies, water-closets, etc. (ss. 35—41), scavenging and cleansing (ss. 42—50), water supply (ss. 51—70), cellar-dwellings and lodging-houses (ss. 71—90), the prevention, abatement, etc., of nuisances (ss. 91—111), offensive trades (ss. 112—115), unsound meat, etc. (ss. 116—9), infectious diseases and hospitals, epidemic diseases, mortuaries, etc. (ss. 120—143), highways and streets (ss. 144—160), the lighting of streets by gas or other means of lighting (ss. 161—3), public pleasure grounds and clocks (ss. 164—5), markets and slaughter-houses (ss. 166—70), police regulations (ss. 171—2), contracts (ss. 173—4), purchase of lands (ss. 175—8), arbitration (ss. 179—81), bye-laws (ss. 182—8), officers of local authorities (ss. 189—96), mode of conducting business (ss. 197—206), expenses of urban authorities and urban rates (ss. 207—228), expenses of rural authorities (ss. 229—32), borrowing powers (ss. 233—44), audit of accounts (ss. 245—50), prosecution of offences, recovery of penalties, notices, and appeals (ss. 251—69), alteration of areas and union of districts (ss. 270—86), port sanitary authorities (ss. 287—92), inquiries and provisional orders by the Local Government Board (ss. 293—304), miscellaneous and temporary provisions (ss. 305—325), saving and repealing clauses, etc. (ss. 326—343). In schedules to the Act are contained rules as to meetings and proceedings, rules for the election of Local Boards, and other rules and forms.

Consult the works on Public Health of Glen, Lumley, Chambers, or Fitzgerald.

Under the Artizans and Labourers Dwellings Improvements Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 36), various powers and duties are conferred upon local authorities.

As to loans to local authorities see the Local Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 85), and see title PUBLIC WORKS LOANS ACT, 1875.

Public-house. See PUBLICANS.

Public-House Closing Act, 1864, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 64, an 'adoptive act' whereby public-houses and refreshment houses, till then allowed to be open all night, were closed in boroughs and Improvement between 1 and 4 A.M. The Act, which was amended and partly repealed by the Public-House Closing Act, 1865, is applied to the whole of England by s. 11 of the Licensing Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 49, and the general closing hour for licensed premises is substituted for 1 A.M. See also REFRESHMENT HOUSE.

Public Works Loans Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 89), which repeals 27 previous statutes on the same subject, makes provision for the constitution of a body to be called 'The Public Works Loan Commissioners,' who are authorised to make loans for certain public purposes which are enumerated in the first schedule to the Act. As to the funds for this purpose, see ss. 13—17 of the Act. The Act came into operation on the 1st of April, 1876. The works for the purposes of which the Commissioners are authorised to lend money are as follows: Baths and wash-houses provided by local authorities; Burial Grounds provided by burial boards, or (in Scotland) by burial boards or parochial boards; Conservation or improvement of rivers or main drainage; Docks, Harbours, and Piers, and any work for which the Public Works Loan Commissioners are authorized to lend by section 3 of the Harbour and Passing Tolls Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 47); Improvement of Towns; Labourers' Dwellings; Lighthouses, floating and other lights for the guidance of ships, buoys, and beacons; Lunatic Asylums of any county or borough in Great Britain, or of any district or parochial board in Scotland; Police stations and justices' rooms of any county or borough in Great Britain, and the offices connected therewith, also sheriff court buildings in Scotland; Prisons; Public Libraries and Museums; any schoolhouse or work for which a school board is authorized to borrow under the Elementary Education Acts, 1870 and 1873 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 70, and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 86), or any Act amending the same, or under the Education (Scotland) Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 62); Waterworks established or carried on by a sanitary or other local authority; Workhouses or poorhouses, and any work for which guardians of the poor, or (in Scotland) any parochial board, are authorized to borrow under the general acts relating to the relief of the poor; any work for which a sanitary authority are authorized to borrow under the Public Health Act, 1875; any work for which police commissioners are authorized to borrow under the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 101), and any Act amending the same; any work for which a local authority are authorized to borrow under the Public Health (Scotland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 101), or any Act amending the same; any work for which the Commissioners are authorized to lend by any Act passed after the passing of this Act. (See the first schedule and s. 9 of 38 & 39 Vict. c. 89.) See also 'The Public Works Loans (Money) Act, 1875' (38 & 39 Vict. c. 58).

The Public Loans Remission Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 35, remits as irrecoverable certain loans for public or quasi-public purposes, of which the particulars are fully given in the schedule to the Act.

Public Worship Regulation Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 85. By this Act—which proceeds on the preamble that it is expedient that in certain cases further regulations should be made for the administration of the laws relating to the performance of divine service according to the use of the Church of England—it was provided that whenever a vacancy should occur in the office of official principal of the Arches Court of Canterbury (see ARCHES COURT), the judge appointed under that Act should become ex officio such official principal, and all proceedings thereafter taken before the judge in relation to matters arising within the province of Canterbury shall be deemed to be taken in the Arches Court of Canterbury. The Court may be set in motion on representation by one archdeacon, or churchwardens, or any three parishioners declaring themselves to be members of the Church of England: (1) that in any church any alteration in or addition to the fabric, ornaments, or furniture thereof has been made without lawful authority, or that any decoration forbidden by law has been introduced into such church; or (2) that the incumbent has within the preceding twelve months used or permitted to be used in any church or burial ground any unlawful ornament of the minister of the church; or neglected to use any prescribed ornament or vesture; or (3) that the incumbent has within the preceding twelve months failed to observe, or to cause to be observed, the directions contained in the Book of Common Prayer relating to the performance in such church or burial ground, of the services, rites, and ceremonies ordered by the said book, or has made or permitted to be made any unlawful addition to, alteration of, or omission from, such services, rites, and ceremonies. Rules and Orders have been issued under the Act. Lord Penzance was appointed judge shortly after its passing. The Act has been set in motion upon but few occasions, and the meaning and effect of it has been vigorously contested upon each of them, sometimes on very technical points. See, e.g., Hudson v. Tooth, 3 Q. B. D. 46, and ex parte Dale, 6 Q. B. D. 876, in which latter case the Rev. T. P. Dale, after having been committed to prison by Lord Penzance, was discharged by writ of Habeas Corpus granted by the Court of Appeal. The Rev. S. F. Green, however, was imprisoned by a valid sentence, and discharged only upon his benefice becoming void (see s. 13 of the Act). It is now (March, 1883) understood that no further proceedings under the Act will be taken until a Royal Commission now sitting shall have reported upon the constitution, etc., of the Courts Ecclesiastical.

Publicist, a writer on the law of nations.

Printers. See title PRINTERS.

Puddling, a process of importance in canal and other engineering works. A mixture is made of well-tempered clay and sand, reduced to a semi-fluid state, and rendered impervious to water by manual labour, as by working and chopping it about with spades. It is usually applied in three or more strata, to a depth or thickness of about three feet; and care is taken at each operation so to work the new layer of puddling stuff as to unite it with the stratum immediately beneath. Over the top course a layer of common soil is usually laid. It is only by puddling that the filtration of the water of canals into the neighbouring lower lands through which they pass can be prevented.—Smiles' Lives of the Engineers, 253, n. 2. Also a process in the smelting of iron.

Pudzell, to be free from the payment of money for taking wood in a forest.—Co Litt. 233 a. See WOODGILD.

Pueri sunt de sanguine parentum sed pater et mater non sunt de sanguine puerorum. 3 Co. 40.—(Children are of the blood of their parents, but the father and mother are not of the blood of the children.)

Pueritia, the age from seven to fourteen.

Puffer, one who attends a sale by auction, to bid on the part of the owner, for the purpose of raising the price and exciting the eagerness of the bidders.

'The Sale of Land by Auction, 1867,' 30 & 31 Vict. c. 48, regulates the employment of puffers at an auction for the sale of land, and enacts that all sales of land where a puffer has bid shall be illegal unless a right of bidding on behalf of the owner shall have been reserved; that the conditions of sale shall state whether the sale is to be without reserve, or subject to a reserved price, or whether a right to bid is reserved; that if it be stated that the sale is to be without reserve, a puffer is not to be employed; that if a right to bid be reserved the seller or one puffer may bid; and that the practice of opening biddings, formerly sanctioned by courts of equity, shall be discontinued.

Pugilism, See PRIZEFIGHTING.

Puis darrein continuance (since the last continuance) Plea. If any matter of defence arose after the defendant had pleaded, and before the jury had delivered their verdict, the defendant might, within eight days after such matter of defence arose, avail himself of it by a plea, puis darrein continuance before the abolition of the entry of continuances, but since more properly denominated a plea to the further maintenance of the action. It could not be pleaded after a demurrer or verdict. There must have been an affidavit of its truth, and also of the matters thereof having arisen within eight days, unless the court or a judge otherwise ordered. It might have been pleaded during the long vacation. The defendant could only plead one of these pleas. This plea might have been pleaded together with pleas of defence arising before action, provided that the plaintiff might confess such plea, and thereupon was entitled to costs. And a plea containing a defence arising after the commencement of the action might have been pleaded, together with pleas of defences arising before, provided that the plaintiff might confess such plea, and thereupon was entitled to costs up to the time of the pleading.—R. G. H. T. 1853, Rules 22 and 23.

'Pleading after action' is regulated by Order XX. of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

Puisne [fr. puisé, Fr.], junior, inferior, lower in rank. The several judges and barons of the former common law courts at Westminster, other than the chiefs, were called puisé, and this title seems rightly to belong to all Judges of the High Court not having a distinctive title.

Pulsator [fr. pulso, Lat., to accuse], the plaintiff or actor.

Punchayet, an arbitration.—Indian.

Punctuation has no place in deeds or weight in acts of parliament. See Maxwell on Stat.

Pund-brech, pound-breach.

Pundit, an interpreter of the Hindoo law, a learned Brahmin.—Indian.

Punishment, the penalty for transgressing the law, in England usually left within very wide limits to the discretion of the court.

Pupil, a ward: one under the care of a guardian.

Pupilarity, non-age.

Pur autre vie, Tenant, the least estate of freehold which the law acknowledges, for an estate for the life of another is not so great as an estate for one's own life. See 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 6; and SPECIAL OCCUPANCY.

Purchase [fr. perquisitio, or conquestus, Lat., according to the feudists], in its popular sense, an acquisition of land, obtained by way of bargain and sale, for money or some other valuable consideration; in its legal acceptance, an acquisition of land in any lawful manner, other than by descent, or the mere act of law, and including escheat, occupancy, prescription, forfeiture, and alienation. See 2 Br. & Had. Com. 408 et seq.

Purchase, Words of, those by which, taken absolutely, without reference to or connection with any other words, an estate first attaches, or is considered as commencing in point of title, in the person described by them; such as the words 'son,' 'daughter.'

Purchaser, a buyer, a vendee; also the root of descent, from whom, as the terminus à quo, it is in every case to be traced.

To the intent, then, that the pedigree may never be carried farther back than the circumstances of the case and the nature of the title shall require, the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, enacts that the person last entitled to the land (which expression shall extend to the last person who had a right thereto, whether he did or did not obtain the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits thereof (s. 1)), shall, for the purposes of this act, be considered to have been the purchaser thereof, unless it shall be proved that he inherited the same, in which case the person from whom he inherited the same shall be considered to have been the purchaser, unless it shall be proved that he inherited the same; and, in like manner, the last person from whom the land shall be proved to have been inherited shall in every case be considered to have been the purchaser, unless it shall be proved that he inherited the same (s. 2).

Purchaser of a note or bill, the person who buys a promissory note or bill of exchange from the holder without his endorsement. In such cases, if the note or bill should turn out to be bad, the purchaser has no claim against the vendor, unless the latter knew at the time of the sale that it was of no value. See Bayley on Bills, 370.

Pure villenage, a base tenure, where a man holds, upon terms of doing whatsoever is commanded of him, nor knows in the evening what is to be done in the morning, and is always bound to an uncertain service.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 188.

Purgation, the clearing a person's self of a crime of which he was publicly suspected and accused before a judge. It was either canonical, which was prescribed by the canon law, the form whereof, used in the spiritual court, was that the person suspected took his oath that he was clear of the facts objected against him, and brought his honest neighbours with him to make oath that they believed he swore truly; or vulgar, which was by fire or water-ordeal, or by combat. It is entirely abolished.

Purging contempt, atoning for, or clearing oneself from contempt of court (q. v.). It is generally done by apologising and paying fees, and is generally admitted after a moderate rate time in proportion to the magnitude of the offence.

Purificatio Beatæ Mariæ Virginis, the Purification of the Blessed Virgin Mary, which falls on the second day of February in every year.

Puritans. See DISSENTERS.

Purlieu [fr. pourallée, Fr.], land formerly added to an ancient forest by unlawful encroachment, and disafforested by the Charta de Foresta.—4 Inst. 303. See 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 667; Manwood, c. xx.

Purlieu-men, those who have ground within the purlieu to the yearly value of 40s. a year freehold, are licensed to hunt in their own purlieus.—Manwood's For. Laws, c. xx. s. 8.

Purparty, share, part in a division.

Purprestura, vel porprestura, dicitur, quando aliquid super dominum regem injuste occupatur, ut in dominicis regiis, vel in viis publicis obstructis, vel in aquis publicis transversis à recto cursu, vel quando aliquis in civitate super regiam plateam aliquid edificando occupaverit. Et generaliter, quotiens aliquid sit ad nocumentum regii tenementi, vel regie vice vel civitatis, placitum inde ad coronam domini regis pertinet. Glanv. l. 9, c. xi.—(A purpresture is so called, when anything is occupied against the sovereign unjustly: as in the royal domains, or when anything is placed as an obstruction on the high roads, or in the public rivers, against the right course, or when any person in a town has erected a building on the royal highway. And generally, as often as there is anything to the injury of the royal domain, or royal road or state, the plea thence belongs to the Crown.)

Purpresture. See last title.

Purprise [fr. purprisum, law Lat.], a close or enclosure; as also the whole compass of a manor.

Purple, or Porprin, the colour commonly called purple, expressed in engravings by lines in bend sinister. In the arms of princes it was formerly called Mercury, and in those of peers Amethyst.—Heraldic term.

Pursebearer to the Lord Chancellor. The 37 & 38 Vict. c. 81, s. 7, makes provision for the abolition of this office.

Pursuance, prosecution, process.

Pursuer, a plaintiff is so called in Scotch law.

Pursuivant. See POURSUIVANT.

Purus idiot (a congenital idiot). See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 509.

Purveyance. See POURVEYANCE.

Purview, the body of a statute as distinguished from the preamble; the general scope and object of a statute.—2 Inst. 403; 12 Rep. 20.

Putage, Putagium, incontinence.—Spelm.;

Putagium hereditatem non adimit. 1 Reeves' Hist. c. iii., p. 117.—(Incontinence does not take away an inheritance.)

Putative, supposed, reputed; used of a man supposed to be the father of an illegitimate child, and proceeded against as such by the mother under the Bastardy Laws Amendment Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65.

Putts and refusals, time-bargains, or contracts for the sale of supposed stock on a future day. They were forbidden by the 7 Geo. II. c. 3, s. 1 (the Stock Jobbing Act), repealed by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 28. See GAMING.

Puture, a custom claimed by keepers in forests, and sometimes by bailiffs of hundreds to take man's meat, horse's meat, and dog's meat, of the tenants and inhabitants within the perambulation of the forest, hundred, etc. The land subject to this custom is called terra putura. Others, who call it pulture, explain it as a demand in general; and derive it from the monks, who, before they were admitted, pulsabant, knocked at the gates for several days together.—4 Inst. 307; Cowel.

Pyke, Paik, a foot-passenger; a person employed as a night-watch in a village, and as a runner or messenger on the business of the revenue.—Indian.

Pyx. See PIX.

As to their marriages, see 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 85; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 75; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 58; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 197; and 35 Vict. c. 10.

Quale jus, a judicial writ, which lay where a man of religion had judgment to recover land before execution was made of the judgment; it went forth to the escheator between judgment and execution, to inquire what right the religious person had to recover, or whether the judgment were obtained by the collusion of the parties, to the intent that the lord might not be defrauded.—Reg. Jud. 8.

Qualification, that which makes any person fit to do a certain act; also, abatement, diminution.

An annual act used to be passed indemnifying persons who have omitted to qualify themselves for certain offices and employments, and to extend the time limited for those purposes. See 26 & 27 Vict. c. 107. But now by the 29 Vict. c. 22, it is rendered unnecessary to make and subscribe declarations theretofore required as a qualification for offices and employments.

Qualification Act to kill game, 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 25, abolished by 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 32. See GAME.

Qualified, a term applied to a person enabled to hold two benefices.

Qualified fee. See BASE FEE.

Qualified indorsement, an indorsement sans recours, i.e., without recourse to the indorser for payment.—Byles, 11th ed., 151.

Qualified oath, a circumstantial oath.

Qualified property, an ownership of a special and limited kind. It may arise either from the peculiar circumstances of the subject matter, which render it incapable of being under the absolute dominion of any proprietor, as in the case of animals, ferre nature, or from the peculiar circumstances of the owner, the thing itself being capable of absolute ownership, as in the case of a bailment.

Qualify (v. n.), to become qualified.

Qualitas quæ inesse debet, faciliè præsumitur. Jur. Civ.—(A quality which ought to form a part is easily presumed.)

Quality of estate, the period when, and the manner in which, the right of enjoying an estate is exercised. It is of two kinds: (1) the period when the right of enjoying an estate is conferred upon the owner, whether at present or in future; and (2) the manner in which the owner's right of enjoyment of his estate is to be exercised, whether solely, jointly, in common, or in coparcenary.

Quamdiu se bene gesserit (as long as he shall behave himself well), a clause frequent in letters patent or grants of certain offices, to secure them so long as the persons to whom they are granted shall not be guilty of abusing them—the opposite clause being durante bene placito (during the pleasure of the grantor).

Quam longum debet esse rationabile tempus non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione judiciorum. Co. Litt. 56.—(How long reasonable time ought to be, is not defined by law, but depends upon the discretion of the judges.)

Quamvis aliquid per se non sit malum, tamen si sit mali exempli, non est faciendum. 2 Inst. 564.—(Although a thing in itself may not be bad, yet, if it hold out a bad example, it is not to be done.)

Quando abest provisio partis, adest provisio legis. See 13 C. B. 960.—(When provision of party is lacking, provision of law is present.)

Quando acciderint (when they may fall in). See PLENE ADMINISTRATIV.

Quando aliquid mandatur, mandatur et omne per quod pervenitur ad illud. 5 Rep. 116.—(When anything is commanded, everything by which it can be accomplished is also commanded.)

Quando aliquid prohibetur ex directo, prohibetur et per obliquum. Co. Litt. 223.—(When anything is prohibited directly, it is prohibited also indirectly.)

Quando aliquid prohibetur, prohibetur omne per quod devenitur ad illud. 2 Inst. 48.—(When anything is prohibited, everything which tends towards it is prohibited.)

Quando charta continet generalem clausulam, posteaque descendit ad verba specialia quæ clausule generali sunt consentanea, interpretanda est charta secundum verba specialia. 8 Co. 154.—When a charter contains a general clause, and afterwards descends to special words, which are agreeable to the general clause, the charter is to be interpreted according to the special words.)

Quando de una et eadem re duo onerabiles existunt, unus, pro insufficientia alterius, de integro onerabitur. 2 Inst. 277.—(When there are two persons liable for one and the same thing, one for the other's default will be charged for the whole.)

Quando dispositio referri potest ad duas res ita quod secundum relationem unam vitietur et secundum alteram utilis sit, tum facienda est relatio ad illam ut valeat dispositio. 6 Co. 76.—(When a disposition may refer to two things, so that by the former it would be vitiated, and by the latter it would be preserved, then the relation is to be made to the latter, so that the disposition may be valid.)

Quando diversi desiderantur actus ad aliquem statum perficiendum, plus respicit lex actum originalem. 10 Co. 49.—(When to the perfection of an estate divers acts are requisite, the law has more regard to the original act.)

Quando duo jura concurrunt in una persona, æquum est ac si essent in diversis. 4 Co. 118.—(When two rights concur in one person, it is the same as if they were in separate persons.)

Quando jus domini regis et subditi concurrunt, jus regis præferri debet. 9 Co. 129.—(When the right of king and of subject concur, the king's right should be preferred.)

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, concedere videtur id sine quo res ipsa esse non potest. 5 Co. 47.—(When the law gives a man anything, it gives him that without which it cannot exist.)

Quando lex aliquid alicui concedit, omnia incidentia tacite conceduntur. 2 Inst. 326.—(When the law gives anything to any one, all incidents are tacitly given.)

Quando lex est specialis, ratio autem generalis, generaliter lex est intelligenda. 2 Inst. 83.—(When the law is special, but its reason general, the law is to be understood generally.)

Quando mulier nobilis nupserit ignobili, desinit esse nobilis nisi nobilitas nativa fuerit. 4 Co. 118.—(When a noble woman marries a man not noble, she ceases to be noble, unless her nobility was born with her.)

Quando plus fit quàm fieri debet, videtur etiam illud fieri quod faciendum est. 5 Rep. 115.—(When more is done than ought to be done, that too seems to be done which still remains to be done.)

Quando res non valet ut ago, valeat quantum valere potest. Cowp. 600.—(When anything does not operate in the way I intend, let it operate as far as it can.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 543.

Quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis generaliter statutum est intelligendum. 10 Co. 191.—(When the words of a statute are special, but the reason general, the statute is to be understood generally.)

Quantity of estate, its time of continuance, or degree of interest as in fee, during life, or for years. See QUALITY OF ESTATE.

Quantum damnificatus, Issue. This was directed by Chancery to be tried at law to fix the amount of compensation for damage. But see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27, and the Judicature Acts.

Quantum meruit (so much as he has deserved), an action on the case, express or implied, grounded on a promise to pay the plaintiff for doing a thing as much as he deserved or merited. Abolished in effect as a form of action by the rules H. T. 1 Wm. IV.

Quantum tenens domino ex homagio, tantum dominus tenenti ex dominio debet preter solam reverentiam; mutua debet esse domini et homagii fidelitatis connexio. Co. Litt. 64.—(As much as the tenant by his homage owes to his lord, so much is the lord, by his lordship, indebted to the tenant, except reverence alone; the tie of dominion and of homage ought to be mutual.)

Quantum valebat (so much as it was worth), where goods, etc., were delivered at no certain price, or for as much as they were worth in general, then quantum valebat lay, and the plaintiff was to aver them to be worth so much, as where the law obliged one to furnish another with goods or provisions, as an innkeeper to his guests, etc. Abolished as a form of action by the rules H. T. 1 Wm. IV.

Its purposes were afterwards served by the indebitatus count. See now, however, titles PLEADING, and STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

Quarantine, or Quarentaine. By Magna Charta, the widow shall not be distrained to marry afresh, if she choose to live without a husband, but she shall not, however, marry against the consent of the lord; and nothing shall be taken for assignment of her dower, but she shall remain in her husband's capital mansion-house for forty days after his death, during which time her dower shall be assigned. These forty days are called the widow's quarantine. Marriage during these forty days forfeits the quarantine. This right was enforced by writ of Quarantina habendū. See 1 Steph. Com.

2. A quantity of land containing forty perches.—Leg. Hen. I. c. 16.

3. A regulation by which communication with persons, ships, or goods arriving from places infected with the plague, or other contagious disease, or liable thereto, is interdicted for a certain period. The term is derived from the Italian quaranta, forty; it being supposed, that if no infectious disease break out within forty days or six weeks no further danger need be apprehended. During this period, all the things which were supposed capable of retaining infection are subjected to a process of purification. The notion that the plague was imported from the East into Europe seems to have prevailed in all ages. The Venetians were the first who endeavoured to guard against its introduction from abroad, by obliging ships and persons coming from suspected places to perform quarantine. The regulations upon this subject were, probably, issued for the first time in 1484.—Beckman, Hist. of Inven., vol. ii., art. 'Quarantine.' They have since been gradually adopted in every other country. Their introduction into England was comparatively late. Various preventive regulations had been previously enacted, but quarantine was not systematically enforced till after the alarm occasioned by the dreadful plague at Marseilles in 1720. The regulations then adopted were made conformably to the suggestions of the celebrated Dr. Mead, in his famous 'Discourse concerning Pestilential Contagion.'

The existing quarantine regulations are embodied in 6 Geo. IV. c. 78 (and see part 3 of sched. 5 of the Public Health Act, 1875), and the different orders in council issued under its authority. These orders specify what vessels are liable to perform quarantine, the places at which it is to be performed, and the various formalities and regulations to be complied with. The publication in the Gazette of any order in council with respect to quarantine is deemed sufficient notice to all concerned, and no excuse of ignorance is admitted for any infringement of the regulations. To obviate any foundation for such plea, it is ordered that vessels clearing out for any port or place with respect to which there shall be at the time any order in council subjecting vessels from it to quarantine, are to be furnished with an abstract of the quarantine regulations.—McCull. Com. Dict.

Quare clausum fregit (wherefore he broke the close). Trespass is of three kinds: (1) to the person; (2) to the goods; and (3) to the lands of the plaintiff. The action for the third kind of trespass is often termed trespass quare clausum fregit, from the language of the old writ, which commanded the defendant to show quare clausum querentis fregit why he broke the close of the plaintiff.—Steph. Com., bk. v., ch. vii., sect. 2.

Quare eiecit infra terminum (wherefore he ejected within the term), a writ which lay by the ancient law where the wrong-doer or ejector was not himself in possession of the lands, but another who claimed under him.

Quare impedit (wherefore he hindered), a real possessory action, which could formerly be brought only in the court of Common Pleas, or the Common Pleas Division of the High Court (see COMMON PLEAS), and lies to recover a presentation, when the patron's right is disturbed, or to try a disputed title to an advowson. If the right of nomination be in one person, and that of presentation in another, this action lies by the nominator for disturbing his right, either against the presenter before presentation, or against the incumbent after. If two patrons present to one and the same church by several titles, the church is become litigious, because the bishop knows not which has the true and rightful title; in that case, if the bishop admits the clerk of the one, he puts the other out of possession, and consequently to his action; and the bishop becomes a disturber, if he who is put out of possession prove to have a better title. If opposition be intended, it is usual for each party to enter a caveat with the bishop, to prevent the institution of the other's clerk; but to this caveat the temporal courts pay no regard, viewing a caveat as a mere nullity.—Mirhouse on Advows. 265

A plaintiff must show an actual seisin to maintain this writ, and prove, when the title is disputed, a presentment by himself, his ancestor, or some person under whom he claims, and the institution and induction of the presentee.

When the title is not involved, as under the former general issue, ne disturba pas), the plaintiff either takes judgment, or proceeds for damages consequent upon the disturbance; the proofs being, the presentation, the bishop's refusal, and the presentation or institution of the other clerk.

If the delay of presentation arise from the bishop alone, as upon a pretence of incapacity, or the like, then he only is named in the writ; but if there be another presentation set up, then the pretended patron and his clerk are also joined in the action; or it may be brought against the patron and clerk leaving out the bishop; or against the patron only.

But it is most advisable to bring it against all three; for (1) if the bishop be left out, and the suit be not determined till the six months are past, the bishop is entitled to present by lapse, as he is not a party to the suit; but if he be named, and there has been a disturbance before the action, no lapse can possibly accrue till the right is determined. Should, however, the church be full, and there is not any danger of lapse, the bishop need not be joined. (2) If the patron be left out, and the writ be brought only against the bishop and the clerk, the suit is of no effect, and the writ shall abate, for the right of the patron is the principal question in the cause. (3) If the clerk be left out, and have received institution before the action brought (as is sometimes the case), the patron, by this suit, may recover his right of patronage, but not the present turn; for he cannot have judgment to remove the clerk, unless he be made a defendant and party to the suit, to hear what he can allege against it.

Previous to the passing of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), the action was commenced by an original writ issuing out of Chancery, but s. 26 of that Act did away with this singularity of procedure, which is now the same as in other actions in the High Court.

The judgment is that the successful party recover his presentation, and a writ issues to the bishop, commanding him to admit his presentee.

Quare incumbavit, a writ which lay against a bishop, who, within six months after the vacation of a benefice, conferred it on his clerk, whilst two others were contending at law for the right of presentation, calling upon him to show cause why he had incumbered the church.—Reg. Orig. 32. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

Quare intrusit, a writ that formerly lay where the lord proffered a suitable marriage to his ward, who rejected it, and entered into and married another, the value of his marriage not being satisfied to the lord. Abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Quare non admisit, a writ to recover damages against a bishop who does not admit a plaintiff's clerk. It is however rarely or never necessary; for it is said that a bishop refusing to execute the writ ad admittendum clericum, or making an insufficient return to it, may be fined.—Wats. Cler. Law, 302.

Quare non Permittit, an ancient writ, which lay for one who had a right to present to a church for a turn against the proprietary.—Fleta, l. 5, c. vi.

Quare obstruxit, a writ which lay for him who, having a liberty to pass through his neighbour's ground, could not enjoy his right, because the owner had obstructed it.—Fleta, l. 4, c. xxvi.

Quarentena terræ, a furlong.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Quarrel, a dispute, contest; also, an action real or personal.

Quart, the fourth part of a gallon.

Quarter, a length of four inches.

Quarter-days, the days which begin the four quarters of the year, viz., the 25th of March, or Lady-day; the 24th of June, or Midsummer-day; the 29th of September, or Michaelmas-day; and the 25th of December, or Christmas-day.

Quartering traitors. The judgment for high treason, as prescribed by 54 Geo. III. c. 146, s. 1, was that the head of the person after death by hanging should be severed from his body, and the body, divided into four quarters, should be disposed of as the Sovereign should think fit; but this portion of 54 Geo. III. c. 146, s. 1, is repealed by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 31.

Quarter-Rating. The rating on only one-fourth part of the net annual value—a privilege enjoyed by owners of railways and other kinds of property as mentioned in s. 211 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Quarter-seal, the seal kept by the director of the Chancery in Scotland. It is in the shape and impression of the fourth part of the Great Seal; and is in the Scotch statutes called the Testimonial of the Great Seal. Gifts of land from the Crown pass this seal in certain cases.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Quarter-sessions. See COUNTRY and BOROUGH-SESSIONS.

Quarter of a year, ninety-one days.—Co. Litt. 135 b.

Quarto die post, the fourth day inclusive after a return of a writ, and if a defendant appeared then it was sufficient; but this practice was afterwards altered.—3 Bl. Com. 278; 1 Tidd's Pr. 107.

Quash [cassum facere, Lat.; casser, Fr.]

to overthrow or annul—Bracton;—as to quash an indictment, or order of justices, or a poor-rate.

Quasi. This word prefixed to a noun means that although the thing signified by the combination of 'quasi' with the noun does not comply in strictness with the definition of the noun, it shares its qualities, falls philosophically under the same head, and is best marked by its approximation thereto. The titles next following furnish examples.

Quasi contract, an act which has not the strict form of a contract, but yet has the effect of it; an implied contract.

Quasi-crime, or Quasi-delict, the action of one doing damage or evil involuntarily.

Quasi-entail. An estate pur autre vie may be granted, not only to a man and his heirs, but to a man and the heirs of his body, which is termed a quasi-entail; the interest so granted not being properly an estate-tail (for the statute De Donis applies only where the subject of the entail is an estate of inheritance), but yet so far in the nature of an estate-tail, that it will go to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the cestui que vie, in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend, if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body. And such estate may also be granted with a remainder thereon during the life of the cestui que vie; and the alienation of the quasi tenant-in-tail will bar not only his issue, but those in remainder. The alienation, however, for that purpose (unlike that of an estate-tail, properly so called), may be effected by any method of conveyance, except a will.—1 Steph. Com., 7th. ed., 450.

Quasi-fee, an estate gained by wrong; for wrong is unlimited and uncontained within rules.

Quasi-personalty, things which are moveable in point of law, though fixed to things real, either actually, as emblements (fructus industriales), fixtures, etc.; or fictitiously, as chattels-real, leases for years, etc.

Quasi-realty, things which are fixed in contemplation of law to realty, but moveable in themselves, as heir-looms (or limbs of the inheritance), title-deeds, court rolls, etc.

Quasi-tenant at sufferance, an under-tenant, who is in possession at the determination of an original lease, and is permitted by the reversioner to hold over.

Quasi-traditio, the placing a person in possession of a right.

Quasi-trustee, a person who reaps a benefit from a breach of trust, and so becomes answerable as a trustee.—Lewin on Trusts, 4th ed., 592, 638.

Quatuorviri, magistrates who had the care and inspection of roads among the Romans.

—Civ. Law.

Quays. As to erection of quays in or near to a public harbour, or river communicating therewith, see 46 Geo. III. c. 153, amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 69, s. 15. See also the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), and see further HARBOURS.

Quebec. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 53; and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 35; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 71.

Queen [fr. queen, Sax., a wife], a woman who is sovereign of a kingdom. The queen regent, regnant, or sovereign, is she who holds the Crown in her own right, as Queen Victoria, who has the same powers, prerogatives, rights, dignities, and duties as if she had been a king.

(1) With regard to the Queen's title, the Crown of England, by the positive constitution of the kingdom, has ever been, and is descendible in a course peculiar to itself, yet subject to limitation by Parliament; but notwithstanding those limitations, the Crown retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the prince to whom it is limited.

(2) Her duties are to govern the people according to law, to execute judgment in mercy, and to maintain the established religion.

(3) Her prerogatives are—

(a) As to her dignity or royal character, which consists in the legal attributes of—

(α) Personal sovereignty.

(β) Absolute perfection.

(γ) Political perpetuity.

(b) As to her regal power, in which consists the executive part of government; in foreign concerns, the Queen, as the representative of the nation, has the right or prerogative of—

(a) Sending and receiving ambassadors.

(β) Making treaties.

(γ) Proclaiming war or peace.

(δ) Issuing reprisals.

(ε) Granting safe conducts.

In domestic affairs, the Queen is a constituent part of the supreme legislative power; she may negative all new laws, and is bound by no statute unless specially named therein. She is also considered as the general of the kingdom, and may raise fleets and armies, build forts, appoint havens, erect beacons, and prohibit the exportation of arms and ammunition. She is also the fountain of justice and general conservator of the peace, and therefore may erect courts (wherein she has a legal ubiquity), prosecute offenders, pardon crimes, and issue proclamations. She is likewise the fountain of honour, office, and privilege. The Queen is also the head of the church, and as such convenes, regulates, and dissolves synods, nominates bishops, and receives appeals in ecclesiastical causes.

At the commencement of the present reign a civil list was settled on Her Majesty for life to the amount of 385,000*l.* per annum, payable quarterly, out of the Consolidated Fund, of which the sum of 60,000*l.* is assigned for Her Majesty's privy purse: in return for which grant it was provided that the hereditary revenues of the Crown should, during the present Queen's life, be carried to and form part of the Consolidated Fund.

Queen, Shooting at, a high misdemeanour. See SHOOTING AT THE QUEEN.

Queen Anne's Bounty. See BOUNTY OF QUEEN ANNE.

Queen Consort, the wife of the reigning king. She is a public person, exempt and distinct from the king, for she is of ability to purchase lands and to convey them, to make leases, to grant copyholds, and to do other acts of ownership, without the concurrence of her husband. She is also capable of taking a grant at common law from her husband, which no other wife can do. She has separate courts and offices distinct from the king's, not only in matters of ceremony, but even of law; and her attorney and solicitor-general are entitled to a place within the bar of His Majesty's courts, together with the king's counsel. She may likewise be sued, and sue alone without joining her husband; she is indeed considered as a feme sole, and not as a feme covert. She pays no toll, nor is she liable to any fine in any court. As to the security of her life and person, she is placed on the same footing with the king. See 1 Br. & Had. Com. 256.

Queen Dowager, the widow of a deceased king. She enjoys most of the privileges belonging to her as queen consort.

Queen Gold, a royal revenue which belonged to every queen consort during her marriage with the king, and was due from every person who made a voluntary offer or fine to the king amounting to ten marks or upwards or in consideration of any privileges, grants, licenses, pardons, or other matters of royal favour conferred upon him by the king; it was due in the proportion of one-tenth part more, over and above the entire offering or fine made to the king, and became an actual debt of record to the queen's majesty, by the mere recording of the fine. But no such payment was due for any aids or subsidies granted to the king in parliament or convocation; nor for fines imposed by courts on offenders against their will, nor for voluntary presents to the king, without any consideration-money from him to the subject, nor for any sale or contract whereby the revenues and possessions of the Crown were granted away or diminished. It is now quite obsolete.—2 Steph. Com.

Queen Regnant, or Regent, she who holds the Crown in her own right. See QUEEN.

Queen's Advocate. See ADVOCATE, QUEEN'S. Also an officer in Scotland, similar, but in some respects superior, to the Queen's Attorney-General in England. See ADVOCATE, LORD.

Queen's Bench. The Court of King's or Queen's Bench (so called because the king used formerly to sit there in person, the style of the court still being, coram ipso rege, or coram ipsâ reginâ) was a court of record, and the supreme court of common law in the kingdom, consisting of a chief justice and four puisné justices, who were by their office the sovereign conservators of the peace and supreme coroners of the land. Yet though the king himself used to sit in this court, and in later times was still supposed so to do, he did not, neither by law was empowered to, determine any cause or motion, but by the mouth of his judges to whom he committed his whole judicial authority.

This court, which was the remnant of the aula regia, was not, nor could be from the very nature and constitution of it, fixed to any certain place, but might follow the king's person wherever he went, for which reason all process issuing out of this court in the king's name was returnable 'ubicunque fuerimus in Angliâ.' For some centuries, and until the opening of the Royal Courts, the Court usually sat at Westminster, being an ancient palace of the Crown, but might remove with the King as he thought proper to command. And we find that after Edward I. had subdued Scotland, it sat at Roxburgh; and this moveable quality, as well as its dignity and power, are fully expressed by Bracton where he says that the justices of this court are capitales generales perpetui et majores; a latere regis residentes; qui omnium aliorum corrigere tenentur injurias et errores. And it is moreover especially provided in the articuli super chartas that the king's chancellor and the justices of his bench shall follow him, so that he may have at all times near unto him some that be learned in the laws.

The jurisdiction of this court was very high. It kept all inferior jurisdictions within the bounds of their authority, and might either, by writ of certiorari, remove their proceedings to be determined here, or, by writ of prohibition, prohibit their progress below. It superintended all civil operations in the kingdom. (See QUO WARRANTO). By writ of mandamus it commanded magistrates to do what their duty required in every case where there was no other specific remedy. By writ of habeas corpus it protected the liberty of the subject by speedy and summary interposition. It took cognizance both of criminal and civil causes; the former in what is called the crown side or crown office; the latter in the plea side of the court. On the crown side it took cognizance of all criminal causes from high treason down to the most trivial misdemeanour or breach of the peace. Into it also indictments from all inferior courts might be removed by writ of certiorari, and be tried either at bar, or at Nisi Prius, or some extreme cases at the Central Criminal Court under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 16. See CERTIORARI, HABEAS CORPUS, MANDAMUS, QUO WARRANTO.

On the plea side it exercised a general jurisdiction over all actions between subject and subject, with the exception of real actions and suits concerning the revenue. Its jurisdiction in civil actions was formerly limited to trespass or injuries said to have been committed vi et armis, but by means of fictitious proceedings called Bill of Middlesex and Latitat (which see) it usurped jurisdiction over all personal actions. It has latterly exercised a direct jurisdiction in all such actions by virtue of 2 Wm. IV. c. 39, which abolished these fictitious proceedings. Error lay from this Court to the Exchequer Chamber.

The matters comprised within the civil jurisdiction of this court have been thus classed—

(I.) Formal or plenary.

(1) Personal actions.

(2) Mixed action of ejectment.

(II.) Summary.

(1) Annuities and mortgages (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76, ss. 219, 220).

(2) Arbitrations and awards.

(3) Habeas Corpus Act (31 Car. II. c. 2, extended by 56 Geo. III. c. 100).

(4) Interpleader Act (1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 58).

(5) Over officers of the court.

(6) Warrants of attorney, cognovits, and judges' orders for judgment.

(III) Auxiliary.

(1) Answering a special case.

(2) Enforcing judgments of inferior courts of record.

(3) Prerogative Mandamus to compel inferior courts or officers to act. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 75—77.

(4) Prohibition.

(5) Quo warranto.

(6) Trying an issue in fact from a court of equity, or a feigned issue.

(IV.) Appellate.

(1) Appeal from the decisions of justices of the peace, in giving possession of deserted premises to landlords, under 11 Geo. II. c. 19, ss. 16, 17.

(2) Writs of error from certain inferior courts of record (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 102).

(3) Writs of false judgment from inferior courts, not of record, but proceeding according to the course of the common law.

(4) Appeals by way of a case from the summary jurisdiction of justices of the peace, on questions of law (20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, Order of Court, 25th November, 1857).

Connected with the Court of Queen's Bench, and auxiliary thereto, was the Practice Court, usually presided over by one of the puisné judges in rotation. The Practice Court (called also the Bail Court) heard and determined common matters of practice, and ordinary motions for writs of mandamus, prohibition, etc.

In the time of the Commonwealth, the King's Bench sat under the name of the Upper Bench.

The jurisdiction of this Court was assigned, by s. 34 of the Jud. Act, 1873, to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, and by Order in Council under s. 32 of the same Act, the Common Pleas and Exchequer Divisions were, in February 1881, merged in the same 'Queen's Bench Division.' The Lord Chief Justice of England, besides being an ex officio judge of the Court of Appeal (Jud. Act, 1875, s. 4), is President of the Division (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 31).

Queen's Coroner and Attorney, an officer on the Crown side of the Queen's Bench.—6 & 7 Vict. c. 20. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 54, the office of Assistant Master of the Crown Office is abolished; and the officers on the Crown side of the Court are to be the Queen's Coroner and Attorney, and one master. By the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 29, certain annual payments by and to the Queen's Coroner and Attorney are discontinued. By the Judicature (Officers) Act, 1879, the Queen's Coroner and Attorney became a 'Master of the Supreme Court.'

Queen's Counsel, barristers appointed counsel to the Crown, and called within the bar. They answer in some measure to the advocates of the revenue, advocati fisci, among the Romans. They must not be employed against the Crown without special license, which is not refused unless the Crown desires to be represented by the individual in the case. Each King's Counsel had a small salary, but it is not so now. Under the 13 & 14 Vict.

c. 25 (repealed by Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1875), they might act as judges of assize when named in the commission, and may, and often do, act as such judges, as being 'persons usually named in the commission' under s. 29 of the Jud. Act, 1873, and being expressly authorized so to be named by s. 37 of that Act.

Queen's Evidence. See APPROVER.

Queensland, a separate colony, in the district of Moreton Bay, New South Wales. See Gaz., June 3rd, 1849, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 44.

Queen's Printer has the liberty of printing the Bible, Prayer-book, Statutes, and Acts of State, to the exclusion of all other presses, except those of the two universities. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 3, all copies of private and local and personal acts of parliament not public acts, if purporting to be printed by the Queen's printers, and all copies of the journals of either House of Parliament, and of royal proclamations purporting to be printed by the printers to the Crown, or by the printers to either House of Parliament, or by any or either of them, shall be admitted as evidence thereof by all courts, etc., without any proof being given that such copies were so printed.

Queen's Prison, a jail which used to be appropriated to the debtors and criminals confined under process or by authority of the Superior Courts at Westminster, the High Court of Admiralty, and also to persons imprisoned under the bankrupt law. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, amended by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 7, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 60, consolidated the Queen's Bench, Fleet, and Marshalsea Prisons. See the Queen's Prison Discontinuance Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 104.

Queen's Proctor. As to his intervention in proceedings for divorce and for nullity of marriage, see title, INTERVENTION.

Queen's Remembrancer, an office on the revenue side of the Court of Exchequer, usually held by one of the masters of the court. See 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104. He is now an officer of the Supreme Court (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 77).

Que estate [quorum statum, Lat.], as much as to say, whose estate he has. It is a defence where one entitling another to land, says, that he and they whose estate he has, have enjoyed the same. A person cannot prescribe in anything by a que estate that lies in grant, and cannot pass without deed or fine; but in him and his ancestors he may, because he comes in by descent without any conveyance.—1 Inst. 121; Bl. Com. 266; 2 Br. & Had. Com. 419. See PRESCRIPTION.

Que est le mesme [que est eadem, Lat.], a term used in actions of trespass, etc., for a direct justification of the very act complained of by the plaintiff as a wrong. See QUÆ EST EADEM.

Quemadmodum ad questionem facti non respondent iudices, ita, ad questionem juris non respondent iuratores. Co. Litt. 295.—(In the same manner that judges do not answer to questions of fact, so jurors do not answer to questions of law.)

Quem reditum reddit, an old writ which lay where a rent-charge, or other rent which was not rent service, was granted by fine holding of the grantor. If the tenant would not attorn, then the grantee might have had this writ.—O. N. B. 126.

Querela, an action or declaration preferred in any court of justice.—Cowel. See DUPLEX QUERELA, and AUDITA QUERELA.

Querela coram rege a concilio discutiendâ et terminandâ, a writ by which one is called to justify a complaint of a trespass made to the king himself, before the king and his council.—Reg. Orig. 124.

Querere, a complaint to a court.

Querent [fr. querens, Lat.], a plaintiff, complainant, inquirer.

Quest, inquest, inquisition, or inquiry.

Question, interrogatory; anything inquired. See TORTURE.

Questions of fact, might be stated in an issue without pleadings by consent (C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 42), and all issues of fact might by consent be tried by a judge without a jury (C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 1). See now TRIAL.

In general when a jury is sworn it decides all the issues of fact; but if there arise in the course of the trial a question of fact preliminary to the decision of a point of law, etc., e.g., the genuineness of a document as necessary to its being admitted in evidence, that question of fact must be decided by the judge.

So in questions as to the competence of a witness to be sworn. See VOIR DIRE, INCOMPETENT WITNESS, OATH.

The law of a foreign country is a question of fact. See FOREIGN LAW.

Question of law. See last title. See also JUDGMENT, SPECIAL CASE, and TRIAL.

Questman, or Questmonger, starter of law-suits or prosecutions; also a person chosen to inquire into abuses, especially such as relate to weights and measures; also a church-warden.—See Prid. Churchwarden's Guide.

Questus, land which does not descend by hereditary right, but is acquired by one's own labour and industry.—Cowel.

Questus est nobis, a writ of nuisance, which by 15 Edw. I. lay against him to whom a house or other thing that caused a nuisance, descended or was alienated; whereas, before that statute the action lay only against him who first levied or caused the nuisance to the damage of his neighbour.—Cowel.

Qui abjurat regnum amittit regnum sed non regem; patriam sed non patrem patrie. 7 Co. 9.—(He who abjures the realm leaves the realm, but not the king; the country, but not the father of the country.)

Qui adimit medium, dirimit finem. Co. Litt. 161.—(He who takes away the middle destroys the end.)

Qui aliquid statuerit parte inauditâ alterâ, æquum licet dixerit, hæud æquum fecerit. 6 Co. 52.—(He who decides anything, one party being unheard, though he should decide right, does wrong.)

Quia Emptores, Statute of, 18 Edw. I. st. 1 c. 1, A.D. 1290, West. the Third. It is entitled in the parliament-roll, from the subject of it, statutum regis de terris vendendis et emendis. Prior to this statute, any person might, by a grant of land, have created a tenure as of his person; but if no such tenure were reserved, the feoffee held of the feoffor, by the same services by which the feoffor held of his superior lord. The consequence was, that all the fruits of tenure fell into the hands of the feoffors or mesne lords, to the prejudice of the superior lords of the fee; for remedy whereof it was by this statute enacted, 'That thenceforth it shall be lawful to every freeman to sell at his own pleasure his lands and tenements, or part of them, so that the feoffee shall hold the same lands or tenements, of the chief lord of the same fee, by such service and customs as his feoffor held before.'—2 Inst. 500; 2 Reeves, c. xi., p. 223. See MANOR.

Qui alterius jure utitur eodem jure uti debet. Pothier, Tr. de Change, pt. 1, ch. 4, art. 5, s. 114; Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 473.—(He who is clothed with the right of another ought to be clothed with the very same right.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 473.

Quia Improvide Emanavit (Because it issued mistakenly). A supersedeas to quash and nullify a writ erroneously issued.

Quia Timet Bill. It was filed for the purpose of quieting a present apprehension of a probable or possible future injury to property. The same result may now be obtained by an action in the High Court of Justice. The court adapts its relief so as to accomplish the ends of the precautionary justice required, and will either appoint a receiver to receive the rents or other income, or order the fund to be paid into court, or direct security to be given for its due preservation and appropriation, or issue its preventive writ of injunction.—Sto. Eq. Jur. c. xxi., and 1 Madd. Chan. 294.

Quick with child. See ABORTION.

Qui concedit aliquid, concedere videtur et id sine quo concessio est irrita, sine quo res ipsa esse non potuit. 11 Co. 52.—(He who concedes anything is considered as conceding that without which his concession would be void, without which the thing itself could not exist.)

Qui contemnit preceptum, contemnit precipientem. 12 Co. 96.—(He who contemns the precept, contemns the person giving it.)

Quicquid demonstratæ rei additur satis demonstratæ frustra est. D. 33, 4, 1, s. 8.—(Whatever is added to demonstrate anything already sufficiently demonstrated, is surplusage.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 629.

Quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit. Off. of Exec. 57.—(Whatever is affixed to the soil, belongs to the soil.)

Quicquid solvitur, solvitur secundum modum solventis. 2 Vern. 606.—(Whatever is paid, is paid according to the direction of the payer); e.g., if a man owe 5*l.* to me and 5*l.* to my wife for money lent to him by her when unmarried, if he repay me one sum of 5*l.* it is for him to say in discharge of which debt it shall go.

Qui cum alio contrahit, vel est, vel esse debet, non ignarus conditionis ejus.—(He who contracts with another, either is, or ought to be acquainted with the condition of the person with whom he contracts.)

It has well been observed by an eminent judge (Lord Stowell), that 'with respect to any ignorance arising from foreign birth and education, it is an indispensable rule of law, as exercised in all civilised countries, that a man who contracts in a country engages for a competent knowledge of the law of contracts of that country. If he rashly presume to contract without such knowledge, he must take the inconveniences resulting from such ignorance upon himself, and not attempt to throw them upon the other party who has engaged under a proper knowledge and sense of the obligation which the law would impose upon him by virtue of that engagement.—Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hagg. Cons. R. 61; Story's Confl. of Laws, s. 76.

Quicumque jussu judicis aliquid fecerit non videtur dolo malo fecisse, quia parere necesse est. 10 Co. 71.—(Whoever does anything by the command of a judge, is not reckoned to have done it with an evil intent, because it is necessary to obey.)

Qui doit inheriter al père doit inheriter al fitz.—(He who would have been heir to the father, shall be heir to the son.)

Quid Juris clamat, a judicial writ issued out of the record of a fine, which remained with the custos brevium of the Common Pleas before it was engrossed; it lay for the grantee of a reversion or a remainder, when the particular tenant would not attorn.—Reg. Jud. 571; Cowel.

Quid pro quo (what for what), the mutual consideration and performance of both parties to a contract.—Cowel.

Quietare, to quit, acquit, discharge, or save harmless.

Quiete clamare, to quit claim, or renounce all pretensions of right and title.—Bract. l. 5.

Quiet enjoyment. See TITLE, COVENANTS FOR. A 'qualified covenant' for quiet enjoyment is usually expressly inserted in leases, and excludes the implied covenant which is far more extensive. For the implied covenant guarantees the lessee against any lawful entry whatever, whereas the express covenant, as usually worded, guarantees the lessee only against entry by the lessor or persons 'claiming by, from, or under him,' so that a lessor having no title to the demised premises may safely enter into the qualified a covenant for quiet enjoyment, for an ejectment of the lessee by the real owner would not be an ejectment by a person claiming by the lessor, but against him.—Woodfall L. & T. Ch. xvii. s. 8.

Quietus, freed or acquitted. A word made use of in the Exchequer in the discharge given to accountants to the Crown, e.g., a sheriff. As to the registration of a quietus, see 2 Vict. c. 11, s. 9.

Quietus redditus, a quit-rent.

Qui facit per alium, facit per se. Co. Litt. 258.—(He who acts through another, acts through himself.)—Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 816.

Qui habet jurisdictionem absolvendi, habet jurisdictionem ligandi. 12 Co. 59.—(He who has the jurisdiction of loosening, has the jurisdiction of binding.)

Qui hæret in literâ, hæret in cortice. Co. Litt. 289.—(He who considers merely the letter of an instrument goes but skin-deep into its meaning.)—Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 657.

Qui in jus dominiumve alteri succedit jure ejus uti debet. D. 50, 17, 177, pr.—(He who succeeds to the right or property of another, ought to be clothed with his right.) 'For instance,' says Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 473, 'fee simple estates are subject, in the hands of the heir or devisee, to debts of all kinds contracted by the deceased.'

Qui in utero est pro jam nato habetur, quoties de ejus commodo quaeritur.—(He who is in the womb is held as already born, whenever a question arises for his benefit.)

Qui jure suo utitur, nemini facit injuriam. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(He who exercises a right, does an injustice to nobody.)

Qui jussu judicis aliquid fecerit non videtur dolo malo fecisse, quia parere necesse est. 10 Rep. 76.—(Where a person does an act by command of one exercising judicial authority, the law will not suppose that he acted from any wrongful or improper motive, because it was his bounden duty to obey.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 93.

Quilibet potest renunciare juri pro se introducto. 2 Inst. 183.—(Every man can renounce a right introduced for himself.)

Quillet, a quibble.

Qui non cadunt in constantem virum vani timores sunt aestimandi. 7 Co. 27.—(Those fears are to be esteemed vain which do not affect a firm man.)

Qui non habet in cere, luat in corpore; ne quid peccetur impune. 2 Inst. 173.—(He who cannot pay with his purse must suffer in person, lest any one should sin with impunity.)

Qui non habet potestatem alienandi habet necessitatem retinendi. Hob. 336.—(He who has not the power of alienating, is obliged to retain.)

Qui non improbat, approbat. 3 Inst. 27.—(He who does not blame, approves.)

Qui non obstat quod ob stare potest, facere videtur. 2 Inst. 146.—(He who does not prevent what he can prevent, seems to commit the thing.)

Qui non prohibet quod prohibere potest, assentire videtur. 2 Inst. 308.—(He who does not forbid what he can forbid, appears to assent.)

Qui non propulsat injuriam quando potest, infert. Jenk. Cent. 271.—(He who does not repel an injury when he can, induces it.)

Quinquepartite, consisting of five parts.

Quinque Portus. See CINQUE PORTS.

Quinsteme, or Quinzime, fifteenth; also the fifteenth day after a festival.—13 Edw. I. See Cowel.

Quintal, or Kintal, a weight of 100lb.—Cowel.

Quinto exactus, the fifth or last call or requisition of a defendant sued to outlawry. See Cowel, voce 'Quint-exact.'

Qui obstruit aditum, destruit commodum. Co. Litt. 161.—(He who obstructs an entry (on land) takes away the enjoyment.)

Qui omne dicit, nihil excludit. 4 Inst. 81.—(He who says all, excludes nothing.)

Qui parcit nocentibus, innocentes punit. Jenk. Cent. 133.—(He who spares the guilty punishes the innocent.)

Qui peccat ebrius, luat sobrius. Cary's Rep. 133.—(Let him who sins when drunk, be punished when sober.)

Qui per alium facit, per seipsum facere videtur. Co. Litt. 258.—(He who does a thing by an agent, is considered as doing it himself.)

Qui per fraudem agit, frustra agit. 2 Rol. Rep. 17.—(What a man does fraudulently, he does in vain.)

Qui periculum amat in eo peribit. (He who loves danger will perish by it.)

Qui potest et debet vetare, jubet. Gilb. 35.—(He who is able and ought to forbid, commands.)

Qui primum peccat ille facit rixam. Godb.—(He who sins first, makes the strife.)

Qui prior est tempore potior est jure.—Co. Litt. 14 a.—(He who is first in time, is better in law.)—Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 353.

Qui pro me aliquid facit, mihi fecisse videtur. 2 Inst. 501.—(He who does anything for me, appears to do it to me.)

Qui providet sibi providet haeredibus.—(He who provides for himself, provides for his heirs.)

Qui rationem in omnibus quaerunt, rationem subvertunt. 2 Co. 75.—(They who seek a reason for everything, subvert reason.)

Qui semel actionem renunciaverit amplius repetere non potest. 8 Co. 59.—(He who renounces an action once, cannot any more repeat it.)

Qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus; et è contra. 1 Co. 99.—(He who receives the advantage, ought also to suffer the burthen; and the converse also holds.)—Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 706.

Quisquis erit qui vult juris-consultus haberi continuet studium, velit a quocunque doceri. Jenk. Cent.—(Whoever wishes to be a juris-consult, let him continually study, and desire to be taught by everyone.)

Quisquis praesumitur bonus; et semper in dubiis pro reo respondendum. Jur. Civ.—(Every one is presumed good; and in doubtful cases the resolution shall be ever for the accused.)

Qui tacet, consentire videtur. Jenk. Cent. 32.—(He who is silent, appears to consent.)

Qui tacet consentire videtur, ubi tractatur de ejus commodo. 9 Mod. 38.—(He who is silent, is considered as assenting, when his advantage is debated.)

Qui tam (who as well), a popular action on a penal statute which is partly at the suit of the Queen, and partly at that of an informer; so called from the words 'Qui tam pro dominâ reginâ, quam pro se ipso, sequitur.' As to the Crown's power of remitting these penalties, see 22 Vict. c. 32.

Qui tardius solvit, minus solvit. Jenk. Cent. 58.—(He who pays slowly, pays too little.)

Quitiment, caveat et vitant. Office of Exec. 62.—(They who fear, are wary and avoid.)

Quit claim, a quitting of one's action, claim, or title.

Quit rent (quietus redditus), a rent payable to a lord of a manor, so called because it was originally paid by the tenant in substitution of and to free him from military and other services. As no manor has been created since the statute Quia emptores (see MANOR, QUIA EMPTORES), every quit-rent must have become first payable at a date at least prior to that statute.

A quit-rent may be 'redeemed' by the owner of the land subject thereto, under s. 45 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

Quittance, an abbreviation of acquittance, a release (q. v.)

Quod semel placuit in electione, amplius displicere non potest. Co. Litt. 146.—(What choice is once made, it cannot be disapproved any longer.)

Quod sub certa forma concessum vel reservatum est, non trahitur ad valorem seu compensationem. Bacon.—(What is given or reserved under a certain form, is not to be drawn into a valuation or compensation.)

Quod subintelligitur non deest. 2 Ld. Raymond, 832.—(What is understood is not wanting.)

Quod tacite intelligitur deesse non videtur. 4 Co. 22.—(What is silently understood does not appear to be wanting.)

Quod vanum et inutile est, lex non requirit. Co. Litt. 319.—(The law requires not what is vain and useless.)

Quo jure, a writ which lay for him who had land wherein another challenged common of pasture, time out of mind ; and it was to compel him to show by what title he challenged it.—F. N. B. 158.

Quo ligatur, eo dissolvitur. 2 Rol. Rep. 21.—(By the same mode by which a thing is bound, by that is it released.)

Quo minus, a writ which lay for him who had a grant of house-bote and hay-bote in another's woods against the grantor, making such waste as that the grantee could not enjoy his grant.—O. N. B. 148.

It also lay for the Queen's accountant in the Exchequer against any person against whom he had a right of action, and was called a quo minus, because in it the plaintiff suggested that he was the king's farmer or debtor, and that the defendant had done him the injury or damage complained of, quo minus sufficiens existit (by which he is less able) to pay the king his debt or rent. Afterwards this suggestion of being debtor to the king was allowed to be inserted by any plaintiff who wished to proceed in that court against any defendant, as a mere matter of form, and in this way the Court of Exchequer obtained a jurisdiction co-extensive with that of the Common Pleas in actions personal. The writ of quo minus was abolished by 2 Wm. IV. c. 39.—3 Bl. Com. 46.

Quo modo quid constituitur, eodem modo dissolvitur. Jenk. Cent. 74.—(In the same manner by which anything is constituted, by that it is dissolved.)

Quorum (of whom), the number of members of an administrative or judicial body whose presence is necessary for the acts of the body to be valid, e.g., of a County Licensing Committee, which consists of not more than 12 members, the quorum is 3 members—Licensing Act, 1872, s. 37. The term is derived from the ‘justices of the quorum.’ See JUSTICES.

Quorum prætextu, nec auget nec minuit sententiam, sed tantum confirmat præmissa. Plow. 52.—(“Quorum prætextu” neither increases nor diminishes a sentence, but only confirms that which went before.)

Quot, one-twentieth part of the moveable estate of a person dying in Scotland, anciently due to the bishop of the diocese wherein he had resided.

Quota, a tax to levied in an equal manner.—Cowel.

Quotiens idem sermo duas sententias exprimit; ea potissimum excipitur, quæ rei generandæ opitor est. D. 50, 17, 67.—(Whenever the same speech expresses two meanings, that ought to be given most weight to which is the fitter for effecting the purpose.)

Quoties duplici jure defertur alicui successio, repudiato novo jure, quod ante defertur supererit vetus. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(Whenever a succession comes to a man by a double right, the new right being laid aside, the old one which brought it first will survive.)

Quoties in stipulationibus ambigua oratio est commodissimum est id accipi quo res de qua agitur in tuto sit. D. 41, 1, 80; D. 50, 16, 219.—(Whenever the expression is doubtful in contracts, it is most advantageous that that meaning be accepted by which the safety of the subject-matter may be assured.)

Quoties in verbis nulla est ambiguitas, ibi nulla expositio contra verba fienda est. Co. Litt. 147.—(When in the words there is no ambiguity, then no exposition contrary to words is to be made.)

Quo warranto, a writ issuable out of the Queen’s Bench Division of the High Court of Justice, in the nature of a writ of right for the Crown against him who claims, or usurps any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supports his claim, in order to determine the right. It lies also in case of non-user or long neglect of a franchise, or mis-user or abuse of it, whereby it is forfeited.

This writ having fallen into disuse on account of the delay with which it was attended, a more expeditious mode of proceeding has been adopted, by filing an information by the attorney-general, in the nature of a quo warranto, in which the person usurping is considered as an offender, and consequently punishable by fine.

This proceeding was until 1872 the one generally adopted for the purpose of trying the right to municipal offices, but the Corrupt Practices Municipal Elections Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 60, by s. 12, replaced by the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 87, substituted an ‘election petition’ in the cases where an election is sought to be questioned on the ground of bribery, etc., disqualification, or undue return. Where quo warranto still lies, it must, by s. 225 of the Act of 1882, replacing 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 78. and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, be applied for within twelve months after the election to the municipal office.

Informations in the nature of quo warranto are of two kinds, and are filed either by the attorney-general, or by the coroner and attorney of the Queen, usually called the Master of the Crown-office. Informations, quo warranto, filed by the attorney-general, are only filed for the purpose of trying the right to some private franchise claimed by the Crown, and usurped by a subject. When this proceeding is adopted with reference to the exercise of offices of a public nature, it can only be filed by leave of the court, at the relation of a particular person regulated by the preceding statutes (9 Anne c. 20). The court exercises a discretion in granting this information, and where there is adequate relief by another mode of proceeding, the court will not generally interfere.

The application may be made ex parte at the relation of anybody interested, but, in the rule nisi, all the objections to the title must be stated. The affidavit of the relator in support of the application must make out a prima facie case. The rule nisi is drawn up and served as in other cases: if the rule be enlarged upon the defendant’s application, the court will compel him to undertake, should the rule be made absolute, to appear and plead immediately to the information. The clerk of the rules in the Crown-office draws up the rule absolute, the information is filed, and recognizances in a penalty of 20*l.* to prosecute entered into, and process issued to compel an appearance, and an attachment will issue in default thereof. Upon an appearance being entered for the defendant, if he do not plead, the prosecutor must give two four-day rules to plead, and after the expiration of the last, he should also move in term for a peremptory rule to plead, otherwise the defendant has until the next term to plead. If the defendant obtain no further time to plead, the prosecutor may sign judgment at the expiration of eighteen days from the service of the peremptory rule to plead. As soon as the defendant has pleaded, a sidebar rule to reply should be entered. A plea of not guilty or non usurpavit cannot be pleaded, but only pleas to justify or disclaim. See 32 Geo. III. c. 58, s. 1. After issue joined, the record is taken down to trial. If on verdict or judgment on demurrer for the prosecutor, it appears that a vacancy exists in the corporation, the court will, on motion, grant a peremptory writ of mandamus to proceed to the election of another person in the room of the defendant, but under some circumstances a new trial or a replender will be awarded. If the defendant appear and plead, and the prosecutor shall not, at his own costs, within a year after issue joined, proceed to try the same, or in case the defendant obtain a verdict, or a nolle prosequi is entered by the informer, the court may award taxed costs to the defendant (unless the judge shall at the trial certify that there was a reasonable cause for exhibiting the information), and unless the informer pay them within three months after demand, the defendant shall have the benefit of the recognizance to compel him.—4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18.

If the defendant be adjudged guilty of an intrusion or usurpation, the court may give judgment of ouster against him, fine him, and order him to pay costs to the relator. 9 Anne c. 20, s. 5; Com. Dig., tit. 'Quo Warranto.'—3 Br. & Had. Com. 389 et seq.

Racecourse. By the Racecourses Licensing Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 18, no metropolitan suburban racecourse (i.e., no racecourse within ten miles of Charing Cross) is allowed without an annual license from the justices of the peace, which may be granted at any Michaelmas Quarter Sessions.

Rachetum [fr. redimo, Lat.], a compensation or redemption of a thief.—Cowel.

Rack [fr. raeke, Dut., fr. racken, to stretch], an engine of torture.

It was occasionally used for the purposes of state; but in judicial proceedings only once in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; its last infliction is said to have been in 1640. When, upon the assassination of Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, by Felton, it was proposed in the Privy Council to put the assassin to the rack, to discover his accomplices, the judges declared, to the honour of the law, that no such proceeding was allowable.

Rack-rent, rent raised to the uttermost; the full annual value of the property.—2 Br. & Had. Com. 54.

Rack-renter, one who pays the uttermost rent.

Rack-vintage, wines drawn from the lees.—Cowel.

Radicals, a political party. The term arose in 1818, when the popular leaders, Hunt, Cartwright, and others sought to obtain a radical reform in the representative system of parliament. Bolingbroke (Disc. on Parties, Let. 18) employs the term in its present accepted sense: 'Such a remedy might have wrought a radical cure of the evil that threatens our constitution,' etc.

Radoub [Fr.], the repairs made to a ship, and a fresh supply of furniture and victuals, munitions and other provisions required for a voyage.—Mer. Law.

Ragman [fr. regimen, Lat.], a rule, form, or precedent.

Ragged Schools are exempted from poor and other rates by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 40, s. 1.

Raglorious, a steward.—Seld. Tit. of Hon. 597.

Ragman's-roll, or Ragimund's-roll, a roll, called from one Ragimund, or Ragimont, a legate in Scotland, who, summoning all the beneficed clergymen in that kingdom, caused them on oath to give in the true value of their benefices, according to which they were afterwards taxed by the Court of Rome.

Railway. A road owned by a private person or public company on which carriages run over iron rails; if the road is a public highway, that part of it on which the rails are laid is called a tramway. Every railway in this country (except a few private railways running through land owned by the owner of the railway) is constructed and managed (1) under a local and personal act of Parliament; and (2) under the Companies Clauses, Lands Clauses, and Railways Clauses Consolidation Acts; and (3) under the general acts relating to railways. The powers of railway companies as carriers are given by the 86th section of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 Vict. c. 20, and controlled by the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119. As to their power to make byelaws, see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 20, ss. 108—111, and 144 et seq. As to their duty to provide cheap trains, see 7 & 8 Vict. c. 85, ss. 6, 7; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 75; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 41; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 33, s. 14. As to the gauge, see 9 & 10 Vict. c. 57. See also the Construction Facilities Act, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 121, and the Further Powers Acts, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 120, amended by the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 19. As to the abandonment of railways, see 13 & 14 Vict. c. 83; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 114. See also succeeding titles, and consult Shelford, or Hodges, or Browne and Theobald, or Godefroi and Shortt on Railways, and Chitty's Statutes, vol. v., tit. 'Railways.'

Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 31, an Act by ss. 2 and 3 of which the Courts of Common Pleas in England and Ireland and the Court of Session in Scotland were empowered to compel railway and canal companies (1) to grant reasonable facilities for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering their own traffic; (2) to abstain from giving an undue preference to any particular person or traffic; and (3) to forward traffic without delay in cases of continuous communication. The object of the act was to ensure freedom and economy of transit from one end of the kingdom to the other. See RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

Railway Clearing System. See 13 & 14 Vict. cap. xxxiii.

Railway Commissioners. By the 36 & 37 Vict. c. 48, being 'An Act to make better provision for carrying into effect the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854, and for other purposes connected therewith,' provision was made for the appointment of three Commissioners, to whom was transferred all the jurisdiction conferred by section 3 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1854 (see supra), on the several courts and judges empowered to hear and determine complaints under that Act. Any person complaining of anything done, or of any omission made in violation or contravention of section 2 of the Act of 1854, or of section 16 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, or of the Act of 1873, may apply to the Commissioners, who are empowered to hold courts, and to make Rules and Orders regulating the practice of their Courts; the Act of 1873 further provides for the reference to the Commissioners of differences between railway companies or canal companies (see further, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 40). Certain duties of the Board of Trade are also (s. 10) transferred to the Commissioners. The Act, which was at first limited to continue for five years only, was continued in 1878 until December 1879; in 1879 by 42 & 43 Vict. c. 56, until 31st December, 1882; and in 1882 until the 31st December, 1883.

Railway Companies Arbitration Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 59, amended by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 89, ss. 72—3.

Railway Companies Mortgage Transfer Scotland Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 50.

Railway Passengers Assurance Company, 12 & 13 Vict. cap. xl.; 15 & 16 Vict. cap. c.; and 38 & 39 Vict. cap. xlix.

Railway passengers, Endangering, punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 32—4, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, ss. 35—38.

Railway Rolling Stock Protection. See 35 & 36 Vict. c. 50, which protects from distress by a landlord rolling stock not being the property of the tenant. See also The Railway Companies' Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 127), s. 4, and the Railway Companies' (Scotland) Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 126), s. 4, continued by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 71, and made perpetual by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 31, which protect all rolling stock from execution.

Railway Securities Act, 1866, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 108, enacted shortly after the 'Redpath Frauds' for the greater protection of persons lending money to railway companies upon debentures, etc. Its principal provision is that each loan shall be specifically certified by an accountable officer to be within the borrowing powers of the Company.

Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, 8 Vict. c. 20, and Railway Clauses Act, 1863, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 92.

Ran, open or public theft.—Cowel.

Ranger, a sworn officer of the forest and parks. His office consists chiefly in three points: to walk daily through his charge, and see, hear, and inquire of trespasses in his bailiwick; to drive the beasts of the forest, both of venery and chase, out of the disafforested into the forested lands; and to present all trespasses of the forest at the next court holden for the forest.—Manw.

Rank Modus, one that is too large. Rankness is a mere rule of evidence, drawn from the improbability of the fact, rather than a rule of law.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 729. See MODUS DECIMANDI.

Ranking of Creditors, the arrangement of the property of a debtor, according to the claims of the creditors and the nature of their respective securities.—Scotch phrase.

Ransom [fr. rancon, Fr.], a price of redemption of a captive or prisoner of war, or for the pardon of some great offence. It differs from amerciament, because it excuses from corporal punishment.—Cowel.

Rape, a division of a county, especially Sussex, similar to that of a hundred, but oftentimes containing in it more hundreds than one. It was originally a military government.—Cowel.

Rape of the Forest, trespass committed in the forest by violence.—Cowel.

Rape-reeve, an officer who used to act in subordination to the shire-reeve.

Rape, the carnal knowledge of a woman by force against her will, for the legal establishment of which crime proof of penetration only is required (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 63, replacing 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, s. 18), for a long period was punished as a capital crime in this country; but penal servitude was substituted by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 48, which provides that 'Whosoever shall be convicted of the crime of rape shall be guilty of felony, and be liable to be kept in penal servitude for life, or any term not less than three [since altered to five] years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.' See further Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, and Russell on Crimes.

Rapine [fr. rapina, Lat.], the taking of a thing against the owner's will, openly or by violence; robbery. See LARCENY.

Raptu hæredis, a writ for taking away an heir holding in socage; of which there were two sorts, one when the heir was married, the other when he was not.—Reg. Orig. 163.

Rastell. Among the ancient law-writers of the reign of Henry VIII. are to be reckoned John Rastell, the printer and lawyer, and his son William Rastell, the lawyer and printer. John Rastell translated from the French the 'Abridgment of the Statutes prior to the time of Henry VII.' He also abridged those of Henry VII., and down to the 23rd and 24th of Henry VIII., which were printed together by the son William, in 1533. This was the first abridgment in the English language.

The performances which must distinguish William Rastell, belong to a later period than the reign of Henry VIII. These are his collection of English statutes printed in 1559, and his 'Entries,' printed long after his death in 1596.—4 Reeves, 418.

Rasure, or Erasure, the act of scraping or shaving.

Rasure of a deed, so as to alter it in a material part, without consent of the party bound by it, etc., will make the same void; and if it be rased in the date after delivery, it is said it goes through the whole. Where a deed by rasure, addition, or alteration becomes no deed, the defendant may plead non est factum.—5 Rep. 23.

A rasure or interlineation in a deed is presumed, in the absence of rebutting evidence, to have been made at or before its execution; but in a will it is presumed to have been made after its execution. See INTERLINEATION.

Rate of Exchange, the price at which a bill drawn in one country upon another may be sold in the former. The par of the currency of any two countries means, among merchants, the equivalency of a certain amount of the currency of the one in the currency of the other, supposing the currencies of both to be of the precise weight and purity fixed by their respective mints. Thus, according to the mint regulations of Great Britain and France, 1*l.* is equal to 25 francs 20 centimes, which is consequently said to be the par between London and Paris.

Rate-tithe, when any sheep, or other cattle, are kept in a parish for less time than a year, the owner must pay tithe for them pro rata, according to the custom of the place.—F.N.B. 51.

Ratification, confirmation. As to the ratification of contracts by infants, see the 'Infants Relief Act, 1874,' and INFANT.

Ratihabitio, confirmation, agreement, consent, approbation of a contract.

Ratihabitio mandato æquiparatur. (Ratification is tantamount to a direction.)

Ratihabitio mandato comparatur. Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 867.—(Ratification is equivalent to command.)

Rating Acts. See 43 Eliz. c. 2, and 'The Rating Act, 1874' (37 & 38 Vict. c. 54), which extends the liability to rates to (1) land used for a plantation or a wood, or for the growth of saleable underwood, and not subject to any right of common; (2) rights of fowling, shooting, taking, or killing game, or rabbits, and of fishing when severed from the occupation of the land; and (3) mines of every kind not mentioned in the Act of Elizabeth. See POOR LAW.

Ratio, an account, a rule of proportion; also, a cause, or giving judgment therein.

Ratio decidendi, the point in a case which determines the judgment.

Ratio est formalis causa consuetudinis. (Reason is the formal cause of custom.)

Ratio est legis anima; mutata legis ratione mutatur et lex. 7 Co. 7.—(Reason is the soul of law; the reason of law being changed, the law is also changed.)

Ratio est radius divini luminis. Co. Litt. 232.—(Reason is a ray of the divine light.)

Ratio et auctoritas duo clarissima mundi lumina. 4 Inst. 320.—(Reason and authority, the two brightest lights of the world.)

Ratio legis est anima legis. Jenk. Cent. 45.—(The reason of law is the soul of law.)

Ratio potest allegari deficiente lege. Sed ratio vera et legalis, et non apparens. Co. Litt. 191.—(Reason may be alleged when law is defective. But it must be true and legal reason, and not merely apparent.)

Rationabile estoverium, alimony.

Rationabilibus divisis, an abolished writ which lay where two lords, in divers towns, had seignories adjoining, for him who found his waste by little and little to have been encroached upon, against the other, who had encroached, thereby to rectify their bounds.—Covel.

Rationabili parte, an old writ of right for lands, etc.

Rationabili parte bonorum, a writ which lay for a wife after her husband's death, against the executors of the husband, for her third or reasonable part of his goods, after debts and funeral charges paid.—F. N. B. 122; 2 Br. & Had. Com., 634.

Rationabilis dos, a widow's third, or reasonable dower.

Rationes [M. Lat.], the pleadings in a suit. Rationes exercere, or ad rationes stare, to plead.

Ravishment, forcible violation. See ABDUCTION and RAPE.

Ravishment de Gard (ravishment of ward), an abolished writ which lay for a guardian by knight's service or in socage, against a person who took from him the body of his ward.—F. N. B. 140; 12 Car. II. c. 3.

Re-afforested, where a de-afforested forest is again made a forest.—20 Car. II. c. 3.

Reader, a lecturer. 2. The chaplain of the Temple Church.

Reading-in. The title of a person admitted, to a rectory or other benefice, will be divested unless within two months after actual possession he publicly read in the church of the benefice, upon some Lord's-day, and at the appointed times, the Morning and Evening Service, according to the Book of Common Prayer; and afterwards, publicly before the congregation, declare his assent to such book; and also publicly read the Thirty-nine Articles in the same church, in the time of common prayer, with declaration of his assent thereto; and, moreover, within three months after his admission read upon some Lord's-day in the same church, in the presence of the congregation, in the time of divine service, a declaration, by him subscribed before the ordinary, of conformity to the Liturgy, together with the certificate of the ordinary of its having been so subscribed.—2 Steph. Com.

Real action, one brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, and hereditaments.

Among the civilians, real actions, otherwise called vindications, are those in which a man demanded something that was his own. They were founded on dominion, or jus in re.

The real actions of the Roman law were not like the real actions of the common law, confined to real estate, but they included personal as well as real property. But the same distinction as to classes of remedies and actions pervades the common and civil law. Thus we have in the common law, the distinct classes of real actions, personal actions, and mixed actions. The first, embracing those which concern real estate where the proceeding is purely in rem; the next, embracing all suits in personam for contracts and torts; and the last embracing those mixed suits where the person is liable by reason of and in connection with property.—Story's Conf. Laws, 781.

By the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, s. 37, all real and mixed actions, except writ of right of dower, or writ of dower unde nihil habet, quare impedit, and ejectment were abolished. By the C. L. P. Act, 1860, s. 26, the procedure in the excepted actions of dower, etc., except ejectment, was assimilated to that of ordinary actions, and by the Rules of Court under the Jud. Act, all remaining distinction between ejectment and other actions is abolished.

Real burden. Where a right to lands is expressly granted under the burden of a specific sum, which is declared a burden on the lands themselves, or where the right is declared null if the sum be not paid, and where the amount of the sum, and the name of the creditor in it can be discovered from the records, the burden is said to be real.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Real chattels. See CHATELS.

Real estate, landed property, including all estates and interests in lands which are held for life (not for years, however many) or for some greater estate, and whether such lands be of freehold or copyhold tenure. This subject is treated of under various heads. Reference may, however, be made here to only a few of the more important statutes on this subject, viz., the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106; the 'Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874,' 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, by which last-mentioned act forty years is substituted for sixty years as the root of title; the Conveyancing Acts, 1881 and 1882, and the Settled Land Act, 1882. Consult Shelford's Real Property Acts; Williams on Real Property.

Reality. See PERSONALITY OF LAWS.

Real laws. Laws purely real directly and indirectly regulate property, and the rights of property, without intermeddling with or changing the state of the person.

In regard to laws purely real, Boullenois lays down the rule in the broadest terms, that they govern all real property within the territory, but have no extension beyond it. Les lois réelles n'ont point d'extension directe ni indirecte hors la jurisdiction et la domination du législateur.—Story's Confl. Laws, s. 426.

Real right, the right of property, jus in re. The person having such right may sue for the subject itself. A personal right, jus ad rem, entitles the party only to an action for performance of the obligation.

Real property, real estate, which see.

Real things, things substantial and immoveable, and the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of them.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 167, 280.

Real warrandice, an infeoffment of one tenement given in security of another.—Scotch Law.

Realm, a kingdom or country.

Realty, real estate, which see.

Reason, the very life of law, for when the reason of a law once ceases, the law itself generally ceases, because reason is the foundation of all our laws.—Co. Litt. 17.

Reasonable. If there be a contract to do a thing, or to buy and sell goods, and no time or price is mentioned, the law implies that the thing was to be done in a reasonable time, or that a reasonable price was to be paid, and what is reasonable is a question of fact, not law.

Reasonable aid, a duty claimed by the lord of the fee of his tenants holding by knight service, to marry his daughter, etc.—Cowel.

Reasonable and probable cause, such grounds as justify any one in suspecting another of a crime and giving him in custody thereon. It is a defence to an action for false imprisonment. Whether there be reasonable and probable cause is a question of law, not fact. See Addison on Torts.

Reasonable part. See RATIONABILI PARTE.

Re-assurance, a contract that a first insurer enters into to release himself from a risk which he has incautiously undertaken by throwing it upon some other insurer. Such contracts are prohibited by 9 Geo. II. c. 37, s. 4, except in the event of the original insurer's insolvency, bankruptcy, or death, when a re-assurance may lawfully be made by himself, or his representatives or assigns, provided the transactions be declared by the policy to be of that description. Re-assurance is not to be confounded with double insurance, which see.—2 Schw. N. P. 1023.

Re-attachment, a second attachment of him who was formerly attached and dismissed the court without day, by the not coming of the justices, or some such casualty.—Reg. Orig. 35.

Rebate, discount; reducing the interest of money in consideration of prompt payment.

Rebellion, the taking up of arms traitorously against the Crown, whether by natural subjects or others, when once subdued; 2. Disobedience to the process of the courts.

Rebellion, Commission of, one of the abolished processes of contempt in the High Court of Chancery.—Consol. Ord. 1860, xxx., r. 5.

Rebellious assembly, a gathering of twelve persons or more, intending, going about, or practising unlawfully and of their own authority, to change any laws of the realm; or to destroy the enclosure of any park or ground enclosed, banks of fish-ponds, pools, conduits, etc., to the intent the same shall remain void, or that they shall have way in any of the said grounds; or to destroy the deer in any park, fish in ponds, coney in any warren, dove-houses, etc.; or to burn sacks of corn; or to abate rents, or prices of victuals, etc. See Cowel.

Rebouter, to repel or bar.

Rebus sic stantibus, at this point of affairs.

Rebut, to bar, reply, or contradict.

Rebutter [fr. repello, Lat., to put back or bar], the answer of a defendant to a plaintiff's sur-rejoinder. See REJOINDER.

Rebutting evidence, that which is given by one party in a cause, to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove evidence produced by the other party.

Recall, to supersede a minister, or deprive him of his office; also to revoke a judgment on a matter of fact.

Recaption, the taking a second distress of one formerly distrained, during the plea grounded on the former distress. It is a writ to recover damages for him whose goods, being distrained for rent in service, etc., are distrained again for the same cause, pending the plea in the county court or before the justices.—F. N. B. 71.

It is also a species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. This happens when any one has deprived another of his property, in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant, in which case the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and re-take them, wherever he happens to find them, so it be not in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace, and so that he favour not the thief.

Recapture, the recovery by force of a prize captured by an enemy.

Receditur à placitis juris potius quam injurie et delicta maneamt impunita. Bacon.—(We surrender the forms of law rather than allow injuries to remain unpunished.)

Receipt, or Receit, an acknowledgment in writing of having received a sum of money or other valuable consideration: it is a voucher either of an obligation or debt discharged, or of one incurred.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 59, a penny stamp duty was imposed on a receipt or discharge given for or upon the payment of money amounting to two pounds or upwards. This act is repealed by the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 99, but the duty is re-imposed by the Stamp Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, which exempts from duty bankers' deposit receipts and other receipts, as to which see the Schedule, voce, 'Receipt.' S. 123 of the Act provides that if any person gives any receipt liable to duty, and not duly stamped or refuses to give a receipt duly stamped, in any case where a receipt would be liable to duty, or upon a payment to the amount of 2*l.* or upwards, gives a receipt for a sum not amounting to 2*l.*, or separates or divides the amount paid with intent to evade the duty, 'he shall forfeit the sum of 10*l.*' As to forgery of receipts, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23.

Receptor. A person to whom property is bailed by an officer, who has attached it upon mesne process, to answer to the exigency of the writ, and satisfy the judgment, the understanding being to have it forthcoming on demand. See Story on Bailments, 145.

Receiver, one to whom anything is communicated by another. An officer of the Court of Chancery to collect rents, etc., pending a suit. Receivers are appointed in suits concerning estates of infants, against executors, and between partners for winding-up business. S. 19 of the Conveyancing, etc., Act, 1881, gives, in the case of a mortgage executed on or after the 1st January, 1882, power to the mortgagee, in like manner as if it had been in terms conferred by the mortgage deed, 'when the mortgage money has become due to appoint a receiver of the income of the mortgaged property, or of any part thereof,' but such power cannot, by s. 24, be exercised until the mortgagee is entitled to exercise the power of sale under the act (i.e., by s. 20, unless default has been made in payment of the principal, after notice, or interest is in arrear for two months, or there has been other default on the part of the mortgagor); and s. 24 also regulates in detail the powers and remuneration, etc., and duties of the receiver. A practising barrister may be a receiver; a solicitor in the cause cannot, unless by consent, and without salary; nor next friends of infant-plaintiffs; nor trustees. The allowance to the receiver depends on the difficulty of collection; being usually 5*l.* per cent. on the gross rental.

A receiver may be appointed by an interlocutory order of the court, in all cases in which it shall appear to the court to be 'just or convenient' that such order should be made (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (8)).

Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), s. 13, a receiver or manager of a debtor's estate and business may be appointed by the Bankruptcy Court after the presentation of a bankruptcy petition.

Receiver of the Fines, an officer who received the money of all such as compounded with the Crown on original writs sued out of Chancery.

Receiver-General of the Duchy of Lancaster, an officer of the Duchy Court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures, and assessments within the duchy.

Receiver-General of the Public Revenue, an officer appointed in every county to receive the taxes granted by parliament, and remit the money to the treasury.

Receiver of stolen property. Punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 91—7; s. 91 enacting that 'Whoever shall receive any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, the stealing, taking, extorting, obtaining, embezzling, or otherwise disposing whereof, shall amount to a felony at common law, or by virtue of this act, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, etc., is guilty of felony, and may be convicted either as an accessory after the fact or for a substantial felony, and in the latter case, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice, and every such receiver shall be liable to be kept in penal servitude for any term between fourteen and three [this is altered to five by the Penal Servitude Act, 1864], years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, and if a male under sixteen with or without whipping. But no person shall be prosecuted a second time for the same offence.' (s. 91).

By 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112 (repealing the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 99), it is provided (sect. 19), that 'where proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, evidence may be given at any stage of the proceedings that there was found in the possession of such person other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, and such evidence may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that such person knew the property to be stolen, which forms the subject of the proceedings taken against him'; and it is further enacted that evidence of a previous conviction of 'any offence involving fraud or dishonesty' within 5 years preceding may be given at any stage of his trial.

Receiver under Bankruptcy Act, 1869. By section 13 of the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, the Court of Bankruptcy may appoint a receiver or manager of a debtor's estate or business after presentation of a bankruptcy petition.

Receiver under Mortgage Debenture Act, 1865. See 28 & 29 Vict. c. 78, ss. 41—7.

Receiver under Probate Act. See 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, ss. 71—2; and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 21.

Receiver under Trustees' and Mortgagees' Powers Act. See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, ss. 17—24.

Receivers of wreck, or Droit, officers appointed by the Board of Trade, pursuant to 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 439—457, for the preservation of wreck, etc. The Act provides for their duties and powers.

Receptus, an arbitrator.—Civ. Law.

Recession, a re-grant.

Récidive [Fr.], a relapse; the commission of a second offence.

Reciprocity, mutuality. In regard to foreign ships, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, ss. 324—331; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 96, s. 15; and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 47.

Recital, the rehearsal or making mention in a deed or writing of something which has been done before.—1 Lill. Abr. 416. See DEED.

Reclaimed animals, those that are made tame by art, industry, or education, whereby a qualified property may be acquired in them. See FERÆ NATURÆ, and 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 5, 8.

Reclaiming, the action of a lord pursuing, prosecuting, and recalling his vassal, who had gone to live in another place, without his permission. Also the demanding of a thing or person to be delivered up or surrendered to the prince or state it properly belongs to, when by an irregular means it has come into the possession of another.

Reclaiming Petition, a petition of appeal to the Inner House from the judgment of any Lord Ordinary in the Court of Session in Scotland.

Recognition, an acknowledgment.

Recognitione annullandâ per vim et durtiem factâ, a writ to the justices of the Common Bench for sending a record touching a recognizance, which the recognizer suggests was acknowledged by force and duress; that if it so appear, the recognizance may be annulled.—Reg. Orig. 183.

Recognitors, the jury empaneled in an assize; so called because they acknowledged a disseisin by their verdict.—Bract. l. 5.

Recognizance, an acknowledgment of a debt owing to the crown, with a condition to be void, if the recognizer shall do some particular act, as if he, or the party for whom he is surety, shall appear at the assizes to prosecute a person, or to come up for judgment when called upon, or shall prosecute an appeal. See, e.g., Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 31, sub. 3; and for forms of recognizance, see the schedule to 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42.

Recognizee, he to whom one is bound in a recognizance.

Recognizor, he who enters into a recognizance.

Récolement [Fr.], re-examination.

Recompensation. Where a party sues for a debt, and the defendant pleads compensation, i.e., set-off, the plaintiff may allege a compensation on his part, and this is called a re-compensation.—Scotch Law Term.

Reconduction, a relocation, a renewal of a lease.—Civ. Law.

Reconvention, an action by a defendant, against a plaintiff in a former action; a cross-bill or litigation.—Ibid.

Record, a memorial or remembrance; an authentic testimony in writing contained in rolls of parchment, and preserved in a court of record. The public records of the kingdom are placed under the superintendence of the Master of the Rolls, and a Record Office established by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94.

There are three kinds of records, viz.: (1) judicial, as an attainer; (2) ministerial, on oath, being an office or inquisition found; (3) by way of conveyance, as a deed enrolled.

Record, Conveyances by, extraordinary assurances, as private acts of parliament, and royal grants.

Record, Courts of, those whose judicial acts and proceedings are enrolled in parchment, for a perpetual memorial and testimony; which rolls are called the records of the court, and are of such high and supereminent authority, that their truth is not to be called in question. Every court of record has authority to fine and imprison for contempt of its authority.—3 Br. & Had. Com. 21, 30.

Record, Debts of, those which appear to be due by the evidence of a court of record, such as a judgment, recognizance, etc.—2 Br. & Had. Com. 655. Since 1st January, 1870, all specialty and simple contract debts of deceased persons stand in equal degree in the administration of the estate of any one deceased (32 & 33 Vict. c. 46).

Record of Nisi Prius, a transcript of the pleadings and issue was formerly made on parchment for the use of the court on the trial of the action. Now, by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 17, the party entering the action for trial must deliver to the officer two copies of the whole of the pleadings in the action, one of which is for the use of the judge at the trial. Such copies must be in print, except as to such parts, if any, of the pleadings, as are by the Rules permitted to be written.

Record, Trial by. If a record be asserted on one side to exist, and the opposite party deny its existence, thus, 'that there is no such record remaining in court as alleged,' and issue be joined thereon, this is an issue of nul tiel record; and the court awards a trial by inspection of the record. Upon this, the party affirming its existence is bound to produce it in court on a given day, failing to do so, judgment is given for his adversary. The trial by record is the only legitimate mode of trying such issue.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 99; 2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Record and Writ Clerks, three officers of the Court of Chancery, appointed by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103. As to their duties, see that Act, and also 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 46; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 134, s. 11; Consol. Ord. 1860, i., rr. 35—53; and Dan. Ch. Pr. They were attached to the Supreme Court by s. 77 of the Jud. Act, 1873, and made 'masters' thereof by s. 8 of the Jud. (Officers) Act, 1879.

Record of Titles (Ireland), 28 & 29 Vict. c. 88, amended by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 99. See LANDED ESTATES COURT.

Recordari facias loquelam [abbrev. re. fa. lo.], an original writ, in the nature of a certiorari, issuing out of Chancery, addressed to a sheriff to remove a cause depending in an inferior court not of record to a superior court; and it is called a recordari, because it commands the sheriff to make a record of the plaint in the ancient county court, and then to send up the cause. Obsolete.—F. N. B. 71.

Recorder. (1) in boroughs not subject to the Municipal Corporations Acts, a person whom the mayor and other magistrates of the borough, having jurisdiction in a court of record within their precincts by the royal grant, associate unto them for their better direction in matters of justice and proceedings according to law; (2) in boroughs subject to the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, and having a separate Court of Quarter Sessions, a barrister of five years' standing at least, appointed by the crown, holding office during good behaviour, and receiving 'such yearly salary not exceeding that stated in the petition on which the grant of a separate Court of Quarter Sessions was made, as Her Majesty directs.' He is sole judge of the Court of Quarter Sessions, 'having cognizance of all crimes, offences, and matters cognizable by Courts of Quarter Sessions in England,' except that he may not grant licenses or hear licensing appeals under the Intoxication Liquor Licensing Acts, or levy rates (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, ss. 162, 165). He may appoint as 'deputy recorder' a barrister of five years standing, in case of sickness or unavoidable absence (Ib., s. 166), and an 'assistant recorder' if it appears that the Quarter Sessions are likely to last more than three days (Ib., s. 168).

Recorder of London, one of the justices of oyer and terminer, and a justice of the peace of the quorum for putting the laws in execution for the preservation of the peace and government of the city. Being the mouth of the city, he delivers the sentences and judgments of the court therein, and also certifies and records the city customs, etc. He is chosen by the lord mayor and aldermen, and attends the business of the city when summoned by the lord mayor, etc.

Recoup [fr. recouper, Fr., to cut again], the keeping back or stopping something which is due; discount; recompense.

Recoupment, the act of recouping.

Recoverer, the demandant in a common recovery after judgment.

Recovery, the obtaining a thing by judgment or trial.

A true recovery is an actual or real recovery of anything, or the value thereof, by judgment; as if a man sue for any land or other thing moveable or immovable, and gain a verdict or judgment.

A feigned recovery. An abolished common assurance by matter of record, in fraud of the statute De Donis, whereby a tenant in tail enlarged his estate-tail into a fee simple and so barred the entail, and all remainders and reversions expectant thereon, with all conditions and collateral limitations annexed to them, and subsequent charges subordinate to the entail. But incumbrances on the estate-tail equally affected such fee simple, and any estate or interest prior to the entail remained undisturbed.

This assurance consisted of two parts: (1) the recovery itself, which was a fictitious real action in the Court of Common Pleas, carried on to judgment, and founded on the supposition of an adverse claim; and (2) the recovery-deed, which was partly a preparatory step to suffering the recovery, and partly a declaration of the uses when suffered.

Recoveries were either legal or equitable.

The parties to a recovery action were: (1) the Demandant, or Recoverer, who was merely a formal party for the purpose of supporting the character of plaintiff; (2) the Tenant, or Recoveree, who was the person in whom the immediate freehold resided, and against whom the lands were to be demanded by the plaintiff; and (3) the Vouchee, who was called to warrant or vouch upon a supposed warranty, and took the defence on himself.

The action was begun by a writ of entry brought by the demandant, who was a mere nominee or stranger, either against him whose estate-tail was to be barred (who appeared and in defence vouched over the common vouchee—the crier of the court—if the recovery had been with a single voucher, which, however, was rarely, if ever, used, as it only barred the estate of which he was actually seised), or, which was more usual, against a person who was made by a previous conveyance the tenant to the precipe, or writ, and who vouched the tenant-in-tail, who vouched over the common vouchee, this was called a recovery with double voucher, and effectually barred the entail, with every latent interest and all reversions and remainders expectant thereon. The only possible case in which a remainder with treble voucher was necessary was in the instance in which a tenant-in-tail created an entail derived out of his own, and the two entails were, in point of estate or of right, existing at one time in distinct persons, and both entails were to be barred.

To perfect the legal title, and to give a seisin to the demandant, a writ of habere facias seisinam must have been issued after judgment, and seisin duly delivered to him, whereupon the uses arose. This writ was returned by the sheriff, and the proceedings exemplified by the clerk of the court for the purpose of proving the suffering of the recovery. In a recovery deed the proper parties, either alone or jointly with other persons, as circumstances might have required, were: (1) the person who had the immediate freehold; (2) the intended vouchee; (3) the intended tenant; and (4) the intended demandant. See 1 Shepp. Touch. c. iii. and 1 Prest. Conv. c. 1. As to its origin and establishment, see 1 Hall Cons. Hist. c. i. 12. The fiction was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74. See TAIL.

Recreant, yielding. See Craven.

Recreation grounds. The 22 Vict. c. 27, facilitates grants of land near populous places for their use for the regulated recreation of adults, and as playgrounds for children. See also 34 & 35 Vict. c. 13, and PUBLIC PARKS.

Recrimination, a charge made by an accused person against the accuser; in particular a counter charge of adultery or cruelty made by one charged with the same offence in the Matrimonial Court against the person who has charged him [or her].

Recta prisaregis, the king's right to prisage, or taking of one butt or pipe of wine before, and another behind the mast, as a custom for every ship laden with wines. See PRISAGE.—Cowel.

Rectitudo, right or justice; legal dues, tribute, or payment.—Cowel.

Recto, Breve de, a writ of right, which was of so high a nature, that as other writs in real actions were only to recover the possession of the land, etc., in question, this aimed to recover the seisin and the property, and thereby both the rights of possession and property were tried together.—Cowel.

There were two species: (1) writ of right patent, so called because it was sent open, and was the highest writ lying for him who had a fee-simple in the lands or tenements sued for, against the tenant of the freehold at least, and in no other case; this writ was likewise called breve magnum de recto; (2) writ of right close, which was brought where one held lands and tenements by charter in ancient demesne in fee-simple, fee-tail, or for term of life, or in dower, and was disseised.—Co. Litt. 158. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

Recto de advocacione ecclesiæ, a writ which lay at common law, where a man had right of advowson of a church, and the parson dying, a stranger had presented.—F. N. B. 30.

Recto de custodiâ terræ et hæredis, a writ of right of ward of the land and heir. Abolished.

Recto de dote, a writ of right of dower, which lay for a widow who had received part of her dower, and demanded the residue, against the heir of the husband or his guardian. Abolished. See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 26, and DOWER.

Recto de dote unde nihil habet, a writ of right of dower whereof she had nothing, which lay where her deceased husband, having divers lands or tenements, had assured no dower to his wife, and she thereby was driven to sue for her thirds against the heir or his guardian. Abolished. See Ibid.

Recto de rationabili parte, a writ of right, of the reasonable part, which lay between privies in blood, as brothers in gavelkind, sisters, and other coparceners, for land in fee-simple.—F. N. B. 9.

Recto quando (or quia) dominus remisit curiam, a writ of right, when or because the lord had remitted his court, which lay where lands or tenements in the seignior of any land were in demand by a writ of right.—F. N. B. 16.

Recto sur disclaimer, an abolished writ on disclaimer.

Rector, a governor; in ecclesiastical law, either a layman, sometimes called a lay impropriator, who has that part of the revenues of a church, which before the dissolution of the monasteries by King Henry VIII. was appropriated to a monastery, or in case where the living had not been appropriated, a spiritual person, who has the whole revenues together with the cure of souls. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 677.

Rector sinecure, one without cure of souls.

Rectorial tithes, great or predial tithes.

Rectory, a spiritual non-appropriated living, composed of land, tithe, and other oblations of the people, separate or dedicate to God, in any congregation for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governor or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed.—Spelm.

Rectum, right; also, a trial or accusation.—Bract; Cowel.

Rectum esse, to be right in court.

Rectum rogare, to ask for right; to petition the judge to do right.

Rectum, stare ad, to stand trial, or abide by the sentence of the court.

Rectus in curiâ, one who stands at the bar of a court, and no accusation is made against him; also, said of an outlaw when he has reversed his outlawry.

Recuperatio, i.e., ad rem, per injuriam extortam sive detentam, per sententiam judicis restitutio. Co. Litt. 154 a.—(Recovery, that is, restitution by sentence of a judge to a thing wrongfully extorted or detained.)

Recuperatio est alicujus rei in causam alterius adductæ per judicem acquisitio. Ibid.—(Recovery is the acquisition, by sentence of a judge, of anything brought into the cause of another.)

Recuperatores, judges to whom the prætor referred a question.—Civ. Law.

Recurrendum est ad extraordinarium quando non valet ordinarium. (We must have recourse to what is extraordinary, when what is ordinary fails.)

Recusants, persons who wilfully absented themselves from their parish church, and on whom penalties were imposed by various statutes (e.g., 1 Eliz. c. 2, and 3 Jac. I. c. 4, repealed by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59) passed during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I.—4 Br. & Had. Com. 62.

Recusatio Judicis, a refusal of, or exception to a judge upon any suspicion of partiality.—Civ. Law.

Red [fr. ræd, Sax.], advice.

Red-book of the Exchequer [liber rubens scaccarii, Lat.], an ancient record, wherein are registered the names of those who held lands per baroniam in the time of Henry II.—Ryley, 667.

Reddendo singula singulis, the method of construction applied in such a sentence as this: 'if any one shall draw or load any sword or gun,' the word 'draw' is applied to 'sword' only, and the word 'load' to 'gun' only, the former verb to the former noun, and the latter to the latter, because it is impossible to load a sword or draw a gun; and so of other applications of different sets of words to one another. See ACTS OF PARLIAMENT.

Reddendum, a clause reserving rent in a lease, whereby a lessor retains some new thing to himself out of that which he granted before; it commonly and properly succeeds the habendum, and is usually made by the words 'yielding and paying,' or similar expressions.

In every reservation these things must concur:—(1). It must be by certain and apt words. Thus, a lease for years, reserving rent 'after the rate' of 18*l.* a year, is void for uncertainty. (2) It must be of some other thing issuing or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself, nor of some thing issuing out of another thing. (3) It must be of such thing whereunder the grantor may have resort to distrain. (4) It must be made to one of the grantors, and not to a stranger to the deed.—2 Br. & Had. Com. 485. See DEED.

Reddere, nil aliud est quam acceptum restituere: seu, reddere est quasi retrò dare; et redditur dicitur a redeundo, quia retrò it. Co. Litt. 142.—(To render is nothing more than to restore that which has been received; or, to render it as it were to give back, and it is called rendering from returning, because it goes back again.)

Reddidit se (he has rendered himself), applied to a principal, who renders himself to prison in discharge of his bail.

Redditarium, a rental of an estate or manor.

Redditarius, a renter.—Cowel.

Reddition, a surrendering or restoring; also, a judicial acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person surrendering.—Cowel.

Redeemable rights, rights which return to the conveyor or disposer of land, etc., upon payment of the sum for which such rights are granted.

Re-delivery, a yielding and delivering back of a thing.

Re-demise, a re-granting of land demised or released.

Redemption. 1. A paying off of a loan; see, e.g., National Debt Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 71, s. 5, and sched. 1, as to the terms on which the national debt is redeemable.

2. Commutation, or the substitution of one lump payment for a succession of annual ones. See as to Land Tax 42 Geo. III. c. 116; 53 Geo. III. c. 123; and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 74; as to Tithe Rent-charge, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 73, and 41 & 42 Vict. c. 42; and as to quit rents, etc., Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 45.

Redemption, Equity of. See EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

Red-handed, with the marks of crime fresh on him.

Redhibition [fr. redhibitio, Lat.], an action allowed to a buyer, by which to annul the sale of some moveable, and oblige the seller to take it back again, upon the buyer's finding it damaged, or that there was some deceit, etc.—Civ. Law; Sand. Just., 5th ed., 359.

Re-disseisin, a disseisin made by him who once before was bound and adjudged to have disseised the same person of his lands or tenements.—F. N. B. 188; 1 Reeves, 263.

Reditus albi, white rents, or rents paid in silver.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 676.

Reditus assisus, a set or standing rent.

Reditus capitales, chief rent paid by freeholders to go quit of all other services.

Reditus nigri, black mail; rents paid in grain or base money.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 676.

Reditus quieti, quit rents, see that title, and 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 676.

Reditus siccus, a rent seck, or barren; the owner of which has neither seigniorial nor reversion, nor any express power of distress reserved to him.—See 4 Geo. II. c. 28; 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 676.

Redmans, or Radmans, men who, by the tenure or custom of their lands, were to ride with or for the lord of the manor, about his business.—Domesday.

Re-draft, a second bill of exchange.

Red Sea and Indian Telegraph Act, 1859, 22 & 23 Vict. cap. iv.; amended by 24 Vict. c. 4; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 39.

Redubbers, persons who bought stolen cloth and turned it into some other colour or fashion, that it might not be known again.—3 Inst. 134; Covel.

Reductio ad absurdum, the method of dis-proving an argument by showing that it leads to an absurd consequence.

Reduction, an action for the purpose of setting aside or rendering null and void some deed, will, right, etc.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Reduction ex capite lecti. By the law of Scotland the heir in heritage was entitled to reduce all voluntary deeds granted to his prejudice by his predecessor within sixty days preceding the predecessor's death; provided the maker of the deed, at its date, was labouring under the disease of which he died, and did not subsequently go to kirk or market unsupported.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict. But such reductions have now been abolished by the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 81.

Reduction improbation, one form of the action of reduction in which falsehood and forgery are alleged against the deed or document sought to be set aside.—Scotch Law.

Redundancy, impertinent or foreign matter inserted in a pleading.

Re-entry, the resuming or retaking that possession which any one has lately foregone.

Re-entry [provisio for], a clause, usually inserted in leases, that upon non-payment of rent, or breach of covenant, the term shall cease. See FORFEITURE (5.)

Reeve [fr. gerefa, Sax.], a steward or bailiff. See DYKE-REEVE, FIELD-REEVE.

Re-examination, an examination of a witness after a cross-examination, upon matters arising out of such cross-examination. If the re-examination disclose new matter which the cross-examining party could not anticipate, the court in its discretion may permit him to cross-examine upon it.

'Re-exchange is,' says Byles (on Bills, 11th ed.), 'the difference in the value of a bill occasioned by its being dishonoured in a foreign country, in which it was payable. The existence and amount of it depend on the rate of exchange between the two countries. The theory of the transaction is this: a merchant in London endorses a bill for a certain number of Austrian florins, payable at a future date in Vienna. The holder is entitled to receive in Vienna, on the day of the maturity of the bill, a certain number of Austrian florins. Suppose the bill to be dishonoured. The holder is now, by the custom of merchants, entitled to immediate and specific redress by his own act in this way: he is entitled, being in Vienna, then and there to raise the exact number of Austrian florins by drawing and negotiating a cross-bill payable at sight on his endorser in London for as much English money as will purchase in Vienna the exact number of Austrian florins at the rate of exchange on the day of dishonour: and to include in the amount of that bill the interest and necessary expenses of the transaction.'

Re-extent, a second extent on lands or tenements, on complaint that the former was partially made, etc.—Cowel.

Re. Fa. Lo., the abbreviation of recordari facias loquelam, which see.

Refare, to bereave, take away, rob.—Cowel.

Refaction, reparation of a building.—Civ. Law.

Referee, one to whom anything is referred; an arbitrator. Also persons to whom are referred questions as to the locus standi of petitioners against private parliamentary bills. Consult the works of Smethurst or Clifford & Stephens hereon. See further next title.

Reference was the sending of any matter of inquiry by the Court of Chancery to a chief clerk, a taxing master, or a conveyancing counsel, in order that he might examine it and certify the result to the court. References in cases involving matters of account were also frequently made to the masters of the courts of common law under the C. L. P. Acts.

The Judicature Acts and rules do not repeal the powers of reference to masters under the Common Law Procedure Acts (Judicature Act, 1873, s. 83), but make provision for attaching to the Supreme Court permanent official referees, and four official referees were appointed shortly before that Act came into operation. To any of such official referees or to a special referee questions arising in an action may be referred (1) subject to the right to a jury for inquiry and report; or (2) where the parties consent, and 'also without such consent in any cause 'requiring any prolonged examination of documents or accounts or any scientific or local investigation which cannot, in the opinion of the court, conveniently be made before a jury, or conducted by the Court through its other ordinary officers,' for trial; but in neither case can a referee enter judgment.—Jud. Act, 1873 ss. 56, 57; Longman v. East, 3 C. P. D. 142. The report of the referee is equivalent to the verdict of a jury (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 58), and the Court has the same power over the proceeding as it has with respect to arbitrations under the C. L. P. Act, 1854.—Ib., s. 59, and see Order XXXVI., Rules 29—34.

The present (March 1883) practice under these sections and the C. L. P. Act, 1854, is of a rather confused character, it having been said by the Court of Appeal, that under the C. L. P. Act, 1854, an action ought not to be referred if the defendant denies his liability (Clov v. Harper, 3 Ex. D. 198), but that under s. 57 of the Jud. Act, 1873, the Court may refer not only issues of account, but all other issues arising in an action where an issue of account arises (Ward v. Pilley, 5 Q. B. D. 427)—decisions technically reconcilable, but conflicting in principle. See also ARBITRATION, ARBITRATOR.

Referendary, one to whose decision anything is referred.—Cowel; Spelm.

Referendum, a note addressed by an ambassador to his own government touching a proposition, as to which he is without power and instructions.

Reform Acts, 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 45 (1832), and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102 (1867), commonly called the Representation of the People Act.

Reformatory Schools, schools to which convicted juvenile offenders (under sixteen) may be sent by order of the Court before which they are tried, if the offence be punishable with penal servitude or imprisonment, and the sentence be to imprisonment for ten days or more. See 'The Reformatory Schools Act, 1866,' 29 & 30 Vict. c. 117, consolidating and amending 17 & 18 Vict. c. 86; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 87; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 109; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 55; and itself amended by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 21, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 47; Chit. Stat., vol. ii., tit. 'Education' (Reformatory Schools).

Refresher. A further or additional fee to counsel in a long case, which may be, but is not necessarily, allowed on taxation.—Laurie v. Wilson, L. R. 10 C. P. 152.

Refreshment House, a house, etc., 'kept open for public refreshment, resort, and entertainment between 10 p.m. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 91, s. 8) and 5 a.m.,' to keep which an inland revenue license only is required, unless wine, etc., be sold therein, in which case a license from justices of the peace is required also. See PUBLIC-HOUSE CLOSING ACT; 23 Vict. c. 27; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 107; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27; and 35 & 36 Vict. c. 94; which latter Act repeals 27 & 28 Vict. c. 64, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 77 except in so far as relating to refreshment houses where no intoxicating liquors are sold.

Refusal, where one has, by law, a right and power of having or doing something of advantage, and he declines it.

Refusing to institute a clerk. When a clerk is presented, the bishop may refuse to institute him: (1) If the patron be excommunicated, and remain in contempt forty days; or (2) if the clerk be unfit in himself as to his faith or for want of learning. If the refusal is for heresy, schism, want of learning, or other matter of ecclesiastical cognizance, the bishop must give notice to the patron of such cause if he be a layman, for he is presumably unaware of the disability. But if the objection be a temporal one, the bishop is not bound to give notice. If an action be brought by the patron against the bishop, for refusing his clerk, the bishop must assign the cause.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii. 719; iii. 611. See INSTITUTION.

Refusing to pay money decreed by Chancery. Consol. Ord., 1860, xxix., r. 6; 1 & 2 Viet. c. 110. If payment were not made within one month from the entry of the decree or order, the person to whom it was ordered to be made might sue out one or more writs of feri facias or elegit, of the same nature with the writs issued, under those names, by the courts of common law. By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XLII., r. 1, a judgment for the recovery by or payment to any person of money may be enforced by any of the modes by which a judgment or decree for the payment of money of any Court whose jurisdiction is transferred by the Judicature Act, 1873, might have been enforced at the time of the passing thereof. See further EXECUTION.

Regale episcoporum, the temporal rights and privileges of a bishop.—Cowel.

Regal fish, whales and sturgeons.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 19, n., 448, 539, 540.

Regalia, the royal rights of a sovereign, which the civilians reckon to be six; viz., power of judicature, of life and death, of war and peace, masterless goods, as waifs, estrays, etc., assessments, and minting of money. See MAJORA and MINORA REGALIA.

Regalia facere, to do homage or fealty to the sovereign by a bishop when he is invested with the regalia.

Regality, a territorial jurisdiction in Scotland conferred by the Crown. The lands were said to be given in liberam regalitatem, and the persons receiving the right were termed lords of regality.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Regard, Court of, a tribunal held every third year, for the lawing or expeditation of dogs, to prevent them from chasing deer.—Cowel.

Regard of the Forest, the oversight or inspection of it, or the office and province of the regarder, who is to go through the whole forest, and every bailiwick in it, before the holding of the sessions of the forest, or justice-seat, to see and inquire after trespassers, and for the survey of dogs.—Manw.

Regardant Villein, or Regardant to the Manor, an ancient servant or retainer annexed to the manor or land, who did the base services within the manor.—1 Inst. 120.

Regarder of a Forest [regardator forestie, Lat.], an ancient officer of the forest, whose duty it was to take a view of the forest hunts, and to inquire concerning trespasses, offences, etc.—Manw.

Rege inconsulto, a writ issued from the sovereign to the judges, not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the Crown, until advised.—Jenk. Cent. 97.

Regency, a temporary monarchy.

Regent, one invested with vicarious royalty. See 3 & 4 Viet. c. 52.

Register [fr. registum, Lat.], a register.—Milton.

Regia dignitas est indivisibilis, et quaelibet alia derivativa dignitas est similiter indivisibilis. 4 Inst. 243.—(The kingly power is indivisible, and every other derivative power is similarly indivisible.)

Regiam Majestatem, a collection of the ancient laws of Scotland. It is said to have been compiled by order of David I., King of Scotland, who reigned from A.D. 1124 to 1153.—Hale's Hist. 271.

Regicide, the murder of a sovereign.

Regio assensu, a writ whereby the sovereign gives his assent to the election of a bishop.—Reg. Orig. 294.

Register [fr. gîter, Fr., to lodge], a public book serving to enter and record memoirs, acts, and minutes, to be had recourse to for the justifying of matters of fact.

By 6 Anne c. 35, all deeds and wills concerning estates within the north, east, and west ridings of York, or within the town and county of Kingston-upon-Hull, or within the county of Middlesex, or the Bedford Levels, are directed to be registered. (As to the North Riding see 8 Geo. II. c. 6, and as to the West Riding see 2 & 3 Anne c. 4; 5 & 6 Anne c. 18; 6 Anne c. 35, s. 34.) A memorial of a will should be registered within six months after the death of the deviser if he die within Great Britain, or within the space of three years after his death if upon the sea, or beyond seas. In regard to these registers Blackstone observes, 'It has been doubted by very competent judges whether more disputes have not arisen in those counties by the inattention and omission of the parties, than prevented by the use of the registers.'—2 Broom & Had. Com. 549.

This and the after-mentioned law is now, however, subject to the 37 & 38 Viet. c. 78, cited at the end of this article.

If the devisee of an estate within the east or west ridings of York or Kingston-upon-Hull, be disabled from exhibiting a memorial within the time limited, by the suppression of the will or other inevitable difficulty, then a memorial entered of such impediment within six months after the death of such deviser who shall die within Great Britain, or within three years after the decease of such person who shall die upon sea, or beyond seas, and a memorial of such will, registered within six months after the removal of such impediment, protects the devisees against any purchaser subsequently to the will. But as to estates in the north riding of York, then in case of the concealment or suppression of any will or devise, any purchaser shall not be disturbed or defeated in his purchase unless the will be actually registered within three years after the death of the deviser. As to estates in the county of Middlesex, an entry of the impediment within two years after the death of any deviser who shall die in Great Britain, or within four years after the decease of such person who shall die upon the sea or beyond the seas, and a registry of a memorial of the will within six months after the removal of the impediment, shall be good. But no concealed will affects a purchaser unless registered within five years after the death of the testator. No judgment, statute, or recognizance (other than such as shall be entered into in the name and upon the proper account of the Crown) shall bind estates in Middlesex, but from the time that a memorial thereof shall be duly registered. As to estates in the east and west ridings of York and Kingston-upon-Hull, the registry of judgments, statutes, or recognizances within thirty days after the acknowledging or signing thereof, shall bind all the lands of the defendant at the time of such acknowledgment or signing, but in the north riding the time is limited to twenty days. Deeds of appointment must be registered; but a legacy charged on land need not. The non-registry of a lease is not cured by registering an assignment in which such lease is recited. None of the acts extend to copyhold estates or to leases at rack rents, or not exceeding twenty-one years, where the actual possession and occupation go along with the lease, or to any of the chambers in Serjeant's Inn, the Inns of Court, or the Inns of Chancery. A person having the legal estate, as a mortgagee, and advancing more money, without notice of a second mortgage duly registered, shall hold against the second mortgage till he is satisfied all the money he has advanced. A person purchasing without notice, and obtaining the legal estate, shall not be prejudiced by a prior equitable incumbrance, which was duly registered before his purchase. A person buying an estate with notice of a prior incumbrance not registered, shall in equity be bound by such incumbrance, although he has at law obtained a priority by registering his deed. A purchaser from a devisee should not complete his contract till the will is duly registered; for if any person were to purchase of the heir at law bonâ fide, and without notice of the will, he would be preferred to the purchaser from the devisee.

But if the vendor be both heir at law and devisee, the non-registry of the will is immaterial; for if he sell to any subsequent purchaser, it must either be in the character of heir at law or devisee. If he sell in this character, the second purchaser must have notice of the will; if he contract in that, the first purchaser has already procured the legal estate. If the vendor claim a leasehold estate, either as executor or legatee, the purchaser need not insist upon the testator's will being registered, because no subsequent purchaser can procure a title without notice of the will. Letters of administration are never registered. Every memorial of a deed or conveyance is directed by the acts to be under the hand and seal of some, or one, of the grantors or grantees, his or their heirs or executors, administrators, guardians, or trustees, attested by two witnesses, one whereof to be one of the witnesses to the execution of the deed; which witness shall upon his oath, before the registrar, prove the signing and sealing of the memorial, and the execution of the deed mentioned in such memorial. As to what the memorial must contain, see St. Leon. V. and P., 14th ed., 546.

By the Land Transfer Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 87, s. 127, any land situate within the jurisdiction of the local registries of Middlesex, the East, West, and North Ridings of Yorkshire, and Kingston-upon-Hull, shall, if registered under that Act, be exempted from such jurisdiction, and no document relating to any such registered land or testamentary instrument, executed or coming into operation after the date of its registration under that Act, requires to be registered in such local registries. As to the registration of land under the Land Transfer Acts of 1862 and 1875, see TRANSFER OF LAND ACT; and see succeeding titles.

As to the non-registration of wills, it has now been enacted by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, s. 7, that after the commencement of that Act, 'no priority or protection shall be given or allowed to any estate, right, or interest in land, by reason of such estate, right, or interest being protected by, or tacked to, any legal or other estate or interest in such land; and full effect shall be given in every court to this provision, although the person claiming such priority or protection as aforesaid shall claim as a purchaser for valuable consideration, and without notice. Provided always, that this section shall not take away from any estate, right, title, or interest, any priority or protection, which, but for this section, would have been given or allowed thereto, as against any estate or interest existing before the commence-

Register of Patents, a book kept at the Specification Office for the public use. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, ss. 34, 35.

Register of pauper-servants, under sixteen. See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 11; and 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 230, n.

Register of Writs, an old book in which new forms of original writs were entered. The Register of Writs is said to be the oldest book in the law: a character which may, in a great measure, be true, but should not be allowed without some consideration. It is not more certain than extraordinary that the forms of writs were settled in their substance and language very nearly in the manner in which they were drawn ever after. However, this uniformity was not so exact as that the writs published and used in the reign of Henry VIII. were all of them identically the same with those used at the first origin of this invention, in the reign of Henry II. It is not to be wondered that there should be a difference in these forms at their infancy, and at this advanced state of our law, but it is remarkable that the difference should be so small.—4 Reeves, 426; Co. Litt. 16 b, 37 b, 159 a.

Register of Writs of Execution. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, writs of execution of judgments must be registered in order to affect land; and see 27 & 28 Vict. c. 112, s. 3. See JUDGMENT.

Registrarius, a notary or registrar.

Registrar, or Registry, an officer whose business is to write and keep a register; also a functionary of the Court of Probate, or a county court. As to the duties of Registrars in Chancery, see Smi. Ch. Pr. 21; and Dan. Chanc. Prac., 5th ed., 869, n. See also TRANSFER OF LAND ACTS.

Registrar, District. See DISTRICT REGISTRAR.

Registrar-General, an officer appointed by the Crown under the Great Seal, to whom, subject to such regulations as shall be made by a principal secretary of state, the general superintendence of the whole system of registration of births, deaths, and marriages is entrusted.—6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 86, ss. 2, 5; 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 234.

Registrar-General of Seamen. To secure the great object of affording general information from time to time as to the state of our mercantile marines, it is provided that there shall be in the port of London a 'General Register and Record Office for Seamen,' under the management of this officer. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 271—279, and 25 & 26

Vict. c. 63, s. 4.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 155—266.

Registrar of Solicitors. His duty is to keep an alphabetical list or roll of all attorneys and solicitors, and to issue certificates as to persons who have been duly admitted and enrolled; and the duties of this office are committed to the 'Incorporated Law Society,' until some person shall be appointed in their room, by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 21.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 217. No application to strike a solicitor off the roll, or to compel him to answer an affidavit, can be made until fourteen clear days after notice to the Registrar of Solicitors of the intended application (37 & 38 Vict. c. 68, s. 7).

Registrar of Friendly Societies. By the Friendly Societies' Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 60), which repeals a number of earlier acts, it is provided (s. 10), that there shall be a registrar of friendly societies (therein termed the chief registrar) and one or more assistant registrars of friendly societies for England, and that such chief registrar and assistant registrars for England, shall constitute the central office thereafter mentioned. There shall be an assistant registrar of friendly societies for Scotland, and an assistant registrar of friendly societies for Ireland. The central office (s. 10, [4]) is to exercise all the functions and powers which were by law vested in the Registrar of Friendly Societies or the Registrar of Building Societies for England, or, as respects loan societies, building societies, and societies instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts, in the barrister appointed to certify the rules of savings banks or friendly societies, and shall be entitled to receive all statutory fees payable to such registrar or barrister, and all enactments relating to such registrar or barrister, as far as respects such societies as aforesaid, are to be construed as applying to the central office. The chief registrar is to report yearly to parliament.

Registrar of the Privy Council. As to his duties generally, consult Macpherson's Practice of the Privy Council; and as to his power of examining witnesses and taking affidavits, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 85.

IV. c. 86; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 88, whereby the law relating to the registration of births and deaths has been amended, and the law respecting the registration of births and deaths at sea has been consolidated.

As to the registration of burials, see 27 & 28

Registration of Births and Deaths (Ireland) Act, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 11.

Registration of Burials. See 27 & 28 Vict. c. 97, and the preceding articles.

Registration of Copyright. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, authorizes in every case of copyright, the registration of the title of the proprietor at Stationers' Hall; and provides that, without previous registration, no action shall be commenced, though an omission to register is not otherwise to affect the copyright itself.

Registration of Electors. It is requisite that a voter in the election of members of parliament should be duly registered before he exercises the franchise. See 6 Vict. c. 18 and other statutes, Chit. Stat., vol. iv., tit. 'Parliament,' under which the registers are revised annually by a 'revising barrister.' By s. 7 of the Ballot Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 33, the register is conclusive as to the right to vote, so that no person not registered may vote, but every person registered (except persons prohibited by statute, e.g., minors, or by common law, e.g., women) may.

Registry, District. See DISTRICT REGISTRIES.

Registry of Ships. The registry of ships appears to have been introduced into this country by the Navigation Act, 12 Car. II. c. 18, A.D. 1660: several provisions were made with respect to it by the 7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 22, and the whole was reduced into a system by the 27 Geo. III. c. 19.

The great object was to exclude foreign ships from those departments in which they were prohibited from engaging by the navigation laws, by distinguishing really British ships. It has also been considered advantageous to individuals, by preventing the fraudulent assignment of property in ships, but Lord Tenterden has observed, 'the instances in which honest transactions are unavailable through a non-compliance with the forms requiring a public register of conveyances, make the expediency of all such regulations, considered with reference to private benefit only, a matter of question.'—Law of Shipping, pt. 1, c. ii.

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, provides that no ship shall be deemed a British ship unless she belong wholly to owners who are either natural-born subjects, persons made denizens or persons naturalized, either by act of parliament, or the proper legislative authority in some British possession; or bodies corporate established under and subject to the laws of, and having their principal place of business in the United Kingdom or some British possession (s. 18). Every British ship must be registered; or she shall not be recognized as a British ship, nor entitled to any of the advantages enjoyed by them, or to use the national flag. This registration may be made in the United Kingdom at any port approved by the commissioners of customs for the registry of ships, with the collector or comptroller, etc., of customs; and the port of registry is to be considered that to which she belongs, until the registry is transferred (18 & 19 Vict. c. 91, s. 12). The registration must comprise the name of the ship, which cannot be changed, and the names and descriptions of the owners. Observe further: (1) The property in any ship is always to be divided for this purpose into sixty-four shares. (2) No person is to be registered as owner of any fractional part of a share. (3) The registered owners are not to exceed thirty-two, but any number not exceeding five may be registered as joint-owners of any share. (4) The property in the ship or its shares, so far as regards the power of making a valid title as owner to a purchaser, is vested exclusively in the registered owners; though any number of other persons may be beneficially or equitably interested, and may enforce their rights in that capacity. A registered ship, or any share therein, when disposed of to a person qualified to be the owner of a British ship, shall be transferred by a bill of sale under seal, upon which the name of the transferee shall be entered on the register book; and a registered ship, or any share therein, may be mortgaged and the mortgage entered in the register book; and where there are several mortgages, the priorities are to be according to the time of registry (ss. 30—100, and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91). See also 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 3, 4; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 85, ss. 3, 6, and 29; and 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 148.

Registry of Title to Land. See DECLARATION OF TITLE; TRANSFER OF LAND ACTS.

Regius professor, a royal professor, or reader of lectures founded in the universities by the king. Henry VIII. founded in each of our universities five professorships, viz., of Divinity, Greek, Hebrew, Law, and Physic.

Regnant, reigning, having regal authority. See QUEEN; and 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 475.

Regni populi, a name given to the people of Surrey and Sussex, and on the sea-coasts of Hampshire.—Blount.

Regnum ecclesiasticum, the ecclesiastical kingdom.—2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 324.

Regnum non est divisibile. Co. Litt. 165.—(The kingdom is not divisible.)

Regrating, buying corn, etc., in any market, and selling it again in or near to the same place. It was illegal, but is now no longer so.—7 & 8 Vict. c. 24; Cowel.

Regress, Letters of, they were granted by the superior of lands mortgaged to the wadsettor or mortgagor. Their object was this: by the wadset or mortgage, the mortgagor was completely divested, and when he redeemed, he appeared to claim an entry from the superior as a stranger, and the superior was no more bound to receive the mortgagor than he would have been forced to receive any third party; to remedy this, letters of regress were granted by the superior under which he became bound to re-admit the wadsettor at any time when he should demand entry.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict. See 20 Geo. II. c. 50.

Regulæ generales (General Rules), which the courts promulgate from time to time for the regulation of their practice. Before the Judicature Act the more important of these were those promulgated in Hilary Term, 1853, abbreviated as 'R. G. H. T. 1853.' Since the Judicature Act the description is 'Rules of the Supreme Court,' abbreviated as 'R. S. C.'

Regula est, juris quidem ignorantiam cuique nocere, facti vero ignorantiam non nocere. Cod. 1, 18, 10.—(It is a rule, everyone is prejudiced by his ignorance of law but not by his ignorance of fact.)

Regular clergy, the monks, who lived secundum regulas of their respective houses or societies.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 681, n.

Regulariter non valet pactum de re mea non alienanda. Co. Litt. 223.—(It is a rule that a compact, not to alienate my property, is not binding.)

Regulars, those who profess and follow a certain rule of life (regula), belonging to a religious order, and observe the three approved vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience.

Rehabere facias seisinam, a judicial writ which lay when the sheriff in the habere facias seisinam had delivered more than he ought.—Reg. Judic. 13.

Rehabilitate, to restore a delinquent to former rank, privilege, or right; to qualify again; to restore a forfeited right.

Re-hearing. If either party was dissatisfied with a decree or decretal order in Chancery, he might apply to have the cause re-heard before the judge pronouncing the same. The petition for re-hearing must have been presented after the decree was passed and entered, and before it was enrolled. The petition must have been signed by two counsel, who also certified that the case was one proper for re-hearing. A deposit of 20*l.* for costs must have been made.

By Consol. Ord. 1860, xxv., r. 14, any defendant waiving all objection to the order to take the bill pro confesso, and submitting to pay such costs as the court might direct, might, before enrolment of the decree, have the cause re-heard upon the merits stated in the bill, the petition of rehearing being signed by counsel as other petitions of re-hearing.—Smi. Ch. Pr. 478. In theory, when a suit decided by a Vice-Chancellor went to the Lord Chancellor or Lords Justices, it was a rehearing, for the Vice-Chancellor had heard it, Vice Cancellarii, in place of the Chancellor, and the Chancellor heard it again. See now APPEAL.

Reif [fr. refian, Sax.], a robbery.—Cowel.

Re-insurance, or Re-assurance, a contract by which a first insurer relieves himself from the risks which he has undertaken, and devolves them upon other insurers, called re-insurers or re-assurers; but see 19 Geo. III. c. 37.—Consult Arnould on Marine Insurance, 4th ed., 93 et seq.

Republice interest, voluntates defunctorum effectum sortiri. (It concerns the state that the wills of the dead should have their effect.)

Reissuable notes, notes payable to the bearer on demand, for any sum not exceeding 100*l.*, and not less than 5*l.*, duly stamped according to the 55 Geo. III. c. 184, may be re-issued after payment as often as may be thought necessary without a new stamp, provided an annual license for that purpose be taken out.—Byles on Bills, 11th ed., 105, 169.

Rejoinder, a defendant's answer to a plaintiff's reply, which must have been delivered within four days after notice, unless the defendant was under any terms of 'rejoining gratis,' which meant rejoining within four days from the delivery of the replication without a notice to rejoin, or a demand of a rejoinder. It did not apply to a joinder in demurrer; therefore, on a demurrer to a plea, the defendant was entitled to four days to join in it from the service of a notice to do so. As to rejoining several matters, and rejoining and demurring together, see C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 80 et seq., and now Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XVIII., r. 12.

Not pleading subsequent to reply' (in an action in the High Court of Justice) 'other than a joinder of issue; shall be pleaded without leave'; 'and subject to that rule every pleading subsequent to reply shall be delivered within four days after the delivery of the previous pleading' (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXIV., rr. 2, 3). See ISSUE, PLEADING, REPLY.

Relation, where two different times or other things are accounted as one, and by some act done, the thing subsequent is said to take effect by relation from the time preceding. Thus letters of administration relate to the intestate's death, and not to the time when they were granted. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 167. See FORFEITURE.

Relatio est fictio juris et intenta ad unum. 3 Co. 28.—(Relation is a fiction of law, and is intent to one point.)

Relatio semper fiat ut valeat dispositio, et quando ad duas res referri potest dispositio ita quod secundum unam vitatur et secundum alteram utilis est, tunc facienda est relatio ut valeat dispositio. 6 Co. 76.—(Let reference be made always in such a manner that the disposition may avail; and when a disposition is referable to two things, so that by one it is bad, and by the other is good, then let the reference be made to that by which the disposition may avail.)

Relative powers, those relating to realty.

Relativorum, cognitio uno, cognoscitur et alterum. Cro. Jac. 539.—(Of relative, one being known, the other is also known.)

Relator, a rehearser, teller, or informer. This was the name given to a plaintiff in an information in Chancery, where the rights of the Crown were not immediately concerned, who was responsible for costs; he must have given the solicitor a written authority to file the information.—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 11. For the former information in Chancery an action is now substituted. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. I., r. 1. Also a person who brings an information in the nature of a quo warranto, or a criminal information.

Release [fr. relaxatio, Lat.]; a gift, discharge, or renunciation of a right of action; also a common law conveyance, the operative verb in which is 'release'; hence the name. It operates or inures in five modes:—

(a) By passing an estate (mitter l'estat), as where a joint-tenant or coparcener conveys his estate to his co-joint-tenant or coparcener. In consequence of the privity between such parties, a fee-simple will pass without any words of limitation. Tenants in common, however, cannot thus release to one another, since they have distinct interests in the property.

(b) By transferring a right (mitter le droit), as in the case of a disseisee discharging his right to a disseisor, his heir, or grantee. Words of limitation are not necessary, since the subject of transfer is a simple right, which once discharged is for ever extinguished, and not an estate, which may be qualified or restricted.

The difference between this and the previous mode is, that the former passes an estate, where a privity exists between the parties; this passes only a right, in the absence of privity.

(c) By extinguishment, as the lord releasing his seigniorial rights to his tenant, or a life tenant having conveyed a greater estate than he owns, the expectant releasing his right to the tenant's grantee. A release of all demands extinguishes all actions and titles, and is the amplest discharge that can be given.

(d) By enlarging a particular estate into an estate commensurate with that of the person releasing; but a privity of estate must at the time exist between the releasor and the releasee, who must have an estate actually vested in him susceptible of enlargement.

(e) By entry and feoffment, as a disseisee releasing to one of two disseisors, who then becomes as solely seised as if the disseisee had entered upon the property, put an end to the disseisin, and then enfeoffed such disseisor.

Releasee, the person to whom a release is made.

Releaser, or Releasor, the maker of a release.

Relegation, exile; judicial banishment.

Abjuration is forswearing the realm for ever; relegation is banishment for a time only.—Co. Litt. 133. In Rome, relegation was a less severe punishment than deportation, in that the relegated person did not thereby lose the rights of a Roman citizen, nor those of his family, as the authority of a father over his children, etc.—Encyc. Lond.; Sand. Just., 5th ed., 47.

Relevancy. In Scotch law the relevancy is the justice or sufficiency in law of the allegations of a party. A plea to the relevancy is therefore analogous to the demurrer of the English Courts.

Relevant, applying to the matter in question; affording something to the purpose.

Relict, a widow.

Relicta verificatione, where a judgment was confessed by cognovit actionem after plea pleaded, and the plea was withdrawn, it was called a confession or cognovit actionem relictâ verificatione.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Formerly, a defendant who had pleaded a bad plea, which was demurred to, could withdraw it by entering a relictâ verificatione, upon which he would not have to pay costs until the plaintiff obtained judgment in the action; but by Reg. Gen. H. T. 1853, r. 8, 'a defendant shall not be at liberty to waive his plea, or enter a relicta verificatione after a demurrer, without leave of the court or a judge, unless by consent of the plaintiff or his attorney.'—2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

Reliction, the sudden recession of the sea from land. See DERELICTION.

Relief, legal remedy for wrongs, etc.; charitable assistance.

In the feudal law a payment made to the lord by the tenant coming into possession of an estate held under him. Abolished with other feudal grievances.

Relief against Forfeiture (of Lease). See FORFEITURE (5).

Religion, offences against; they are thus enumerated by Blackstone: (1) Apostasy. (2) Heresy. (3) Reviling the ordinances of the church. (4) Blasphemy. (5) Profane swearing. (6) Conjunction or witchcraft. (7) Religious imposture. (8) Simony. (9) Profanation of the Lord's Day. (10) Drunkenness. [11] Lewdness. See BLASPHEMY.

Religious houses, places set apart for pious uses, such as monasteries, churches, hospitals, and all other places where charity was extended to the relief of the poor and orphans, or for the use or exercise of religion.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., i. 358; ii. 279; iv. 159.

Religious men [fr. religiosi], such as entered into some monastery or convent, there to live devoutly. They were held to be civili-ter mortui.

Relinquishment, a forsaking, abandoning, or giving over.

Reliqua, the remainder or debt which a person finds himself debtor in upon the balancing or liquidation of an account. Hence reliquary, the debtor of a reliqua; as also a person who only pays piece-meal.—Encyc. Lond.

Reliques, remains, such as the bones, etc., of saints, preserved with great veneration as sacred memorials; they have been forbidden to be used or brought into England.—3 Jac. I. c. 26.

Relocation, a re-letting or renewal of a lease; a tacit relocation is permitting a tenant to hold over without any new agreement.—Scotch Law.

Rem, Action in, in the Admiralty Court. By proceedings in rem the property in relation to which the claim is made or the proceeds of such property in court, can be made available to answer the claim, and be proceeded against. See Williams and Bruce, Adm. P. 1855, c. 5. ADMIRALTY.

Rem, Information in, when any goods are supposed to become the property of the Crown, and no one appears to claim them or to dispute its title, as anciently in the case of treasure-trove, wrecks, waifs, and estrays seized by the Crown's officers. After such seizure an information was usually filed in the Exchequer, and thereupon a proclamation was made for the owner (if any) to come in and claim the effects, and at the same time there issued a commission of appraisement to value the goods, after the return of which and a second proclamation had, if no claimant appeared, the goods were supposed derelict, and condemned to the use of the Crown; and when in later times forfeitures of the goods themselves, as well as personal penalties on the parties, were inflicted by act of parliament for transgressions against the laws of the customs and excise, the same process was adopted in order to secure such forfeited goods for the public use, though the offender had escaped justice. See 18 & 19 Vict. c. 90, as to the Crown paying costs.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 669. See now ACTION.

Rem, judgment in, a judgment which gives to the successful party possession of some definite thing. See The Duchess of Kingston's case, and notes thereto, 2 Sm. L. C.

Remainder [fr. remanentia, Lat.], that expectant portion, remnant, or residue of interest which, on the creation of a particular estate, is at the same time limited over to another, who is to enjoy it after the determination of such particular estate.

It may be limited in inheritable or non-inheritable freehold estates, but not strictly and technically in chattels real or personal, although these may be limited over after a previous limitation of a partial interest in them. It may be limited by way of use (which is in practice the usual method), as well as by a conveyance deriving its effect from the common law.

In the same land there may at the same time be an estate in possession, and one estate or several estates in remainder, and an estate in reversion.

When the estate in possession is determined, the estate in remainder (if there be any), otherwise the estate in reversion, will become an estate in possession, with priority as to the estates in remainder, when there are several, according to the order in which they are limited.

An interest in possession, and an interest in remainder or reversion, are several parts of the same estate. When there are a particular estate and a remainder, the several limitations give distinct interests to the persons to whom these limitations are made.

These interests (different 'as they are in their nature), and also a reversion, are with reference to the person by whom the limitations are made, and the connection and relative situation of the tenants, several parts of the same estate.

Estates are said to be in remainder or reversion according to the relative situation they bear to each other.

The interest which, as to one man, is an estate in remainder, may, as to another person, be an estate in reversion. Thus if A. leases to B. for life, with remainder to C. in fee, and C. leases to D. for life; the estate of C. is still a remainder in reference to the estate of B., but in reference to the estate of D. it is a reversion.

So an estate which, as to one person, is an estate in possession or a particular estate, may, as to another person, be an estate in reversion; and consequently there may be two reversions in the same land. As if A. lease to B. for life, B. has the possession, and A. the reversion, as between themselves; and if B. lease to C., then as between B. and C., C. has the possession, and B. the reversion; hence the doctrine of privity of estate.

A remainder does not, like a reversion, arise by operation of law, but is always created by act of parties. It may be granted over, charged, devised, or barred by a prior tenant in tail. Mr. Burton (Comp. p. 8) thus indicates the difference between a reversion and a remainder.

If the gift were simply 'to you for your life,' the reversion in fee-simple would remain in the feoffor. But this consequence would be varied, if the gift were 'to you for your life, and after your decease to A. and his heirs'; or 'to you for twenty-one years, and subject to that estate, to A. and his heirs'; or 'to you and the heirs of your body' (which would constitute an estate tail); 'and upon your decease, and failure of your issue, to A. and his heirs.' In any of these three cases, A. would take an estate in fee-simple, giving him a right to the possession of the land upon the death of the feoffee, or the expiration of twenty-one years, or the extinction of the feoffee and his issue. But this estate is not called a reversion, as the land does not revert or return to the feoffor, but a remainder, being the residue or remnant of the whole estate conveyed, after subtracting the feoffee's estate; which last, in relation to the remainder, as in this, or to the reversion, as in the former case, is called the particular estate.

The rule against perpetuities does not apply to remainders:—1st, because every remainder which is contingent must vest Digitized by during the continuance of the particular estate or the very instant it determines; and, 2ndly, because the owner of every vested remainder, being an estate of inheritance, and which must be an estate tail if there are remainders over, has the power, when in possession, of barring all subsequent remainders.

Remainders are of three kinds:—(1) vested or executed; (2) contingent or executory; and (3) cross.

The seven following rules affecting remainders should be observed:—

(1) There must be a present or particular estate created, which, if the remainder be vested must be; at least, for years, but an interesse termini would be sufficient; or, if the remainder be contingent, it must be an estate of freehold, expressly limited, or arising by a resulting, or implied use, in order to give such a remainder existence. A chattel interest will not support a contingent remainder; since, while the contingency is in suspense, there must be an ulterior estate of freehold vested in some person, for otherwise there would be no vested freehold at law, which the law will not allow. There is not, however, any necessity for a preceding freehold to support a contingent remainder for years; for such a remainder not amounting to a freehold, no freehold estate appears requisite to pass out of the grantor in order to give effect to a chattel remainder.

(2) The particular estate and the remainders must be created by the same deed or instrument, but a will and codicil may be fairly denominated the same instrument, for they take effect at the same time; and a deed giving a power, and the appointment exercising such power, are esteemed the same deed.

(3) The remainder must vest in the grantee during the particular estate, or the very instant it determines. But an estate limited on a contingency may fail as to one part, and take effect as to another, wherever the preceding estate is in several persons in common or in severalty; for the particular tenant of one part may die before the contingency, and the particular tenant of another part may survive it. Posthumous children are capable of taking in remainder in the same manner as if they had been born in their father's lifetime, and the remainder vests in them, while yet in ventre matris.—10 & 11 Wm. III. c. 16.

(4) A contingent remainder must be limited, upon a legal event, to some one that may by common possibility be in being, at or before the determination of the particular estate.

(5) It is not necessary for the support of a contingent remainder that the preceding freehold continue in the actual seisin.

of the rightful tenant ; it is sufficient that there subsists a right to such preceding estate at the time the remainder should vest, provided such right be a present subsisting right of entry preceding the contingency, and not a right of action. It is necessary to distinguish between a right of entry and a right of action. If A. is disseised by B., then, while the possession continues in B., it is a mere possession unsupported by any presumption of right ; and A. may restore his possession by an entry on the land, without any previous action. If A. enter and B. defend his possession, and the question is tried in a possessory action, the gist of it must be, who has the better title to the possession, and A. must necessarily recover. Thus far the party disseised, even during the disseisin, is considered in law to be the rightful tenant. But, if B. continue in the possession of the estate till his decease, the law, at his decease, casts the possession upon his heir ; thus, upon B.'s decease, his heir acquires the possession by act of law, and his title, though immediately derived from a person who himself acquired it by wrong, is so far respected in law that A. cannot restore his possession by entry, and can only recover it by action. This removes A.'s title one degree farther than while he could restore his possession by entry, and is therefore said to reduce him to a right of action, and it is called a right of action in contradistinction to a right of entry.

(6) Where a contingent remainder is limited to the use of several, who do not all become capable at the same time, notwithstanding it vests in the person first becoming capable, yet it shall divest as to the proportions of the persons afterwards becoming capable, before the determination of the particular estate.

(7) If a condition be annexed to a particular estate, making it void on a given event, and a remainder be limited to take effect, not only on the determination of the particular estate, but on the destruction of that estate, by the effect of the condition, the remainder is void ; the common law rule being that a stranger shall not take advantage of a condition, but only the grantor or his heirs. But if the condition for defeating the prior estate be to operate on one event and the remainder be to arise on another and totally different event, the remainder will not be void, but the particular estate will be discharged from the condition. If A. make a feoffment to B., a widow, for life, provided that if she marry again then her estate shall cease, and immediately after her death or second marriage the estate shall enure to B.

in fee, this is a bad remainder ; because it is limited to take effect, not only on the determination of the widow's estate, but also on the event which is mentioned in the condition to cut that estate short—namely, her second marriage ; but if the remainder had been introduced without the words in italics, then it would have been a good contingent remainder, and the condition would be viewed as surplusage.—Fearne's Cont. Rem. 270. So, if the limitation had been to the widow durante viduitate, the remainder would have been good ; as then her death or second marriage would have been the natural period for the determination of her estate. But if the remainder had been introduced by the words, 'from and immediately after the determination of that estate,' it would be liable to objection, on the ground that the remainderman would be taking advantage of the condition unless the word 'determination' could be construed to refer to the death only of the widow, and not to her second marriage.

But such a remainder is supported, as a conditional limitation, in wills and conveyances under the Statute of Uses.

A remainder is to commence when the particular estate is, from its very nature, to determine ; it is, as it were, a continuance of the same estate ; it is a part of the same whole. A conditional limitation is not a continuance of the estate first limited, but is entirely a different and separate estate. It is not to commence on the determination of the first, but the first is to determine when the latter commences. It is the commencement of the latter which rescinds and destroys the former ; and not the ceasing of the former which gives existence to the latter. The particular estate and remainders are, in fact, as the very terms imply, but one and the same estate. The estate first appointed, and the conditional limitations, are separate and distinct estates. See CONTINGENT REMAINDER, CROSS REMAINDERS, VESTED REMAINDER.

Remainder-man, a person entitled to an expectant estate. See last title.

Remand, to re-commit or send back to prison one charged before a magistrate (see 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 21, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 16), in the first instance for the sake of allowing further evidence to be collected and adduced at a further hearing.

Remanent, pro defectu emptorum (they remain unsold for want of buyers). A sheriff's return to a writ of fi. fa.

Remanet, the name given to a cause the trial of which has been postponed from one sittings to another. A new notice of trial is necessary when a cause has been made a remanet at the assizes, but not when it has been made a remanet from one sittings to another, or has been put off by order of Nisi Prius.

Where the cause is made a remanet, the costs incurred in bringing up witnesses, etc., are allowed to the party ultimately prevailing.

Remedial statutes, those which are made to supply such defects, and abridge such superfluities in the common law, as arise either from the general imperfection of all human laws, from change of time and circumstances, from the mistakes and unadvised determinations of unlearned judges, or from any other cause. This being effected either by enlarging the common law where it is too narrow and circumscribed, or by restraining it where it is too lax and luxuriant, has occasioned a division of remedial acts of parliament into enlarging and restraining statutes.

Remedy, the legal means to recover a right; also, a certain allowance to the master of the mint, for deviation from the standard weight and fineness of coins.—Encyc. Lond.

Remembrancer, an officer of the Exchequer. See QUEEN'S REMEMBRANCER.

Remise, to surrender or return; to release.

Remission, a pardon from the Crown, passed under the Great Seal; a release.

Remissius imperanti melius paretur. 3 Inst 233.—(A man commanding not too strictly is better obeyed.)

Remitment, the act of sending back to custody; an annulment.

Remittance, money sent by one person to another, either in specie, bill of exchange, cheque, or otherwise.

Remittee, the person to whom a remittance is sent.

Remitter: where he who has the right of entry in lands, but is out of possession, obtains afterwards the possession of the lands by some subsequent, and, of course, defective title, he is remitted or sent back, by operation of law, to his ancient and more certain title. The possession which he has gained by a bad title is ipso facto annexed to his own inherent good one; and his defeasible estate is utterly defeated and annulled by the instantaneous act of law, without his participation or consent. As if A. disseise B., i.e., turn him out of possession, and afterwards demise the land to B. (without deed), for a term of years, by which B. enters, this entry is a remitter to B. who is in of his former and surer estate. But if A. had demised to him for years by deed indented, or by matter of record, there B. would not have been remitted. For if a man by deed indented, take a lease of his own lands, it shall bind him to the rents and covenants, because a man never can be allowed to affirm that his own deed is ineffectual, since that is the greatest security on which men rely in all manner of contracting. The same law holds, if it had been by matter of record, for that is of its own nature uncontrollable evidence, which a man cannot be allowed to controvert.—3 Steph. Com.

Remitting cases to Courts abroad. See FOREIGN LAW.

Remittitur damnum. Where a jury gave greater damages than a plaintiff had declared for, the mistake might be rectified by entering a remittitur for the excess: or, if a plaintiff had signed judgment for the greater sum, the court would give him leave to amend it, by entering a remittitur for the excess, even in a subsequent term and after error brought. The damages were usually remitted in ejectment and replevin where judgment was signed by confession or default.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1517.

Remittitur of record. Formerly when a writ of error, in the Exchequer Chamber, abated or was discontinued, the transcript must have been remitted, and a remittitur entered, before a defendant could sue out execution; but this was afterwards unnecessary, for the record remained in the court below, and execution was, therefore, in all cases, issued out of that court.—H. T. 4 Wm. IV. r. 16.

Remoteness, want of close connection between a wrong and the injury, as cause and effect, whereby the party injured cannot claim compensation from the wrong-doer. See 2 Br. & Had. Com. 335.

Remoto impedimento emergit actio. Wing. 20.—(An impediment being removed, an action emerges.)

Removal of Actions. The removal of actions from one division or judge of the High Court to another division or judge, is one of the matters which can be dealt with at chambers by a judge only and not by a master (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LIV., r. 2).

Removal of goods to prevent distress. See 9 Anne c. 14, and 11 Geo. II. c. 19, the latter of which, if the removal be fraudulent, allows the landlord to follow and distrain upon the goods for thirty days, wherever they are.

Removal of Pauper. See SETTLEMENT.

Remuneration Order, a short term for the Solicitors' Remuneration Order, 1882. See SOLICITOR.

Renant, or Reniant [fr. negans, Lat.], denying.—32 Hen. VIII. c. 2.

Rencounter, a sudden meeting; as opposed to a duel, which is deliberate.

Render, to yield, give again, or return.

Certain things lie in render, i.e., must be rendered or answered by the tenant, as rents, heriots, and other services.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 258.

Renegade [from the Latin renego, to renounce], one who has changed his profession of faith or opinion: one who has deserted his church or party.

Renewal of Lease, a re-grant of an expiring lease for a further term. Where a lease contains a covenant by the lessor for renewal, this covenant is commonly subject to the condition that the covenants in the lease shall have been performed by the lessee, and this condition is strongly enforced by the Court. See Finch v. Underwood, 2 Ch. D. 310.

Leases may be surrendered in order to be renewed, without a surrender of under leases, by virtue of 4 Geo. II. c. 28, s. 6, before which act a surrender of each under-lease was necessary.

Renewal of Writs. On this subject the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. VIII., provides that no writ of summons shall be in force for more than twelve months; but upon application before the expiration of the twelve months, may be renewed for six months from the date of such renewal, and so from time to time during the currency of the renewed writ.

Renounce, to give up a right. An executor who declines to take probate of the will of his testator is said to renounce probate. Where any person, after 1st January, 1858, renounces probate of the will of which he is appointed executor, his right shall wholly cease, and go and devolve as if he had not been appointed.—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 79. Whenever an executor appointed in a will survives the testator, but dies without taking probate, or an executor named in a will is cited to take probate, and does not appear, his right shall cease, and go in like manner as if he had not been appointed.—21 & 22 Vict. c. 94, s. 16.

Renovant, renewing.—Cowel.

Rent [fr. reditus, Lat.], a certain profit issuing yearly out of lands and tenements corporeal; it may be regarded as of a two-fold nature; first, as something issuing out of the land, as a compensation for the possession during the term; and secondly, as an acknowledgment made by the tenant to the lord of his fealty or tenure. It must always be a profit, yet there is no necessity that it should be, as it usually is, a sum of money; for spurs, capons, horses, corn, and other matters, may be, and occasionally are, rendered by way of rent; it may also consist in services or manual operations, as to plough so many acres of ground and the like; which services, in the eye of the law, are profits. The profit must be certain, or that which may be reduced to a certainty by either party; it must issue yearly, though it may be reserved every second, third, or fourth year; it must issue out of the thing granted, and not be part of the land or the thing itself.

There are several kinds of rents, viz.:—

(1) Rent-service, so called because it has some corporeal service incident to it, as, at the least, fealty.

(2) Rent-charge, where the owner of the rent has no future interest or reversion in the land. It is usually created by deed or will, and is accompanied with powers of distress and entry.

(3) Fee farm rent, one issuing out of an estate in fee, of at least one-fourth of the value of the lands, at the time of its reservation.

(4) Rent-seck, a barren rent, which is in effect nothing more than a rent reserved by deed or will, but without any clause of distress.

(5) Rents of assize, the certain established rents of the freeholders, and ancient copyholders of a manor, which cannot be departed from. Those of the freeholders are frequently called:

(a) Chief-rents, and both sorts are indifferently denominated.

(b) Quit-rents, because thereby the tenant goes quit and free of all services.

(6) Rack-rent, a rent of the full value of the tenement, or near it.

(7) Fore-hand-rent, otherwise called rent payable in advance.

Rents-seck, rents of assize, and chief rents are recoverable by distress (4 Geo. II. c. 28, s. 5); and any annual sum charged on land by way of rent-charge or otherwise, not being rent incident to a reversion, by distress and entry under s. 44 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.

Quit-rents, chief-rents, rent-charges, and other annual sums issuing out of land may, by s. 45 of the same Act, be redeemed on requisition of the owner to the copyhold commissioners, who certify the amount of money to be paid for the redemption.

Rent is not due till midnight of the day upon which it is reserved, although sunset is the time appointed by law to make a proper demand of it, to take advantage of a condition of re-entry or to tender it, in order to save a forfeiture; but, more properly speaking, the demand should be made before sunset, so as to allow sufficient light to count the money; and the person making the demand or tender must remain on the land till the sun has set. Where rent is reserved generally, and no mention is made, as is usual, of half-yearly or quarterly payments, nothing is due until the end of the year.

Rent is considered as of a higher nature than even a debt due on an instrument under seal, as between the parties themselves (see Davis v. Gyde, 2 A. & E. 624); and rent in arrear due by the executors of a tenant was, before 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, of a higher degree than simple contract debts, and of equal degree with specialty debts; but that Act has abolished the priority (see Shirreff v. Hastings, 6 Ch. D. 610). As to the political theory of rent, see 1 Mill's Pol. Eco., b. 2, c. xvi.

As to the apportionment of rents, see 33 & 34 Vict. c. 35; and title APPORTIONMENT.

Rentage, rent.

Rental, or Rent roll, schedule or account of rent.

Rental-rights, a species of lease usually granted at a low rent and for life. Tenants under such leases were called rentalers or kindly tenants.

Rental bolls, when the tithes (tiends) have been liquidated and settled for so many bolls of corn yearly.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Rente [Fr.], an annuity. Rentes is the term applied to the French Government Funds, and Rentier to a fundholder or other person having an income from personal property.

Rente viagère [Fr.], a life annuity.

Renunciation, the act of giving up a right.

Reparatione faciendâ, an ancient writ, which lay in many cases to compel repairs.—F. N. B. 127.

Repeal, a revocation or abrogation.

Repertory, a classified inventory.

Repetition, a recovery of money paid under mistake.—Civ. Law.

Repetitum namium, a second or reciprocal distress, in lieu of the first which was elogned.

Repetundæ, or Pecuniæ repetundæ, the terms used to designate such sums of money as the socii of the Roman state, or individuals, claimed to recover from Magistratus, Judices, or Publici Curatores, which they had improperly taken or received in the provinciae, or in the Urbs Roma, either in the discharge of their jurisdictio, or in their capacity of Judices, or in respect of any other public function. Sometimes the word repetundæ was used to express the illegal act for which compensation was sought, as in the phrase, 'Repetundarum insinulari damnari'; and pecuniæ meant, not only money, but anything that had value. Original inquiry was made into this offence, extra ordinem ex sena- tus consulto, as appears from the case of P. Furius Philus and M. Matienus, who were accused of it by the Hispani.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Repleader, to plead again.

The motion for a repleader was made, when, after issue joined and verdict thereon, the pleading was found (on examination) to have miscarried, and failed to effect its proper object, of raising an apt and material question between the parties. A repleader might become necessary where the issue had been defectively joined.

Replegiare, to redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by giving sureties.

Replegiare de averiis, a writ brought by one whose cattle were distrained or put in pound, on any cause, by any person, on surety given to the sheriff to prosecute or answer an action.—F. N. B. 68.

Replegiari facias, the original writ out of Chancery commencing an action of replevin. It was superseded by the Statute of Marlbridge.—52 Hen. III. c. 21.

Repletion, where the revenue of a benefice is sufficient to fill or occupy the whole right or title of the graduate who holds it—Can. Law.

Replevable, or Replevisable, that which may be taken back or replevied.

Replevin, a personal action ex delicto brought to recover possession of goods unlawfully taken (generally, but not only applicable to the taking of goods distrained for rent), the validity of which taking it is the mode of contesting if the party from whom the goods were taken wishes to have them back in specie, whereas, if he prefer to have damages instead the validity may be contested by action of trespass or unlawful distress. The word means a re-delivery to the owner of the pledge or thing taken in distress. It is re-delivered to him by the registrar of the county court of the district within which it was taken, upon his giving security to try the validity of the distress or taking, in an action of replevin to be forthwith commenced by him against the distrainer, and prosecuted with effect and without delay either in the county court or in the High Court, and to restore it if the right be adjudged against him; after which the distrainer may keep it till tender made of sufficient amends, but must then re-deliver it to the owner (see 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, ss. 63, 64). Statute 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126, s. 22, enacts that the provisions of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, which relate to replevin, shall be taken to apply to all cases of replevin in like manner as to the cases of replevin of goods distrained for rent or damage feasant. Although this action is usually confined to goods, etc., taken in distress, it may be brought for all goods and chattels unlawfully taken. It is the proper form of action to recover a specific chattel; for in trover damages only are recovered. When an act of parliament orders a distress and sale of goods, it is in the nature of an execution, and this action does not lie, and a replevin of goods seized in order to condemnation would be a contempt of the High Court, for which an attachment would be granted.

It is a general rule that whoever brings replevin ought to have the property of the goods either general or special in him at the time of the taking, and it lies against him who takes the goods and also against him who commands the taking, or against both. Whatever may be distrained may be replevied.

In cases of distress for rent the replevy should be made before the expiration of five days after the distress; otherwise the distrainer may sell the goods; though, indeed, they may be replevied at any time before they have been sold. (See Jacob v. King, 5 Taunt. 451.) In other cases of distress at common law, no time is limited for replevying, because the distrainer cannot sell the subject of distress.

An action of replevin may be commenced in the High Court in the form applicable to ordinary actions, and if the replevisor wish to proceed in that court, he must at the time of the replevying give security sufficient to cover the alleged rent or damage for which the distress is made, and the probable costs of the cause, conditioned to commence and prosecute an action of replevin in that court, a week from date, and to prove that he had ground to believe that the title to some hereditament, or to some toll, etc., was in question, or that such rent or damage exceeded 20%, and to make return of the goods, if return adjudged. See 19 & 20 Vict. c. 108, s. 65.

The pleas in replevin used to be divided into four sorts:—(1) Pleas in abatement. (2) The plea of non cepit. (3) Pleas in justification. (4) Avowries or cognizances.

As replevin by writ has been long obsolete, pleas in abatement have not occurred recently in practice.

The plea of non cepit used to be termed the general issue in replevin; but although it was so called, it put in issue only the taking and detention, and not the property.

There were two kinds of pleas in justification—those which disaffirmed property in the plaintiff, and those which affirmed property in the plaintiff—which might occur in the case of a distress being made for personal services on the tenant dying, the replevin being sued out by the executors.

As to avowries and cognizances for rent,

In them is set forth, as in a statement of claim, the nature and merits of the defendant's case, to show that the distress taken by him was lawful, and to entitle him to a judgment de retorno habendo. The technical difference between an avowry and cognizance is this: where the action is against the principal or landlord, he makes avowry, that is, he avows taking the distress in his own right; where, on the other hand, it is against the bailiff or servant, he makes cognizance, that is, he acknowledges the taking in right of the principal or landlord; and where it is against both, the one avows and the other makes cognizance.

Replevy, or Replevish, to let one to mainprize on surety; also to re-deliver goods which have been distrained to their owner, upon his giving pledges in an action of replevin.

Repliant, or Replicant, a litigant who replies, or files, or delivers a replication.

Replication. This was a plaintiff's answer to a defendant's plea, except in replevin, when it was pleaded by the defendant, who is a quasi plaintiff, in opposition to the plaintiff's plea in bar. See now REPLY.

Reply, the response of the opening counsel on a trial, which is only allowed when evidence has been given in answer to the case first stated, except in the case of the Crown, which is always entitled to reply. See C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 18.

Also the pleading of the plaintiff which follows the defendant's statement of his defence or counterclaim (see Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 2). A plaintiff must deliver his reply, if any, within three weeks after the defence or the last of the defences shall have been delivered, unless the time shall be extended by the Court or a judge (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXIV., r. 1). It is not sufficient for a plaintiff in his reply to deny generally the facts alleged in a defence by way of counterclaim: but each party must deal specifically with each allegation of fact of which he does not admit the truth (Ibid., Ord. XIX., r. 20); and subject to that rule, the plaintiff by his reply may join issue upon the defence (r. 21). See ISSUE, and PLEADING.

Reporter, a person who reports the decisions upon questions of law in the case adjudged in the several Courts of Law and Equity.

Report Office, was a department of the Court of Chancery. The suitors' account there is discontinued by the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 36. See Smi. Ch. Pr. 25.

Reports. 'A report,' says Coke, 'signifyeth a public relation or bringing again to memory of cases judicially argued, debated, resolved, or adjudged in any of the king's courts of justice, together with such causes and reasons as were delivered by the judges.'—Co. Litt. 293.

Also, certificates from the masters of the courts, when the courts make reference to them concerning matters of account, etc.; or from committees of either House of Parliament.

Reports, The, Lord Coke's reports, from 14 Eliz. to 13 Jac. I., which are quoted as 'Rep.' They are divided into thirteen parts, and the modern editions are in six volumes, including the index.

Reposition of the forest, a reputting; a re-afforesting.—Manw.

Repositorium, a storehouse or place where-in things are kept; a warehouse.—Cro. Car. 555.

Repository, Public, injuries to works of art in such places are punishable by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 39.

Representation, standing in the place of another for certain purposes, as heirs, executors, or administrators. See EXECUTOR, KIN. A collateral statement, in insurance, either by parol or in writing, of such facts or circumstances relating to the purposed adventure, and not inserted in the policy, as are necessary for the information of the insurer to enable him to form a just estimate of the risk. Such representations are often the principal inducement to the contract, and afford the best ground upon which the premium can be calculated.—Encyc. Lond. Consult Arn. Mar. Ins.

Representative, bearing the character or power of another. An heir-at-law or devisee is a real representative; an executor or administrator is a personal representative.

Reprieve [fr. repandre, Fr., to take back], the suspension of the execution of a criminal's sentence.

It may take place (1) ex mandato regine, at the mere pleasure of the Crown.

Or (2) ex arbitrio judicis, either before or after judgment; as, where the judge is not satisfied with the verdict, or the indictment is insufficient, or any favourable circumstances appear in the criminal's character, in order to give time to apply to the Crown for either an absolute or conditional pardon.

Or (3) ex necessitate legis; as, where a woman is capitally convicted, and pleads her pregnancy. See JURY WOMEN.

Or (4) if the criminal become non compos.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 466.

Reprisal, the taking one thing in satisfaction for another. Reprisals are used between nation and nation, in order to do themselves justice, when they cannot otherwise obtain it. If a nation has taken possession of what belongs to another—if she refuses to pay a debt, to repair an injury, or to give adequate satisfaction for it—the latter seizes something belonging to the former, and applies it to her own advantage, unless she obtains payment of what is due to her, together with interest and damages, or may keep it as a pledge until she has received ample satisfaction. For the latter it is rather a stoppage or a seizure than reprisals, but they are frequently confounded in common language.—Vattel, by Chit. 283. Reprisals are either ordinary, as arresting and taking the goods of merchant-strangers within the realm, or extraordinary, as satisfaction out of the realm, and are under the Great Seal.—Lex Mercat. 120. Also recaption, which see. See LETTERS OF MARQUE, and CAPTAS IN WITHERNAM.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii. 527; iii. 354, 538.

Reprises, deductions and payments out of a manor or lands, as rent charges, annuities, etc.—Cowel.

Reprobation, the propounding of exceptions either to facts, persons, or things.—Eccle. Law.

Rep-silver, money anciently paid by servile tenants to their lord, to be quit of the duty of reaping his corn.—Cowel.

Republishing of Wills, a second publication after cancelling or revoking.

‘No will or codicil, or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked, shall be revived otherwise than by the re-execution thereof, or by a codicil executed in manner by the Wills Act required, and showing an intention to revive the same, and when any will or codicil which shall be partly revoked and afterwards wholly revoked, shall be revived, such revival shall not extend to so much thereof as shall have been revoked before the revocation of the whole thereof, unless an intention to the contrary be shown.’—7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 22. Every will re-executed, or re-published, or revived by any codicil, shall for the purposes of the Wills Act be deemed to have been made at the time at which the same shall be so re-executed, re-published, or revived (s. 34).—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 598 n.

Repudiation, the putting away of a wife or of a woman betrothed; (2) the renunciation of a right or obligation; (3) the refusal to accept a benefice.

Repugnant, that which is contrary to what is stated before, or insensible. A repugnant condition is void.

Reputation, credit, honour, character, good name. Injuries to one's reputation, which is a personal right, are defamatory and malicious words, libels, malicious indictments, or prosecutions.

Reputatio est vulgaris opinio ubi non est veritas. Et vulgaris opinio est duplex: scil. —Opinio vulgaris orta inter graves et discretos homines, et quæ vultum veritatis habet; et opinio tantum orta inter leves et vulgares homines, absque specie veritatis. 4 Co. 107.—(Reputation is common opinion where there is not truth. And common opinion is of two kinds: to wit, common reputation arising among grave and sensible men, and which has the appearance of truth; and mere opinion arising among foolish and ignorant men, without any appearance of truth.)

Reputed owner, one who has, to all appearances, the right and actual possession of property. By the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 15, para. 5,—an enactment which repeats with little variation the successive enactments on the subject dating from the reign of James I.,—it is provided that all goods and chattels being at the commencement of the bankruptcy in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, being a trader, by the consent and permission of the true owner, of which goods and chattels the bankrupt is reputed owner, or of which he has taken upon himself the sale or disposition as owner, pass to his trustee.

Request-notes, applications to obtain a permit for removing excisable articles.

Requests, Courts of, tribunals of a special jurisdiction for the recovery of small demands, which are abolished by the County Court Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 95), and Order in Council, 9th May, 1847, with a few exceptions. There was a court of requests, of the king in person, which was virtually abolished by 16 Car. I. c. 10.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 284, 324.

Request, Letters of. Many suits are brought before the Dean of the Arches as original judge, the cognizance of which properly belongs to inferior jurisdictions within the province, but in respect of which the inferior judge has waived his jurisdiction under a certain form of proceeding known in the canon law by the denomination of letters of request.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 306.

Requisition, made by a creditor, that a debt be paid or an obligation fulfilled.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Requisitions of Title, a series of inquiries and requests which arise upon a title on behalf of a proposed purchaser, and which the vendor is called upon to satisfy and comply with. They are often curtailed by the conditions of sale. Consult Sugden or Dart's V. and P.

Rere-fiefs, inferior feudatories in Scotland.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 180.

Rerum ordo confunditur, si unicuique jurisdictionis non servetur. 4 Inst. Proem.—(The order of things is confounded if every one preserve not his jurisdiction.)

Rerum progressus ostendunt multa, quæ in initio præcaveri seu prævideri non possunt. 6 Co. 40.—(The progress of events shows many things which, at the beginning, could not be guarded against or foreseen.) Thus, according to Coke, ‘many mischiefs arise on the change of a maxim and rule of the common law, which those who altered it could not see when they made the change.’

Rerum suarum quilibet est moderator et arbiter. Co. Litt. 223.—(Every one is the moderator and arbiter of his own affairs.)

Res accessoria sequitur rem principalem. Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 491.—(The accessory follows the principal.)

Re-sale, a second sale.

Res, all physical and metaphysical existences, in which persons may claim a right. See Sand. Just., 5th ed., 87; and Cum. C. L. 59.

Resceit, or Receit [fr. receptio, Lat.], an admission or receiving of a third person to plead his right in a cause already commenced between two other persons.—13 Rich. II. c. 17.

Resceit of homage, the lord's receiving homage of his tenant at his admission to the land.—Kitch. 148.

Rescission, annulment or destruction.

Rescissory action, one to rescind or annul a deed or contract.—Scotch Law.

Rescous (a taking away), from recourser, to recover; the old mode of spelling rescue, which see.

Rescript, the answer of the Roman emperor when consulted by particular persons on some difficult question; it is equivalent to an edict or decree; a counterpart.

Rescriptum principis contra jus non valet. Reg. Civ. Dur.—(The prince's rescript avails not against law.)

Rescue of distress, the taking away and setting at liberty, against law, a distress effected. Rescue lies where a person distrains for rent or services, or for damage feasant, and is desirous of impounding the distress, and another person rescues the distress from him. The party distraining must be in possession of the distress, otherwise there cannot be a rescue.

The action of rescue has fallen into disuse; the usual remedy is by an action on the case, under 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 5, s. 4, which gives treble damages to the person grieved. When a distress is taken without cause, or contrary to law, the tenant may lawfully make rescue before it is impounded, for then it is deemed to be in the custody of the law. The 6 & 7 Vict. c. 30, gives a summary remedy for pound breach and rescue in certain cases after a distress for damage feasant.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 254.

Rescue of a prisoner. If the defendant after being arrested on mesne process, and before being carried to prison, were rescued from the sheriff or his officer, the sheriff was excused from having his body in court at the return of the writ, and might make his return to the writ accordingly. But a rescue after the defendant had been carried to prison, even where the sheriff was bringing him from the prison to the court by habeas corpus, did not excuse the sheriff, and he was answerable for it as escape. And an escape owing to the negligence of the officer did not justify the return of a rescue.

A rescue of one apprehended for felony is felony; for treason, treason; and for a misdemeanour, a misdemeanour.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 225, n., 230; and see 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 88. Aiding a prisoner to escape is felony by the Prison Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126, s. 37.

Rescussor, the party making a rescue.

Res denominatur à principali parte. 9 Rep. 47.—(The thing is named from its principal part.)

Resealing writ, the second sealing of a writ by a master so as to continue it, or to cure it of an irregularity.

Res est misera ubi jus est vagum et incertum. 2 Salk. 512.—(It is a wretched state of things when law is vague and mutable.)

Reservatio non debet esse de proficuis ipsis, quia ea conceduntur, sed de redditu novo extra proficua. Co. Litt. 142.—(A reservation ought not to be of the profits themselves, because they are granted, but from the new rent apart from the profits.)

Reservation, a keeping aside or providing.

Reserve force. The Reserve Forces Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 48, repealing and consolidating the prior acts on the subject, of which the principal were 30 & 31 Vict. c. 110, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 111 (which provided for a reserve force of men in the militia to join Her Majesty's army in time of war), establishes an 'Army Reserve' and a 'Militia Reserve.' By s. 5 a Secretary of State 'at any time when occasion appears to require' may call out the whole or part of the Army Reserve 'to aid the civil power in the preservation of the public peace.'

Reserving points of law. It was long the practice for a judge at the assizes to reserve points of law for consideration by the full Court (for which he was sitting as Commissioner) at Westminster, and this practice, recognised by s. 34 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, which conferred a right of appeal, was kept up by s. 46 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and R. S. C., Ord. XXXVI., r. 22. But s. 17 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876, and R. S. C., Ord. XXXVI., r. 22 a, substitute for this procedure the argument of the point on 'further consideration' before the judge himself. See also title BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

As to the reserving points of law at sessions or assizes, see 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, Judicature Act, 1873, s. 47, and Judicature Act, 1875, s. 19, and see title CROWN CASES RESERVED.

Reserving, question of law, at sessions or assizes. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, and suprà.

Reservoirs. The Limited Owners Reservoirs and Water Supply Further Facilities Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 31, gives limited owners power to form reservoirs and to charge their estates with the expense.

Reset, the receiving or harbouring an outlawed person.—Cowel.

Reset of theft, the feloniously receiving and keeping of stolen property, with knowledge of the theft.—Scotch phrase.

Res generalem habet significationem quia tam corporea quam incorporea, cujuscunque sunt generis, naturæ, sive speciei, comprehendit. 3 Inst. 182.—(The word 'thing' has a general signification, because it comprehends corporeal and incorporeal objects, of whatever nature, sort, or species.)

Res gestæ, the things done (including words spoken) in the course of a transaction. The phrase is commonly used in connection with evidence, and the admissibility in evidence of words spoken, e.g., the cries of a woman who is being ravished.

Resiance, residence, abode, or continuance.

Resiant rolls, those containing the resiants in a tithing, etc., which are to be called over by the steward on holding courts leet.

Residence, abode; also the continuance of a parson or vicar on his benefice. It is upon the supposition of residence that the law styles every parochial minister an incumbent.

By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, repealing the former acts, every spiritual person (with exceptions for heads of houses in the universities and others) holding a benefice which comprises all parochial churches, perpetual curacies, chapels, and church or chapel districts, if with cure of souls, shall reside on his benefice, in the house of residence; and if he absent himself for more than three months in any year, he shall forfeit, unless resident at some other of his benefices, a certain portion of the value of his benefice. It is further provided that annual returns of residents and non-residents shall be made to Her Majesty in Council; and that in case of non-residence, the bishop, instead of enforcing the penalties, may issue a monition to be followed up by an order to reside; and in case of non-compliance, may sequester the profits of the benefice, and apply them to the purposes in the act specified.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 689.

Residence of party to an action. See INDORSEMENT OF ADDRESS.

Resident, an agent, minister, or officer residing in any distant place with the dignity of an ambassador. Residents are a class of public ministers inferior to ambassadors and envoys; but, like them, they are under the protection of the law of nations.—Encyc. Lond.

Also, a tenant, who was obliged to reside on his lord's land, and not to depart from the same; called also, homme levant et couchant, and in Normandy, resseant du fief.—Leg. H. I.

Residual, or Residuary, relating to the residue; relating to the part remaining.

Residuary devisee, the person named in a will who is to take all the real property remaining over and above the other devisees.

It is provided by 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 35, 'that unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, such real estate or interest therein as shall be comprised or intended to be comprised in any devise in such will contained, which shall fail or be void by reason of the death of the devisee in the lifetime of the testator, or by reason of such devise being contrary to law or otherwise incapable of taking effect, shall be included in the residuary devise (if any) contained in such will.'

Residuary legatee, the person to whom the surplus of the personal estate, after the discharge of all debts and particular legacies, is left by the testator's will.

Residue, the surplus of a testator's or intestate's estate after discharging all his liabilities. Unless it appear in the will that the executor was intended to have the residue, he will be deemed by a court of equity to be trustee for the next of kin (11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 40). The distribution of the surplusage of intestate's estate is provided for by 22 & 23 Car. II. c. 10, explained by 29 Car. II. c. 3; and 1 Jac. II. c. 17.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 208—212.

Resignatio est juris proprii spontanea refutatio. Godb. 284.—(Resignation is a spontaneous relinquishment of one's own right.)

Resignation, the giving up a claim, office, or possession; also, the yielding up a benefice into the hands of the ordinary, called by the canonists renunciation; and though it is synonymous with surrender, yet it is by use restrained to yielding up a spiritual living to the bishop, as surrender is the giving up of temporal land into the hands of the lord.

A covenant to resign a living on request given to the patron before and in consideration of presentation thereto, was formerly simoniacal, and, therefore, illegal (see Fletcher v. Lord Sondes, 3 Bing. 501), but by 9 Geo. IV. c. 94, every engagement for the resignation of any living 'to the intent, manifested by the terms of such engagement, that any one person whosoever, specially named therein, or one or (sic) two persons specially named, each of them by blood or marriage, an uncle, son, grandson, brother, nephew, or grandnephew of the patron, shall be presented, collated, nominated, or appointed to such office, or that the same shall be given to him,' is made valid. The engagement must be entered into before the presentation of the party entering (ss. 1, 2).

By 'The Incumbents Resignation Act, 1871' (34 & 35 Vict. c. 44), provisions are made enabling the incumbent of any benefice, provided he has been the incumbent of such benefice for seven years continuously, to resign on the ground that he is incapacitated by permanent mental or bodily infirmity from the due performance of his duties, and to obtain a pension, not exceeding one-third part of the annual value of the benefice resigned, to be a charge on the such benefice.

The resignation of infirm bishops is provided for by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 111, a temporary act made perpetual by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 19. The annual pension is one-third of the revenues of the see, or two thousand pounds.

Resignee, one in favour of whom a resignation is made.

Res integra, a subject not yet decided on.

Res inter alios acta alteri nocere non debet (a transaction between strangers ought not to injure a party), e.g., the sworn evidence of a witness in one cause cannot be made available in another cause between other parties. Consult Best on Evidence, bk. iii., pt. 2, ch. 5.

Res ipsa loquitur (the thing speaks for itself), a phrase used in actions for injury by negligence where no proof of negligence is required beyond the accident itself, which is such as necessarily to involve negligence, e.g., a collision between two trains upon a railway. —Skinner v. London, Brighton, and South Coast R. Co., 5 Ex. 787.

Res judicata, a point already decided by authority. See ESTOPPEL.

Res judicata pro veritate accipitur. Co. Litt. 103.—(A thing adjudicated is received as true.) See Broom's Leg. Max.

Res mancipi, things which might be sold and alienated.—Civ. Law.

Res nova, a matter not yet decided.

Res nullius (a thing which has not an owner).

Resolution, a solemn judgment or decision; a revocation of a contract.

Resoluto jure concedentis resolvitur jus concessum. Mackeld. Civ. Law, 179.—(The grant of any right comes to an end on the termination of the right of the grantor.)

Resolutive condition, one the accomplishment of which revokes a prior obligation.

Resort. A court whose decision is for the particular case before it final and without appeal, is, in reference to that case, said to be a Court of Last Resort. The House of Lords has been especially so spoken of.

Respectu computi vicecomitis habendo, a writ for respiting a sheriff's account addressed to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer. —Reg. Orig. 139.

Respectum, Challenge, propter. See JURY.

Res perit domino. The loss falls on the owner. For illustrations of this maxim, see Broom's Leg. Max.; 5th ed., 238.

Res per pecuniam aestimatur et non pecunia per rem. 9 Co. 76.—(The value of a thing is estimated according to its worth in money; but the value of money is not estimated by reference to a thing.)

Respite (v. a.), to postpone—thus, to enter and respite an appeal is to enter the same, and postpone the hearing to a future day.—Consult Pritch. on Q. Sess.; 2 (n. s.), interval, reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence; a delay, forbearance, or continuation of time.

There are respite of execution, of debt, of homage, and of a jury.

Respiciendum est judicanti, ne quid aut durius aut remissius constituatur quam causa deposcit; nec enim aut severitatis aut clementie gloria affectanda est. 3 Inst.—(The judge must see that no order be made, or judgment given, or sentence passed either more harshly or more mildly than the case requires; he must not seek renown, either as a severe or as a tender-hearted judge.)

Respondeat oster (let him answer over). If a demurrer is joined in a plea to the jurisdiction, person, or writ, etc., and it be judged that the defendant put in a more substantial plea, interlocutory judgment is given that he shall answer. Also, if a prisoner fail upon a plea in bar, he has judgment of respondeat oster, and may plead over to the offence the general issue, not guilty.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., iii., 569; iv. 405.

Respondeat raptor, qui ignorare non potuit quod pupillum alienum abduxit. Hob. 99.—(Let the ravisher answer, for he cannot be ignorant that he has taken away another's ward.)

Respondeat superior. 4 Inst. 114.—(Let the principal be held responsible.) The person directing an unlawful act to be done by his servant or agent is answerable as if he had done the act with his own hand. See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 843.

Respondent, an answer in a suit, whether for himself or another; the defendant in an appeal; the defendant in a suit in the Court for Divorce, etc.

Respondentia, money which is borrowed not upon the vessel, as in bottomry, but upon the goods and merchandise contained in it, which must necessarily be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage; in which case the borrower personally is bound to answer the contract.—7 Geo. I. c. 21, s. 2; 19 Geo. II. c. 37, s. 5; 3 Br. & Had. Com., 209 et seq.

Respondere non debet [Lat.] (he ought not to answer).

Responsa prudentum, the opinions and decisions of learned lawyers, forming part of the Roman laws.—Cum. C. L. 6.

Responsalis ad lucrandum vel petendum, he who appears and answers for another in court at a day assigned; a proctor, attorney, or deputy.—1 Reeves, 169.

Res profectò stulta est nequitie modus. (There is no mean in wickedness.)—11 Co. 8 b.

Resseiser, the taking of lands into the hands of the Crown, where a general livery or ouster le main was formerly misused.—Staundf. Prærog.

Res sua nemini servit. See 4 Macq. H. L. Ca. 151.—(No one can have a servitude over his own property.)

Re-stamping writ, passing it a second time through the proper office, whereupon it receives a new stamp.—1 Ch. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 212.

Restaur, or Restor, the remedy or recourse which assurers have against each other, according to the date of their assurances; or against the master, if the loss arise through his default, as through ill loading, want of caulking, or want of having the vessel tight; also, the remedy or recourse a person has against his guarantee or other person, who is to indemnify him from any damage sustained.—Encyc. Lond.

Restitutio in integrum, the rescinding of a contract or transaction, so as to place the parties to it in the same position, with respect to one another, which they occupied before the contract was made, or the transaction took place. The restitutio here spoken of is founded on the edict. If the contract or transaction is such as not to be valid, according to the jus civile this restitutio is not needed, and it only applies to cases of contracts and transactions, which are not in their nature or form invalid. In order to entitle a person to the restitutio, he must have sustained some injury capable of being estimated, in consequence of the contract or transaction, and not through any fault of his own, except in the case of one who is minor xcv. annorum, who was protected by the restitutio against the consequences of his own carelessness.

The following are the chief cases in which a restitutio might be decreed.

The case of vis et metus. When a man had acted under the influence of force or reasonable fear, caused by the acts of the other party, he had an actio quod metus causâ, for restitution, against the party who was the wrong-doer; and also against an innocent person, who was in possession of that which had thus illegally been got from him; and also against the heredes of the wrong-doer, if they were enriched by being his heredes. If he were sued in respect of the transaction, he could defend himself by an exceptio quod metus causâ. The actio quod metus was given by the prætor, L. Octavius, a contemporary of Cicero.

The case of dolus. When a man was fraudulently induced to become a party to a transaction, which was legal in all respects saving the fraud, he had his actio de dolo malo against the guilty person and his heredes, so far as they were made richer by the fraud, for the restoration of the thing of which he had been defrauded; and if that were not possible, for compensation. Against a third party, who was in bond fide possession of the thing, he had no action. If he were sued in respect of the transaction, he could defend himself by the exceptio doli mali.

The case of minores xcv. annorum. A minor could by himself do no legal act, for which the assent of a tutor or curator was required; and, therefore, if he did such act by himself, no restitutio was necessary. If the tutor had given his auctoritas or the curator his assent, the transaction was legally binding; but yet the minor could claim restitutio if he had sustained injury by the transaction.

There were, however, cases in which minores could obtain no restitutio; for instance, when a minor with a fraudulent design gave himself out to be a major, when he confirmed the transaction after coming of age, and in other cases.

The case of absentia, which comprehends not merely absence in the ordinary sense of the word, but absence owing to madness or imprisonment, and the like causes.

The case of error. Mistake comprehends such error as cannot be imputed to blame; and in such a case a man could always have restitutio when another was enriched by his loss.

The case of alienatio in fraudem creditorum facta (Dig. xlii. tit. 8). When a man was insolvent (non solvendo), and alienated his property for the purpose of injuring his creditors, the prætor's edict gave the creditors a remedy.

In the imperial times, restitutio was also applied to the remission of a punishment (Tac. Ann. xiv. 12; Plin. Ep. x. 64, 55; Dig. xlviii. tit. 19, s. 27), which could only be done by the imperial grace.—Smith's Dict. Antiq.; Sand. Just., 5th ed., 47, 73, 216.

Restitution, the restoring anything unjustly taken from another; also, putting in possession of lands or tenements him who had been unlawfully disseised of them; a person being attainted of treason, etc., he or his heirs may be restored to his lands, etc., by royal charter of pardon.

Restitution of conjugal rights, a species of matrimonial cause, which is brought whenever the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason, in which case the Divorce and Matrimonial Court will compel them to come together again, if either party desire it. See MARRIAGE.

Restitution of minors, a restoring them to rights lost by deeds executed during their minority.—Scotch Law.

Restitution of stolen goods. By the common law there was no restitution of goods upon an indictment, because it is at the suit of the Crown only, therefore the party was enforced to bring an appeal of robbery in order to have his goods again; but a writ of restitution was authorized to be granted by 21 Hen. VIII. c. 11, and it became the practice of the court, upon the conviction of a felon, to order, without any writ, immediate restitution of such goods as were brought into court to be made to the several prosecutors. The Larceny Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 100, gives power to the court to award from time to time writs of restitution for stolen property, or to order the restitution thereof in a summary manner, upon a conviction of the guilty party upon an indictment by or on behalf of the owner. This restitution reaches the stolen goods (unless they be negotiable instruments) notwithstanding that the guilty party may have sold them for value to an innocent purchaser, but by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, s. 9, a sum not exceeding the proceeds of such sale out of moneys taken from the guilty party on his apprehension may be delivered to such innocent purchaser.

Restitution, Writ of. If the judgment below was reversed in a court of error, the plaintiff in error might have had a writ of restitution in order that he might be restored to all he had lost by the judgment. If execution on the former judgment had been actually executed, and the money paid over, the writ of restitution issued without any previous scire facias, but if the money had not been paid over, a scire facias quare restitutionem non, suggesting the matter of fact, viz., the sum levied, etc., must have previously issued. Error, however, is now abolished (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LVIII., r. 1).

And, generally, if money, etc., be levied under a writ of execution, and the judgment be afterwards reversed or set aside, the party against whom the execution was sued out may have this writ of restitution; but where the judgment is set aside for irregularity, etc., restitution (when necessary) forms part of the rule; and if the goods or money be not restored, the court will grant an attachment. A writ of restitution may also be awarded when a judgment in ejectment is upset. Restitution takes place when there has been a writ of restitution before granted; and restitution is generally a matter of duty, but re-restitution is matter of grace.—Raym. 35.

The writ in this second sense would seem to be still in force. See note at head of Jud. Act, 1875, Sched. I.

Restitutio extracti ab ecclesiâ, a writ to restore a man to the church, which he had recovered for his sanctuary, being suspected of felony.—Reg. Orig. 69.

Restitutio temporalium, a writ addressed to the sheriff, to restore the temporalities of a bishopric to the bishop elected and confirmed.—F. N. B. 169.

Restraining Order. The 5th Vict. c. 5, s. 4, extended the preventive powers of Chancery by giving its judges authority, upon the application of any party interested, by motion or petition, supported by an affidavit of necessity, without bill filed, to restrain the Bank of England, or other public company incorporated or not, from permitting the transfer of stock in the public funds, or stock or shares in any public company, standing in the name of any person or body politic or corporate, in the books of the bank of England, or of any public company, or from paying any dividends due or to become due; and by directing that every such order must specify the amount of the stock or shares to be affected thereby, and the names of the persons, body politic or corporate, in which the same stand. The court had power, upon the application of any party interested, to discharge or vary such order, and to award costs.

The restraining order continued in force until discharged; but as this order was intended for interim purposes only, it would be discharged if a bill were not filed within a reasonable period. Obedience to the order is enforced by contempt.

This being a statutory power given to the Court of Chancery, is retained for the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34).

Restraining statutes, those which restrict previous rights and powers, as 1 Eliz. c. 19; 13 Eliz. cc. 10 and 20; 14 Eliz. c. 11; 18 Eliz. cc. 6 and 11; and 43 Eliz. c. 9. See 5 Reeves, c. xxiii., 26.

Restraint of Marriage. On the grounds of public policy, conditions attached to gifts or bequests to a person who has never been married, if in general restraint of marriage are void, i.e., the donee or legatee takes the gift or bequest whether he or she marry or not ; but a condition in restraint of the second marriage, whether of a man or woman, is not void (see Allen v. Jackson, 1 Ch. D. 399), and a condition is good if the restraint be partial only, e.g., if there be a bequest, with a gift over, if the legatee should marry a Roman Catholic, or a particular person, or without a particular person's consent.

Restraint of Trade. Contracts in general restraint of trade, that is, that a party shall not carry on a particular trade at all, are void on the ground of public policy (Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 Sm. L. C.), but contracts in partial restraint of trade, that is, where the restraint is limited to a particular time or area, are good, if made (although by deed) upon a consideration, and reasonable.

Restrictive Indorsement, one prohibiting the further negotiation of a bill of exchange or promissory note, or cheque, or expressing that 'it is a mere authority to deal with the bill, etc., as thereby directed, and not a transfer of the ownership thereof, as, for example, if a bill be endorsed "pay D. only," or "pay D. for the account of X.," or "pay D. or order for collection."'—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 35.

Resulting trust, one that arises from the operation or construction of equity, and in pursuance of the rule that trusts result to the person from whom the consideration moves, of which the following are instances:—

(1) Upon a contract to purchase a real estate, a trust immediately results to the vendee, since equity looks upon things agreed to be done as actually performed.

(2) Where a purchase is made in the name of one, and the consideration is given, or paid by another, a trust results in favour of the latter, though there be no express declaration for the purpose ; but not so if the purchase-money were paid by several, for that would be to introduce all the mischiefs which the Statute of Frauds was intended to prevent. There must then be a written declaration of trust. To raise a trust of this kind, the fact of the ownership of the money should appear upon the face of the deed, either by a recital, or by expressions which amount to a necessary implication, or presumptive proof of it.

(3) A purchase by a trustee with the trust-money, will raise a resulting trust to the person entitled to such money.

(4) A conveyance to a man, without consideration, raises a resulting trust for the original owner.

(5) Where a trust is declared in part of an estate only, what remains undisposed of results to the grantor or his heir-at-law.

(6) When the trusts created cannot take effect, a trust will result to the original owner or his heir.

(7) Where a conveyance is made to trustees, upon such trusts, and for such intents and purposes as A. shall appoint, and A. never appoints, the trust results to him and his heirs.

(8) If a trustee renew a lease in his own name, such lease will be subject to the trust affecting the old lease.

(9) Where there is fraud in obtaining a conveyance, the grantee will be held, in equity, a trustee for the person defrauded.

(10) Where a son is married in the lifetime of his father, and by him fully advanced and emancipated, a purchase by the father, in the name of his son, may be a trust for the father, as much as if it had been in the name of a stranger ; because, in that case, all presumptions and obligations of advancement cease. But, where the son is not advanced, or but advanced or emancipated in part, there is no room for any construction of a trust by implication ; and without clear proof to the contrary, it ought to be taken as an advancement of the son, although the father take the possession, and receive the rents and profits. If a grandfather purchase lands in the name of his grandchild, the father being dead, it is an advancement and not a trust ; for the grandfather is in loco parentis. And it is the same, if a father purchase in the names of his son and a trustee, or in the names of himself and son ; but, in this case, a moiety of the estate will be subject to the father's debts.

Resulting use, an implied use.

A resulting use arises where the legal seisin is transferred, and no use is expressly declared, nor any consideration nor evidence of intent to direct the use ; the use then remains in the original grantor, for it cannot be supposed that the estate was intended to be given away, and the statute immediately transfers the legal estate to such resulting use.

If the intent of the parties that the use should not result be plainly manifested, it will remain in the persons to whom the legal estate is limited. Parol evidence is admissible to show this intent, for the Statute of Frauds requiring declaration of uses to be in writing and signed by the party, extends, in cases of conveyances to uses, to third persons only, and not to the persons conveying or those to whom lands are conveyed to uses.—29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 8 ; but see Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 112.

The doctrine of resulting uses extends only to those cases where an estate in fee-simple passes ; it is not applicable where an estate-tail, an estate for life, or an estate for years is granted; for a consideration or declaration of the use prevents its resulting, and a tenure is a consideration, in consequence of the rent or service which it includes; a use, therefore, cannot result on the conveyance of a particular estate, i.e., an estate less than fee simple.

When any particular uses are declared, which do not exhaust the whole estate, so much of the use as the owner of the lands does not dispose of remains in him. The operation of this rule takes place in transfers, operating by non-transmutation of possession; that part of the use undisposed of by the bargainor or covenantor is retained by him as his old estate, and is denominated a use by implication; ex gra., if D. covenant to stand seised to the use of his heirs male, begotten or to be begotten, D. takes an estate for life by implication, for it is impossible for him to have any such heirs during his life, consequently the use undisposed of during his life remains in D.—Pybus v. Mitford, 1 Vent. 327. Neither resulting uses nor uses by implication can ever arise to any person other than the original owner of the estate.

And where a use is expressly limited to the owner of the estate, he will not be allowed to take any resulting or implied use inconsistent with the use limited to him.

Re-summons, a second summons, calling upon a person to answer an action where the first summons is defeated. Obsolete. As to re-summons in claims of consuance, see 2 Ch. Arch. Pr., 12th ed., 1347.

Resumption, the taking again by the Crown of such lands or tenements, etc., as on false suggestion had been granted by letters-patent.—Broke, 291.

Res Universitatis, properly belonging to a city or municipal corporation.

Retail, to sell goods in small parcels and not in gross. For the purpose of the Licensing Acts, retail of spirits is a sale of less than two gallons (30 Geo. III. c. 38, s. 15), of wine, of less than two gallons, or one dozen quart bottles (23 Vict. c. 27, s. 4), and of beer or cider, of less than four gallons and a half (4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 85, s. 19).

Retainer. (1) The contract between client and solicitor or between solicitor and counsel for their professional services; the contract that such services shall not be given to the opposite party; (2) a document given by a solicitor to counsel, engaging the person who receives it to appear for a party, either in some particular suit or action in prospect (which is called a special retainer), or in all matters of litigation in which such party may at any time be involved; this is called a general retainer. The latter operates until it is revoked, but if any case arises in which the counsel retained is not instructed to appear when the case is actually tried, he is at liberty to regard the retainer as cancelled. General retainers are more commonly given on behalf of corporations and public companies than of individuals.

(3) A servant who does not continually dwell in his master's abode, but only wears his livery, and attends sometimes upon special occasions.

Retainer of debts. Among debtors of equal degree an executor or administrator is allowed to pay himself first, by retaining in his hands so much as his debt amounts to.—2 Wms. Exs., 7th ed., 1039 et seq.; 2 Br. & Had. 656.

Retaining fee [fr. merces retinens, Lat.], a preliminary fee given to a counsel, along with the retainer, in order to insure his advocacy.

Retaliation, the lex talionis, which see.

Retenementum, detaining, withholding, or keeping back.—Cowel.

Retention (Scotch Law), the right of withholding a debt or retaining property until a debt due to the person claiming the right of retention shall be paid; a lien.

Retinentia, a retinue, or persons retained by a prince or nobleman.—Cowel.

Retiring a bill, taking up and paying a bill of exchange when due.—Byles on Bills, 11th ed., 222.

Retorna brevium, the returns of writs.

Retorno habendo, when the defendant has judgment in replevin for the return of the goods, there issues in his favour a writ de retorno habendo, whereby the goods are returned again into his custody, to be sold or otherwise disposed of, as if no replevin had been made. See REPLEVIN.

Retorsion, retaliation.

Retour, an extract from the chancery of the service of an heir to his ancestor.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Retour sans protest [Fr.] (return without protest), a request or direction by a drawer of a bill of exchange, that should the bill be dishonoured by the drawee, it may be returned without protest or without expense (sans frais).—Byles on Bills, 11th ed., 260.

Retractus aquæ, the ebb or return of a tide.—Cowel.

Retraxit (he has withdrawn), a proceeding somewhat similar to a nolle prosequi, except that a retraxit was a bar to any future action for the same cause, whereas a nolle prosequi is not, unless made after judgment. The former is made in person, in open court, when the trial is called on; the retraxit was made by a mere entry on the roll out of court. See Herbert v. Sayer, 2 D. & L. 65.

This proceeding has been for a long time unusual in practice.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1515. See title DISCONTINUANCE.

Retrocession, a re-assignment of inheritable rights to the cedent or original assignor.—Civ. Law.

Rette, a charge or accusation.—Co. Litt. 173, b.

Return-days. These were certain days in term for the return of writs.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 160.

Returning Officer, the official who conducts an election; in the case of parliamentary elections, the sheriff in counties, and the mayor in boroughs.—2 Wm. IV. c. 45, s. 11; and 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 76, s. 57. See 6 Vict. c. 18, s. 104; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 68; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 47 et seq.; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 58, s. 33 et seq. As to an action against him, see 31 & 32 Vict. c. 125, s. 48. The expenses of Returning Officers are now regulated by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 84. See also POLLING PLACES, and 4 Steph Com., 7th ed., ii. 370; iii. 444.

Returning from transportation, coming back to this country before the term of punishment is determined. It was an offence against public justice.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 67. The punishment of transportation is abolished. See PENAL SERVITUDE.

Retorno habendo. See RETORNO HABENDO.

Returnum averiorum, a judicial writ, similar to the retorno habendo.—Cowel.

Returnum irreplegiabile, a judicial writ addressed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and so found by verdict; it is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance.—Reg. Judic. 27.

Reus, a defendant, properly the debtor to whom the question was put. Rei, the parties or litigants.—Cum. C. L. 251.

Reve, or Greve, the bailiff of a franchise or manor, an officer in parishes within forests, who marks the commonable cattle.—Cowel.

Revelach, rebellion.—Domesday.

Reveland, the land which in Domesday is said to have been thane-land, and afterwards converted into reveland. It seems to have been land which having reverted to the king after the death of the thane, who had it for life, was not granted out to any by the king, but rested in charge upon the account of the reve or bailiff of the manor.—Spelm. Feuds, c. xxiv.

Revels, sports of dancing, masking, etc., formerly used in princes' courts, the inns of court, and noblemen's houses, commonly performed by night; there was an officer to order and supervise them, who was entitled the Master of the Revels.—Cowel.

Revendication. Upon the sale of goods on credit, by the law of some commercial countries, a right is reserved to the vendor to retake them, or he has a lien upon them for the price, if unpaid; and in other countries he possesses a right of stoppage in transitu, only in cases of insolvency of the vendee. The Roman law did not generally consider the transfer of property to be complete by sale and delivery alone without payment or security given for the price, unless the vendor agreed to give a general credit to the purchaser; but it allowed the vendor to reclaim the goods out of the possession of the purchaser, as being still his own property. Quod vendidi (say the Pendects), non aliter, fit accipientis, quam si aut pretium nobis solutum sit, aut satis eo nomine datum, vel etiam fidem habuerimus emptori sine ullâ satisfactione. The present code of France gives a privilege or right of revendication against the purchaser for the price of goods sold, so long as they remain in possession of the debtor. In respect to ships, a privilege is given by the same code, to a certain class of creditors, such as vendors, builders, repairers, mariners, etc., upon the ship, which takes effect even against subsequent purchasers, until the ship has made a voyage after the purchase; and, by the general maritime law, acknowledged in most, if not in all, commercial countries, hypothecations and liens are recognised to exist for seamen's wages and for repairs of foreign ships, and for salvage.—Story's Conf. Laws, sect. 401.

Revenue, income, annual profit received from land or other funds; also the profits or fiscal prerogatives of the Crown.

Revenue causes are peculiarly within the province of the Court of Exchequer; the practice of which court in matters of revenue is regulated by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, s. 9 et seq., and the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104.

The jurisdiction of the Court of Exchequer was transferred to the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 16); but all causes which would have been within the exclusive cognizance of the Court of Exchequer were assigned to the Exchequer Division of the High Court (Ibid., s. 34), but in 1881 by Order in Council, under s. 32 of that Act the Exchequer Division was merged in the Queen's Bench Division. The practice and proceedings on the revenue side of that division are not affected by the Rules of the Judicature Act, 1875 (see Ord. LXII.).

The electoral disabilities of revenue officers are removed by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 73, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 22.

Reverend, not a title of honour or dignity, and a person prefixing it to his name does not thereby claim to be in holy orders. So held in Keet, App. Smith, resp. 1 P. D. 73, in which case, the incumbent of a parish having refused to allow a tombstone describing the deceased as daughter of the 'Rev. H. Keet, Wesleyan Minister,' to be erected in his churchyard, a faculty was ordered to issue for the erection of the tombstone.

Reversal of judgment. A judgment might have been reversed without a writ of error, for matters foreign to or dehors the record, i.e., not apparent upon the face of it, so that they could not be assigned for error in the superior courts, or by writ of error, which lay from all inferior jurisdictions to the Queen's Bench and thence to the Exchequer Chamber and the House of Lords. It was brought for mistakes as to matters of substance, appearing in the judgment or other parts of the record. See Steph. Com., 7th ed., iii. 579; iv. 463. Error is now abolished, except in Crown cases, by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LVIII., r. 1; and in all other cases where it could formerly have been used, recourse must now be had to an appeal, as to which see other rules of the above order; and see title APPEAL. As to reversal of outlawry, see OUTLAWRY.

Reverse, to undo, repeal, or make void.

Reverser, a reversioner.

Reversion [fr. revertor, Lat.], that portion left of an estate after a grant of a particular portion of it, short of the whole estate, has been made by the owner to another person. It is thus described by Mr. Watkins (Conv. c. xvi.): When a person has interest in lands, and grants a portion of that interest, or in other terms, a less estate than he has in himself, the possession of those lands shall, on the determination of the granted interest or estate, return or revert to the grantor. This interest is what is called the grantor's reversion, or, more properly, his right of reverter, which, however, is deemed an actual estate in the land, bearing the fruits of seigniority. Thus, a grant of an estate by the owner of the fee-simple 'to A. for life,' leaves in the grantor the reversion in fee-simple, which will commence in possession after the determination of A.'s life-estate; and this is called the particular estate; particular, as carved or sliced out of the larger estate or reversion.

Reversionary, that which is to be enjoyed in reversion. Unconscionable bargains for the sale of reversionary interests may be set aside, but not, by 31 Vict. c. 4, merely on the ground of undervalue. See Beynon v. Cook, L. R. 10 Ch. 389 n.

Reversionary interests of married women in personalty. See 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57, enabling married women to dispose of such interests, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 9, s. 3; and see also HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Reversionary lease, one to take effect in futuro. A second lease to commence after the expiration of a former lease.

Reversioner, one who has a reversion.

Reversio terre est tanquam terra revertens in possessione donatori, sive hæredibus suis post donum finitum. Co. Litt. 142.—(A reversion of land is, as it were, the return of the land to the possession of the donor or his heirs after the termination of the estate granted.)

Reverter, reversion.

Re, verbis, scripto, consensu, traditione, juncturâ, vestus sumere pacta solent. Plow. Com. 161 b.—(The following things combined constitute a contract, namely, the subject matter, words, [or] writing, consent, delivery). As to the application of the maxim, see Plowd., supra.

Review, Bill of: it was in the nature of proceedings in error, and its object was to procure an examination and alteration or reversal of a fine decree in Chancery duly signed and enrolled. If the decree were not enrolled, a petition of re-hearing was the proper proceeding. The bill was filed either for error of law, apparent upon the face of the decree, without any further examination of matters of fact, for being contrary to the statute law, or unwarranted by the allegations in the bill; or, with leave of the court, upon the discovery of new matter, as a release or receipt: which relief was obtained upon an affidavit, stating that the new matter could not be produced by the party claiming the benefit of it in the original cause, and the nature of the new matter, that the court might judge of its relevancy. The matter must have been such as the party, by reasonable diligence, could not have known.

The objects of this proceeding may be attained under the Judicature Acts, by an appeal to the Court of Appeal, which Court has full discretionary power to receive further evidence upon questions of fact, and such evidence may be given as to matters which have occurred after the date of the decision from which the appeal is brought (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LVIII., r. 5). See APPEAL.

Review, Bill in the nature of bill of: this was filed where the decree had not been enrolled. As, however, a decree not signed and enrolled might be altered or reversed upon a hearing, without the assistance of such bill, if there was sufficient matter to alter or reverse it appearing upon the former proceedings, the new investigation of the decree must have been, or at least usually was, brought on by a petition for a re-hearing, when there was no defect to be supplied.—Sto. Eq. Pl. s. 421. See last title.

Review, Commission of, a commission which was sometimes granted in extraordinary cases, to revise the sentence of the court of delegates, when it was apprehended they had been led into a material error. The court of delegates is abolished.

Review, Court of. See APPEAL.

Review, Supplemental bill in the nature of a bill of. It nearly resembled in its frame a bill of review, except that, instead of praying that the former decree might be reviewed or reversed, it prayed that the cause might be heard with respect to the new matter made the subject of the supplemental bill, at the same time that it was re-heard upon the original bill, and that the plaintiff might have such relief as the nature of the case made by the supplemental bill required.—Sto. Eq. Pl., s. 425; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., 1430.

Review (v. a.), to consider, as a court of appeal.

Reviling church ordinances, an offence against religion, punishable by fine and imprisonment.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 208.

Revising Assessors, two officers elected by the burgesses of non-parliamentary municipal boroughs for the purpose of assisting the mayor in revising the parish burgess lists.—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 29, and Sched. 3.

Revising Barristers' Courts, courts held in the autumn throughout the country, to revise the list of voters for county and borough members of parliament. The office of revising barrister, for which the qualification, originally three years standing, was altered to seven years standing by the Revising Barristers Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 53, lasts only for one session, i.e., one year; but they are generally re-appointed. Queen's counsel never hold this post. The appointment is in the hands of the senior judge of the summer assize next after the vacancy. The appeal on points of law, which lay to the Court of Common Pleas, by 6 Vict. c. 18, and to the Common Pleas Division of the High Court under s. 34 of the Judicature Act, 1873, now lies to the Queen's Bench Division of the High Court by Order in Council under s. 32 of that Act. The Parliamentary Registration Act, 1843, 6 Vict. c. 18, defines and regulates the duties of revising barristers, which, after amendments by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 122, s. 4; 28 Vict. c. 36 (County Registration); 29 & 30 Vict. c. 54; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 58; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 70 (evening sittings); and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 53, were greatly increased by the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 26, which, by s. 15, directs that the lists of parliamentary and municipal voters shall be made out and revised together by the revising barristers in cases where a municipal borough is wholly or partly co-extensive with the parliamentary borough.

As to the distribution of revising barristers among the circuits when any alteration is made in relation to the circuits, see Judicature Act, 1873, s. 23.

Revised Statutes, a collection of all the statutes in force (omitting repealed statutes and repealed parts of statutes) up to the year 1868 inclusive. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Revive (v. a.), to make oneself liable for a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations by acknowledging it; or for a matrimonial offence once condoned by committing another.

Revivor, Bill of, was a bill filed to revive and continue the proceedings, whenever there was an abatement of the suit before its final consummation either by death or marriage. Bills of revivor were abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 52.

Revivor, Bill in the nature of a bill of. The distinction between bills of revivor and bills in the nature of bills of revivor, seems to have been, that the former, in case of death, were founded upon mere privity of blood or representation by operation of law; the latter upon privity of estate or title by the act of the party. In the former case, nothing could be in contest, except where the party was heir or personal representative; in the latter the nature and operation of the whole act, by which the privity of estate or title was created, was open to controversy. Obsolete.

Revivor and supplement, Bill of. This bill was a mere compound of the two preceding species of bills, and in its separate parts it must have been framed and proceeded upon in the same manner. It was resorted to where not only had an abatement taken place in a suit, but defects were to be supplied, or new events were to be stated which had arisen since the commencement of the suit. Obsolete.

Revivor, Writ of. Where it became necessary to revive a judgment, by lapse of time, or change by death, etc., of the parties entitled or liable to execution, the party alleging himself to be entitled to execution might sue out a writ of revivor in the form given in the act, or apply to the court for leave to enter a suggestion upon the roll, that it appeared that he was entitled to have and issue execution of the judgment, such leave to be granted by the Court or a judge upon a rule to show cause, or a summons, to be served according to the then present practice.—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 129.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XLII., r. 19, where six years have elapsed since the judgment, or any change has taken place by death or otherwise in the parties entitled or liable to execution, the party alleging himself to be entitled to execution may apply to the Court or a judge for leave to issue execution accordingly. And such Court or judge may, if satisfied that the party so applying is entitled to issue execution, make an order to that effect.

Revocation, the undoing of a thing granted, or a destroying or making void of some deed that had existence until the act of revocation made it void. It may be either general, of all acts and things done before; or special, to revoke a particular thing.—5 Rep. 90.

Revocation and new appointment. The appointer may reserve a power of revocation and new appointment in the deed of appointment, although not expressly authorized so to do, by the assurance creating the power; and such a power may be reserved toties quoties. By a revocation the original power revives. When a deed of appointment contains no power of revocation, it is absolute and cannot be revoked, although there be a power of revocation in the assurance creating the power. When a power is executed by will, an express power of revocation need not be reserved, since a will is revocable.

Revocation of agency. An agency is dissolved or determined in several ways:—

- (I.) By the act of the principal, either
 - (a) Express, as
 - (1) By direct and formal writing, publicly advertised;
 - (2) By informal writing to the agent privately;
 - (3) by parol; or
 - (b) Implied from circumstances, as (1) by appointing another person to do the same act, where the authority of both would be incompatible.

The exceptions to the power of the principal to revoke his agent's authority at mere pleasure, are,

- (1) When the principal has expressly stipulated that the authority shall be irrevocable, and the agent has also an interest in its execution.
- (2) Where an authority or power is coupled with an interest, or is given for a valuable consideration, or is a part of a security, unless there is an express stipulation that it shall be revocable.
- (3) When an agent's act in pursuance of his authority has become obligatory for him, by potest mutare consilium suum in alterius injuriam.

(II.) By the agent's giving notice to his principal that he renounces the agency; but the principal must sustain no damage thereby; otherwise the agent would be responsible therefor.

(III.) By operation of law, as

(a) By the expiration of the period during which the agency was to exist or to have effect.

(b) By a change of condition or of state, producing an incapacity of either the principal or the agent, as

(1) Marriage of a feme sole principal.

(2) Mental disability established by inquiry, or where the party is placed under guardianship.

(3) Bankruptcy, excepting as to such rights as do not pass to the trustee under the adjudication.

(4) Death, unless the authority is coupled with an interest in the thing vested in the agent. See Bailey v. Collett, 18 Beav. 179.

(5) By the extinction of the subject of the agency.

(6) By the ceasing of the principal's powers.

(7) By the complete execution of the trust confided to the agent, who then is functus officio.

Revocation of probate and letters of administration, is effected in two ways: (1) By an action for the purpose; (2) on an appeal to a higher tribunal to reverse the sentence by which they are granted.—1 Wms. Exs., 7th ed., 571 et seq.

Revocation of will. There are four modes in which a will can be revoked, viz.: (1) by another will, or writing executed in the same manner as the original will; (2) by burning or other act done animo revocandi; (3) by the disposition of the property by the testator in his lifetime; (4) by marriage. By the first and third of these modes, the will may be revoked either entirely or partially; by the second and last, the revocation will be total. See Jarman on Wills.

Revocacione parliamenti, an ancient writ for recalling a parliament.—4 Inst. 44.

Revocatur [Lat.] (it is recalled).

Reward, a recompense for anything done.

By the 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 28, the courts may order the sheriff of the county in which certain offences have been committed, to pay the person active in or towards the apprehension of persons charged with murder, felonies, shooting, or attempting to shoot, stabbing, cutting, or poisoning, or administering anything to procure miscarriage, or with rape, burglary, or felonious housebreaking, bullcock or sheep stealing, or with being ac-cessary before the fact to any of such offences, or to receiving any stolen property, a reasonable sum to compensate for expense, exertion, and loss of time. By section 30, if a man be killed in attempting to take such offenders, the court may order compensation to his wife or relatives.

As for taking a reward for helping to the recovery of stolen property without bringing the offender to trial, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 101. As to advertising a reward for the return of stolen or lost property, see STOLEN GOODS; and see 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 237.

As to action to recover a reward for information leading to apprehension of an offender, see Turner v. Walker, L. R. 1 Q. B. 647.

Rhandir, a part in the division of Wales before the Conquest; every township comprehended four gavels, and every gavel had four rhandirs, and four houses or tenements constituted every rhandir.—Taylor's Hist. Gav. 69.

Rhetoric [n. s.], the art of speaking not merely correctly, but with art and elegance.—Latham. See Whateley's Elements of Rhetoric, Introduction, sect. 1.

Rhodian law, a code of maritime law made by the people of Rhodes.

Rial [fr. reale, Span., royal money], a piece of gold coin current for 10s. in the reign of Henry VI., at which time there were half rials, and quarter rials, or rial-farthings. In the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's reign, golden rials were coined at 15s. a-piece; and in James I. there were rose-rials of gold at 30s., and spur-rials at 15s.—Lowndes' Essay on Coins, 38.

Ribaud, a rogue, vagrant, Wigornonger;

a person given to all manner of wickedness.—Cowd.

Ribbonmen, associations or secret societies formed in Ireland, having for their object the dispossession of landlords by murder and fire-raising. See Alison's Hist. of Europe from 1815 to 1852, Vol. IV., cap. xx. s. 13.

Richmond Forest, a royal forest founded by Charles I. As to Richmond Park, see 2 Hall. Const. Hist. 14.

Richmondshire, the part of Yorkshire about Richmond, North Yorkshire.

Rider, an inserted leaf or clause; an additional clause tacked to a bill passing through parliament.

Rider-roll, a schedule, or small piece of parchment, often added to some part of a roll, record, or act of parliament.

Riding armed. The offence of riding or going armed with dangerous or unusual weapons, is a misdemeanour tending to disturb the public peace by terrifying the good people of the land.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 357.

Riding Clerk, one of the Six Clerks in Chancery, who, in his turn, for one year, kept the controlment books of all grants that passed the Great Seal. The Six Clerks were superseded by the Clerks of Records and Writs.

Ridings [corrupted from trithings], the names of the parts or divisions of Yorkshire, which, of course, are three only, viz., East Riding, North Riding, and West Riding.

Riens in arrear, a plea which was used in an action of debt for arrearages of account, whereby the defendant alleged that there was nothing in arrear. See STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Riens passe per la fait (nothing passes by the deed), the form of an exception taken in some cases to an action on a deed. Obsolete.

Riens per descent (nothing by descent), the plea of an heir where he was sued for his ancestor's debts, and had no land from him by descent or assets in his hands.—3 Cro. 151. See now STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Rier, or Reer-county [fr. retro-comitatus, Lat.], close county, in opposition to open county. It appears to be some public place which the sheriff appoints for the receipt of the king's money after the end of the county court. Fleta says it is dies crastinus post comitatum.—Encyc. Lond.

Riffare [fr. reife, Sax.], to take away anything by force.

Right [fr. recht, Germ. and Teut.; ritto, Ital.; rectus, Lat.]. The application of the same word to denote a straight line and moral rectitude of conduct, has obtained in every language I know.—Dugald Stewart], in its primitive sense, that which the law directs; in popular acceptance, that which is so directed for the protection and advantage of an individual, is said to be his right.—1 Stark. Evid. 1, n. (b). In other words, it is a liberty of doing or possessing something consistently with law.

Right close, Writ of, an abolished writ which lay for tenants in ancient demesne, and others of a similar nature, to try the right of their lands and tenements in the court of the lord exclusively.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 224.

Right in Court. See RECTUS IN CURIA.

Right patent. An obsolete writ, which was brought for lands and tenements, and not for an advowson, or common, and lay only for an estate in fee-simple, and not for him who had a lesser estate, as tenant-in-tail, tenant-in-frank marriage, or tenant for life.—F. N. B. 1.

Right to begin. If the affirmative of the issue is on the plaintiff, he, in general, has a right to begin. If in replevin the defendant avow for rent in arrear, and the plaintiff reply riens in arrear, the plaintiff must begin. In any action where the plaintiff seeks to recover damages of an unascertained amount, he is entitled to begin, though the affirmative be with the defendant.

In considering, however, which party ought to begin, it is not so much the form of the issue which is to be considered, as the substance and effect of it, and the judge will consider what is the substantial fact to be made out, and on whom it lies to make it out. And it seems that, as a general rule, the party entitled to begin is he who would have a verdict against him if no evidence were given on either side.

In the Court of Appeal and in all other civil appeals, the appellant's counsel begins.

On an appeal to quarter sessions from the petty sessions, the person who appears in support of the order of the magistrate begins. Consult 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 529.

Right, Writ of [breve de recto, Lat.], a procedure for the recovery of real property after not more than sixty years' adverse possession; the highest writ in the law, sometimes called, to distinguish it from others of the droitual class, the writ of right proper. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27; last used in 1835 in Davies v. Lowndes, 1 B. N. C. 597.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., iii. 392, 415, n.; iv. 412.

Ring-dropping, a trick variously practised. One mode is as follows, the circumstances being taken from Patch's case, 2 East, 94.

678:—The prisoner, with accomplices, being with their victim, pretend to find a ring wrapt in paper, appearing to be a jeweller's receipt for a 'rich brilliant diamond ring.' They offer to leave the ring with the victim if he will deposit some money and his watch as a security. He lays his watch and money, is heckoned out of the room by one of the confederates, while the others take away his watch, etc. This is a larceny. See further 2 Russ. on Cr.

Ringling the changes, a trick practised by a criminal, by which, on receiving a good piece of money in payment of an article, he pretends it is not good, and, changing it, returns to the buyer a counterfeit one, as in Frank's case, 2 Leach, 64:—A man having bargained with the prisoner, who was selling fruit about the street, to have five apricots for sixpence, gave him a good shilling to change. The prisoner put the shilling into his mouth, as if to test it by biting, and returning a shilling, said it was a bad one. The buyer gave him a second, which he treated like the first, and returned with the same words, and so with a third shilling. The shillings he returned being bad, this was an uttering of false money.—1 Russ. on Cr., 4th ed., 125.

Riot, a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons or more assembling of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent and turbulent manner to the terror of the people, whether the act intended were of itself lawful or unlawful. The punishment for riots not falling within the provisions of the Riot Act, is fine and imprisonment, to which hard labour may, by 3 Geo IV. c. 114, be superadded.

As to riots at elections, see 2 Wm. IV. c. 45, s. 70, and 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 36, s. 8.

In any case of riot, or even apprehended riot, all places where intoxicating liquors are sold may be ordered to be closed by justices of the peace under s. 23 of the Licensing Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 94.

Riot Act, 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 5 (amended as to punishment, by 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 99; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3), whereby if twelve or more persons assemble unlawfully, to the disturbance of the peace, and do not disperse after proclamation, they are felons, punishable by penal servitude for life, originally by death.

Riotously demolishing Buildings or Machinery. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 11, it is enacted, that if any persons riotously and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance of the public peace shall demolish, or pull down, or destroy (or begin to do so), any building or machinery, every such offender shall be guilty of felony, and be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three (now five) years, or be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years.

As to compensation from 'the hundred,' see HUNDREDS.

Riparia, a mediæval-Latin word, which Lord Coke takes to mean water running between two banks; in other places it is rendered bank. See MAGNA CHARTA, cap. 15.

Riparian nations, those who possess opposite banks or different parts of banks of one and the same river.—Inter. Law.

Riparian proprietors, owners of lands bounded by a river or water-course.

Ripon, Bishopric of, created pursuant to the report of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

Riptowell, or Reaptowel, a gratuity or reward given to tenants after they had reaped their lord's corn or done other customary duties.—Cowel.

Riparian laws, a code of laws belonging to the Franks who occupied the country upon the Rhine.

Ritualism. See PUBLIC WORSHIP REGULATION ACT, 1874.

Rivage, or Rivagium, a toll anciently paid to the Crown for the passage of boats or vessels on certain rivers.—Cowel.

Riveare, to have the liberty of a river for fishing and fowling.—Cowel.

Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 75.

Rixa, a dispute or quarrel.—Civ. Law.

Rixatrix communis, a common scold.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 276.

Road, a way or passage; a secure place for the anchoring of vessels.

Robbery, the unlawful and forcible taking, from the person of another, of goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear.

(1) There must be an unlawful taking, otherwise it is no robbery.

(2) It is immaterial of what value the thing taken is.

(3) The taking must be by force or by a previous putting in fear, which makes the violation of the person more atrocious than privately stealing. For, according to the civil law maxim, qui vi rapuit, fur improbius esse videtur. This previous violence or putting in fear is the criterion that distinguishes robbery from other larcenies.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 276; and see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96.

Robberdsman, or Robertsman, a bold and stout robber or night thief, so called from Robin Hood, the famous robber, but perhaps a corruption of 'robber's-man.'—Digitized by Google

Rod, a measure of sixteen feet and a half long, otherwise called a perch.

Rod Knights, certain servitors who held their land by serving their lords on horseback.—Cowel.

Roe, Richard, otherwise Troublesome, the casual ejector and fictitious defendant in ejectment, whose services are no longer invoked. See JOHN DOE, and EJECTMENT.

Rogation [fr. rogatio, Lat.], the demand by the consul or tribunes of a law to be passed by the people.—Civ. Law.

Rogationes, questiones, et positiones debent esse simplices. Hob. 143.—(Demands, questions, and claims ought to be simple.)

Rogation week [fr. rogando (Deum), Lat., supplicating God], the second week before Whit Sunday, thus called from three fasts observed therein, the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, called Rogation days, because of the extraordinary prayers then made for the fruits of the earth, or as a preparation for the devotion of Holy Thursday.

Rogatio testium, bidding persons present to be witnesses to a nuncupative will.—1 Wm. Exs., 7th ed., 121.

Rogatory letters, a commission from one judge to another requesting him to examine a witness.

Rogue [Horne Tooke pronounces it to be the past participle of the Saxon wrigam, and to mean covered, cloaked.—Div. of Purley, ii. 227. Rogues in our old books are 'sturdy beggars.' This is the earliest acceptance of the word. I conceive it therefore to descend from the Dutch prachgen, to go a-begging, whence our prog, written also progue, a word of bad meaning; and thence, omitting p, the word before us.—Todd], a wandering beggar, vagrant, vagabond. As to 'incorrigible rogue,' or 'rogue and vagabond,' see VAGRANT. As to when it is a slander to call a man a rogue, see Addison on Torts, 3rd ed., p. 766.

Rogus, a funeral pile; a great fire wherein dead bodies were burned; a pile of wood.—Clavus. 5 Hen. III.

Rôle d'équipage [Fr.], the list of a ship's crew; a muster-roll.

Roll, a schedule of parchment that may be turned up with the hand in the form of a pipe.—Staundf. P. C. 11. All pleadings, memorials, and acts of court are entered on rolls, and filed with the proper officers, and then they become records of the court.

Roll of Court, the court-roll in a manor, wherein the business of the court, the admissions, surrenders, names, rents, and services of the tenants are copied and enrolled.

Rolling Stock (of Railways) Protection Act, 1862, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 50, by which rolling stock of a railway company when out on sidings, etc., belonging to private occupiers, is exempted from distress for rent due from the occupiers. The rolling stock is protected from execution by s. 4 of the Railway Companies Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 127, made perpetual by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 31.

Rolls, Master of the. See MASTER OF THE ROLLS.

Rolls Office of the Chancery, an office in Chancery Lane, London, which contains rolls and records of the High Court of Chancery, the master whereof is the second person in the Chancery, etc. The Rolls Court was there held, the Master of the Rolls sitting as judge; and that judge still sits there as a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.

This house or office was anciently called Domus Conversorum, as being appointed by King Henry III. for the use of converted Jews, but their irregularities occasioned King Edward II. to expel them thence, upon which the place was deputed for the custody of the rolls.—Encyc. Lond.

Rolls of the Exchequer. There are several in this court relating to the revenue of the country.

Rolls of Parliament, the manuscript registers of the proceedings of our old Parliament; in these rolls are likewise a great many decisions of difficult points of law, which were frequently, in former times, referred to the determination of this supreme court by the judges of both benches, etc.

Rolls of the Temple. In each of the two Temples is a roll called the calves-head roll, wherein every bencher, barrister, and student is taxed yearly; also, meals to the cook and other officers of the houses, in consideration of a dinner of calves-head, provided in Easter Term.—Orig. Jurid. 199.

Roman Catholics, Relief of. There are several statutes upon this subject, e.g., 10 Geo. IV. c. 7 (the principal act under which Roman Catholics were enabled to vote for members of and to sit in Parliament); 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 115; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 102; 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 28; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 28; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 102; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59; and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 48, s. 6; and see 30 & 31 Vict. cc. 62, 75; and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 72. The Ecclesiastical Titles Assumption Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. 60) has been repealed by the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 53. As to the presentation of benefices belonging to Roman Catholics, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 109.

Roman Catholics (the) Charities Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 134; and see 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 115.

Roman Civil Law. See CIVIL LAW.

Roman Law of Descartes. See Hale's Hist. p. 29.

Roma-Peditæ, pilgrims that travelled to Rome on foot.—Mat. Paris, anno 1250.

Rome-scot, or Rome-penny, Peterpence, which see.—Cowel.

Romilly's Act, 52 Geo. III. c. 101. As to charity abuses, see CHARITY.

Romney Marsh, a tract of land, in Kent, governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers, from which commissioners of sewers may receive light and direction.—4 Inst. 276; 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 296.

Rood, or Holy Rood, holy cross.

Rood of land, the fourth part of an acre in square measure, or 1,210 square yards.

Rooks are animals feræ nature. See Hannam v. Mockett, 2 B. & C. 934.

Rope-dancers. Unlicensed booths and stages for rope-dancers and mountebanks are public nuisances, and may, upon indictment, be suppressed, and the keepers of them fined.—1 Hawk. P. C. 75, s. 6.

Ros, a kind of rushes, which some tenants were obliged by their tenure to furnish their lords withal.—Cowel.

Rosland, healthy ground, or ground full of ling; also, watery and moorish land.—1 Inst. 5.

Roster, a list of persons who are to perform certain legal duties when called upon in their turn. In military affairs it is a table or plan by which the duty of officers is regulated.

Rota, the system by which succession to the functions of a temporary office is regulated among the persons who are to discharge them. See, e.g., Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868, s. 11.

Rother-beasts, oxen, cows, steers, heifers, and suchlike horned animals.—Cowel.

Rotulus Wintoniæ (the Roll of Winton), an exact survey of all England, made by Alfred, not unlike that of Domesday; and it was so called for that it was kept at Winchester, among other records of the kingdom; but this roll time has destroyed.—Ingulph. Hist. 516.

Roulette and Rollypoly. See GAMING.

Round-robin, a circle divided from the centre, like Arthur's round table, whence its supposed origin. In each compartment is a signature, so that the entire circle, when filled, exhibits a list, without priority being given to any name. A common form of round-robin is simply to write the names in a circular form.

Rout, a disturbance of the peace by persons assembling with an intention to do a thing, which, if it be executed, will make them rioters, and actually making a motion towards its execution.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 253.

Roy, Royan, a Hindoo title, given to the principal officer of the Khalsa, or chief treasurer of the exchequer.—Indian.

Royal assent, the act by which the Crown agrees to a bill which has already passed both Houses, is called 'The Royal Assent,' which may be given by the Sovereign in person, robed, crowned, and seated on the throne in the House of Lords, the Commons standing at the bar; or by Commissioners appointed by the Crown, under 33 Hen. VIII. c. 21, for that special purpose and for the single occasion. The forms observed in both cases do not vary, and are as follow: The Lords being assembled in their own House, the Sovereign or the Commissioners seated, and the Commons at the bar, the titles of the several bills which have passed both houses are read, and the King's or Queen's answer is declared by the Clerk of the Parliaments in Norman-French. To a bill of supply, the assent is given in the following words: 'Le roy (or, la reine) remercie ses loyal subjects, accepte leur benevolence et ainsi le veut.' To a private bill it is thus declared: 'Soit fait comme il est désiré.' And to public general bills it is given in these terms: 'Le roy (or, la reine) le veut.' Should the Sovereign refuse assent, it is in the gentle language of Le roy (or, la reine) s'avisera. As acts of grace and amnesty originate with the Crown, the clerk, expressing the gratitude of the subject, addresses the throne as follows: 'Les prélats, seigneurs, et commons, en ce présent parlement assemblés au nom de tout vous autres subjects remercient très humblement votre majesté et prient à Dieu vous donner en santé bonne vie et longue.' The moment the royal assent has been given, that which was a bill becomes an act, and instantly has the force and effect of law, unless some time for the commencement of its operation should have been specially appointed.

Queen Elizabeth, at the end of one session, rejected forty-eight bills agreed to by both Houses. The power of rejection was exercised in the year 1692, by William III., who at first refused, but in two years afterwards yielded assent to the bill for triennial parliaments; and for the last time in 1707, when Queen Anne refused her assent to a Scotch militia bill.—Dod's Parl. Com. 94.

Royal burghs in Scotland are incorporated by royal charter, giving jurisdiction to the magistrates within certain bounds, and vesting certain privileges in the inhabitants and burgesses. A burgh is called a royal burgh if it hold of the Crown; if it hold of a subject it is termed a burgh of barony. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 46; 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 77, explained by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 87.

Royal Courts of Justice, the statutory name, by s. 28 of the Jud. (Officers) Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 78, of the Law Courts, on the north side of the Strand, between St. Dunstan's Church and Chancery Lane, in which the business of the Supreme Court is transacted. The erection of buildings for bringing together into one place 'all the Superior Courts of Law and Equity, the Probate and Divorce Courts and the Court of Admiralty, recommended by a Royal Commission in 1858, was authorised by Parliament in 1865 by the Courts of Justice Building Act and the Courts of Justice Concentration (Site) Act, 28 & 29 Vict. cc. 48, 49. The Royal Courts were formally opened by Queen Victoria on the 4th of December, 1882, and opened for business on the 11th of January, 1883, the Judges' Chambers and other offices having been opened for business in January, 1880. Prior to the opening, the Chancery Division of the High Court occupied Courts at Lincoln's Inn, and the Queen's Bench and Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division Courts adjoining Westminster Hall. 'Guildhall Sittings' for the transaction of London City nisi prius business were also held in the Guildhall, but provision is made by s. 20 of the Courts of Justice Building Act for removing such business to the Royal Courts on request of the City Common Council, which request has not yet (March, 1883) been made.

Royal fish. See REGAL FISH.

Royal grants, conveyances of record. They are of two kinds: (1) letters-patent, and (2) letters-close, or writs-close.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 615—618.

Royal Marriage Act, 12 Geo. III. c. 11, by which no descendant of King George II. may marry without consent of the Sovereign, unless he be above 25, in which case the marriage may take place after 12 months' notice, unless disapproved by Parliament.

Royal mines, gold and silver mines. See MINES.

Royalty, payment to a patentee by agreement on every article made according to his patent; or to the owner of minerals for the right of working the same.

Roy est l'original de tous franchises. Keilw. 138.—(The king is the original of all franchises.)

Roy n'est lié per aucun statute si il ne soit expressment nommè. Jenk. Cent. 307.—(The king is not bound by any statute, unless expressly named.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 73.

Roy poet dispenser ome malum prohibitum, mais non malum per se. Ibid.—(The king can grant a dispensation for a malum prohibitum, but not for a malum per se.)

R. S. C., Rules of the Supreme Court.

R. S. C. (Costs), Rules of the Supreme Court (Costs).

Rubric, directions printed in books of law and in prayer-books, so termed because they were originally distinguished by red ink.

Rubric of a statute, its title, which was anciently printed in red letters. It serves to show the object of the legislature, and thence affords the means of interpreting the body of the act. Hence the phrase of an argument, à rubro ad nigrum.

Rubricas, constitutions of the church founded upon the Statutes of Uniformity and Public Prayer, viz., 5 & 6 Edward VI. c. 1 ; 1 Eliz. c. 2 ; 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4.

Rudmas-day [fr. rode, Sax., cross, and mass-day], the feast of the holy cross. There are two of these feasts: one on the 3rd of May, the Invention of the Cross; and the other on the 14th of September, called the Holy Rood-day, the Exaltation of the Cross.

Ruffanamah, an agreement.—Indian.

Rules, orders regulating the practice of the courts, or (2), orders made between parties to an action or suit.

(1) General rules regulating the practice of the Courts, both of common law and equity, have from time to time been made by the courts in pursuance of the powers of various acts of parliament. See as to the common law courts which promulgated consecutive Rules without any division into Orders, Day's Common Law Procedure Acts; and as to the Equity Court, which promulgated Orders subdivided into Rules, Morgan's Chancery Acts and Orders. A large body of Orders subdivided into Rules is appended to the Judicature Act, 1875, the 17th section of which allowed a majority of the judges to alter, annul, or add to them from time to time. The 17th section of the App. Jur. Act, 1876, as amended by the 19th section of the Jud. Act, 1881, delegates this power to a committee of any five or more of eight judges. The Rules made from time to time under the authority of these acts are called 'Rules of the Supreme Court.'

(2) At common law, rules on the plea side of the courts were common, being obtained from the master, without motions by counsel; or special, obtained upon motion by counsel.

Those granted upon motion by counsel might be classed under the following heads: 1st. Those which were granted upon the motion-paper being merely signed by counsel without any motion being actually made in court; 2ndly. Those which were considered so much as a matter of course, that the grounds of the motion were not particularised by counsel, and where, in some instances, counsel might hand the motion-paper to one of the masters, without making the motion viva voce; and, 3rdly. Those which were granted upon the grounds of the motion being particularised by counsel.

The first class of the above rules were absolute in the first instance; the second and third were either absolute in the first instance, or rules to show cause, commonly called rules nisi, which were made absolute after service, unless good cause shown to the contrary.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1577 et seq.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LIII., rr. 2—3, no rule or order to show cause shall be granted in any action except in the cases in which an application for such rule or order is expressly authorised by the rules; and a notice of motion must be given where the motion is not for a rule to show cause or a motion on which, by the old practice, a rule was granted ex parte absolute in the first instance. See further MOTION, NEW TRIAL.

Rules of the Supreme Court, the Rules scheduled to the Judicature Act, 1875, and subsequent Rules amending the same. So called by virtue of the Rules of the Supreme Court, December, 1875.

Rules of the Supreme Court (Costs). The Rules respecting costs made by Order in Council of the 12th of August, 1875. So called by virtue of the Rules of the Supreme Court, December, 1875.

Run (v. n.), to take effect in point of place, as of the Queen's writ in given localities: or in point of time, as of the Statute of Limitations.

Runcaria, land full of brambles and briars.—1 Inst. 5 a.

Runcilus, Runcinus, a load-horse, sumpter-horse, cart-horse.—Cowel.

Rundlet, or Runlet, a measure of wine, oil, etc., containing eighteen gallons and a half.—1 R. III. c. 13; Cowel.

Running days. See LAY DAYS.

Run with the land—Run with the Reversion. A covenant is said to 'run with land' either leased or conveyed in fee when either the liability to perform it, or the right to take advantage of it, passes to the assignee of that land. A covenant is said to run with the reversion to land leased, when either the liability to perform it, or the right to take advantage of it, passes to the assignee of that reversion. Consult Spencer's case and the notes thereto, 1 Sm. L. C. 1, where a list of the covenants so running and not so running is given.

Runrig lands. Lands in Scotland where the ridges of a field belong alternately to different proprietors. Anciently, this kind of possession was advantageous in giving an united interest to tenants to resist inroads. By the Act 1695, c. 23, a division of these lands was authorised, with the exception of lands belonging to corporations.

Rupée, a silver coin, rated at 2s. for the current, and 2s. 3d. for the Bombay, rupee.—Indian.

Rupert's Land Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 105; and see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 101.

Ruptarii, or Ruttarii, soldiers.—Mat. Paris, anno 1199. See Cowel.

Ruptura, arable land, or ground broke up.—Cowel.

Rural deanery, the circuit of an archdeacon's and rural dean's jurisdictions. Every rural deanery is divided into parishes. See 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 117, and DEAN.

Rural deans, very ancient officers of the church, almost grown out of use, until about the middle of the present century, about which time they were generally revived, whose deaneries are as an ecclesiastical division of the diocese or archdeaconry. They are deputies of the bishop, planted all round his diocese, to inspect the conduct of the parochial clergy, to inquire into and report dilapidations, and to examine candidates for confirmation, armed in judicial matters with an inferior degree of judicial and coercive authority.—See further DEAN.

Ruse de guerre [Fr.], a trick in war; a stratagem.

Rustici, churls, clowns, or inferior country tenants, who held cottages and lands by the services of ploughing, and other labours of agriculture, for the lord. The land of such ignoble tenure was called by the Saxons gafalland, as afterwards socage tenure, and was sometimes distinguished by the name of terra rusticorum.—Paroch. Antiq. 136.

Ruta, things extracted from land, as sand, chalk, coal, and such other matters.—Civ. Law.

Rutland, Statute of, 12 Edw. I.

Ryot, a peasant, subject, tenant of house or land.—Indian.

S.

S. P., sine prole, without issue.

Sabbath. See SUNDAY.

Sabbatum, the Sabbath; also peace.—Domesday.

Sabbulonarium, a gravel pit, or liberty to dig gravel and sand; 2, money paid for the same.—Cowel.

Sable, the heraldic term for black. It is called Satum, by those who blazon by planets, and Diamond, by those who use the names of jewels. Engravers commonly represent it by numerous perpendicular and horizontal lines crossing each other.

Sac, the privilege enjoyed by a lord of a manor, of holding courts, trying causes, and imposing fines.—Cowel.

Saca, cause, sake.

Sacaburth, Sacabere, Sakabere, he that is robbed, or by theft deprived of his money or goods, and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suits.—Bracton, lib. 3, c. 32. The Scots term it sikerborgh (that is, securum plegium).—Spelm.

Saccularii, cut-purses.—Roman term, 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 125.

Saccus cum brochiâ, a service or tenure of finding a sack and a broach (pitcher) to the sovereign for the use of the army.—Bract. 1. 2, c. xvi.

Sacquier, an ancient officer, whose business was to load and unload vessels laden with salt, corn, or fish, to prevent the ship's crew defrauding the merchant by false tale, cheating him of his merchandise.—Mar. Law.

Sacrament. Reviling the sacrament is punishable by fine and imprisonment.—1 Edw. VI. c. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 1; 1 Eliz. c. 2.

For a clergyman to refuse without lawful cause to administer the sacrament to a parishioner, is an offence against the laws ecclesiastical, for which he may be proceeded against under the Church Discipline Act.—Jenkins v. Cook, 1 P. D. 80.

Sacramentum, on oath. As to the sacramenti actio of the Civil Law, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., lxii., and Cum. C. L. 313.

Sacramentum si fatuum fuerit, licet falsum, tamen non committit perjurium. 2 Inst. 167.—(A foolish oath, though false, makes not perjury.)

Sacrilege, larceny from a church. See LARCENY (3). Also the alienation of property given to pious uses.—Par. Ant. 390.

Sacrilegus omnium prædonum cupiditatem et scelera superat. 4 Co. 106.—(A sacrilegious person transcends the cupidity and wickedness of all other robbers.)

Sacristan, a sexton, anciently called sagereson, or sagiston; the keeper of things belonging to divine worship.

Sadberge, a denomination of part of the county-palatine of Durham.—Camd. Brit.

Sæmend, an umpire, arbitrator.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Sæpenumero ubi proprietas verborum attenditur sensus veritatis amittitur. 7 Co. 27.—(Many a time where the literal meaning of words is attended to, the true meaning is lost.)
Sæpe viatorem nova, non vetus, orbita fallit. 4 Inst. 34.—(A new road, not an old one, often deceives the traveller.)

Sævitia [Lat.], cruelty. See CRUELTY.

Safe-conduct, convoy; guard through an enemy's country; (2) a document allowing such a journey. It is a prerogative of the Crown to grant safe-conducts.

Safe-guard, a protection of the Crown to one who is a stranger, that fears violence from some of its subjects, for seeking his right by course of law.—Reg. Orig. 26.

Safe-pledge, a surety appointed for one's appearance at a day assigned.—Bract. l. 4.

Sagaman, a tale-teller; secret accuser.

Sagibaro, Sachbaro, a judge.—Leg. Inc. c. vi.

Sailing instructions, written or printed directions, delivered by the commanding officer of a convoy to the several masters of the ships under his care, by which they are enabled to understand and answer his signals, to know the place of rendezvous appointed for the fleet in case of dispersion by storm, by an enemy or otherwise. Without sailing instructions no vessel can have the protection and benefit of convoy.—Mar. Ins. 368.

Sailors' homes. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 546.

Saint Martin le Grand, Court of. A writ of error formerly lay from the sheriff's courts in the city of London to the court of hustings, before the mayor, recorder, and sheriffs; and thence to justices appointed by the royal commission, who used to sit in the church of St. Martin le Grand; and from the judgment of those justices a writ of error lay immediately to the House of Lords.—F. N. B. 32.

Saisie-arret [Fr.], an attachment of property in the possession of a third person.

Saladine Tenth, a tax imposed in England and France, in 1188, by Pope Innocent III., to raise a fund for the crusade undertaken by Richard I. of England and Philip Augustus of France, against Saladin, Sultan of Egypt, then going to besiege Jerusalem. By this tax every person who did not enter himself a crusader was obliged to pay a tenth of his yearly revenue and of the value of all his moveables, except his wearing apparel, books, and arms. The Carthusians, Bernardines, and some other religious persons, were exempt. Gibbon remarks, that when the necessity for this tax no longer existed, the church still clung to it as too lucrative to be abandoned, and thus arose the tithing of ecclesiastical benefices for the Pope or other sovereigns.—Encyc. Lond.

Salary, a recompense or consideration made to a person for his pains and industry in another person's business; also wages, stipend, or annual allowance.—Cowel.

The ancients derive the word from sal, salt (Plin. H. N. xxxi. 42); the most necessary thing to support human life being thus mentioned as a representative of all others, and the word, if thus derived, bears a most striking resemblance in its origin to pin-money (q.v.). Salarium, therefore, comprised all the provisions with which the Roman officers were supplied, as well as their pay in money. In the time of the republic, the name salarium does not appear to have been used; it was Augustus who, in order to place the governors of provinces and other military officers in a greater state of dependence, gave salaries to them, or certain sums of money, to which afterwards various supplies in land were added.—Smith's Dict. of Antiq.

Sale. Blackstone (2 Com. 446) defines it as 'a transmutation of property from one man to another in consideration of some price.' A more modern writer has defined it to be 'a transfer of the absolute or general property in a thing for a price in money' (Benjamin on Sales, 2nd ed., p. 1). See also 2 Kent's Com., 11th ed., 615. To constitute a valid sale there must be (1) parties competent to contract; (2) mutual assent; (3) a thing the absolute or general property in which is transferred from the seller to the buyer; and (4) a price in money paid or promised (Benjamin on Sales, ubi sup.).

As to sales of lands, see Sugden or Dart on Vendors and Purchasers.

All causes and matters for the specific performance of contracts between vendors and purchasers of real estates, are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, as are also all causes and matters for the partition or sale of real estates (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34).

As to the sale of personal property, see Blackburn or Benjamin on Sales.

Sale of Crown waste lands in Australia, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 56.

Sale of settled estates. See SETTLED LAND.

Salic, or Salique [lex salica, Lat.], an ancient and fundamental law of the kingdom of France, usually supposed to have been made by Pharamond, or at least by Clovis, in virtue of which males only are to reign.

It is a popular error to suppose that the Salic law was established purely on account of the succession of the Crown, since it extends to private persons as much as to the royal family.

The Salic law had not in view a preference of one sex to the other, much less had it a regard to the perpetuity of a family, a name, or the succession of land. It was purely a law of economy which gave the house, and the land dependent on the house, to the males who should dwell in it, and to whom it consequently was of more service.

In proof of this, the title of allodial lands of the Salic law may be thus stated:—

(1) If a man die without issue, his father or mother shall succeed him.

(2) If he have neither father nor mother, his brother or sister.

(3) If he have neither brother nor sister, the sister of his mother.

(4) If his mother have no sister, the sister of his father.

(5) If his father have no sister, the nearest relation by the male.

(6) No part of the Salic land shall pass to the females, but it shall belong to the males; the male children shall succeed their father.—Encyc. Lond.; Hallam's Mid. Ages, note 3 to c. ii., p. 278.

Salt Duty in London, a custom in the city of London called grange, formerly payable to the Lord Mayor, etc., for salt brought to the port of London, being the twentieth part.

Salt Silver, one penny paid at the feast day of St. Martin, by the tenants of some manors, as a commutation for the service of carrying their lord's salt from market to his larder.—Paroch. Antiq. 496.

Saltus, glade.

Salus populi est suprema lex. 11 Co. 139. —(The safety of the people is the supreme law.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 1.

Salus reipublice suprema lex.—(The safety of the state is the supreme law.) See preceding maxim.

Salus ubi multi consilarii. 4 Inst. 1.—(Where there are many counsellors, there is safety.)

Salute, a coin made by Henry V., after his conquests in France, whereon the arms of England and France were stamped and quartered.—Stow's Chron. 589.

Salvage, allowance or compensation made to those by whose exertions ships or goods have been saved from the dangers of the seas, fire, pirates, or enemies.

This was allowed by the laws of Rhodes, Oleron, and Wisby; and is by all modern maritime states. At common law, the person who saves goods from loss or imminent peril, has a lien upon them, and may retain them till payment of salvage.

If the salvage be performed at sea, or within high or low water mark, the Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction, and fixes the sum to be paid, adjusts the proportions, and takes care of the property pending the suit; or, if necessary, directs a sale and divides the proceeds between the salvors and the proprietors. In fixing the rate of salvage, the court has regard, not only to the labour and peril of the salvors, but also to the situation in which they stand to the property saved, to the promptitude and alacrity manifested by them, and the value of the ship and cargo, and the danger from which they were rescued. In some cases as much as half of the property saved has been allowed as salvage; in others only a tenth.

The crew of a ship are not entitled to salvage or any unusual remuneration for extraordinary efforts they have made in saving her; it being their duty as well as interest to contribute their utmost upon such occasions, the whole of their possible service being pledged to the master and owners. Neither are passengers entitled to anything for the ordinary assistance they may have afforded a vessel in distress. But a passenger is not bound to remain on board a ship in danger, if he can leave her; and if he performs any extraordinary service, he is entitled to a proportionable recompense. Consult Jones on Salvage, Abbott on Shipping, Maude and Pollock on Shipping, Machlachan on Shipping, etc., and see Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 458—470.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. V., r. 11 (d) (as amended by Rule of Court, Dec. 1875), in an action of distribution of salvage, the affidavit required by that rule to be made in Admiralty actions in rem before the issue of a warrant, must state the amount of salvage money awarded or agreed to be accepted, and the name, address, and description of the party holding the same. See also Williams and Bruce's Admiralty Practice.

Salvage-loss, the difference between the amount of salvage, after deducting the charges, and the original value of the property.

Salvo [salvo jure, Lat.], without prejudice to.

Salvor, a person who renders assistance to a ship or vessel in distress, whereby he becomes entitled to a reward. See SALVAGE.

Sample, a small quantity of a commodity exhibited at public or private sales as a specimen. Where goods are warehoused, certain small specified quantities are, by the regulations at the Custom House, allowed to be taken out as samples, without payment of duty.

Sanitary Acts. See PUBLIC HEALTH.

Sanitary Inspectors, see PUBLIC HEALTH, and the 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, ss. 189—195.

Sancta, reliques of saints, upon which oaths were made.

Sanction of a Law, the provision for enforcing or promoting its observance.

Sanctuary, a place privileged for the safeguard of offenders' lives, being founded on the law of mercy, and the great reverence and devotion which the prince bears to the place whereunto he grants such privilege.—3 Hal-lam's Mid. Ages, c. ix., pt. 1, p. 302.

All privilege of sanctuary, and abjuration consequent thereon, is utterly taken away and abolished.—21 Jac. I. c. 21.

Sand-gavel, a payment due to the lord of the manor of Rodley, in the county of Gloucester, for liberty granted to the tenants to dig sand for their common use.—Cowel.

Sandhurst Vesting Act (the), 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 33.

Sane memory, perfect and sound mind and memory to do any lawful act, etc.

Sang, or Sanc [Old Fr.], blood.

Sanguine, or Murrey, blood-colour, called in the arms of princes Dragon's tail, and in those of lords Sardonyx. It is a tincture of very unfrequent occurrence, and not recognised by some writers. In engraving, it is denoted by numerous lines in saltire.—Heraldic Term.

Sanguinem emere, a redemption by viltains, of their blood or tenure, in order to become freemen.

Sanguis, the right or power which the chief lord of the fee had to judge and determine cases where blood was shed.—Mon. Angl., tom. i. 1021.

Sanis [fr. cravis, Gk.], a kind of punishment among the Greeks; inflicted by binding the malefactor fast to a piece of wood.—Encyc. Lond.

Sanity, sound understanding.

Sans ceo que [Nor.-Fr.] (without this). See ABSQUE HOC.

Sans frais (without expense). See RETOUR SANS PROTET.

Sans nombre, common, a common in gross, which is absolutely unlimited; a common without stint.

Sans recours [Fr.] (without recourse to me), which see.

Saoi [fr. sagol, Sax., a staff], a tip-staff or serjeant-at-arms.

Sapientis judicis est cogitare tantum sibi esse permissum, quantum commissum et creditum.—(It is the part of a wise judge to consider that so much only is permitted to him as is committed and intrusted to him.)

Sarcultura una, a tenant's service of one year's weeding for his lord.—Paroch. Antiq. 403.

Sardin-time, the time or season when husbandmen weed their corn.—Cowel.

Sarkellus, an unlawful net or engine for destroying fish.—Cowel.

Sart, a piece of woodland turned into arable. See ASSART.

Sassons, the corruption of Saxons; a name of contempt formerly given to the English, while they affected to be called Angles; they are still so called by the Welsh.

Satisdare, to guarantee the obligation of a principal.—Civ. Law.

Satisfaction, satisfaction; suretyship.—Civ. Law.

Satisfaction, legal compensation; the recompense for an injury done, or the payment of money due and owing.

The doctrine of satisfaction of legacies, portions, and debts, means the gift of a thing with the intention, either expressed or implied, that it is to be taken either wholly or partly in extinguishment of some prior claim or demand. Of course, it is open to a donor to expressly provide that his subsequent gift shall be a satisfaction of a prior demand, so as to prevent such donee from claiming both. With regard to implied or presumable satisfactions, they have been divided into the three following classes:—

(1) The satisfaction of legacies by portions, otherwise called the ademption of legacies. Upon this subject Lord Eldon laid down in Ex parte Pye (18 Ves. 140) that 'where a parent (or person in loco parentis) gives a legacy to a child, not stating the purpose with reference to which he gives it, the court understands him as giving a portion; and by a sort of artificial rule—upon an artificial notion, and a sort of feeling of what is called a leaning against double portions, if the father (or quasi parent) afterwards advance a portion on the marriage, or preferment in life, of that child, though of less amount, it is a satisfaction of the whole, or in part'; i.e., if the portion be equal to or greater than the legacy it operates as a total ademption of such legacy; but if it be of a lesser amount than the legacy, such portion will then only adeem the legacy pro tanto.

(2) The satisfaction of a portion by a legacy. The rule is, that wherever a legacy given by a parent, or a person standing in loco parentis, is as great as, or greater than, a portion or provision previously secured to the legatee upon marriage or otherwise, then, from the already-quoted inclination of equity against double portions, a presumption arises that the legacy was intended by the testator as a complete satisfaction. When the legacy is not so great as the portion or provision, it is then only a satisfaction pro tanto.—Hinchcliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 516 (1797). The bequest of a whole or part of a residue will, according to its amount, be presumed either a satisfaction of a portion in full or pro tanto.

(3) The satisfaction of a debt by a legacy. If a debtor bequeath to his creditor a sum of money as great as, or greater than, the debt, without taking any notice at all of the debt, this shall be deemed a satisfaction of the debt, so that the creditor cannot have the debt and also the legacy, a doctrine founded upon the maxim, Debitor non præsumitur donare. There is in this class of satisfaction a leaning against, as in the two former classes a leaning in favour of, the presumption. Thus, where the legacy is of lesser amount than the debt, the presumption is that it was not intended to be given in lieu of it, and is, therefore, not considered a satisfaction, even pro tanto. This presumption will also be rebutted where the legacy, though in amount equal to or greater than the debt, is payable at different times, so as not to be equally advantageous to the legatee as the payment of the debt; or where the legacy and debt are of a different nature, either with reference to the subjects themselves, or with respect to the interest given; or where the interest given is of a different nature, or not co-extensive with the debt, or where there is a particular motive assigned for the gift, or where the debt was contracted subsequently to the will, or where the legacy is contingent or uncertain, or if the debt itself be contingent or uncertain, as a debt upon a negotiable bill of exchange.

Satisfaction on the Roll, Entry of. As soon as a judgment is satisfied, by payment, levy, or otherwise, the defendant is entitled to have satisfaction entered upon the roll.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 721 et seq.

Satisfied Terms Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 112. See TERMS FOR YEARS.

Satius est petere fontes quam sectari rivulos. Lofft. 606.—(It is better to seek the source than to follow the streamlets.)

Saturday's stop, a space of time from even-song on Saturday till sun-rising on Monday, in which it was not lawful to take salmon in Scotland and the northern parts of England.—Cowel.

Saunkefin, the determination of the lineal race; a descent of kindred.—Brit. c. cxix.

Saver-de-fault, to excuse.—Termes de la Ley.

Savings Banks, institutions for the safe custody and increase of the small savings of the industrious poor. See Chitty's Statutes, vol. v., tit. 'Savings Banks,' and the Savings Banks Act, 1880, 43 & 44 Vict. c. 36; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 87; and other statutes.

They are either Trustees Savings Banks or Post Office Savings Banks.

Trustees Savings Banks are banks to receive small deposits of money, the produce of which is to accumulate at compound interest, and to be paid out to the depositors as required, deducting the expenses of management. The deposits are not to exceed 30*l.* in any one year, and no fresh deposit is to be received when the sum to which the depositor is entitled amounts to 150*l.*; and where the sum standing in the name of any depositor amounts to 200*l.*, no interest shall be paid on such deposit so long as it remains at that amount. The management is vested in trustees, who are prohibited from receiving any benefit from the banks; and are required to invest the money deposited in the bank of England or Ireland. The moneys invested are to be carried to an account kept in the names of the National Debt Commissioners, and denominated 'The Fund for the Banks for Savings,' which affords interest to the trustees at the rate of 3*l.* per cent. per annum, the arrears of which are to be carried half-yearly to the principal. The interest payable to depositors is limited to 2*l.* 15*s.* per cent., but it accumulates by yearly or half-yearly rests. The trustees are required to send to the office of the Commissioners annual accounts exhibiting the balance due to the depositors, and to affix publicly in the office of the savings bank a duplicate thereof, and a list of the trustees and managers. No deposit is to be received without a disclosure of the name, occupation, and residence of the depositor, who is also, when required by the trustees, to sign a declaration that he is entitled to no benefit from any other bank of the same description; and if such declaration be untrue, he shall forfeit his deposit. In case of the decease of a depositor whose estate does not exceed 50*l.* no legacy duty attaches; and no stamp duty is payable on the probate or administration; and if any person die having a deposit not exceeding 50*l.* exclusive of interest, and no will or letters of administration be produced within one month afterwards, the money may be paid among such persons as shall appear to the trustees or managers to be the widow, or entitled under the statute of distributions. So the trustees may pay upon any deposit by a woman to the woman herself, unless her husband or his representative interfere, and all disputes between the institution at large, and any of its members, are settled by a cheap method of arbitration.

Post-Office Savings Banks (which have the direct security of Government) are established under the provisions of 24 Vict. c. 14, which enacts that the Postmaster-general, with the consent of the Treasury Commissioners, may direct such of his officers as he shall see fit to receive deposits for remittance to the principal office, and repay the same under such regulations as may be prescribed (s. 1). Every such deposit (which may not be of less amount than one shilling, nor of any sum not a multiple thereof) is to be entered in the depositor's book attested by the receiving officer and by the dated stamp of his office, and the amount received is to be reported on the same day to the Postmaster-General; and an acknowledgment is to be transmitted to the depositor, which is to be conclusive evidence of his claim to repayment with interest; but for ten days after the deposit the signature of the receiving officer is sufficient. If within that time the acknowledgment has not been received, written application must be made to the Postmaster-General, the book then becoming evidence for another ten days (s. 2). The depositor is entitled to repayment of the whole or any part of the deposit on making a demand in a prescribed form, at any post office where deposits are received or paid, within ten days at farthest after sending in the demand (s. 3). The names of the depositors, and the amount paid in or withdrawn are not to be disclosed to any one except the Postmaster-General and the officers appointed by him to carry this act into effect (s. 4). This act was amended by 26 Vict. c. 14, which inter alia enacts that money standing in the name of a minor in any savings bank, or in a Post-office savings bank, may, on the application of a parent or friend of the minor, if under the age of seven years, or upon his own application if above that age, be transferred to any other savings bank, but may not be withdrawn without the consent of the Postmaster-General or two of the trustees or managers of the savings bank, until the minor shall have attained the age at which it might have been withdrawn under the rules of the savings bank from which it shall have been transferred. See 29 & 30 Vict. cc. 5 and 43; MILITARY SAVINGS BANK, and NAVAL AND MERCANTILE SAVINGS BANKS.

Savour (v. n.), to partake the nature of; to bear affinity to.

Savoy, one of the old privileged places, or sanctuaries.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 227 n.

Saxon-lage, the law of the West Saxons.

Sayer, that which moves; variable imposts distinct from land, rents, or revenues; consisting of customs, tolls, licenses, duties on goods; also, taxes on houses, shops, bazaars, etc.—Indian.

Scabini, a word used for wardens at Lynn, Norfolk.—Norf. Chart. Hen. VIII.

Scaccarium, a chequered cloth resembling a chess-board which covered the table in the Exchequer, and on which, when certain of the King's accounts were made up, the sums were marked and scored with counters. Hence the Court of Exchequer or curia scaccarii derived its name.—3 Bigden, 44

Scalam [fr. ad scalam, Lat., at the scale], the old way of paying money into the Exchequer.—Cowel.

Scale of Costs. By the Additional Rules made by Order in Council, dated the 12th August, 1875, a new scale of costs for the Supreme Court is provided. There is a higher and a lower scale, which are applicable respectively to the matters specified in Ord. VI. of those rules; but the Court or a judge may in any case direct the fees set forth in either of the two scales to be allowed to all, or either, or any of the parties, and as to all or any part of the costs.

Scandal, a report or rumour, or an action whereby one is affronted in public.

Scandal, in pleadings, is injurious, by making the records of the court the means of perpetuating libellous and malignant slanders; and the court, in aid of the public morals, is bound to interfere to suppress such indecencies.

It is provided by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXVII., r. 1, that the Court or a judge may order to be struck out or amended, any matter in the statements of claim, defence, or reply respectively, which may be scandalous or which may tend to prejudice, embarrass, or delay the fair trial of the action. By Ord. XXXI., r. 5, scandalous or irrelevant interrogatories may be struck out on the application of the party required to answer. See also r. 8.

There was a stone of scandal raised in the great portal of the Capitol of Rome, whereon was engraven the figure of a lion, upon which bankrupts or cessionaries being seated bare-breeched, cried with a loud voice, cedo bonis (I surrender my effects); when squatting their breech violently three times on the stone, they were acquitted. It was called the stone of scandal, because thenceforward the cessionary became intestable and incapable of giving any evidence. Julius Cæsar introduced this form of surrender, after abrogating that article of the laws of the Twelve Tables which allowed creditors to cut their insolvent debtors in pieces, and take each his member, or at least to make a slave of him.—Encyc. Lond.

Scandalous, see last title.

Scandalum magnatum, words spoken in derogation of a peer or judge, or other great officer of the realm. They are held to be particularly heinous, and although they may be such as would not be actionable in the case of a common person, yet when spoken in disgrace of such high and respectable characters, they amount to an atrocious injury, which is redressed by an action on the case, founded on many ancient statutes (e.g., 2 Ric. II. st. 1, c. 5, still unrepealed), as well on behalf of the Crown, to inflict the punishment of imprisonment on the slanderer, as on behalf of the party; to recover damages for the injuries sustained. But this action is now obsolete.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii. 611; iii. 378 n.; Br. & Had. Com. i. 484; iii. 132.

Scavage, Schevage, Schewage, or Shewage, a kind of toll or custom, exacted by mayors, sheriffs, etc., of merchant strangers, for wares showed or offered for sale within their liberties. Prohibited by 19 Hen. VII. c. 7.—Cowel.

Scavidus, the officer who collected the scavage money.—Cowel.

Sceat, a small coin among the Saxons, equal to four farthings.

Sceithman, a pirate or thief.

Sceppa salis, an ancient measure of salt, the quantity of which is now not known.

Schaffa, a scheaf.—Cowel.

Schar-penny, Scharn-penny, or Schorn-penny, a small duty or compensation.—Cowel.

Schedule, a small scroll; a writing additional or appendant; an inventory.

Schetes, usury.—Cowel.

Schilla, a little bell used in monasteries.

Schireman, a sheriff; the ancient name for an earl.

Schirrens-geld [fr. shiregeld, Sax.], a tax paid to sheriffs for keeping the shire or county court.—Cowel.

Schism-bill, the name of an act passed in the reign of Queen Anne, which restrained Protestant dissenters from educating their own children, and forbade all tutors and schoolmasters to be present at any conventicle or dissenting place of worship. The Queen died on the day when this act was to have taken effect (August 1st, 1714), and it was repealed in the fifth year of Geo. I.

School. See EDUCATION; PUBLIC SCHOOLS; REFORMATORY SCHOOLS.

School Attendance Committee, a committee appointed annually (in 'school districts' not within the jurisdiction of a 'school board') in a borough by the town council, and in a parish by the guardians of the union comprising such parish for the purpose of enforcing the Elementary Education Act, 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 79. The principal duties of the committee under that act are: (1) to report to the Education Department any infraction of s. 7 of the Education Act, 1870, as to the conduct in religious education and generally, and as to the inspection of public elementary schools; (2) to proceed against persons employing children under ten; (3) to proceed against parents habitually neglecting to send such children to school; and (4) to make bye-laws respecting the attendance of children at school under s. 7 of the Act of 1870, 'as if such school attendance committee were a school board.'

School Board, a body corporate of persons elected by secret voting under the Ballot Act, 1872, in a borough by the burgesses, and in a parish by the rate-payers (in cases only, except in the metropolis, where there is not in the 'school district' a sufficient amount of accommodation in 'public elementary schools,' or an application is made to the Education Department by the town council of a borough, or the ratepayers of a parish), for the purpose of managing 'public elementary schools' within their respective districts. (Elementary Education Acts, 1870 and 1873, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 75, ss. 10, 12, 14, 29; 36 & 37 Vict. c. 86, s. 5, and sched. 2).

The School Board in the metropolis controls all public elementary schools therein. It is elected triennially.—Act of 1870, s. 37 et seq.

School District, a municipal borough; a parish; the metropolis.—Elementary Education Act, 1870, s. 4, and sched. 1. 'United school districts' may, except in the metropolis, be formed by the Education Department under s. 40 of the Education Act, 1870, and see Ib., s. 44, as to 'contributory districts.'

School, Elementary, a school at which elementary education is a principal part of the education given, and at which the ordinary payments from each scholar do not exceed ninepence a week.—Elementary Education Act, 1870, s. 3.

School, Public Elementary, a school at which elementary education is not obligatory, but inspection by Her Majesty's Inspectors (in secular subjects) is, and which is conducted in accordance with the conditions required to be fulfilled by an 'elementary school in order to obtain an annual parliamentary grant.'—Education Act, 1870, s. 7. Every school provided by a 'school board' must be a 'public elementary school.'

School Sites Acts, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 38; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 37; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 49; and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 24. By 4 & 5 Vict. c. 38, owners may convey not more than one acre to trustees 'as a site for a school for the education of poor persons'; also by the Public Parks, Schools, and Museums Act, 1871 (34 Vict. c. 13), gifts and assurances of land for the purposes of any public park, school, etc., and bequests of personal estate to be applied in the purchase of land for any such purpose, are, subject to certain restrictions, exempted from the operation of the Statutes of Mortmain.

Schools of anatomy, regulated by 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 75, and 34 Vict. c. 16.

Schoolmaster. To an action of trespass for an assault and battery the defendant pleaded that he was the headmaster of a school or college, of which the plaintiff was a pupil, and that the defendant combined with other pupils for purposes subversive to the discipline of the school, and the plea was held good. As to the extent of the powers of a schoolmaster in this respect, see 4 F. & F. 663, in notis.

Science and Art Department. Constituted by Charter. See also 38 & 39 Vict. c. 68.

Scienter [Lat.] (knowingly, wilfully). In an action of deceit, the scienter must be averred and proved. In case of injury to cattle and sheep by dogs, the proof of scienter of ferociousness, necessary at common law (see Cox v. Burbridge, 13 C. B. N. S. 430), is dispensed with by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 60.

Scientia scilorum est mixta ignorantia. 8 Ca. 159.—(The knowledge of smatterers is diluted ignorance.)

Scientia utrinque par pares contrahentes facit. 3 Burr. 1910.—(Equal knowledge on both sides makes the contracting parties equal.)

Scilicet [Lat., abbrev. scil. or sc., i.e., scire licet] (that is to say, to wit).

This is not a direct and separate clause, nor a direct and entire clause, in a conveyance, but intermedia; neither is it a substantive clause of itself, but it is rather to usher in the sentence of another, and to particularize that which was too general before, or distribute that which was too gross, or explain that which was doubtful; and it must neither increase nor diminish the premises nor habendum, for it gives nothing of itself; but it may make a restriction where the precedent words are not so very express but that they may be restrained.—Hob. 171.

Scintilla juris et tituli [Lat.] (a spark of law and title).

A possibility of seisin, which is supposed to exist in the grantee to uses, when all actual seisin is taken from him by the operation of the statute, upon a limitation of springing uses, and the creation of contingent ones.

To illustrate this, let us take a springing use: a grant to A. and his heirs to the use of B. and his heirs, until C. perform an act, and then to the use of C. and his heirs. Here the statute executes the use in B., which, being co-extensive with A.'s seisin, leaves no actual seisin in A. When, however, C. performs the act, B.'s use ceases, and C.'s use springs up, and he enjoys the fee-simple; upon which the question arises, out of what seisin is C.'s use served? It is said to be served out of A.'s original seisin, for upon the cesser of B.'s use it is contended that the original seisin reverted to A. for the purpose of serving C.'s use, and is a possibility of seisin or scintilla juris.

If there must be a seisin somewhere to serve the future uses when they arise, it must be either in the original grantee or feoffee to uses or the cestui que use, but the seisin of the cestui que use cannot serve any other uses, because that would be a use upon a use, which the common law repudiates. There only remains, then, the grantee or feoffee, who is capable of the requisite seisin, which cannot be a vested interest, but is what is known as a scintilla juris.

Again, a feoffment to A. in fee to the use of B. for life, remainder to the use of his first son unborn in tail, with the remainder to the use of C. in fee. What seisin remains in A. until the birth of a son of B.? A. has not an actual seisin during the suspense of the contingency, but there is a possibility of seisin reverting to him, for upon the birth of B.'s son, a seisin co-extensive with the use limited to such son will vest in A. for the purpose of serving it.

This doctrine of scintilla juris has been warmly contested. Lord Coke admitted it (Chudleigh's case, 1 Co., p. 120 a), so did Mr. Booth (see his opinion at the end of Sheppard's Touchstone), Mr. Sanders (1 Uses and Trusts, c. 2, s. 2, p. 107 et seq.), and Mr. Burton (Comp., p. 59, 6th ed.); but Lord Bacon (On Uses, p. 47), Mr. Fearn (Cont. Rem., p. 300), Lord St. Leonards (1 Powers, c. 1, s. 3, and note 10 to Gilb. Uses, p. 296), and Mr. Preston (1 Prest. Est., p. 170, and 1 Hayes' Conv., p. 61), opposed it; and Lord St. Leonards contends that the doctrine never received a regular judicial decision; and see now 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 7.

Scire facias [Lat.] (that you cause to know), a judicial writ, founded upon some record, and requiring the person against whom it is brought to show cause why the party bringing it should not have advantage of such record, or (as in the case of a scire facias to repeal letters-patent), why the record should not be annulled and vacated. It is deemed an action, and in the nature of a new original.

In the following instances this writ is considered as an original proceeding:—

(1) Scire facias to repeal letters-patent, charters, etc. The writ issued out of the common law jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, and was returnable there, and entered in the Petty-Bag Office; or out of the Court of Queen's Bench. When the parties proceeded to issue, the Clerk of the Petty-Bag delivered the record to the Queen's Bench to be tried by a jury or at bar; it was recorded in Chancery after trial and judgment and execution had thereon. If the writ is to repeal a charter, the record is transmitted to the Crown Office of the Queen's Bench, and the cause is tried at the bar of that court. See now CHANCERY, PETTY-BAG.

(2) When special bail become fixed by the recognizance being forfeited, one of the modes of proceeding against them is by scire facias on the recognizance.

(3) Scire facias against the pledges in replevin and the registrar is obsolete, it being the practice to proceed upon the replevin bond against the former, and by an action on the case against the latter, for taking insufficient pledges or no pledges.

In the following instances the writ is, or was, a continuation of an original action.

(1) Upon the marriage of feme parties.

(a) If a feme sole obtain judgment, and marry before execution, a scire facias must be brought by husband and wife, in order to have execution on the judgment; and if, after judgment awarded on this scire facias, but before execution, the wife die, the husband alone may have execution upon the judgment, without even taking out administration.

(b) If judgment be recovered against a feme sole, and she marry before execution, a scire facias must be brought against the husband and wife before the judgment can be executed; and if, after execution awarded upon this scire facias, but before execution, the wife die, the husband shall be liable to the execution.

The Married Women's Property Act, 1882, has probably the effect of rendering this unnecessary. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

(2) On a judgment in debt on bond.

In debt on bond or other instrument in a penal sum, conditioned for the performance of covenants, or for the doing of any other specific act, although the judgment is entered up for the entire penalty, yet execution is sued out for the amount of such damages only as the jury assess upon the breaches aforesaid suggested. The judgment, however, still remains as a security to the plaintiff for such damages as he may sustain by any further breaches; and in case of any such further breaches the plaintiff shall have a scire facias upon the judgment against the defendant, his heirs, etc., suggesting such other breaches, and summoning him or them to show cause why execution should not be awarded upon the judgment, upon which there shall be the like proceedings as were in the action of debt upon the bond.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac.

(3) On a judgment quando acciderint against an executor, etc.

If on a plea of plene administravit (see title PLENE ADMINISTRATIV), in an action against an executor or administrator, or on a plea of riens per descent in an action against an heir, the plaintiff, instead of taking issue on the plea, take judgment of assets quando acciderint; in this case, if assets afterwards come to the hands of the executor or heir, the plaintiff must first sue out a scire facias against such executor or heir, before he can have execution. The writ must state that the assets came to the executor's hands after the judgment; otherwise it would be bad. If assets be found for part, the plaintiff may have judgment to recover so much immediately and the residue of the assets in futuro.—17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, s. 91.

On an abatement of a judgment by lapse of time, death of parties, etc., it is now revived by suggestion or writ of revivor.

All writs of scire facias are tested, directed, and proceeded upon, in like manner as writs of revivor.—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 132; 2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1140 et seq. But see ABATEMENT (5), and REVIVOR, WRIT OF.

In the following instance the writ is, or was, an interlocutory proceeding, and in the nature of process:—

(1) Scire facias ad audiendum errores; abolished, except in case of a change of parties.—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 132.

The following issue after the action is terminated:—

(1) Scire facias quare restitutionem non, for restitution after reversal in error.

(2) Scire facias ad rehavendam terram, to recover lands extended under an elegit.

(3) Scire facias against the sheriff, after returning to a fi. fa. that he has levied the debt, to compel him to pay over the money retained in his hands.

(4) When an outlaw receives the Queen's pardon, he sues out a scire facias requiring the plaintiff to appear and prosecute his action against him. The plaintiff is summoned thereon. Obsolete. See OUTLAWRY.

(5) A scire facias against the representatives of a deceased judge that they certify a bill of exceptions. Obsolete. See BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

(6) Scire facias against members of a public company to obtain execution against them (see Companies Clauses Act, 1845, s. 36), upon judgment signed against their public officer, or other person sued as representing such company or body, or against such company or body itself.

A scire facias was formerly resorted to in Chancery suits, when they became abated; but this mode became superseded in practice by the order of revivor, which see.

Scire facias for the Crown, the summary proceeding by extent is only resorted to when a Crown-debtor is insolvent, or there is good ground for supposing that the debt may be lost by delay. In ordinary cases where a debt or duty appears by record to be owing to the Crown, the process for the Crown is a writ of sci. fa. quare executionem non; but should the defendant become insolvent pending this writ, the Crown may abandon the proceeding and resort to an extent.

Seire feci, the sheriff's return on a seire facias, that he has caused notice to be given to the party against whom the writ was issued.

Seire propriè est rem ratione et per causam cognoscere. Co. Litt. 183; Lofft. 166.—(To know properly, is to know the reason and cause of a thing.)

ScirewYTE, the annual tax, or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assizes or county courts.—Paroch. Antiq. 573.

Scite, or Site [fr. situs, Lat.], the setting or standing on any place; the seat or situation of a capital messuage, or the ground whereon it stands.

SCTm., a common mode of writing Scitum, a decree of the Roman people.

Scold [communis rixatrix, Lat.], a troublesome and angry woman who, by brawling and wrangling amongst her neighbours, breaks the public peace, increases discord, and becomes a public nuisance to the neighbourhood.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 276. See CASTIGATORY.

Sconce, a mulct or fine.

Scot and Lot [fr. sceat, Sax.; part, and lot], a customary contribution laid upon all subjects according to their ability. Whoever were assessed to any contribution, though not by equal portions, were said to pay scot and lot.—Cowel.

Scot and Lot Voters, voters in certain boroughs entitled to the franchise in virtue of their paying this contribution.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 360.

Scotal, or Scotale, an extortionate practice by officers of the forest who kept ale-houses, and compelled the people to drink at their houses for fear of their displeasure. Prohibited by the Charter of the Forest, c. 7.

Scotch Peers, peers of the kingdom of Scotland; of these sixteen are elected by the rest and represent the whole body. They are elected for one parliament only. See 6 Anne c. 23, amended by 10 & 11 Vict. c. 52; 14 & 15 Vict. c. 87; and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 35.

Scotch Judgments. See INFERIOR COURTS, and JUDGMENTS.

Scotch Prisons. The law for their administration is consolidated by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 105. See also 28 & 29 Vict. c. 84; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 50; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 35.

Scotland, united to England by 5 Anne c. 8, May 1st, 1707.

Scotland and Ireland. As to service of writ, 54 Geo. III. c. 56, giving fourteen years by leave of judge, upon a defendant resident in Scotland or Ireland, see R. S. C., Ord. XI., r. 1 a. Process for compelling the attendance of witnesses from Scotland or Ireland before English Courts and vice versa may be issued under 17 & 18 Vict. c. 34. Appeals from Courts in Scotland and Ireland are heard by the House of Lords under s. 3 of the App. Jur. Act, 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 59, as before that act.

The removal of Scotch and Irish poor from England to Scotland or Ireland is regulated by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 33 (Scotland); 24 & 25 Vict. c. 76 (Ireland); 25 & 26 Vict. c. 113, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89 (Ireland).

Scots, assessments by commissioners of sewers.

Scottare, to pay scot, tax, or customary dues.—Cowel.

Scottish Episcopal Clergy. See CLERGY; EPISCOPALIAN.

Scottish Universities. The 21 & 22 Vict. c. 83, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 24, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 28, provide for the better government and discipline of the Scottish Universities.

Scribere est agere. 2 Roll. R. 89.—(Writing is equivalent to doing.) In treason, for example, if treasonable words to be set down in writing, this writing, as arguing more deliberate intention, has been held to be an overt act of treason. See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 312.

Scrip, a certificate or schedule; also evidence of the right to obtain shares in a public company, sometimes called 'scrip-certificate,' to distinguish it from the real title to shares.

Script, a writing; the original or principal document.

Scriptæ obligationes scriptis tolluntur, et nudi consensûs obligatio, contrario consensu dissolvitur. Jur. Civ.—(Written obligations are superseded by writings, and an obligation of naked assent is dissolved by assent to the contrary.)

Scripture. The canonical books of the Old and New Testament. All profane scoffing of the Holy Scripture, or exposing any part thereof to contempt and ridicule, is punishable by fine and imprisonment (Roscoe on Criminal Evidence, 8th ed., p. 666), and by 9 & 10 Wm. III. c. 32, a conviction of a person educated in the Christian religion of having by writing or advised speaking denied the divine authority of Scripture entails disqualification for any office ecclesiastical, civil, or military. See Cowan v. Milburn, L. R. 2 Ex. 230.

Scriptures, Copyright in, provided for by 54 Geo. III. c. 56, giving fourteen years certain, with an additional fourteen years, if the proprietor be then alive, and have not assigned his property. See also 13 & 14 Vict. c. 104; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 70; and COPYRIGHT.

Scrivener [fr. scrivano, Ital.; escrivain, Fr.], one who draws contracts; one whose business is to place out money at interest, receiving a bonus or commission for his trouble.

When a solicitor is the general depositary of money of his client and other persons who employ him, not simply in his character of solicitor, but as a money agent, to invest their money on securities at his discretion, allowing him procuration fees for any sum laid out on bond or mortgage, as well as a fee or charge for preparing the deeds, such a course of dealing is substantially the business of a scrivener.—1 Holt, 507; 3 Camp. 539.

Scroll, a mark which supplies the place of a seal.

Scroop's Inn, an obsolete law society, also called Serjeants' Place, opposite to St. Andrew's Church, Holborn, London.

Scutage, a tax or contribution raised by those that held lands by knight's service, towards furnishing the king's army, at the rate of one, two, or three marks for every knight's fee.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., i. 201; ii. 556, 557.

Scutagio habendo, a writ that anciently lay against tenants by knight's service to serve in the wars, or send sufficient persons, or pay a certain sum.—F. N. B. 83.

Scute, an ancient French gold coin of the value of 3s. 4d.

Scutella, a scuttle; anything of a flat or broad shape like a shield.—Cowel.

Scutella eleemosynaria, an alms-basket.

Scutum armorum, a shield or coat of arms.—Cowel.

Scyldwit, a mulct for any fault.

Scyra, a fine imposed upon such as neglected to attend the scyre-gemot courts, which all tenants were bound to do.

Scyre-gemot, or Sciremot, a court held by the Saxons twice every year; by the bishop of the diocese and the ealdorman in shires that had ealdormen; and by the bishop and the sheriff where the counties were committed to the sheriff, etc., wherein both the ecclesiastical and temporal laws were given in charge to the county.—Seld. Titles Hon. 628.

Sea: the main or high seas are part of the realm of England, for thereon the courts of Admiralty have jurisdiction, but they are not subject to the common law. The main sea begins at the low water-mark, but between the high water-mark and the low water-mark, where the sea ebbs and flows, the common law and Admiralty have divisum imperium, an alternate jurisdiction; the one upon the water when it is full sea; the other upon the land when it is an ebb. The jurisdiction of the Admiralty within three miles of the low water-mark will be found elaborately discussed in Reg. v. Keyn, 2 Ex. D. 63; 46 L. J. M. C. 17. In that case it was held by a majority of seven judges to six, that the Central Criminal Court had no jurisdiction to try for manslaughter the foreign captain of a foreign ship,—the Franconia,—which in passing within three miles of the British shore, ran into a British ship and sank her; but this state of the law was soon afterwards altered by the Territorial Waters Jurisdiction Act, 1878, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 73. Section 2 of that Act enacts that any offence committed by a person, whether a British subject or not, within one marine league of the coast, 'although it may have been committed on board or by means of a foreign ship,' is an offence within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty.

Sea-batteries, assaults by masters in the merchant service upon seamen at sea.

Sea Birds Preservation Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 17.

Sea Fisheries Acts, 1868, 1875, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 45; 38 Vict. c. 15.

Sea-greens, grounds overflowed by the sea in spring-tides.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Sea-laws, laws relating to the sea, as the laws of Oleron, etc.

Sea-letter, or Sea-brief, a document expected to be found on board of every neutral ship. It specifies the nature and quantity of the cargo, the place whence it comes, and its destination. See Arnould on Mar. Ins., 4th ed., 569.

Sea Marks. See BEACON.

Seal, wax or wafer with an impression.

Seal, motion-day in the Court of Chancery, so called because every motion had to be stamped with the seal, which did not lie in Court in the ordinary sittings out of term; and was therefore specially brought in on days, when motions were taken, called Seal-days. See GREAT SEAL; PRIVY SEAL.

Sealer [fr. sigillator, Lat.], an officer in Chancery who sealed writs and instruments. The offices of sealer and deputy-sealer are abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 23.

Seal Fishery Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 18. By this Act, provision is made to enable a close time to be established by Order in Council for the seal fishery in the seas adjacent to the eastern coasts of Greenland. The area to which the Act applies is specified in a Schedule to the Act.

Seal-paper, a document issued by the Lord Chancellor, previously to the commencement of the sittings, detailing the business to be done for each day in his court, and in the courts of the Lords Justices and Vice-Chancellors. The Master of the Rolls in like manner issued a seal-paper in respect of the business to be heard before him.—Smi. Ch. Pr. 9.

Seamen, persons engaged in navigating ships, barges, etc., upon the high seas. Those employed for this purpose upon rivers, lakes, or canals, are denominated watermen. A British seaman must be a natural-born subject, or be naturalised, or made a denizen, or have become a British subject by the conquest or cession of some newly-acquired territory; or (being a foreigner) have served on board Her Majesty's ships of war, in time of war, for the space of three years. But the Queen may by proclamation, during war, declare that foreigners who have served two years in the royal navy, during such war, shall be deemed British seamen.

Regulations have been enacted with respect to seamen, which differ in different countries; but in all they have been intended to obviate disputes between master and seamen as to the terms of the contract, to secure obedience to orders, and to interest the seamen in the voyage, by making their earnings depend on its termination. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 146 et seq. The statute law does not render a verbal agreement for wages void; but imposes a penalty on the master if a written agreement be not made. When a written agreement is made, it becomes the only evidence of the contract; and a seaman cannot recover anything agreed to be given, which is not specified in the articles. A seaman who is engaged to serve on board a ship is bound to exert himself to the utmost in the service of the ship; and; therefore, a promise made by the master of a ship in distress to pay an extra sum to a seaman, as an inducement to extraordinary exertion on his part, is held to be void. Neglect of duty, disobedience of orders, habitual drunkenness, or any cause which will justify the master in discharging a seaman, during a voyage, will also deprive the seaman of his wages. See REGISTER—GENERAL OF SEAMEN, and Maude and Pollock, or MacLachlan, on Shipping; also Chitty's Statutes, vol. vi., tit. 'Shipping.'

Seamen's will. See WILLS.

Séance [Fr.], session, as of some public body.

Searcher, an officer of the customs, whose business it is to examine ships outward-bound, in order to ascertain if they have any prohibited or unaccustomed goods on board, etc.

Searches, seekings in registries for entries. Official certificates of the result of certain official searches for entries of judgments are to be granted by the proper officer upon requisition duly made, and such certificates are conclusive in favour of a purchaser.—Conveyancing Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 39, s. 2.

Search warrant, an authority requiring the officer to whom it is addressed to search a house or other place therein specified, for stolen property therein reasonably suspected to be.—Larceny Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 103.

Sea-reeve, an officer in maritime towns and places, who takes care of the maritime rights of the lord of the manor, watches the shore, and collects the wreck.

Sea rovers, pirates and robbers at sea.

Seas, Beyond, at common law, not being in Great Britain: by statute, 19 and 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 12, with reference to the operation of certain statutes of limitation (see LIMITATION) not being in Great Britain, or Ireland, or the Channel Islands, or Isle of Man.

The statutes of limitation extend the period of limitation for cases of absence beyond seas; but this extension is almost wholly abolished by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 10, and as respects actions to recover real property, by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 57, s. 4.

Seashore, the space of land between high and low water-mark. See 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 116, 452.

Seaworthy, a term applied to a ship, indicating that she is, in every respect, fit for her voyage. It is provided in all charter-parties that the vessels chartered shall be tight, staunch, and strong, well appareled, furnished with an adequate number of mariners, sufficient tackle, provisions, etc. If the ship be insufficient in any of these particulars, the owners, though ignorant of the circumstance, will be liable for whatever damage may in consequence be done to the goods of the merchant, and if any insurance have been effected upon her, it will be void. In a voyage policy a warranty of seaworthiness is implied, but not in a time policy.—Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 2 App. Cas. 284.

Seck, a warrant of remedy by distress.—Litt. s. 218. Also, barren or profitless. See RENT SECK.

Secondary, an officer who is next to the chief officer.—2 Lill. Abr. 506. Also an officer of the Corporation of London, before whom inquiries to assess damages are held, as before sheriffs in counties. See INQUIRY.

Secondary conveyances, those which presuppose some other conveyance precedent, and only serve to confirm, alter, retain, restore, or transfer the interest granted by the original conveyance. They are otherwise called derivative, and are :—(a) Releases; (β) Confirmations; (γ) Surrenders; (δ) Assignments; and (ε) Defeasances.

Secondary evidence, that species of proof which is admitted on the loss of primary evidence. There are no degrees of this evidence. For example, if a letter be lost it is as good to recite it from memory as to produce a copy. It is the province of the Judge to decide whether a document produced be original or no, and until he decide it is not, no secondary evidence can be put in. See NOTICE TO ADMIT; NOTICE TO PRODUCE; HEARSAY.

Secondary use, a use limited to take effect in derogation of a preceding estate; otherwise called a shifting use, as a conveyance to the use of A. and his heirs, with a proviso that when B. returns from India, then to the use of C. and his heirs.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 546.

Second deliverance, Writ of, a judicial writ that lies, after a nonsuit of the plaintiff in replevin, and a retorno habendo of the cattle replevied, adjudged to him that distrained them, commanding the sheriff to replevy the same cattle again, upon security given by the plaintiff in the replevin for the re-delivery of them if the distress be justified. It is a second writ of replevin, and is practically obsolete.—F. N. B. 68.

Second distress. By 17 Car. II. c. 7, s. 4, in all cases where the value of the cattle distrained were not found to be of the full value of the arrears distrained for, the party to whom such arrears are due, might distrain again for the said arrears. The whole of this Act is repealed by the Statute Law Revision, etc., Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 59.

The Act did not apply to cases where there was enough which might have been taken upon the first, if the distrainer had then thought proper; such a second distress could never be justified, and was illegal; 'for a man who has an entire duty, as rent, for example, shall not split the entire sum, and distrain for one part of it at one time, and for the other part of it at another time, and so toties quoties for several times, for that would be great oppression.'

Second surcharge, Writ of. If after admeasurement of common, upon a writ of admeasurement of pasture, the same defendant surcharges the common again, the plaintiff may have this writ of second surcharge de secundâ superoneratione, which is given by the stat. West. 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 8.

Seconds, assistants at a duel.

Secretaries of State, cabinet ministers attending the sovereign for the receipt and despatch of letters, grants, petitions, and many of the most important affairs of the kingdom, both foreign and domestic. There are five principal secretaries, one for the home department, another for foreign affairs, a third for the colonies, a fourth for war (26 & 27 Vict. c. 12), and a fifth for India (21 & 22 Vict. c. 106). These have under their management the most considerable affairs of the nation, and are obliged to a constant attendance on the Sovereign; they receive and despatch whatever comes to their hands, be it for the Crown, the Church, the army, private grants, pardons, dispensations, etc., as likewise petitions to the Crown, which, when read, are returned to the secretaries for answer; all which they despatch according to the Sovereign's command and direction. Each of them has two under-secretaries, and one or more chief clerks, besides a number of other clerks and officers, wholly depending on them. The Secretaries of State have power to commit for treason and other offences against the State. Some say this power is incident to their office, and others that they derive it in virtue of being named in the commissions of the peace for every county in England and Wales. They have the custody of the signet, and the direction of the signet office and the paper office. Ireland is under the direction of a chief secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant, who has under him a resident under-secretary.

—Encyc. Lond. See also 27 & 28 Vict. c. 34.

Secretary, one intrusted with the management of business; one who writes for another; an officer attached to a public establishment.

Secretary of Decrees and Injunctions, an officer of Chancery. The office was abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 23.

Secta [fr. sequendo, Lat.], the witnesses or followers of a plaintiff.

Secta ad curiam, a writ that lay against him who refused to perform his suit either to the county court or the court-baron.—Cowel.

Secta ad furnum, suit to a public oven, or bakehouse. Abolished.

Secta ad justiciam faciendam, a service which a man is bound to perform by his fee.—Bract.

Secta ad molendinum, a writ that lay where a man, by usage, had ground his corn at the mill of a certain person, and afterwards went to another mill with his corn, hereby withdrawing his suit to the former.—F. N. B. 123. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27, s. 36.

Secta ad torrale, suit to a kiln or malt-house. Abolished.

Secta curiæ, suit and service done by tenants at the lord's court.—Cowel.

Secta est pugna civilis; sicut actores armantur actionibus, et quasi gladiis accinguntur ita rei muniantur exceptionibus et defenduntur quasi clypeis. Hob. 20.—(A suit is a civil warfare; for as the plaintiffs are armed with actions and as it were girded with swords, so the defendants are fortified with pleas, and are defended as it were by shields.

Sectâ faciendâ per illam quæ habet eniciam partem, a writ to compel the heir, who has the elder's part of the co-heirs, to perform suit and services for all the coparceners.—Reg. Orig. 177.

Secta non faciendis, a writ for a woman, who, for her dower, ought not to perform suit of court.—Reg. Orig. 174.

Secta quæ scripto nititur à scripto variari non debet. Jenk. Cent. 65.—(A suit which is based upon a writing ought not to vary from the writing.)

Secta regalis, a suit or service by which all persons were bound twice in a year to attend the sheriff's tourn.

Sectâ unicâ tantum faciendâ pro pluribus hæreditatibus, a writ for an heir who was distrained by the lord to do more suits than one, that he should be allowed to do one suit only in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him.—Covel.

Sectatores, suitors of court who, amongst the Saxons, gave their judgment or verdict in civil suits upon the matter of fact and law.—1 Reeve's Hist. Eng. Law, 22.

Sectares, bidders at an auction.—Civ. Law.

Secular, not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world (in seculo).

Secular clergy, parochial clergy who perform their ministry in seculo; and were contradistinguished from the regular clergy. See REGULAR CLERGY.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., 681 n.

Secundâ superoneratione pasturæ. See SECOND SURCHARGE, WRIT OF.

Secundum naturam est, commodum cuiusque rei eum sequi, quem sequuntur incommoda. D. 50, 17, 10.—(It is natural that the advantages of anything should follow him whom the disadvantages follow.)

Secundum subjectam materiam, with reference to the subject matter. The meaning of a word or phrase often depends on the subject about which it is used; for instance, the word layman (q. v.), if it be used in a conversation concerning the church, means one who is not a clergyman; if it be used in a conversation about the law, it means one who is not a lawyer.

Sectares, bidders at an auction.—Civ. Law.

Secundum statutum. See APPEARANCE SEC. STAT.

Securitatem inveniendi, etc., an ancient writ, lying for the sovereign, against any of his subjects, to stay them from going out of the kingdom to foreign parts; the ground whereof is, that every man is bound to serve and defend the commonwealth as the Crown shall think fit.—F. N. B. 115.

Securitatis pacis, a writ that lay for one who was threatened with death or bodily harm by another, against him who so threatened.—Reg. Orig. 88.

Security for costs. At common law, if a plaintiff, whether suing in an individual or a representative capacity, and whether for his own benefit or that of another, resided abroad, or even in Ireland or Scotland (but see now infra), the Court or a judge, upon application, would stay the proceedings until he gave security for costs, and this although the defendant had no defence on the merits.

In Chancery, security for costs could be obtained under similar circumstances. If it appeared by the bill that the plaintiff was abroad, the application was either by motion or petition as of course; but, otherwise it must have been made upon notice of motion, supported by an affidavit of the facts. The application should have been made as soon as the defendant was aware of the plaintiff's absence; for should he take another step in the suit, after knowing it, he waived all right to security. A bond was given to a clerk of records and writs in the penal sum of 100*l.*—Smi. Ch. Pr. 772.

The Rules under the Judicature Acts make no change with reference to the subject of security for costs.

If a second action of ejectment for the same premises be brought, proceedings will be stayed until security be given.—C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 93.

Since the passing of the Judgments Extension Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 54), a plaintiff residing in Scotland or Ireland is no longer required to find security for costs. See Raeburn v. Andrews, L. R. 9, Q. B. 118, and 43 L. J. Q. B. 73.

Security for good behaviour or abearance. See KEEPING THE PEACE.

Security for keeping the peace. See KEEPING THE PEACE.

Security of the Crown. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 167.

Secus [Lat.], contrariwise.

Se defendendo, Homicide, excusable manslaughter in defence of one's own life, when attacked and put in jeopardy.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 54.

Sede plenâ, when a bishop's see is not vacant.

Sederunt, Acts of, ordinances of the Court of Session in Scotland, made originally under authority of the statute, 1540, c. 93, by which authority is given to the Court to make such regulations as may be necessary for the ordering of processes and the expediting of justice. A quorum of nine judges is necessary.—48 Geo. III. c. 151, s. 11. Various modern acts give the court power to pass such acts, which may be said to be equivalent to the Regule Generales of the English courts.

Sedition, an offence against the Crown and government, not capital, and not amounting to treason. All contempts against the sovereign and the government, and riotous assemblies for political purposes, may be ranked under the head of sedition. See 39 Geo. III. c. 79; 57 Geo. III. c. 19; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 33; and 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 168, 197.

Seditious libel. See 60 Geo. III. & 1 Geo. IV. c. 8; and 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 259.

Seducing to leave service, an injury for which a master may have an action on the case. See STATUTE OF LABOURERS.

Seduction. An action of seduction may be brought by a parent or person standing in loco parentis for the debauching of his daughter, and getting her with child; per quod servitium amisit. A master also, not standing in the relation of a parent, may maintain this action for debauching his servant. The woman herself has no right of action. In ascertaining the amount of damages, a jury should regard not merely the injury sustained by the loss of service, but also the wounded feeling of the parent or person standing in loco parentis.

See [fr. sedes, Lat.], the diocese of a bishop.

Seeds Adulteration Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 112.

Seignior, or Seigneur, a lord of a fee or manor.

Seignior in gross, a lord without a manor, simply enjoying superiority and services.

Seigniorage, a royalty or prerogative of the Crown, whereby an allowance of gold and silver, brought in the mass to be exchanged for coin, is claimed.

Seignior, a manor or lordship.

Seised. See TENURE.

Seisin, possession.

There is a seisin in deed, as when an actual possession is taken; or in law, where lands descend, and one has not actually entered upon them.

Seisin, Livery of, delivery of possession, called by the Feudists investiture.

Seisina facit stipitem. Wright's Ten. 185. —(Seisin makes the heir.) But see now 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, and Broom's Legal Maxims, 5th ed., 525.

Seisinâ habendâ, etc., a writ for delivery of seisin to the lord, of lands and tenements, after the sovereign, in right of his prerogative, had had the year, day, and waste on a felony committed, etc.—Reg. Orig. 165.

Seizing of heriots, taking the best beast, etc., where an heriot is due, on the death of the tenant. It is a species of self-remedy, not much unlike that of taking goods or cattle in distress; but, in the latter case, they are seized as a pledge, in the former, as the property of the person for whom seized.

Seizure of goods for offences. No goods of a felon or other offender can be taken to the use of the Crown before they are forfeited. There are two kinds of seizure: (1) verbal, to take an inventory, and charge the town or place where the owner is indicted for the offence; and (2) actual, which is taking them away after conviction.—3 Inst. 103. Forfeiture for treason or felony has now been abolished by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23.

Sel, denotes the bigness of a thing to which it is added, as Selwood, a big wood.

Selda [fr. selde, Sax., a seat], a shop, shed, or stall in a market; a wood of willows or willows; also a saw pit.—Co. Litt. 4.

Select Vestry Act, called also Sturges Bourne's Act, 59 Geo. III. c. 12.

Selecti iudices, Roman judges returned by the prætor, drawn by lot, and subject to be challenged and sworn like our juries.—3 Bl. Com. 366.

Self-defence. Both the life and limbs of a man are of such high value, in the estimation of the law of England, that it pardons even homicide, if committed se defendendo, or in order to preserve them. See DEFENCE, HOMICIDE.

Self-murder, or Self-slaughter. See FELO DE SE.

Selion of land, a ridge of ground rising between two furrows, containing no certain quantity, but sometimes more and sometimes less.—Termes de la Ley.

Semble [abbrev. semb. or sem., Fr.] (it seems). Used in reports to show that a point is not decided directly, but may be inferred from the decision.

Semestria, the collected decisions of the emperors in their councils.—Civ. Law.

Seminaufragium, half shipwreck, as where goods are cast overboard in a storm; also, where a ship has been so much damaged that her repair costs more than her worth.

Semi-plena probatio, a semi-proof; the testimony of one person, upon which the civilians would not allow any sentence to be founded.

Semper in dubiis benigniora præferenda.—(In doubtful matters the more liberal construction is to be preferred.)

Semper in obscuris, quod minimum est sequimur. D. 50, 17, 9.—(In obscure constructions we always apply that which is least obscure.) See per Maule, J., in Williams v. Crosling, 3 C. B. 962.

Semper ita fiat relatio ut valet dispositio. 6 Co. 76.—(Let the reference always be so made that the disposition may avail.)

Semper præsumitur pro legitimatione puero rum; et filiatio non potest probari. Co. Litt. 126 a.—(The presumption is always in favour of the legitimacy of children, and filiation cannot be proved.)

Semper præsumitur pro matrimonio. (The presumption is always in favour of the validity of a marriage.)

Semper præsumitur pro negante. (The presumption is always in favour of the negative.) See 10 Cl. & Fin. 534. On an equal division of votes in the House of Lords the question passes in the negative.

Semper præsumitur pro sententiâ. 3 Buls. 42.—(Presumption is always for the sentence.)

Semper specialia generalibus insunt. D. 50, 17, 147.—(Generalities include specialities.)

Sen, justice.—Co. Litt. 61 a.

Senage, money paid for synodals.

Senators of the College of Justice. The judges of the Court of Session in Scotland are called Senators of the College of Justice.—Act, 1540, c. 93.

Senatus consulta (ordinances of the senate), public acts among the Romans, which regarded the whole community.—Sand. Just., 5th ed., xxiv. 9.

Senatus decreta (decisions of the senate), private acts, which concerned particular persons or personal matters.—Civ. Law.

Seneschal [sein, Germ., a house; and schale, an office], a steward; also one who has the dispensing of justice.—Co. Litt. 61 a; Kitch. 13; Croke's Jurisd. 102.

Seneschallo et marshallo quod non teneat placita de libero tenemento, a writ addressed to the steward and marshal of England, inhibiting them to take cognizance of an action in their court that concerns freehold.—Reg. Orig. 185. Abolished.

Seneucia, widowhood.—Cowel.

Seney-days, play-days, or times of pleasure and diversion.—Cowel.

Sensu honesto, to interpret words sensu honesto is to take them so as not to impute impropriety to the persons concerned.

Sensus verborum est anima legis. 5 Co. 2.—(The meaning of the words is the spirit of the law.)

Sensus verborum ex causâ dicendi accipiendus est: et sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam. 4 Co. 14.—(The sense of words is to be judged of with reference to the cause of their being spoken; and discourses are always to be interpreted according to the subject-matter.)

Sensus verborum est duplex, mitis et asper et verba semper accipienda sunt in mitiore sensu. 4 Co. 13.—(The meaning of words is twofold, mild and harsh; and words are to be received in their milder sense.)

Sentence of a Court, a definite judgment pronounced in a cause or criminal proceeding. The sentence of a court may be dispensed with in two ways: by the pardon of the Crown; and by a finding of insanity under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 29. See ASYLUM.

Sentence of death recorded. This being entered on the record, has the same effect as if it had been pronounced and the offender reprieved. It is now disused.

Sententia contra matrimonium nunquam transit in rem judicatam. 7 Co. 43.—(A sentence against marriage never becomes a matter finally adjudged, i.e., res judicata.)

Sententia facit jus, et legis interpretatio legis vim obtinet. Ellesm. Postn. 55.—(Judgment creates right, and the interpretation of the law has the force of law.)

Sententia facit jus, et res judicata pro veritate accipitur. Ellesm. Postn. 55.—(Judgment creates right, and what is adjudicated is taken for truth.)

Sententia interlocutoria revocari potest, definitiva non potest. Bacon; Max. Reg. 20.—(An interlocutory judgment may be recalled, but not a final.)

Sententia non fertur de rebus non liquidis et oportet quod certa res deducatur in judicium. Jenk. Cent. 7.—Judgment is not given on things not liquidated; and things ought to be certain which are brought into court.)

Separaliter [Lat.] (separatively or distributively).

Separate estate. The common law did not allow a married woman to possess any property independently of her husband, but when property was settled to her separate use and benefit, equity treated her, in respect to that property, as a feme sole, or unmarried woman. (See Tullet v. Armstrong, 1 Beav. 1.) A wife's separate property might be acquired by a pre-nuptial contract with her husband, or by gift, either from the husband, or from any other person. The Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (see MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY), has almost abolished the common law distinction between married and unmarried women in respect of property, and provides that 'every contract entered into by a married woman shall be deemed to be a contract entered into by her with respect to and to bind her separate property, unless the contrary be shown.' But marriage and other settlements prior to that Act frequently contain, and, though made after that act, may still contain (see s. 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882) restrictions against the 'anticipation' of her settled property by a married woman. These restrictions are perfectly valid, but they are subject to the important relaxation, under s. 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, that the Chancery Division of the High Court may, if it thinks fit, where it appears to the Court for the benefit of a married woman, bind her interest in any property, with her consent, notwithstanding that she is restrained from anticipation.

Separation. If a husband and wife cannot agree so as to carry out the purpose of their union—mutual love and respect—they may resolve to live apart. A deed of separation, containing the terms and conditions upon which an actual and immediate separation is to be arranged, will be valid, so far as relates to the trusts and covenants of the husband, and his indemnity by the trustees for the wife; but if it contemplate a contingent or future separation, it is void, as opposed to the policy of marriage, and the well-being of the community.

The trustees usually covenant with the husband, to indemnify him against any debts which the wife may incur during the separation, whereupon the husband covenants to provide a given maintenance for the wife, which will secure the deed from being upset by his creditors or subsequent purchasers for value, the trustees' indemnity being a valuable and binding consideration validating the settlement. The absence of this indemnity renders the deed void as against creditors and subsequent purchasers; unless the consideration be the relinquishment by the wife of her alimony, or the compromise of a suit by the wife, either of which would be valuable and binding.

A mere agreement for a separation will not be specifically enforced in equity by a decree establishing it personally, whether the covenants be or be not binding on the husband and trustees; for the effect of the decree would be to make them binding on the wife, and to make married people to effect, at their pleasure, a partial dissolution of their solemn contract.

If after the separation, the husband and wife will be reconciled, and live together again, that circumstance will put an end to the agreement, and determine the separate allowance.

See further HUSBAND AND WIFE, and JUDICIAL SEPARATION.

Separation of benefices, etc. See 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 37; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 94; and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104.

Separatists, seceders from the church. They, like Quakers, solemnly affirm, instead of taking the usual oath, before they give evidence. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 82; and AFFIRMATION.

Separia, several or severed and divided from other ground—Paroch. Antiq. 336.

Sepoy, or Sipoy [fr. sip., Hind., a bow and arrow], a native Indian soldier.

Septennial Act, 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 38. The Act by which a parliament has continuance for seven years and no longer unless sooner dissolved,—as it always has, in fact, been since the passing of the Act.

Septuagesima, the third Sunday before Quadragesima Sunday in Lent, being about the 70th day before Easter.

Septum, an enclosure; any place pales in.—Cowel.

Sepultura, an offering to the priest, for the burial of a dead body.

Sequamur vestigia patrum nostrorum. Jenk. Cent.—(Let us follow the footsteps of our fathers.)

Sequatur sub suo periculo, a writ that lay where a summons ad warrantizandum was awarded, and the sheriff returned that he had nothing whereby he might be summoned: then issued an alias and a pluries, and if he came not in on the pluries, this writ issued.—O. N. B. 163.

Sequela causæ, the process and depending issue of a cause for trial.—Cowel.

Sequela curiæ, suit of court.—Cowel.

Sequela molendina. See SECTA AD MOLENDINUM.

Sequela villanorum, the family retinue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villeins, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord.—Paroch. Antiq. 216.

Sequels, small allowances of meal, or manufactured victual made to the servants at a mill where corn was ground, by tenure, in Scotland. See THIRLAGE.

Sequendum et prosequendum, to follow and prosecute a cause.

Sequester, to renounce; to set aside from the use of the owners.

Sequestrari facias de bonis ecclesiasticis, Writ of, a process of execution issued against a beneficed clerk, commanding the bishop to enter into the rectory and parish church, and to take and sequester the same, and hold them until, of the rents, tithes, and profits thereof, and of the other ecclesiastical goods of the defendant, he has levied the plaintiff's debt. It is in the nature of a levari facias.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1284. A similar writ issued out of Chancery, directed to the bishop of the diocese in which the rectory or vicarage of a beneficed clerk is situate, commanding him to enter into and hold the benefice and sequester until he has levied, etc., the sum which the beneficed clerk has been ordered to pay. Before this writ can be issued, the person to whom such money is to be paid must have sued out a writ of feri facias or elegit, and the sheriff must have returned that the person against whom such writ issued is a beneficed clerk, and has no goods or chattels in his bailiwick, and the writ and return must have been filed.—Consol. Ord. 1860, xxix., r. 11.

The Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XLIII., r. 2, provides that this writ may be issued and executed in the same cases and in the same manner as theretofore. For the form of this writ, see Appendix F., No. 6, to that act.

The 34 & 35 Vict. c. 45, provides that on sequestration, the bishop of the diocese shall appoint a curate and assign a stipend, as defined in the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 44.

Sequestratio, the separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both the parties that contend for it; it is twofold—voluntary, done by consent of all parties; and necessary, when a judge orders it.—Civil Law.

Sequestration. This is a prerogative process (formerly confined to the Court of Chancery, and the Courts of Probate and Divorce), addressed to certain commissioners, empowering them to enter upon real estates, and sequester the rents, and upon the goods, chattels, and personal estate of a person in contempt for disobedience of a decree or order, and keep the same until the defendant clear his contempt. It has no return, and is granted upon a return of non est inventus by the serjeant-at-arms, or by a sheriff on an attachment.—Consol. Ord. 1860, xxix., r. 3; 1 Eq. Rep. 261. As against peers, members of parliament, and corporations, the sequestration is nisi only in the first instance. The sequestrators are officers of the court, and amenable thereto, and act from time to time in the execution of their office as the court directs; they account for what comes to their hands, and bring the money into court to be put out at interest, etc.; this money is not paid to the plaintiff, but remains in court till the defendant has appeared or answered and cleared his contempt, and then whatever has been seized is accounted for and paid over to him; the court, however, may act as is most agreeable to the equity of the case.—Smi. Ch. Pr., 121, and Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., 908. See Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XLVII., and Ord. XLII., rr. 2 and 4. See further EXECUTION.

Sequestration of a benefice. See SEQUESTRI FACIAS.

Sequestro habendo, a judicial writ for the discharging a sequestration of the profits of a church benefice, granted by the bishop at the sovereign's command, thereby to compel the parson to appear at the suit of another; upon his appearance, the parson may have this writ for the release of the sequestration.—Reg. Judic. 36.

Sequi debet potentia justitiam non precedere. 2 Inst. 454.—(Power should follow justice, not precede it.)

Serf, the slave of feudalism. See SERVI.

Sergeanty, or Seargeanty, or Searjeanty, a service anciently due to the Crown for lands held of it, and which could not be due to any other lord. It was divided into grand and petit. See TENURE.

Seriatim [Lat.] (severally, and in order).

Serjeant, or Serjeants [fr. serviens, Lat.], used in several senses:—

(1) Serjeants-at-law, or of the coif (servientes ad legem), otherwise called serjeants counter, the highest degree in the common law, as doctors in the civil law; but, according to Spelman, a doctor of law is superior to a serjeant, for the very name of a doctor is magisterial, but that of a serjeant is only ministerial. Serjeants-at-law are made by the Queen's writ, addressed unto such as are called, commanding them to take upon them that degree by a certain day.—Fortescue, c. 50; 3 Cro. 1; Dyer, 72; 2 Inst. 213.

The monopoly enjoyed by the serjeants in the Court of Common Pleas, during term time, ineffectually attempted to be abolished by Royal Warrant in 1834 (see In the Matter of the Serjeants-at-law, 6 B. N. C. 235), was abolished in 1846 by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 54.

The Judges of the Common Law Courts were formerly required to take or to have taken the degree of Serjeant-at-law; but by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 8, that requirement is dispensed with in the cases of any person appointed a judge of the High Court of Justice or of the Court of Appeal; and since 1868 no person, except a Judge Designate, has taken the degree, which, however, has never been formally abolished.

(2) Serjeants-at-arms, officers attending the sovereign's person to arrest individuals of distinction offending, and give attendance on the Lord High Steward of England, sitting in judgment on any traitor, etc. Two of these, by the royal permission, attend on the two Houses of Parliament, and each has a deputy; the office of him in the House of Commons is the keeping of the doors, and the execution of such commands, touching the apprehension and taking into custody of any offender, as the House shall enjoin him. Another of them attended the Court of Chancery, and one on the Lord Treasurer of England; also one upon the Lord Mayor of London on extraordinary solemnities, etc. They are in old books called virgatories, because they carried the silver rods gilded, as they now do maces, before the sovereign.—Fleta, l. 2, c. xxxviii.

(3) Serjeants of the household were officers who executed several functions within the royal household.—33 Hen. VIII. c. 12.

(4) The common serjeant, a judicial officer in the city of London, who attends the Lord Mayor and Court of Aldermen on court days, and is in council with them on all occasions within or without the precincts or liberties of the city. He acts as one of the judges of the Central Criminal Court.

(5) Inferior serjeants, such as serjeants of the mace in corporations, officers of the county; and there are serjeants of manors, of the police, etc.

Serjeantia idem est quod servitium. Co. Litt. 105.—(Serjeanty is the same as service.)

Serjeants' Inn. A society consisting of the entire body of serjeants-at-law, which includes all the common law judges appointed before the commencement of the Judicature Acts. Their property in Chancery Lane was sold subsequently to the commencement of the Jud. Act, and the proceeds divided amongst the then members of the society. See title SERJEANT.

Sermo index animi. 5 Co. 118.—(Speech is an index of the mind.)

Sermo relatus ad personam intelligi debet de conditione personæ. 4 Co. 16.—(A speech relating to a person is to be understood as relating to his condition.) Thus, saying to an attorney that he is known to deal corruptly, is to be understood as meaning that he deals corruptly in his office of an attorney. See Birchley's case, 4 Co. 16.

Sermones semper accipiendi sunt secundum subjectam materiam, et conditionem personarum. 4 Co. 14.—(Language is always to be understood according to its subject-matter, and the condition of the persons.) See CUNDUM SUBJECTAM MATERIAM.

Servage, when a tenant, besides payment of a certain rent, finds one or more workmen for his lord's service. King John brought the Crown of England in servage to the see of Rome.—2 Inst. 174; 1 Ric. II. c. 6.

Servants. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

Servi, bondmen, or servile tenants.

They were of four sorts: (1) Such as sold themselves for a livelihood. (2) Debtors sold because they were unable to pay their debts. (3) Captives in war, retained, and employed as perfect slaves. (4) Nativi: servants born as such, solely belonging to the lord. There were also said to be servi testamentales, those which were afterwards called covenant-servants.—Cowel.

Servi redemptione [Lat.], criminal slaves in the time of Henry I.—1 Kemble's Saxons, 197 (1849).

Service [fr. servitium, Lat.], that duty which a tenant, by reason of his estate, owes to his lord. There are many divisions of this duty in our ancient law books, as into personal and real, which is either urbane or rustic, free and base, continual or annual, casual and accidental, intrinsic and extrinsic, certain and uncertain, etc. See TENURE.

The formal mode of bringing a writ or other process, or a notice in a suit, to the knowledge of the person affected by it.

The service of writs of summons is regulated by Jud. Act, 1875. Ord. IX., Rule 1, dispenses with service, when (as is usual) the defendant, by his solicitor, agrees to accept service, and enters an appearance. By Rule 2, service, when required, must be personal, unless an order for 'substituted service, or the substitution of notice for service' be made. Personal service is effected by tendering a copy of the writ to the defendant, and producing the original if required by him.

As to address for service, see INDORSEMENT OF ADDRESS, as to plaintiffs; and as to defendants, see APPEARANCE.

Service of an heir. By the law of Scotland, before an heir can regularly acquire a right to the ancestor's estate, he ought to be served heir. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Service out of the jurisdiction, of a writ of summons, may be allowed by the court or a judge where the contract sued upon was entered into within the jurisdiction, etc., etc.—Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XI., Rule 1. And see Ib., Rule 1a, for restriction upon the allowance of such service upon a defendant resident in Scotland or Ireland.

Service, Secular, worldly service, as contrasted with spiritual or ecclesiastical.—Cowel.

Serviens ad legem, serjeant-at-law, q. v.

Servientibus, certain writs touching servants and their masters violating the statutes made against their abuses.—Reg. Orig. 189.

Servient tenement, an estate in respect of which a service is owing, as the dominant tenement is that to which the service is due.

Servile est expilationis crimen; sola innocentia libera. 2 Inst. 573.—(The crime of theft is slavish; innocence alone is free.) See also Lofft, 214.

Servitia personalia sequuntur personam. 2 Inst. 374.—(Personal services follow the person.)

Servitium feudale et prædiale, a personal service, but due only by reason of lands which were held in fee.—Bract. l. 2, c. xvi.

Servitium forinsecum, a service which did not belong to the chief lord, but to the king:—Mon. Angl. ii. 48.

Servitium, in lege Angliæ, regulariter accipitur pro servitio quod per tenentes dominis suis debetur ratione feodi sui. Co. Litt. 65.—(Service, by the law of England, means the service which is due from the tenants to the lords, by reason of their fee.)

Servitium intrinsecum, that service which was due to the chief lord alone from his tenants within his manor.—Fleta, l. 3.

Servitium liberum, a service to be done by feudatory tenants, who were called liberi homines, and distinguished from vassals, as was their service, for they were not bound to any of the base services of ploughing the lord's land, etc., but were to find a man and horse, or go with the lord into the army, or to attend the court, etc. It was called also servitium liberum armorum.

Servitium regale, royal service, or the prerogatives that, within a royal manor, belonged to the lord of it; which were generally reckoned to be the following—viz., power of judicature in matters of property, and of life and death in felonies and murders; right to waifs and estrays; minting of money; assize of bread and beer, and weights and measures.—Paroch. Antiq. 60.

Servi testamentales, covenant servants.

Servitiis acquietandis, a judicial writ for a man distrained for services to one, when he owes and performs them to another, for the acquittal of such services.—Reg. Judic. 27.

Servitor, a serving man; particularly applied to students at Oxford, upon the foundation, who are similar to sizars at Cambridge.

Servitors of bills, servants or messengers of the Marshal of the Queen's Bench, who were sent abroad with writs, etc., to summon persons to that court.—2 Hen. IV. c. 23.

Servitudes, burdens affecting property and rights in Scotland; resembling easements in England.

In the civil law certain portions or fragments of the right of ownership separated from the rest, and enjoyed by persons other than the owner of the thing itself. As to its various kinds, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 117—134.

Servitus est constitutio jure gentium quod quis domino alieno contra naturam subigitur. Co. Litt. 116.—(Slavery is an institution by the law of nations, by which a man is subjected to a foreign master, contrary to nature.)

Sess, or Assess, rate, tax.

Session, Court of, in Scotland, the supreme civil court of Scotland, instituted A.D. 1532, and formerly consisting of fifteen judges—that number being reduced, in 1830, by 11. Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 69, s. 20, to thirteen; viz., the Lord President, the Lord Justice-Clerk, and eleven ordinary lords. This court is required, by 48 Geo. III. c. 151, to sit in two divisions: the Lord President, with three ordinary lords, forms the first division; and the Lord Justice-Clerk and three other ordinary lords, form the second division. There are five permanent Lords Ordinary, attached equally to both divisions, the last appointed of whom officiates on the bills, i.e., petitions to the court during session, and performs the other duties of junior Lord Ordinary. The chambers of the Parliament House, in which the First and Second Divisions of the Court of Session hold their sittings, are called the Inner House; those in which the Lords Ordinary sit, as single judges, to hear motions and causes, are collectively called the Outer House. The nomination and appointment of the judges is in the Crown. No one can be appointed who has not served as an advocate or principal clerk of session for five years, or a writer to the signet for ten years. Reference may be made to Shand's Practice of the Court of Session; but the practice has been considerably altered by recent statutes. See 20 & 21 Vict. c. 56; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 100; and Scott & Brand's Court of Session Act, 1868. See also JUSTICIARY, HIGH COURT OF.

Session, Great, of Wales, a court which was abolished by 1 Wm. IV. c. 70; the proceedings now issue out of the courts at Westminster, and two of the judges of the superior courts hold the circuits in Wales and Cheshire, as in other English counties.

Session of Parliament, the sitting of the Houses of Lords and Commons, which are continued, day by day, by adjournment, until the parliament is prorogued or dissolved. See PARLIAMENT.

Sessional divisions of counties. See 9 Geo. IV. c. 43; 10 Geo. IV. c. 46; 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 12; and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 65.

Sessions, a sitting of justices of the county in court upon their commissions, as the sessions of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, etc.

Sessions of the peace, sittings of justices of the peace for the execution of those powers which are confided to them by their commission, or by charter, and by numerous statutes. They are of four descriptions:—

I. Petty sessions.

Every meeting of two or more justices in the same place, for the execution of some power vested in them by law, whether had on their own mere motion, or on the requisition of any party entitled to require their attendance in discharge of some duty, is a petty or petit session. The occasions for holding petty sessions are very numerous; among the most important of which is the bailing persons accused of felony, which may be done after a full hearing of evidence on both sides, where the presumption of guilt shall either be weak in itself, or weakened by the proofs adduced on behalf of the prisoner.

As to the right of the public to attend petty sessions, it is settled, that in cases of preliminary inquiry, as where magistrates sit to determine whether they shall bail or commit a party accused of felony or misdemeanour, no person, as one of the public, can claim, as of right, to be present. The 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 114, allowing counsel to address the jury for prisoners at their trial, does not alter the law in this respect. But when magistrates sit to adjudicate as upon a proceeding for a penalty, the place in which they sit is an open court of justice, to which all persons have a right of access, and from which no one may be lawfully removed, so long as he conducts himself with propriety. See 22 & 23 Vict. c. 65.

II. Special sessions.

A special session is a sitting of two or more justices, holden not of their own mere motion and private agreement, but on a particular occasion for the execution of some given branch of their authority, after reasonable notice to all the other magistrates of the hundred or other division of the county, city, etc., for which it is convened and holden, has been served personally or by post, subject to 7 & 8 Vict. c. 33.

There are several special sessions required by law to be held at particular periods; as for appointing overseers of the poor, by 43 Eliz. c. 2, and 54 Geo. III. c. 91, on the 25th March, or within fourteen days after; by 9 Geo. IV. c. 61, for licensing ale-houses and victualling-houses to sell excisable liquors by retail to be drunk or consumed on the premises, on some day between 20th August and 14th September inclusive, except in Surrey and Middlesex, where the meetings must be held within the first ten days of March; for appointing the days of holding not less than eight, not more than twelve, special sessions in the year, for executing the purposes of the Highway Act, which, by 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 50, s. 45, are to be so appointed at a special sessions to be held within fourteen days after every 20th March; and for hearing appeals against poor-rates, giving at least twenty-eight days' notice before the holding of the same, in pursuance of 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 96, s. 6, special petty session of the peace in their several divisions, for the appointment of parochial constables; of which session due notice shall be given to every justice usually acting in that division.

III. General sessions of the peace is a court of record held before two or more justices, for execution of the general authority given to justices by the commission of the peace and certain acts of parliament. The only description of general sessions which is now usually held is the Court of General Quarter Sessions; but in the counties of Middlesex, Lancaster, and the West Riding of York, besides the four quarter sessions, four general sessions are held in the intervals, and in the first original intermediate sessions occasionally take place. A general session may be called by any two justices within the jurisdiction, one being of the quorum, or by the custos rotulorum, and one justice; but not by one justice or by the custos rotulorum alone. The presence of two justices is necessary to its being held or even adjourned so as to hold it legally at another time.

IV. General quarter sessions is a court of oyer and terminer, and a court of record, and not a court of inferior jurisdiction.

There are held in London and Middlesex at least eight sessions in every year, four of them held as quarter sessions, at periods as nearly corresponding to the quarterly periods directed by the statutes as may be, though not exactly, and the other four as original general sessions in the intermediate spaces of time. Both have the same jurisdiction, for trial of indictments, except in cases where, by statute, the quarter sessions have the power given in terms exclusively to them. Besides which the justices in Middlesex act at their sessions in a commission of oyer and terminer, which exists in that county, and gives them additional powers, subject, however, to s. 17 of 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 36 (the Central Criminal Court Act), and 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38.

The sessions for Middlesex are held by adjournment within Westminster, with like jurisdiction as the Westminster sessions (which have ceased to be holden) had. See 7 & 8 Vict. c. 71, s. 11; and see 22 & 23 Vict. c. 4, the fourth section of which enacts, that every general sessions for Middlesex shall have the powers, etc., of a general quarter sessions of that county.

The jurisdiction of the court of quarter sessions is criminal and civil, and arises from the commission of the peace itself, as settled under 18 Edw. III. c. 2, and 34 Edw. III. c. 1.

By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, intitled, 'An Act to define the jurisdiction of Justices in General and Quarter Sessions of the Peace,' it is enacted, that after the passing of that Act, neither the justices of the peace acting in and for any county, riding, division, or liberty, nor the recorder of any borough, shall at any sessions of the peace, or at any adjournment thereof, try any person or persons for any treason, murder, or capital felony, or for any felony which, when committed by a person not previously convicted of felony, is punishable by transportation for life, or for :

- (1) Misprision of treason.
- (2) Offences against the Queen's title, or government, etc.
- (3) Offences subject to the penalties of præmunire.
- (4) Blasphemy and offences against religion.
- (5) Administering or taking unlawful oaths.
- (6) Perjury and subornation of perjury.
- (7) Making or suborning any other person to make a false oath, affirmation, or declaration, punishable as perjury or as a misdemeanour.
- (8) Forgery.
- (9) Unlawfully and maliciously setting fire to crops of corn, etc.
- (10) Bigamy, and offences against the laws relating to marriage.
- (11) Abduction of women and girls.
- (12) Concealment of birth.
- (13) Offences against any provision of the laws relating to bankrupts and insolvents. This, however, has now been repealed by the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 20.
- (14) Libels.
- (15) Bribery.
- (16) Unlawful combinations and conspiracies, except conspiracies and combinations to commit any offence which such justices or recorder respectively have or has jurisdiction to try when committed by one person.
- (17) Stealing or injuring records or documents belonging to any court of law.
- (18) Stealing, or destroying, or concealing wills or documents containing evidence of title to real estate.

Subject to the above restrictions, it seems clear that where an offence is created, and declared a misdemeanour by a statute passed since the institution of the office of a justice of the peace, it may be tried by a court of quarter sessions, unless there is some special direction that it shall be determined by another court; and with the above exceptions, the quarter sessions have power to try all indictable offences, whether offences at the common law or created by statute. See 4 & 5 Vict. c. 56; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25; and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 54, s. 16.

Many other matters have been rendered cognizable by quarter sessions as a court of appeal. The principal of them relate to friendly societies, appointing inspectors of weights and measures, district surveyors of highways, and licensing and conduct of publicans, the settlement and maintenance of the poor, the accounts of overseers and surveyors of the highways, bastardy, vagrancy, etc. Convictions and orders of magistrates are also made the subject of appeal to the quarter sessions, and several statutes, e.g., the Highway Act and Local Acts relating to canals, etc., have empowered sheriffs to summon juries to be empaneled at the quarter sessions for trial of various questions respecting stopping or diverting roads, compensation for damages by widening roads, taking water from mills, etc. The sessions have power to try minor offences against the game laws.—Pritch. Quar. Sess. They have also jurisdiction under the Debtors' Act, 1869, s. 20.

Set-off, any counter-balance or counter-claim.

The subject of a set-off under the former practice was a cross debt or claim, on which a separate action might be sustained, due to the party defendant from the party plaintiff. It was a defence created by 2 Geo. II. c. 22, and had no existence at common law, and could only be pleaded in respect of mutual debts of a definite character, and did not apply to a claim founded in damages, or in the nature of a penalty, and the debt must have been due in the same right and between the same parties, and not a mere equitable demand. The defendant could not avail himself of a set-off, unless it were specially pleaded, and particulars thereof delivered with the plea.

It is now provided by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XIX., r. 3, that a defendant in an action may set-off or set up by way of counter-claim against the claims of the plaintiff, any right or claim, whether such set-off or counter-claim sound in damages or not.

Where there are cross-judgments in the same or different actions, in the same or different courts, between parties substantially the same, the one may be set-off against the other, and so may costs, moneys, etc.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 723—6.

Sets of Exchange, or of Bills. It has been common, from a very early period, for the drawer to draw and deliver to the payee several parts, commonly called a set, of the same bill of exchange, any one part of which being paid, the others are void. This is done to obviate inconveniences from the mislaying or miscarriage of the bill, and to enable the holder to transmit the same by different conveyances to the drawee, so as to ensure the most speedy presentment for acceptance and payment. The general usage in England and America is for the drawer to deliver a set of three parts of the bill to the payee or holder.—Byles on Bills.

By the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 51, s. 71, 'where a bill is drawn in a set, each part of the set being numbered and containing a reference to the other part, the whole of the parts constitute one bill.'

Settled Land, land limited by way of succession, to a person other than the person for the time being entitled to the beneficial enjoyment thereof. Prior to 1856 settled estates could not be sold or leased except under the authority of the settlement which created them, or of a private Act of Parliament. In 1856, the Settled Estates Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120 (amended and extended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 77; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 45; and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 33), gave large power to the Court of Chancery with the concurrence of the parties interested to direct sales and leases of settled estates, and also enabled tenants for life, without application to any court, to make certain leases binding on the parties in remainder. The Settled Estates Acts, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 18, consolidated these acts, with some amendments.

The Settled Land Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, which came into operation on the 1st January, 1883, and which is retrospective as well as prospective and compulsory, though not repealing the Act of 1877, so materially extends the principles of that Act as to render its provisions comparatively useless. The main objects of the Act of 1882 are to liberate tenants for life from the control of their trustees, and to enable them to 'improve' settled land out of the proceeds of the sale of part of it, or to permanently convert the whole or part of the settled land into certain forms of personal property. Before considering the Act in detail, particular attention should be directed to section 53, which enacts that—

'A tenant for life, shall, in exercising any power under this Act, have regard to the interests of all parties entitled under the settlement, and shall, in relation to the exercise thereof by him, be deemed to be in the position and have the duties and liabilities of a trustee for those parties.'

The Act, which extends to Scotland but not to Ireland, contains 17 'parts' and 65 sections. It may be sufficiently considered here under five heads:—

I. Sales. A tenant for life may sell the settled land or any part of it at the best price that can reasonably be obtained (ss. 3, 4), but he may not sell the principal mansion house without the consent of the trustees or an order of the Chancery Division of the High Court (s. 15). His contracts for sale (which he may vary or rescind as if he were absolute owner) are binding on and enure for the benefit of the settled land, and enforceable against and by every successor in title for the time being (s. 31.)

II. Leases. A tenant for life may lease the settled land or any part of it for any term not exceeding ninety-nine years for building, sixty years for mining, or twenty-one years for any other purpose (s. 6). He may also contract for any lease, and his contracts for leases are binding in like manner as his contracts for sales are (s. 31, supra). He may also accept, with or without consideration, a surrender of any lease of settled land, whether made under the Settled Land Act, or not (s. 13).

III. Investments. The proceeds of a sale of settled land must be invested or applied in one of eleven specified modes, of which the following are the most material:—

Investment on government securities, or in other securities authorised by the settlement or by law, or in the debenture stock, etc., of any incorporated railway company having for ten years next before the investment paid a dividend on its ordinary stock.

In discharge of incumbrances, or redemption of land tax or tithe rent charge.

In payment for any improvement authorised by the Act.

In purchase of land in fee simple, or of leasehold land held for sixty years or more unexpired at the time of purchase.

In payment of costs, charges, and expenses of or incidental to the exercise of any of the powers or the execution of any of the provisions of the Act (s. 21).

IV. Improvements. The Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (see title IMPROVEMENT), authorises the borrowing of money by a tenant for life on the security of settled land for the purposes of executing, for the benefit of the settled land, the improvements therein mentioned. The Settled Land Act effects the same object by the more direct and cheaper mode of authorising a sale of the settled land, and an expenditure of the purchase money on the improvements authorised. As many as twenty such improvements are enumerated in the 25th section of the Act, being a repetition of those authorised by the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, with important additions.

The principal improvements authorised by the Act of 1882 are:—

Drainage; Irrigation; Distribution of sewage as manure; Roads; Planting; 'Cottages for labourers employed on the settled land or not'; Farm-buildings; Reservoirs; Tramways; Railways; Canals and Docks; Market-places; and Trial pits for mines.

The approval of the Court or of the trustees is required before capital money may be expended on any of these improvements, and if the money be in the hands of the trustees, they may not apply it thereto without a preliminary certificate from the 'Land Commissioners,' or a competent engineer or surveyor, or an order of the Court (s. 26). There is an obligation upon the tenant for life and his successors to maintain and repair improvements 'during such period, if any, as the land commissioners by certificate in any case prescribe' (s. 28).

Settlement, the act of giving possession by legal sanction; a jointure granted to a wife; a family arrangement of property (see PROTECTOR OF THE SETTLEMENT).

2. The fixture of a person on becoming a pauper in a particular parish, to which is attached a right to be maintained by that parish and a liability to be removed thereto. In the early part of the nineteenth century, the law of settlement, in consequence of the increased facilities for locomotion, led to very frequent litigation between parishes, which has gradually diminished by the introduction of the 'status of irremovability,' upon acquiring which a pauper is no longer liable to be removed. This status is now acquired under the Union Chargeability Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79, s. 8, by one year's residence, —formerly three by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55, and originally five by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. See POOR LAWS; and Burn's Justice, tit. 'Poor.'

Settlement, Act of, the name of the 12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2, by which the Crown is limited to Her Majesty's house, being Protestants, and various provisions made for securing our religion, laws, and liberties, which are declared to be the birthright of the people, according to the ancient doctrine of the common law.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., i. 252, n; ii. 470; iv. 295, 610.

Settling day. The day on which transactions for the 'account' are made up on the Stock Exchange. In consols they are monthly; in other investments, twice in the month.

Sever (v. n). Defendants are said to sever in their defences when they plead independently.

Several counts. Where a plaintiff had several distinct causes of action, he was allowed to pursue them cumulatively in the same action, subject to certain rules which the law prescribed. Different causes of action, of whatever kind, might be joined, except in actions of replevin and ejectments, by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 41. For the former practice, see 1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 234. See now JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION.

Several covenant, a covenant by two or more separately.

Several fishery, is where a person has an exclusive right to fish, either on his own soil or the soil of another. It is a question, by Microfilm ever, whether a person can have a several fishery without being owner of the soil. From the case of Seymour v. Lord Courtenay, 5 Burr, 2816, we learn that a right of several fishery does not necessarily imply an exclusive right, but may exist where no other person has a co-extensive right in the subject claimed. See FISHERY.

Several inheritance, an inheritance conveyed so as to descend to two persons severally, by moieties, etc.

Several matters, Pleading. See SEVERAL PLEAS.

Several pleas. A defendant might have given several distinct answers to the same claim or complaint of the plaintiff, in some instances without and in other instances with, the leave of a judge. As to the former practice, see 1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 278—286. See now PLEADING, and STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Several tail, where land is entailed on two separately.

Several tenancy [tenura separalis, Lat.], a tenancy which is separate, and not held jointly with another person.

Severalty, Estates in. He who holds lands or tenements in severalty, or is sole tenant thereof, is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him, in point of interest, during his estate therein.—2 Bl. Com. 179.

Sewage. See SEWER.

Severance, separating or severing. See SEVER.

Seward, or Seaward, one who guards the sea-coast; custos maris.

Sewer, a trench or channel through which water flows.

The Court of Commissioners of Sewers is a temporary tribunal, erected by commission under the Great Seal, which used to be granted pro re nata at the pleasure of the Crown, but now at the discretion of the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, and Chief Justices, pursuant to the Statute of Sewers, 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5. Their jurisdiction is to overlook the repairs of the banks and walls of the sea-coast and navigable rivers; or, with consent of a certain proportion of the owners and occupiers, to make new ones, and to cleanse such rivers, and the streams communicating therewith, and is confined to such county or particular district as the commission shall name. They are a court of record, and may proceed by jury, or upon their own view, and may make orders for the removal of annoyances, or the conservation of the sewers within their commission, according to the customs of Romney Marsh, or otherwise. They may also assess necessary rates upon the owners of land, and, on refusal, may levy by distress of goods and chattels, or by 23 Hen. VIII. c. 5, may sell freehold, and by 7 Anne c. 10, copyhold lands to pay the assessments. By 4 & 5 Vict. c. 45, they may, for the purposes of defraying the expenses, tax in the gross in each parish such lands as are within the jurisdiction, so that they shall contribute in proportion to the benefit received as compared with other parishes; this is the General Sewers Tax, and is recoverable by distress and sale. See 12 & 13 Vict. c. 50, and 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 296.

By the Land Drainage Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 133), Her Majesty may, upon the recommendation of the Inclosure Commissioners, direct commissions of sewers into all parts of England, and give them jurisdiction over such areas as may be most expedient for the construction of new, and maintenance and improvement of old works. The act includes all commissions of sewers granted by the Crown for the time being in force, whether granted previously to the act or not, but does not extend to the metropolis. It provides for the constitution of elective drainage districts, and for the appointment of boards therein, with the same powers as commissioners of sewers. See also title IMPROVEMENT OF LANDS, and 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 296.

With regard to sewers within the districts of local authorities, the Public Health Act, 1848, and a number of succeeding acts, made careful provisions. These acts have now been superseded by the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55). That act, with certain exceptions, vests all existing and future sewers within the district of a local authority, in such authority, and places them under its control, giving them also powers and duties for the making, purchasing, and maintaining such sewers, and for compelling the use of them by persons within the district (sections 13—26).

The same act authorises any local authority for the purpose of receiving, storing, disinfecting, distributing, or otherwise disposing of sewage, to construct, purchase, or take on lease works, either within or without their district; and further authorises any such authority to agree with an adjoining authority for the communication of the sewers of their respective districts (sections 27—34).

As to Metropolitan Sewers, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 30, 120; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 112; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 104; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 68; and 32 and 33 Vict. c. 102.

2. An officer of the household in mediæval times.

Sexagesima Sunday, the second Sunday before Lent, being about the sixtieth day before Easter.

Sexhinden, or Sexhindmen, the middle thanes, valued at 600s. See HINDEN HOMINES.

Sextery Lands, lands given to a church or religious house for maintenance of a sexton or sacristan.—Cowel.

Sexton (probably from sacristan), the keeper of things belonging to divine worship. He is ordinarily chosen by the rector, but sometimes by the parishioners, according to custom. His particular duties are to cleanse the church, to open the pews, to fill up the graves, to provide candles and other necessities, and to prevent disturbance in the church.—59 Geo III. c. 134, ss. 6, 10; and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 104, s. 9.

Shack, a liberty of winter pasturage in Norfolk. See Cowel.

Shack, Common of, the right of persons occupying lands lying together in the same common field, to turn out their cattle after harvest to feed promiscuously in such field.

Sham plea, a vexatious or false defence, resorted to under the old system of pleading for purposes of delay and annoyance.—Steph. on Pleading, 7th ed., 383.

Shares in public undertakings. Where the property is vested by charter or act of parliament in a body corporate, the shares of the individual corporators in the concern itself are personal not real estate; for such shares are merely the rights which each individual possesses as a partner to a share in the surplus profit derived from the employment of the capital, which is a mixed fund, consisting in part of personal chattels, as well as lands and fixtures. See the Companies Act, 1862 and 1867. Shares in all companies which are within these Acts, and the earlier Companies Act of 1856, or the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, are personal property; and in many cases of companies incorporated by special act, the shares have been expressly declared to be personal property. The rule seems to be that the question whether shares in undertakings are real or personal property turns upon the nature of the shares, that is whether the holder can call for a specific part of the land itself or only a share of the profits.—1 Jarman on Wills, 3rd ed., 202. See Paterson's Usages of the Stock Exchange.

As to the fraudulent sale of shares, etc., see 30 Vict. c. 29. As to the forgery of transfers of shares, etc., see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 2; and 33 and 34 Vict. c. 58; and as to the personation of owners of shares, etc., see the same Acts.

Sharping corn, a customary gift of corn which, at every Christmas, the farmers in some parts of England give to their smith for sharpening their plough-irons, harrow-tines, etc.—Blount.

Shaster, the instrument of government or instruction; any book of instructions, particularly containing Divine ordinances.—Indian.

Shaw, a grove or wood, an underwood.

Shawatores, soldiers.—Cowel.

Sheading, a riding, tithing, or division in the Isle of Man, where the whole island is divided into six sheadings, in each of which there is a coroner or chief constable appointed by a delivery of a rod at the Tinewald Court or annual convention.—King's Isle of Man, 7.

Sheep, injury to, by dogs, action for, under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 60. See Dogs; and as to Scotland, see 26 & 27 Vict. c. 100.

Sheep-silver, a service turned into money, which was paid in respect that anciently the tenants used to wash the lord's sheep.

Sheep-skin, a deed; from the parchment it was written on.

Sheep-stealing, or killing sheep with intent to steal, a felony.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 10 & 11.

Shelley's case, Rule in. Intimately connected with the quantity of estate which a tenant may hold in realty, is the antique feudal doctrine generally known as the rule in Shelley's case which is reported by Lord Coke in 1 Rep. 93 b. (23 Eliz. in C.B.) This rule was not first laid down or established in that case, but was then simply admitted in argument as a well-founded and settled rule of law, and has always since been quoted as the rule in Shelley's case.

A thorough knowledge of the application of this rule is of great practical importance. See the elaborate exposition of the rule by Mr. Fearne, who debates it as the first exception to his fourth class of contingent remainders in his valuable essay on the learning regarding that subject, c. I., § V., pp. 27—208; and also Mr. Preston's Elementary Treatise on Estates (vol. 1, c. iii., pp. 263—419, 2nd edit.), in which 'the end proposed is, by negative and affirmative propositions, to exhibit in a discussion of that rule, the instances in which several limitations, one to the ancestor, the other to the heirs, heirs of the body, or issue of the body of that person, do and do not give the inheritance to the ancestor.'

The rule may be described thus: Where a life freehold, either legal or equitable in realty (whether of freehold or copyhold tenure), is limited by any assurance to a person, and by the same assurance the inheritance of the same quality, i.e., either legal or equitable, is limited by way of remainder (with or without the interposition of any other estate) to his heirs or the heirs of his body, such remainder is immediately executed in possession in the person so taking the life freehold, the word 'heirs' being treated as a word of limitation and not of purchase, so that the life-tenant takes the inheritance, which is neither contingent nor in abeyance; that is to say, where the inheritance is to his heirs or right heirs he takes the fee simple; and where it is to the heirs of his body an estate-tail general.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 334, 378.

In Coke's Reports in verse the rule has been rhymed thus:—

'Where ancestors a freehold take,

The words "his heirs," a limitation make'; which may serve to refresh the memory.

As examples of the application of the rule, take the following:—Land is limited to A. for life, remainder to his right heirs, the rule does not treat this remainder as contingent, but confers it upon A. at once, whereupon his life-estate merges in the remainder, and he takes the entire interest, i.e., the fee-simple. Again: Land is limited to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to the heirs male of A.'s body, the second remainder vests in A. as a remainder in tail male general, and is not in contingency or abeyance, nevertheless waiting for, and continuing expectant on, the determination of B.'s life-estate, which is expectant on A.'s death; but after A.'s death, and the determination of the mesne remainder to B., A.'s heir in tail male general shall enjoy the land as heir, and not as purchaser.

This rule is of positive institution at variance with rules of construction; for while the latter seek for the intention of parties, and strive for its accomplishment, the former combats the intention—a conflict which frequently raises immense difficulties as to whether the rule or intention should prevail. In the operation of the rule on the limitations of the two above-stated examples, it certainly contradicts the meaning of the assurance, and the intent of the parties: Two estates are created, a particular estate in the ancestor, and a remainder in his heirs. In the absence of the rule, the heir would have taken an original and independent estate by purchase, not derived from or controllable by his ancestor; but the operation of the rule places the whole power over the inheritance in the ancestor, who can partially or totally defeat the expectation of his relation.

Shepway, Court of, a court held before the Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports. A writ of error lay from the Mayor and jurats of each port to the Lord Warden in this court, and thence to the Queen's Bench. The civil jurisdiction of the Cinque Ports is abolished by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 48.

Shereffe, the body of the lordship of Cærdiff in South Wales, excluding the members of it.—Powel's Hist. Wal. 123.

Sheriff, Shire-reeve, or Shiriff [fr. Scire, Sax., fr. scyran, to divide, and gerefa, a guardian (vicecomes)], the chief officer of the Crown in every county or shire, who does all the sovereign's business in the county, the Crown by letters-patent committing the custody of the county to him alone.

The judges, together with the other great officers and privy councillors, meet in the Exchequer on the morrow (November 12th) of St. Martin yearly; and then and there the judges propose three persons from each county, to be reported, if approved of, to the Queen, who afterwards appoints one of them to be sheriff, and such appointment generally takes place about the end of the following Hilary Term. If a sheriff die in office, the appointment of another is the mere act of the Crown.

By 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99, whenever any person shall be duly pricked or nominated by the Sovereign to be sheriff of any county except the county palatine of Lancaster, it shall be notified in the London Gazette, and a warrant made out and signed by the clerk of the Privy Council, and transmitted to the person appointed; and the appointment of sheriff thereby made shall be as valid as if it had been made by patent under the Great Seal; and the sheriff shall, upon taking the oath of office, exercise all the authority thereof. The oath does not affect the sheriffs of London or Middlesex. Henry I. granted the election of the sheriffs of London and Middlesex to the citizens of London for ever, upon their paying 300*l.* a year into the king's exchequer. As to their approval by the Crown, see 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, s. 42. See also Pulling's Customs of London, 134. The Earl of Thanet was hereditary sheriff of Westmoreland till his death in 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 42, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 30). The counties of Cambridge and Huntingdon have the same sheriff. Sheriffs in Wales are assigned as in England, by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 11.

Sheriffs, by several old statutes, continue in office one year, but a sheriff may be appointed durante bene placito, and that is the form of the writ. Therefore till a new sheriff be named his office cannot be determined. By 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99, s. 7, he shall, on expiration of his office, deliver to his successor a list of all prisoners in his custody, and of all unexecuted process. No man that has served the office of sheriff for one year can be compelled to serve again within three years after, if there be other sufficient person within the county.—1 Ric. II. c. 11. The discharge of the office is in general compulsory upon the party chosen; and if he refuse to serve, he is liable to indictment or information. Militia officers, practising barristers, attorneys, and prisoners for debt, are not liable to serve; nor are persons under disability by judgment of law (as in the case of outlawry), to be appointed. By 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 21, s. 7, no person shall be assigned for sheriff unless he have sufficient lands within the same to answer the Crown and people. This is the only qualification required.

His powers and duties are various:—Judicially, he superintends the election of knights of the shire, coroners, and verderors, and proclaims outlawries and the like. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, as to trials of issues from the superior courts not exceeding 20*l.*

As keeper of the Queen's peace, both by common law, and special commission, he is the first man in the county, and superior in rank to any nobleman therein during his office.

Ministerially, he is bound to execute all civil and criminal process issuing out of the supreme court, and in this respect is considered an officer of that court. He is also the returning officer for his county, and he opens the elections for members of Parliament, and has various duties to discharge in reference to such elections. See 24 Geo. II. c. 24, s. 3, and 17 & 18 Vict. c. 1, s. 2.

As the Queen's Bailiff, it is his business to preserve her rights within his bailiwick, i.e., county.

He has under him several inferior officers as under-sheriff, bailiffs, gaolers, etc., to assist him in the execution of his several offices.

By 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99, every sheriff must, within one calendar month after his appointment is gazetted, nominate some fit person to be his under-sheriff.

By 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, every sheriff is to appoint a sufficient deputy, having an office within a mile of the Inner Temple Hall, for the receipt of writs, granting warrants thereon, making returns thereto, and accepting all rules and orders made as to the execution of any process or writ addressed to the sheriff.—Consult Atkinson or Churchill and Bruce on Sheriff; and see Chitty's Statutes, vol. v., tit. 'Sheriff'.

Sheriff (in Scotland), the chief judge of a county, also called sheriff-depute (the principal sheriffship being a nominal office) and sheriff principal. His civil jurisdiction extends to all personal actions on contract, bond, or obligation, to the greatest extent; also, by 40 & 41 Vict. c. 50, s. 8, to actions relating to a heritable right where the value of the subject matter does not exceed 50*l.* by the year or 1000*l.* value, and to all possessory actions, as removings, spuilzies, etc., to all briefs issuing from Chancery in Scotland, as of inquest, terce, division, tutory, etc., and generally to all civil matters not specially committed to other courts. He has also a summary jurisdiction in regard to small debts, as well as a criminal jurisdiction. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict., and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 119; 16 & 17 Vict. cc. 80, 92; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 72; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 106; 40 & 41 Vict. c. 50.

Sheriff Clerk, the clerk of the Sheriff's Court in Scotland.

Sheriff Court Houses in Scotland. See 23 and 24 Vict. c. 79, amended by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 53.

Sheriffalty, Sheriffdom, Sheriffship, Sheriff-wick, or Shrievalty [vicecomitatus, Lat.], the office or jurisdiction of a sheriff.

Sheriff-geld, a rent formerly paid by a sheriff, and it is prayed that the sheriff in his account may be discharged thereof.—Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. III.

Sheriff-substitute (in Scotland), the resident judge ordinary of the county, discharging the duties of the sheriff principal, by whom his judgment is in most cases subject to review.—Bell's Law Dict.

Sheriff-tooth, a tenure by the service of providing entertainment for the sheriff at his county-courts; a common tax, formerly levied for the sheriff's diet.

Sheriff's Court in London. See CITY OF LONDON COURT.

Sheriff's officers, bailiffs, who are either bailiffs of hundreds or bound-bailiffs.

Sheriffs' tourn or rotation, a court or record held twice every year, within a month after Easter and Michaelmas, before the sheriff, in different parts of the county, being indeed only the turn of the sheriff to keep a court-leet in each respective hundred; this, therefore, is the great court-leet of the county, as the county-court is the court-baron; for out of this, for the ease of the sheriff, was taken the court-leet, or view of frank-pledge, which see. And see also 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 321.

Sherrerie, a word used by the authorities of the Roman Church, to specify contemptuously the technical parts of the law, as administered by non-clerical lawyers.—Bacon.

Shew cause, to appear (in obedience to a rule of court calling upon the party to appear and shew cause) and argue that the rule should not be made absolute. Rules to shew cause are now, in many cases, abolished by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act. See RULES.

Shewing [monstratio, Lat.], to be quit of attachment in a court, in plaints shewed and not avowed. Obsolete.

Shifting use, a secondary or executory use, which, when executed, operates in derogation of a preceding estate: as land conveyed to the use of A. and his heirs, with proviso that when B. pays a certain sum of money, the estate shall go to the use of C. and his heirs.

Shilling [fr. solidus, Lat; scilling, Sax.], among the English Saxons passed for 5*d.*; afterwards it represented 16*d.*, and often 20*d.* In the reign of the Conqueror it was of the same denominative value as at this day.—Domesday.

Shilwit. See CHILDWIT.

Ship-money, an imposition formerly levied on port-towns and other places for fitting out ships; revived by Charles I., and abolished in the same reign.—17 Car. I. c. 14.

Shipper, the owner of goods who entrusts them on board a vessel for delivery abroad, by charter party or otherwise.

Ships. See NAVIGATION ACTS, and MERCHANT SHIPPING, and consult Maunder and Pollock on Shipping; Chitty's Statutes, vol. vi., tit. 'Shipping.'

Ship's-husband, a peculiar agent appointed by the owner of a ship to look after the repairs, equipment, management, and other concerns of the ship. His duties are: (1) To see to the proper outfit of the vessel in the repairs adequate to the voyage, and in the tackle and furniture necessary for a seaworthy ship. (2) To have a proper master, mate, and crew for the ship, so that in this respect it shall be seaworthy. (3) To see to the due furnishing of provisions and stores, according to the necessities of the voyage. (4) To see to the regularity of clearance from the custom-house of the registry. (5) To settle contracts, and provide for payment of the furnishings requisite. (6) To enter into charter-parties, or engage the vessel for general freight, under usual conditions; and to settle for freights and adjust averages with the merchant. (6) To preserve the proper certificates, surveys, and documents, in case of disputes with insurers or freighters, and to keep regular books of the ship.—Story's Agency, 31. See MacLachlan on Shipping.

Ship's papers, documents required for the manifestation of the property of the ship and cargo, etc. See a list of them in Form H. 17 of the Rules of the Supreme Court.

They are of two sorts: 1st, those required by the law of a particular country, as the certificate of registry, license, charter-party, bills of lading and of health, required by the law of England to be on board all British ships; 2nd, those required by the law of nations to be on board neutral ships, to vindicate their title to that character; they are the passport, sea-brief, or sea-letter, proofs of property, the muster-roll, or rôle d'équipage; the charter-party, the bills of lading and invoices, the log-book or ship's journal, and the bill of health.—1 Marshall on Insur. c. 9, s. 6.

Shire [fr. scyran, Sax., to divide], a part or portion of the kingdom; called also a county [comitatus, Lat.]. King Alfred first divided this country into satrapiae, now called shires; shires into centuriae, now called hundreds; and these again into decennae, now called tithings.—Leg. Alfred. See Brompton, 956.

Shire-clerk, he that keeps the county-court.

Shire-man, or Scyre-man, anciently judge of the county, by whom trials for land, etc., were determined before the Conquest.

Shiremote, an assembly of the county or the shire at the assizes, etc.

Shire-reeve, a sheriff, which see.

Shoofaa, pre-emption, or a power of possessing property which has been sold, by paying a sum equal to that paid by the purchaser.—Maon. Moohammudan Law.

Shooting or wounding, or causing any grievous bodily harm, with intention to maim, disfigure, or disable, or to do some other grievous bodily harm, or with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detaining of any person, is a felony. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18.

Short cause, a suit in the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice, where there is only a simple point for discussion. See Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., 836.

Short entry. It takes place when a bill or note, not due, has been sent to a bank for collection, and an entry of it is made in the customer's bank-book, stating the amount in an inner column, and carrying it into the accounts between the parties when it has been paid. See ENTERING SHORT.

Short-ford, q. d. foreclose. The ancient custom of the city of Exeter is, when the lord of the fee cannot be answered rent due to him, and no distress can be levied, he is to come to the tenement and there take a stone, or some other dead thing, and bring it before the mayor and bailiffs; this he must do seven quarter days successively; and if on the seventh the lord is not satisfied, then the tenant shall be adjudged to the lord to hold the same a year and a day; and forthwith proclamation is to be made, in the court, that if any man claim any title to the tenement he must appear within a year and a day, and satisfy the lord. If no appearance be made, and the rent not paid, the lord comes again to the court and prays that the tenement be adjudged to him in his demesne as of fee, which is done, and the lord has it to him and his heirs. This custom is called short-ford.—Izrael's Antiq. Exet. 48. See Cowel.

A like custom in London by the ancient statute of Gavelet, attributed to 10 Edw. II., is called forschet or forschoke.

Short notice of trial; four days. See the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 9. See NOTICE OF TRIAL.

Shrievalty, the office of sheriff; the period of that office.

Shriervo, a corruption of sheriff.

Shroff, Shrof, a banker or money-changer.—Indian.

Shroud-stealing. If any one, in taking up a dead body, steal the shroud or other apparel, it will be felony; for the property therein remains in the executor, or whoever was at the charge of the funeral.—3 Inst. 110; 1 Hale P. C. 535.

Si actio, the conclusion of a plea to an action when the defendant demands judgment, if the plaintiff ought to have his action, etc. Obsolete.

Si à jure discedas vagus eris, et erunt omnia omnibus incerta. Co. Litt. 227.—(If you depart from the law you will wander, and all things will be uncertain to everybody.)

Sib, akin.

Sica, Sicha, a ditch.—Mon. Angl. ii., 130.

Sich, a little current of water, which is dry in summer; a water furrow or gutter.—Cowel.

Sicius, a sort of money current among the ancient English of the value of 2d.

Sicut alias, as at another time, or heretofore. This was a second writ sent out when the first was not executed. See Cowel.

Sic utere tuo ut alienum non ledas. 9 Co. 59.—(Use your own rights so that you do not hurt those of another.)

Sicut natura nil facit per saltum, ita nec lex. Co. Litt. 238.—(In the same way as nature does nothing by a bound, so neither does the law.)

Side-bar-rules. See RULES.

Sideings, meres between or on the sides of ridges of arable lands.—Cowel.

Sides-men, Synods-men, or Quest-men, persons who were formerly appointed in large parishes to assist the churchwardens in inquiring into the manners of inordinate livers, and in presenting offenders at visitations.—Cowel. In some large parishes this office still exists as the office of assistant to the churchwardens.

Siens, scions or descendants.

Si fecerit te securum, a species of original writ, so called from the words of the writ, which directed the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gave the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim.

Sight, Bills payable at, are, by s. 10 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, replacing the repealed 34 & 35 Vict. c. 74,—prior to which three days grace was allowed,—made equivalent to bills payable on demand.

Sigil [fr. sigillum, Lat.], seal, signature.

Sigla [fr. segel, Sax.], a sail.—Leg. Etheld. c. 24.

Signature, a sign or mark impressed upon anything; a stamp, a mark; the name of a person written and subscribed by himself. Counsel's signature is no longer required to pleadings, but it is to appeals to the House of Lords. See PLEADING.

Signet, a seal commonly used for the signature of the Sovereign. See ROYAL SIGNET.

In Scotland it is the seal by which the Queen's letters or writs, for the purpose of private justice, are now authenticated.

Clerks to the signet, or writers to the signet in Scotland, are a body, the members of which perform much the same functions as attorneys in England.

Significavit, a writ issuing out of the Chancery upon certificate given by the ordinary of a man's standing excommunicate by the space of forty days, for the keeping him in prison till he submit himself to the authority of the church. See 53 Geo. III. c. 127, and Ex parte Dale, 6 Q. B. D., at p. 381, in which case Lord Penzance in 1880 issued a significavit against the Rev. Mr. Dale for disobedience to his inhibition.

Also, another writ, addressed to the justices of the bench, commanding them to stay any suit depending between such and such parties by reason of an excommunication alleged against the plaintiff, etc.—Reg. Orig. 7.

Sign-manual, the royal signature. Sometimes required by statute as evidence of the authority of the Sovereign, e.g., by the Jud. Act, 1873, s. 31, in reference to the transfer of a judge of the High Court from one division thereof to another. Towards the end of the reign of King George the Fourth, the royal signature was, by 11 Geo. IV. and 1

Wm. IV. c. 23, authorized to be affixed by commission. 2. The signature of any one's name in his own handwriting.

Signum, a cross prefixed as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or deed, used by the Saxons.

Silentiarius, one of the Privy Council: also, an usher, who sees good rule and silence kept in court.

Silent leges inter arma. 4 Inst. 70.—(Laws are silent amidst arms.)

Silva cædua, wood under twenty years' growth.

Similiter [Lat.] (in like manner). Formerly when an issue of fact was tendered, the words were as follows: 'and of this the defendant puts himself upon the country'; or thus, 'and this the plaintiff prays may be inquired of by the country'; the issue and form of trial were then both accepted on the other side (unless there appeared grounds for demurrer), by the words following: 'and the plaintiff (or the defendant as the case may be) doth the like,' which latter words were called the similiter. After the passing of the C. L. P. Act, 1852, the joinder of issue under s. 79 of that Act superseded the similiter. See now ISSUE.

The want of a similiter by the prosecutor in criminal cases is cured by 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 64, s. 20.

Similitudo legalis est, casuum diversorum inter se collatorum similis ratio; quod in uno similitum valet, valebit in altero. Dissimilium dissimilis est ratio. Co. Litt. 191.—(Legal similarity is a similar reason which governs various cases when compared with each other, for what avails in one of similar cases will avail in the other. Of things dissimilar, the reason is dissimilar.)

Simony, the corrupt presentation of, or the corrupt agreement to present any one to an ecclesiastical benefice for reward. It is derived from Simon Magus, who offered money to the Apostles for the power to work miracles (Acts viii. 18—24). It is an offence by statute 31 Eliz. c. 6, which by s. 5, 'for the avoiding of simony,' directs that the corrupt presentation shall be void, and the presentation shall go to the Crown.

Many questions have arisen with regard to what is and what is not simony; and among others these points seem to be clearly settled:—

(1) That the sale of an advowson (whether the living be full or not) is not simoniacal, unless connected with a corrupt contract or design as to the next presentation, though if an advowson be granted during the vacancy of the benefice, the presentation on that vacancy can in no case pass by the grant.

(2) That to purchase a next presentation, the living being actually vacant, is open and notorious simony, this being expressly in contravention of the statute. (3) That for a clerk to bargain for a next presentation, the incumbent being sick and about to die, was simony even before the statute of Anne, and now by that statute to purchase, either in his own name or another's, the next presentation, and be thereupon presented at any future time to the living, is direct and palpable simony. (4) But a bargain by any other person for the next presentation (even if the incumbent be in extremis), if without the privity and without any view to the nomination of the particular clerk afterwards presented, is not simony. (Fox v. Bishop of Chester, 6 Bing. 1.) (5) That if a simoniacal contract be made with the patron, the clerk presented not being privy thereto, the presentation for that turn shall indeed devolve to the Crown, as a punishment of the guilty patron, but the clerk who is innocent does not otherwise incur any disability or forfeiture. (6) That bonds given to pay money to charitable uses, on receiving a presentation to a living, are not simoniacal, provided the patron or his relations be not benefited thereby, for this is no corrupt consideration moving to the patron.

That clergymen of good character and repute have been parties to contracts which the law considers simoniacal is however undoubted. (Report of Royal Commission on Church Patronage, 1879). See also RESIGNATION BOND.

Simple contract, a parol promise, which may be either verbal or written, but not under seal.

Simple contract debt, one where the contract upon which the obligation arises is neither ascertained by matter of record nor yet by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence the most simple of any, or by notes unsealed, which are capable of a more easy proof, and therefore only better than a verbal promise.—2 Bl. Com. 466.

Before 1870 simple contracts were, in the administration of the estate of a deceased person, postponed to debts secured by instrument under seal, called 'specialty debts,' but in 1869 all such priority was abolished by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, s. 1.

Simple deposit, a deposit made, according to the civil law, by one or more persons having a common interest.

Simple larceny, theft, without circumstances of aggravation. See LARCENY. As to the punishment for simple larceny, see Steph. Com., supra. If a man commit a simple larceny in one county, and carry the goods with him into another, he may be indicted in either; for the law considers this as a taking in both.

Simple trust: where property is vested in one person upon trust for another, and the nature of the trust, not being qualified by the settlor, is left to the construction of law. In this case the cestui que trust has jus habendi, or the right to be put into actual possession of the property, and jus disponendi, or the right to call upon the trustee to execute conveyances of the legal estate as the cestui que trust directs.—Lew. on Trusts, 21.

Simple warrantice, an obligation to warrant or secure from all subsequent and future deeds of the grantor.—Scotch phrase.

Simplex beneficium, a minor dignity in a cathedral or collegiate church, or any other ecclesiastical benefice, as distinguished from a cure of souls. It may therefore be held with any parochial cure, without coming under the prohibitions against pluralities.

Simplex commendatio non obligat. A man does not compromise himself by praising what he wishes to sell in vague or abstract terms.

Simplex justiciarius, a style formerly used for any puisnè judge who was not chief in any court.—Cowel.

Simplex obligatio, a single unconditional bond.

Simplicitas est legibus amica: et nimia subtilitas in jure reprobatur. 4 Co. 8.—(Simplicity is favourable to the laws: and too much subtlety in law is to be reprobated.)

Simpliciter [Lat.], without involving anything not actually named.

Simulatio latens, a species of feigned disease, in which disease is actually present, but where the symptoms are falsely aggravated, and greater sickness is pretended than really exists.—Beck's Med. Jurisp. 3.

Simul cum [Lat.] (together with).

Sinderesis, a natural power of the soul, set in the highest part thereof, moving and stirring it to good, and abhorring evil. And therefore sinderesis never sinneth nor erreth. And this sinderesis our Lord put in man, to the intent that the order of things should be observed. And therefore sinderesis is called by some men the law of reason, for it ministereth the principles of the law of reason, the which be in every man by nature, in that he is a reasonable creature.—Doctor and Student, 39.

Sine assensu capitali, an abolished writ where a bishop, dean, prebendary, or master of an hospital, aliened the lands holden in right of his bishopric, deanery, house, etc., without the assent of the chapter or fraternity, in which case his successor should have this writ.—F. N. B. 195.

Sinecure [fr. sine, Lat., without, and cura, care], an office which has revenue without any employment.

Sinecure rector, a rector without cure of souls. Sinecure rectories are now abolished by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 113, s. 48, and 4 & 5 Vict. c. 39, s. 17. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 683.

Sine die [Lat.] (without day, or indefinitely). Without a day being fixed. The consideration of a matter is said to be adjourned sine die, when it is adjourned without a day being fixed for its resumption.

Sine prole (often written s. p.), without issue.

Single bond [simplex obligatio, Lat.], a deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to the obligee at a day named.

Single combat, Trial by. See BATTEL.

Single entry, an entry made to charge or to credit an individual or thing, as distinguished from double entry, which is an entry of both the debit and credit accounts of a transaction. See DOUBLE ENTRY.

Single escheat, when all a person's moveables fall to the Crown, as a casualty, because of his being declared rebel. See FORFEITURE.

Singular. By the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, it is enacted that words in Acts of Parliament importing the singular shall include the plural, and the plural the singular, unless the contrary is expressly provided.

Singular successor. A purchaser is so termed in the Scotch law, in contradistinction to the heir of a landed proprietor, who succeeds to the whole heritage by regular title, of succession or universal representation, whereas the purchaser acquires right solely by the single title acquired by the disposition of the former proprietor.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Sinking Fund. A fund formed for the redemption of a debt by the periodical accumulation of fixed amounts by the borrower.

Si non omnes, Writ of, a writ on association of justices, by which, if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more of them may finish the business.—F. N. B. 186; Reg. Orig. 202. And after the writ of association, it is usual to make out a writ of si non omnes, addressed to the first justices, and also to those who are associated with them, which, reciting the purpose of the two former commissions, commands the justices, that if all of them cannot conveniently be present, such a number of them may proceed, etc.—F. N. B. 111.

Sipessocua, a franchise, liberty, or hundred.

Si plures conditiones ascripte fuerunt donationi conjunctim, omnibus est parendum; et ad veritatem copulativè requiritur quod utraque pars sit vera: si divisim, cuilibet vel alteri eorum satis est obtemperare; et in disjunctivis sufficit alteram partem esse veram. Co. Litt. 225.—(If several conditions have been conjunctively annexed to a gift, the whole of them must be complied with; and with respect to their truth, if they be joint, it is necessary that every part be true; if the conditions are separate, it is sufficient to comply with either one or other of them; and being disjunctive, that one or the other be true.)

Si quidem in nomine, cognomine, prænominē legatarii testator erraverit, cum de persona constat, nihilominus valet legatum. Justinian's Institutes, l. 2, t. 20, s. 29.—(Although a testator may have mistaken the nomen, cognomen, or prænomen of a legatee, yet if it be certain who is the person meant, the legacy is valid.)

Si quid universitati debetur singulis non debetur nec quod debet universitas singuli debent. D. 3, 4, 7; and see 1 Bl. Com., 21st ed., 484.—(If anything be owing to an entire body, it is not owing to the individual members; nor do the individuals owe that which is owing by the entire body.)

Si quis [Lat.] (if any one), an advertisement; a notification.

Si quis custos fraudem pupillo fecerit, à tutela removendus est. Jenk. Cent. 39.—(If a guardian do fraud to his ward, he shall be removed from his guardianship.)

Si quis pregnantem uxorem reliquit, non videtur sine liberis decessisse. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(If a man leave his wife pregnant, he shall not be considered to have died without children.)

Si quis unum percusserit, cum alium percutere vellet, in feloniam tenetur. 3 Inst. 51.—(If a man kill one, meaning to kill another, he is held guilty of felony.)

Sircar, a government; a man of business.—Indian.

Si recognoscat, a writ that, according to the old books, lay for a creditor against his debtor, who had acknowledged before the sheriff in the county court that he owed his creditor such a sum received of him.—O. N. B. 68.

Sise, corrupted from assize.

Sisters. Lord Coke says, omnes sorores sunt quasi unus hæres; all sisters are, as it were, one heir. See COPARCENERS.

Si suggestio non sit vera, litteræ patentés vacuæ sunt. 10 Co. 113.—(If the suggestion be not true the letters-patent are void.)

Sithcundmam, the high constable of a hundred.

Sittings. By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 26, the division of the legal year into terms is abolished, and sittings are substituted for it.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LXI., r. 1, it is provided that the sittings of the Court of Appeal and the sittings in London and Middlesex of the High Court of Justice shall be four in every year, viz., the Michaelmas sittings, the Hilary sittings, the Easter sittings, and the Trinity sittings; that the Michaelmas sittings shall commence on the 2nd of November and terminate on the 21st of December; the Hilary sittings shall commence on the 11th of January and terminate on the Wednesday before Easter; the Easter sittings shall commence on the Tuesday after Easter week and terminate on the Friday before Whitsunday; and that the Trinity sittings shall commence on the Tuesday after Whitsun-week and terminate on the 8th of August.

It is also provided by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 30, that, subject to rules, etc., sittings for trial by jury shall be held in Middlesex and London, 'continuously throughout the year by as many judges as the business to be disposed of may render necessary.' See further as to the judges who are to preside at different sittings, s. 37; and see also LONDON AND WESTMINSTER SITTINGS, and VACATION.

Sittings in Camerâ. See CAMERA.

Sittings after Term. Sittings in banc after term were held by authority of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 32. The courts were at liberty to transact business at their sittings as in term time, but the custom was to dispose only of cases standing for argument or judgment.

Sittings in London and Westminster. London and Westminster are not comprised within any circuit, but courts of Nisi Prius are held there for the same purpose before the judges of the High Court of Justice, at what are called the London and Westminster sittings. Criminal cases are tried at the Central Criminal Court. See LONDON & WESTMINSTER SITTINGS, and SITTINGS.

Sittings in banc, sittings of the judges on the benches of their respective courts at Westminster, at which they decided matters of law and transacted other judicial business, as distinguished from Nisi Prius sittings, at which matters of fact were tried. See DIVISIONAL COURTS.

Situs [Lat.], situation, location.

Six Acts, 60 Geo. III.; 1 Geo. IV. cc. 1, 2, 4, 6, 8, 9, passed to put down seditious meetings, etc.; c. 1, which prohibits illegal drilling, is still unrepealed.

Six Articles, Law of, made by 31 Hen. VIII. c. 14. This famous Act was styled 'An Act for abolishing Diversity of Opinions,' and it enforced conformity to six of the strongest points in the Romish religion (being the real presence, communion in one kind for the laity, celibacy of the clergy, sanctity of vows, private masses, and auricular confession) under the severest penalties, amended by 32 Hen. VIII. c. 10, and repealed by 1 Eliz. c. 1. —4 Reeves, 278.

Six Clerks in Chancery, officers who received and filed all proceedings, signed office copies, attended court to read the pleadings, etc. They were abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103.

Six Day License, a liquor license, and containing a condition that the premises in respect of which the license is granted shall be closed during the whole of Sunday,—granted under s. 49 of the Licensing Act, 1872, 35 & 36 Vict. c. 94.

Sixhindi, servants of the same nature as rodknights, q.v.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Skeleton bill, one drawn, endorsed, or accepted in blank.

Skilled witnesses, witnesses who are allowed to give evidence on matters of opinion and abstract fact. Such evidence can only be given by persons of professional knowledge on the subject in hand; such as medicine, surgery, handwriting, mechanics, chemistry, foreign law, etc.; but not moral philosophy or political economy.

Skyvinage, or Skevinage, the precincts of Calais.—27 Hen. IV. c. 2.

Slander, the malicious defamation of a person in his reputation, profession, or business, by words; as a libel is by writing, etc. It is actionable in the following cases: (1) where the words impute a criminal offence; (2) where they impute misconduct in a public office; (3) where they are spoken in reference to a person's trade or profession; (4) where the speaking of them is productive of special damage. Consult Folkard or Odgers on Libel and Slander.

Slaughter houses, regulated in the Metropolis by the Slaughter Houses Metropolis Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 67, and other statutes, and in large towns by the Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 37, ss. 125—131, incorporated by the Public Health Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 169.

Slavery, that civil relation in which one man has absolute power over the life, fortune, and liberty of another. It cannot subsist in England. See Somerset's case (11 St. Tr. 340).

The system of colonial slavery was abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 73. See 5 Geo. IV. c. 113; 7 Wm. IV. & 1 Vict. c. 91; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 73; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 98; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 26; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 122; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 34; and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 75. The various acts for carrying into effect the treaties for the more effectual suppression of the slave trade were amended and consolidated by the 36 & 37 Vict. c. 88 (many previous acts being thereby repealed). See, too, as to East Africa, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 59.

As to Roman slavery, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 14.

Sledge, a hurdle to draw traitors to execution.—1 Hale, P. C. 82.

Slippa, a stirrup.

There is a tenure of land in Cambridgeshire by holding the sovereign's stirrup.

Slough silver, a rent paid to the castle of Wigmore in lieu of certain days' work in harvest, heretofore reserved to the lord from his tenants.—Cowel

Small Debts Courts, the several county courts established by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, for the purpose of bringing justice home to every man's door. See COUNTY COURTS.

Small-pox. See VACCINATION.

Small tithes [otherwise called privy], all personal and mixed tithes, and also hops, flax, saffrons, potatoes, and sometimes, by custom, wood.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 726.

Smoke, Consumption of, prescribed in the Metropolis by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 128; as amended by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 107; in Scotland, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 73; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 17; and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 102; for locomotives on railways by 8 Vict. c. 20, s. 114, as amended by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, s. 19; and in towns generally by Public Health Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 55, s. 91.

Smoke-farthings, pentecostals, which see.

Smokesilver, a modus of 6d. in lieu of tithewood.—Cowel.

Smuggling, the offence of importing prohibited articles, or of defrauding the revenue by the introduction of articles into consumption, without paying the duties chargeable upon them. It may be committed indifferently either upon the excise or customs revenue.

Smuggling is restrained by the statutes relating to the Customs, and in particular by 39 & 40 Vict. c. 36, 1876 (the Customs Consolidation Act).

Snottering silver, a small duty which was paid by servile tenants in Wylegh to the abbot of Colchester.—Cowel.

Soap. The excise on soap was repealed by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 39.

Soc, Sok, Soka, jurisdiction; a power or privilege to administer justice and execute laws; also a shire, circuit, or territory.—Cowel.

Soca, a seigniorship or lordship, enfranchised by the king, with liberty of holding a court of his soc-men or socagers, i.e., his tenants.

Socage, or Soccage, a tenure by any certain or determinate service. Common socage is the ordinary tenure in this country; the exceptions are, Borough-English, gavelkind, etc., q.v.

Socagium idem est quod servitium socæ; et soca, idem est quod caruca. Co. Litt. 86.—(Socage is the same as service of the soc; and soc is the same thing as a plough.)

Soccager, a tenant by socage.

Socer [Lat.], the father of one's wife; a father-in-law.

Socialism, absolute equality in the distribution of the physical means of life and enjoyment. It is on the continent employed in a larger sense; not necessarily implying communism, or the entire abolition of private property, but applied to any system which requires that the land and the instruments of production should be the property, not of individuals, but of communities, or associations, or of the government.—1 Mill's Pol. Eco. 248.

Socida, a contract or hiring, upon condition that the bailee take upon himself the risk of the loss of the thing hired.—Civ. Law.

Societas leonina, that kind of society or partnership by which the entire profits belong to some of the partners in exclusion of the rest. So called in allusion to the fable of the lion, who, having entered into partnership with other animals for the purpose of hunting, appropriated all the prey to himself. It was void.—Civ. Law. For the several societates, see Sand Just., 5th ed., 366.

Société anonyme, an association where the liability of all the partners is limited. It had in England until lately no other name than that of 'chartered company,' meaning thereby, a joint-stock company whose shareholders, by a charter from the Crown, or a special enactment of the legislature, stood exempted from any liability for the debts of the concern, beyond the amount of their subscriptions.—2 Mill's Pol. Eco. 485. See LIMITED LIABILITY.

Société en commandite. See COMMANDITE.

Society. Associations of persons designated by the name of 'Society' are (1) Building Societies, regulated by the Building Societies Act, 1874, as to which see BUILDING SOCIETIES; (2) Friendly Societies, regulated by the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, as to which see FRIENDLY SOCIETIES; (3) Industrial and Provident Societies, regulated by the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1876, as to which see INDUSTRIAL AND PROVIDENT SOCIETIES; and (4) Loan Societies, regulated by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 110, as to which see LOAN SOCIETIES. See Chitty's Statutes, vol. vi., tit. 'Societies.'

Socii mei socius, meus socius non est. D. 50, 17, 47.—(The partner of my partner is not my partner.)

Socman, a socager.

Socmanry, free tenure by socage.

Socome, a custom of grinding corn at the lord's mill.—Cowel.

Bond-socome is where the tenants are bound to it.—Blount.

Socna, a privilege, liberty, or franchise.—Cowel.

Sodomy, the crime against nature.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 92; Beck's Med. Jurisp. 119; Tayl. Med. Jur. c. 51.

Sodor and Man, Bishopric of, annexed to the province of York by Hen. VIII.—33 Hen. VIII. c. 31. See 1 & 2 Vict. c. 30, repealing partially 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 77. The bishop is not a lord spiritual.

Soit droit fait el partie [Nor.-Fr.] (let right be done to the party).

Sokemanries, lands and tenements which were not held by knight-service, nor by grand serjeantry, nor by petit, but by simple services; being, as it were, lands enfranchised by the king or his predecessors from their ancient demesne. Their tenants were sokemans.

Sokemans, tenants of socage-lands.—3 Bl. Com. 100.

Soke-reeve, the lord's rent gatherer in the soca.—Cowel.

Sold Note. See BOUGHT AND SOLD NOTES.

Soldiers, at parliamentary elections. See 10 & 11 Vict. c. 21, repealing 8 Geo. II. c. 30, and providing that, with certain exceptions, soldiers within two miles shall remain in barracks or quarters during elections.

Soldiers' wills. See NUNCUPATIVE WILLS.

Sole, not married, single, alone; also separate, and apart.

Sole corporation, one person and his successors, who are incorporated by law, in order to give them some legal capacities, and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had; as the sovereign, bishop, parson, etc.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., i., 358; iii., 4.

Sole tenant [solus tenens, Lat.], he that holds lands by his own right only, without any other person being joined with him.

Solicitation. It is an indictable offence to solicit and incite another to commit a felony, although no felony be in fact committed.—2 East, 5.

Solicitor, an officer of the Supreme Court of Judicature, who, and who only, is entitled to 'sue out any writ or process, or commence, carry on, solicit, or defend any action or other proceeding' in any Court whatever (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 2). 'Solicitor of the Supreme Court' is the title given by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 87, to all attorneys, solicitors, and proctors. Prior to that Act, 'attorneys' conducted business in the Common Law Courts, 'solicitors' business in the Court of Chancery, and 'proctors' ecclesiastical and admiralty business; but it was the general practice, although any person might be admitted to practise as an attorney or solicitor only, to be admitted to practise as an attorney and solicitor also.

Solicitors practise as advocates before magistrates at petty sessions and quarter sessions where there is no bar, in County Courts, at Arbitrations, at Judges' Chambers, Coroners' Inquests, Revising Barristers' Courts, Under Sheriffs' and Secondaries' Courts, and the Court of Bankruptcy. The annual certificate of a solicitor expires on the 15th November, in every year, without any reference to the day on which it was issued. If taken out before the 16th December it will have relation back to the 15th November (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127, s. 22), and protect from penalties incurred before that time for having practised without a certificate; but if taken out on or after the 16th December, it will have relation only to the day on which it was issued; and if it be not issued before the end of the year, the solicitor's name will not appear in the 'Law List.' The duty payable is thus regulated: if the solicitor practise within ten miles of the General Post Office in London, then, for the first three years, the yearly duty is 4*l.* 10*s.*, and for every subsequent year 9*l.*; if he practise elsewhere, then, for the first three years, 3*l.*, and for every subsequent year 6*l.*—33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, ss. 59—64, & Sched. The incorporated Law Society is registrar of Solicitors.

The principal statutes regulating the admission, etc., etc., of solicitors are:—The Solicitors' Act, 1843, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 43; The Solicitors' Act, 1860, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127; The Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 28; The Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act, 1874, 37 & 38 Vict. c. 68; and The Solicitors' Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 25. See these and other statutes set out in Chit. Stat., vol. vi., tit. 'Solicitors,' and consult Cordery on Solicitors. The remuneration of solicitors for non-contentious business is provided for by General Orders under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, infra.

The Act of 1843 provides (s. 3) that no person shall be admitted as an attorney or solicitor, unless he shall have been bound by contract in writing (commonly called 'articles,' whence the title 'articled clerk') to serve as clerk for five years to a practising attorney or solicitor. The period is reduced to three years if such person possesses a university degree (Act of 1860, s. 2), or has previously been called to the bar (s. 3), or has been ten years clerk to an attorney previous to being articled (s. 4), or has previously been a Scotch solicitor (s. 15), or has been a member of the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland (35 & 36 Vict. c. 81), and may be reduced to four years by regulations of the judges, if such person has passed an university examination (Act of 1877, s. 13: regulations under this section reduce the period in the case of a person who has passed moderations at Oxford or the previous examination at Cambridge, or the matriculation examination, being placed in the first division at the University of London).

As to Articled Clerks, it is provided as follows:—No solicitor may have more than two at one time, nor any after discontinuing business (Act of 1843, s. 4), although solicitors being in partnership may have two each (Ex parte Bayley, 9 B. & C. 691), and there may be a binding to a firm, which operates as a binding to each member of it (Re Holland L. R. 7 Q. B. 277). If the solicitor become bankrupt, etc., the articles may be discharged or assigned to another person by the High Court (Id., s. 5), and if the solicitor die or leave off practice, or the articles be cancelled by mutual consent, fresh articles may be entered into with another solicitor (Id., s. 13). The clerk may not engage in any other employment without the consent in writing of the solicitor, and the sanction of a judge of the High Court (Act of 1860, s. 10, as amended by Act of 1874, s. 4). Within 6 months of the execution of the articles, an affidavit of the execution must be made and filed by the solicitor; such affidavit may be filed after the 6 months, but if it be filed after the 6 months the service of the clerk is computed from the day of filing unless the High Court otherwise order (Act of 1843, s. 9, and see Ex parte Banyard, L. R. 10 C. P. 638). Before admission the clerk must make an affidavit of having duly served (Act of 1843, s. 14), but the Master of the Rolls has power to admit in case of an irregular service occasioned by accident, mistake, or some other sufficient cause (Act of 1874, s. 15).

Examinations of persons intending to become solicitors are held as fixed by the Act of 1877, and the regulations of the Incorporated Law Society under that Act. They are three in number—the preliminary, the intermediate, and the final examination. The preliminary is held in each of the months of February, May, July, and October; the intermediate and final in each of the months of January, April, June, and November (Regs. 6, 12, 20). There is an appeal to the Master of the Rolls, against the refusal of a certificate of having passed the intermediate or final, by any person who has been refused and who objects to the refusal 'whether on account of the nature or difficulty of the questions put to him by the examiners, or on any ground whatever' (Act of 1877, s. 9). Persons possessing a university degree are exempted from the preliminary examination (Id., s. 10), and the Lord Chief Justice of England or the Master of the Rolls may grant special exemptions from that examination (Id., s. 11). Barristers of not less than 5 years standing, having been disbarred, and having obtained certificates of fitness from two benchers, are exempted from the intermediate examination (Id., s. 12). A solicitor is exempted from various offices requiring personal service, and cannot be compelled to serve on juries (33 & 34 Vict. c. 37). If a solicitor bring a personal action, he has the privilege of laying the venue in Middlesex (2 Wm. Bl. 1065), and (before the establishment of the Supreme Court of Judicature) he was entitled to sue and be sued in his own Court. A solicitor is liable to his client for negligence; and may be struck off the roll for misconduct. No application to strike a solicitor off the roll or to compel him to answer an affidavit may be made until fourteen clear days after notice to the registrar of solicitors of the intended application. See 37 & 38 Vict. c. 68 (s. 7), which Act also makes provisions for penalties for wrongfully acting as a solicitor and for prosecuting such an offence in a summary way. A solicitor cannot sue for (although he may set off) his bill of costs until one month after its delivery in the manner prescribed by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 37. He has a general lien for his costs on the papers of his clients. Communications made to him in his professional character by a client are privileged.

The Act of 1870 amends the law relating to the remuneration of attorneys, and inter alia enacts that the remuneration of attorneys and solicitors may be fixed by agreement. The Act also provides (s. 16) that a solicitor may take security from his client for his future fees, charges, and disbursements, to be ascertained by taxation or otherwise; and also that (s. 17), subject to any general rules or orders thereafter to be made, upon every taxation of costs, fees, charges, or disbursements, the taxing officer may allow interest at such rate and from such time as he thinks just, on moneys disbursed by the attorney or solicitor for his client, and on moneys of the client in the hands of the solicitor, and improperly retained by him. Section 18 enacts that upon any taxation of costs the taxing officer may, in determining the remuneration, if any, to be allowed to the solicitor for his services, have regard, subject to any general rules or orders thereafter to be made, to the skill, labour, and responsibility involved.

The 34 Vict. c. 18, repeals the disqualification of attorneys, solicitors, and proctors from being justices of the peace for counties, but provides that 'no person shall be capable of becoming a justice of the peace for any county in which he shall practise his profession.'

By the Order in Council of August 12th, 1875, Ord. VI., provisions are made for regulating the costs to be allowed to solicitors on taxation in contentious business. By this Order two scales are provided. The effect of the Order may be thus summarised:—The lower scale applies to ordinary money claims to all matters assigned to the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, Exchequer, and Probate, etc., Divisions of the High Court of Justice, and to matters assigned to the Chancery Division where less than £1000 is in question. The higher scale applies to actions for special injunctions, and other cases to which the lower scale is not made applicable.

The remuneration of solicitors in conveyancing and other non-contentious business is fixed by a General Order called 'The Solicitors' Remuneration Order,' 1882, which came into force on the 1st January, 1883, under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 44, with reference to (inter alia) the amount of money to which the business relates, and the skill, labour, and responsibility involved therein on the part of the solicitor.

The Act of 1881 was passed in the same year as the Conveyancing Act (see that title), and was introduced into Parliament with that Act and the Settled Land Act (see that title). The object of it may best be understood by a study of the ninth chapter of Williams' Real Property, in which the old practice of payment by mere length of documents (which the Conveyancing Act was intended to shorten) is sharply criticised.

As to the admission to the Supreme Court of Solicitors of Colonial Courts, see 20 & 21 Vict. c. 39, and the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 87.

As to solicitors ('Law Agents') in Scotland, see 36 & 37 Vict. c. 63.

Solicitor-General, a law officer of the Crown, appointed by patent, and holding office during the continuance of the ministry of which he is a subordinate member. He is usually knighted. He ranks after the Attorney-General. To the household of a queen-consort, there belongs an officer with this appellation.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 273, 274, n. See title PRECEDENCE.

Solicitor to the Suitors' Fund, an officer of the Court of Chancery, who is appointed in certain cases guardian ad litem.—See Smi. Ch. Pr. 101.

Solidatum, absolute right or property.

Solidum. To be bound in solido is to be bound for the whole debt jointly and severally with others; but where each is bound for his share, they are said to be bound pro rata parte.

Solidus legalis, a coin equal to 13s. 4d. of the present standard.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 119, n.

Solinus terræ, a ploughland.—Cowel.

Solitary confinement. The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts of 1861, each provide (see CONFINEMENT, SOLITARY) that no offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for a longer period than one month at a time, nor three months in the space of a year.

Solo cedit, quicquid solo plantatur. Office of Exec. 57.—(What is planted in the soil belongs to the soil.)

Solum rex hoc non facere potest, quod non potest injuste agere. 11 Co. 72.—(This alone the king cannot do, he cannot act unjustly.)

Solus Deus facit hæredem, non homo. Co. Litt. 5.—(God alone makes the heir, not man.)

Solutio, a discharge; the performance of that to which a person is bound.—Civ. Law.

Solutione feodi militis parliamenti, or Feodi burgensis parliamenti, old writs whereby knights of the shire and burgesses might have recovered their wages or allowance if it had been refused.—35 Hen. VIII. c. 11.

Solvendo esse, to be in a state of solvency, i.e., able to pay.

Solvere pœnas, to pay the penalty.

Solvit ad diem, was a plea in an action of debt, on bond, etc., that the money was paid at the day appointed.—1 Selv. N. P., 13th ed., 512.

Solvit ante diem, a plea that the money was paid before the day appointed.

Solvit post diem, was a plea that the money was paid after the day appointed.—1 Selv. N. P., 13th ed., 513.

Somnambulism. Sleep-walking. Whether this condition is anything more than a co-operation of the voluntary muscles with the thoughts which occupy the mind during sleep, is not settled by physiologists.

Son assault demesne, a justification in an action of assault and battery, on the ground that the plaintiff made the first assault, and what the defendant did was in his own defence. It was a plea by confession and avoidance.—1 Selv. N. P., 13th ed., 2. See now PLEADING, STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Son-in-law [gener, Lat.], the husband of one's daughter.

Sontage, a tax of 40s. heretofore laid upon every knight's fee.—Cowel.

Sorcery. Prosecution for witchcraft, sorcery, etc., or for charging another with any such offences is abolished by 9 Geo. II. c. 5; but the same Act enacts that persons pretending to use witchcraft, sorcery, etc., shall suffer one year's imprisonment on conviction. Persons using any subtle craft, means, or device, by palmistry or otherwise, to deceive the people, are rogues and vagabonds, and to be punished with imprisonment and hard labour.—5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 4.

Sorehon, or Sorn, an arbitrary exaction, formerly existing in Scotland and Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers by way of contempt called Gilliwilfitts, and lived on free quarters. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Sorites, a form of argument which consists in consolidating several syllogisms (see SYLLOGISM), in which the subject of the minor premiss is the same, so as to suppress the conclusion in every syllogism but the last, and the minor premiss in every syllogism but the first.

Sors; principal; to distinguish it from interest.—Cowel.

Sothsaga, or Sothsage [fr. soth, true, and saga, Sax., testimony], history.—Cowel.

Soul-scot, a mortuary.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 741.

Sounding in damages. An action is said to sound in damages when it is brought for the recovery of unascertained damages.

Sourcar, a merchant or banker; a money-lender.—Indian.

South Africa. The South Africa Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 47, to authorize, by Order in Council, the confederation, under one Government, of such of the South African Colonies as may agree thereto.

South Sea-fund, the produce of the taxes appropriated to pay the interest of such part of the National Debt as was advanced by the South Sea Company and its annuitants. The holders of South Sea Annuities have been paid off, or have received other stock in lieu thereof.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 578.

South Wales, Highways.—As to the better management and control of the highways in South Wales, see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 68, and 41 & 42 Vict. c. 34.

Sovereign, a chief or supreme person. See QUEEN. Also, a piece of money of the value of twenty shillings.

Sovereign power, or Sovereignty, that power in a state to which none other is superior.

Sowlegrove, February, so called in South Wales.—Cowel.

Sowming and Rowming, the appropriating or placing of cattle on a common, according to the respective rights of various parties interested. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Sowne [fr. souvenu, Fr., remembered], such as is leviable.—Cowel.

S. P., sine prole, i.e., without issue.

Spadarius, a sword bearer.—Blount.

Spado, an eunuch; an impotent man.—Civ. Law.

Sparsim [Lat.], dispersedly.

Spatæ Placitum, a court for the speedy execution of justice upon military delinquents.—Cowel.

Speaker of the House of Commons. This great officer is the organ or spokesman of the Commons; in modern times he is more occupied in presiding over the deliberations of the House than in delivering speeches on their behalf. The principal duties of the Speaker are the following:—To preside, as Chairman of the House, at its debates when not in committee; to give a casting vote, when the votes are equal; to read to the Sovereign petitions or addresses from the Commons, and to deliver in the royal presence, whether at the palace or in the House of Lords, such speeches as are usually made on behalf of the Commons; to reprimand persons who have incurred the displeasure of the House; to issue warrants of committal or release for breaches of privilege; and to communicate in writing with any parties, when so instructed by the House. He is chosen by the House of Commons, from amongst its members, subject to the approval of the Crown, and holds office till the dissolution of the Parliament in which he was elected. His salary is 6,000*l* a year, with a furnished residence. At the end of his official labours he is usually rewarded by a peerage. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 84, as to the appointment of a Deputy-Speaker during the Speaker's absence.

Speaker of the House of Lords. The Lord Chancellor, by virtue of his office, becomes, on the delivery of the seal to him by the Sovereign, Speaker of the House of Lords. He is usually, but not necessarily, a peer. There has always been a Deputy-Speaker, and formerly there were two or more, but since the year 1815 there has been only one. The chairman in committees generally fills this office. In the absence of the Lord Chancellor and of the Deputy-Speaker, it is competent to the House to appoint any noble lord to take the wool-sack. The Speaker is the organ or mouthpiece of the House, and it therefore is his duty to represent their lordships in their collective capacity, when holding intercourse with other public bodies or with individuals. He has not a casting vote upon divisions, for should the numbers prove equal, the non-contents prevail. The Deputy-Speaker of the Lords is appointed by the Crown.—Dod's Parl. Comp.

Speaking demurrer, one in which new facts, which did not appear upon the face of a bill in equity, were introduced to support a demurrer. See 1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed., 538. See now DEMURRER.

Special Administration, a limited one, as of certain specific effects, such as a term of years.

Special Administrator. See last title.

Special Agent, one authorised to transact only a particular business for his principal, as distinguished from a general agent.

Special allowances of costs. See Order in Council 12th August, 1875, ad fin.

Special bail, bail above or to the action. See BAIL, and 1 & 2 Vict. c. 45, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 38.

Special bailiff, one chosen by a party himself, to execute process in the sheriff's hands; the appointment of such a bailiff relieves the sheriff of all responsibility.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 633.

Special bastard, one born of parents before marriage, the parents afterwards intermarrying. By the civil and Scotch law he would be then legitimated.

Special case. The Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXIV., provides that the parties may, after writ issued, concur in stating the questions of law arising in the action in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court, and also that 'if it appear to the Court or a judge, either from the statement of claim or defence, or reply, or otherwise, that there is in any action a question of law, which it would be convenient to have decided before any evidence is given or any question or issue of fact is tried, or before any reference is made to a referee or an arbitrator, the Court or judge may make an order accordingly, and may direct such question of law to be raised for the opinion of the Court, either by special case, or in such other manner as the Court or judge may deem expedient.' Similar power is given to referees to state a case by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 34. As to special case before the Judicature Acts, see C. L. P. Act, 1852, ss. 42—48, and 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35 (Turner's Act). Where at a trial in a court of oyer and terminer, gaol delivery, or quarter sessions, any question of law arises on motion in arrest of judgment (or even independently of such motion), which such court finds too difficult for its determination, it is empowered by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 78, to reserve the question and to state it in the form of a special case for the judges of the superior courts as a court of criminal appeal; and in the meantime to postpone the judgment, or respite the execution of it. As to the present constitution of this court, see CROWN CASES RESERVED.

As to cases stated by justices, see 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, and Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49, s. 33, by which any person aggrieved by a conviction, order, determination, or other proceeding of a Court of Summary Jurisdiction, may appeal from the same to the High Court by special case stated by the justices.

One counsel only is heard on each side in a special case, except in the Court of Appeal, or in the House of Lords, where two are heard on each side. See SPECIAL PAPER; APPEAL.

Special claim, a claim not enumerated in the orders of 22nd April, 1850, which required the leave of the Court of Chancery to file it.—Smi Ch. Pr. 645. Such claims are abolished. See CLAIM IN EQUITY.

Special commission, an extraordinary commission of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, issued by the Crown to the judges when it is necessary that offences should be immediately tried and punished.

Special constables, persons appointed by the magistrates to execute warrants on particular occasions—41 Geo. III. c. 78; or to assist in keeping the peace, when the ordinary constables are insufficient for that purpose. See 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 41,—s. 8 of which imposes a penalty for each refusal to serve when duly called upon, while s. 2 allows a Secretary of State to order persons to be sworn in though exempt by law,—1 & 2 Vict. c. 80 (relating to canal and railway works), and s. 196 of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, by which borough justices 'shall appoint in October in every year so many as they may think fit of the inhabitants of the borough, not legally exempt from serving the office of constable, to act as special constables in the borough.'

Special damage, a particular loss flowing from the act complained of, in addition to the wrongful nature of the act itself.

Special defence, in a County Court. A defendant must give notice to the plaintiff when he or she intends to rely on a defence of set-off or counter-claim, infancy, coverture, statute of limitations, bankruptcy, or equitable defence. See 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, ss. 68, 76, and Consol. County Court Rules, 1875, Ord. ix.

Special demurrer, a demurrer for some defect in the form of the opposite party's pleading. Abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 51. Such defects in pleading as were formerly the subject of special demurrer may now be met by an application to a judge at chambers to reform the pleading.

Special examiner, one appointed to take examinations in suits in Chancery, etc., when appointed, by agreement of the parties, instead of the officer of the court, for the greater despatch of the suit. He was generally a professional lawyer.—Smi. Chancery Prac. 27; and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, ss. 31 et seq.

Special finding, of a jury, instead of amendment of variance. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 24. See, too, Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 23.

Specialia generalibus derogant. L. R. 1 C. P. 546.—(Special words derogate from general words). A special provision as to a particular subject matter is to be preferred to general language, which might have governed in the absence of such special provision. See also 4 Maq. Sc. App. Ca. 522.

Special indorsement, an indorsement in full on a bill of exchange or promissory note, which, besides the signature of the indorser, expresses in whose favour the indorsement is made. Thus: 'Pay Mr. C. D. or order, A. B. ;' the signature of the indorser being subscribed to the direction. Its effect is to make the instrument payable to C. D. or his order only. See Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, s. 34, subs. (2).

Special indorsement on summons. See SUMMONS, WRIT OF.

Special injunctions, prohibitory writs or interdicts against acts of parties, such as waste, nuisance, piracy, etc. See INJUNCTION.

Special jury, a jury consisting of persons who, in addition to the ordinary qualifications, are of a certain station in society, as esquires, bankers, or merchants, etc. The 33 and 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 6, provides, that every man whose name shall be on the jurors' book for any county in England or Wales, or for the county of the City of London, and who shall be legally entitled to be called an esquire, or shall be a person of higher degree, or shall be a banker or merchant, or who shall occupy a private dwelling-house rated or assessed to the poor rate or to the inhabited house duty on a value of not less than 100*l.* in a town containing, according to the census then next preceding the preparation of the jury list, 20,000 inhabitants and upwards, or rated or assessed to the poor rate or to the inhabited house duty on a value of not less than 50*l.* elsewhere, or who shall occupy premises other than a farm, rated or assessed as aforesaid on a value of not less than 100*l.*, shall be qualified and liable to serve on special juries in every such county in England and Wales, and in London respectively.

or a farm rated or assessed as aforesaid on a value of not less than 300*l.*, shall be qualified and liable to serve on special juries in every such county in England and Wales, and in London respectively.

'The precept issued by the judges of assize shall direct the sheriff to summon a sufficient number of special jurymen, not exceeding forty-eight, to try the special jury causes at the assizes; and the persons summoned shall be the jury for trying the special jury causes at the assizes, and a printed panel of such special jurors shall be made, kept, delivered, and annexed to the Nisi Prius Record as is provided with reference to the panel of common jurors; and upon the trial the special jury shall be balloted for, and called in the order in which they shall be drawn from the box, like common jurors: provided that the Court or a judge, in such case as they or he may think fit, may order that a special jury be struck according to the late practice, and such order shall be a sufficient warrant for striking it, and making a panel for the trial of the cause.'—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 108.

Right to Special Jury.—The plaintiff in any action, except replevin, is entitled to have the cause tried by a special jury, upon giving notice in writing to the defendant, at such time as would be necessary for a notice of trial, of his intention that the cause shall be so tried; and the defendant or plaintiff in replevin is so entitled, on giving the like notice within the time limited for obtaining a rule for a special jury; and it is also provided that the Court or a judge may at any time order that a cause shall be tried by a special jury, upon such terms as they or he shall think fit (s. 109); this enactment was applied to trials in London and Middlesex by the Juries Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 18).

Fees of Jurors.—Each special juror is entitled to receive one guinea only for each cause he tries, but in very long cases the parties have occasionally agreed to pay more. The provisions as to payment of jurors, introduced by the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 77, s. 22,—by which each special juror was entitled to one guinea each day of attendance,—were repealed by 34 & 35 Vict. c. 2.

Cost of special Jury.—The party upon whose application the special jury is struck bears all the expenses occasioned at the trial of the cause by the special jury, and is not allowed any more costs than for a common jury, unless the judge, immediately after the verdict, certifies upon the back of the record that it was a proper cause to be tried by a special jury. See also JURY, and TRIAL.

Special license, one granted by the Archbishop of Canterbury to authorize a marriage at any time or place whatever.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 247, 255.

Special motion. See MOTION.

Special Occupancy. Where an estate is granted to a man and his heirs during the life of cestui que vie, and the grantee dies without alienation, and while the life for which he held continues, the heir will succeed, and he is called a special occupant. See 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 26, ss. 3, 6.

Special paper, a list kept in the courts of common law, and afterwards in the Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer Divisions of the High Court, in which list demurrers, special cases, etc., to be argued are set down. It was distinguished from the new trial paper, peremptory paper, Crown paper, revenue paper, etc., according to the practice of the particular Division.

Special pleaders, members of an inn of court, who devote themselves mainly to the drawing of pleadings, and to attending at judges' chambers. If not called to the bar, as was in former times (when many special pleaders practised as such prior to being called to the bar) frequently the case, but has latterly become very uncommon, they take out annual certificates on which a duty of 9*l.* is payable, under the Stamp Act, 1870. Pleaders, in proportion to barristers, have, of late years, considerably diminished in number.

Special Pleading, the science of pleading. It is a forensic invention, due to the dialectic genius of the middle ages, but nearly destroyed by modern innovation. See Steph. on Plead.; Bullen and Leake on Pleading; and Chitty's Precedents. See PLEADING.

Special Pleas, were pleas which were not in the form of what were called general issues, but which alleged affirmative matter, as infancy, coverture, statute of limitations, etc. See now PLEADING; STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Special pleas in bar in criminal matters go to the merits of the indictment, and give a reason why the prisoner ought to be discharged from the prosecution; they are of four kinds; viz., a former acquittal, a former conviction, a former attainder, or a pardon.

Special property, qualified property, which see.

Special Referee. See REFERENCE.

Special sessions. See SESSIONS.

Special tail, where an estate-tail is limited to the children of two given parents as to

A. and the heirs of his body by B., his wife.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 244.

Special traverse, a form of pleading, abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 65.

Special trust. Where the machinery of a trust is introduced for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and the trustee is not a mere passive depository of the estate, but is called upon to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention; as where a conveyance is to trustees upon trust to sell for payment of debts.

Special trustee. See last title.

Special verdict, a special finding of the facts of the case, leaving to the court the application of the law to the facts thus found. In general, where it is intended that a special verdict shall be taken, evidence is given at the trial by each party to prove the fact upon which he relies; and if there is any disputed question of fact the same is determined by the jury. Afterwards, the counsel settle the precise terms of the special verdict, the judge being resorted to in case of difference.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 450. See TRIAL.

Specialty, a contract by deed.

Specialty debts, bonds, mortgages, debts, secured by writing under seal; they formerly ranked next to those of record, and above simple contract debts; but this distinction has now been abolished by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, s. 1, as to which see SIMPLE CONTRACT DEBT.

Specie, metallic money. Anything in specie is anything in its own form, not any equivalent, substitute, or reparation.

Specification, a particular and detailed account of a thing; also, a description of a patent directed to be enrolled in the High Court of Chancery, within a specified time, its object being to put the public in full possession of the inventor's secret, so that any person may be in a condition to avail himself of it, when the period of exclusive privilege has expired.—16 & 17 Vict. c. 115, s. 6. See LETTERS PATENT.

As to indexes of specifications for the public use, see 15 and 16 Vict. c. 83, and 16 and 17 Vict. c. 5, s. 8.

Specific legacy. See LEGACY.

Specific performance of agreements. Equity, in obedience to the cardinal rule of natural justice, that a person should perform his agreement, enforces, pursuant to a regulated and judicial discretion, the actual accomplishment of a thing stipulated for, on the ground that what is lawfully agreed to be done ought to be done and indeed is, in its contemplation, considered as now done.

The common law has not recognized this principle; it has only given damages to a suffering party for the non-performance of an executory agreement; the C. L. P. Act, 1854, however, imparted to the common law writ of mandamus a little more efficacy. Consult Fry's Specific Performance of Contracts.

The several requisites of a contract, which will be directed to be specifically executed, are these:—

(a) The contract must be entered into by competent parties, or their lawfully authorised agents. The general rule is, that all parties who can bind themselves at law, are competent to enter into agreements, which equity will enforce.

The instance of supplying a defective execution of a power in favour of meritorious appointees is, however, an exception to this general rule.

The specific performance of a contract will be decreed notwithstanding the infancy of a deceased vendor's heir-at-law, for he is deemed to be a trustee for the purchaser, and the court will grant, in such a case, a vesting order pursuant to 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, s. 30.

(b) The parties must contract willingly, without undue bias, and not under any improper influence.

(c) The terms of the contract must be understood by the parties without mistake or misapprehension, and must be certain and defined, importing a concluded agreement.

(d) The contract must be entered into for a valuable executory consideration, such as marriage or money; and not for a merely good consideration, how meritorious soever it may be.

(e) While a valuable consideration exists on the one side, there must be a promise or sale on the other, together with a mutuality of remedy between the parties. In other words, there must be some inducement passing from one party in order to render binding the promise of the other.

(f) The contract must be in writing, if so required by the Statute of Frauds. See FRAUDS.

Equity, however, will entertain actions for the specific performance of contracts, which are not reduced into writing, where there does not appear any danger of fraud or perjury. The following parol contracts will, therefore, be specifically enforced:—

(1) A sale ordered by a decree of a Court, for the judgment of the court in confirming such a purchase takes the transaction out of the statute. It is, however, now usual for the purchaser to subscribe a written or printed contract.

(2) Where a parol agreement has been so substantially performed in part, as to render it inequitable not to enforce the whole of it.

An agreement will not be considered as partly performed or executed, unless the acts done are such as could be done with no other design than to complete it. Neither will acts merely introductory, or ancillary to an agreement, be considered as part performances, although attended with expense. Therefore, delivering an abstract, giving directions for a conveyance, going to view the estate, appointing an appraiser to value it, making valuations, etc., will not take a parol agreement out of the statute; neither will payment of the purchase-money, because while the Statute of Frauds provides that part payment shall bind in the case of personalty, its silence as to lands is construed to mean that part payment should not have such an effect. But if possession be delivered to the purchaser in part performance, the agreement will be considered as in part executed, especially if he expend money in building on or in improving the property according to the agreement, for the estate will never be so construed as to protect or be a means of fraud. Of course, the terms of the contract must distinctly appear to the satisfaction of the court.

(3) Where the agreement has not been reduced into writing through the fraud of one of the parties, the agreement will be exempted from the operation of the statute, and allowed to be proved by parol evidence.

(4) Another case in which parol agreements are considered binding is when the land is partnership property. Where a partnership, or an agreement in the nature of one, exists between two persons, and land is acquired by the partnership as a substratum of it, the land is in the nature of stock-in-trade of the partnership, and this being proved as an independent fact, the Court, without regarding the Statute of Frauds, will inquire of what the partnership stock consisted, whether that stock be land or any other kind of property.

(5) Where a suit is brought for the execution of a verbal agreement fully set forth in the plaintiff's claim, and the defendant puts in his answer or defence thereto, and confesses the agreement, the case is thereby taken entirely out of the mischief intended to be prevented by the statute, and there being no danger of perjury, the Court will decree a specific performance, and should the defendant die, the same decree will be made against the heir of such person, as if the ancestor were living. Should, however, the defendant falsely deny the agreement, although he may be indicted for perjury, yet a conviction will not enable equity to decree a performance of the agreement. And where he admits the parol contract, but insists, by way of defence, upon the protection of the statute, the suit will be barred.

Seeing that the basis of the specific execution of agreements is the inadequacy of the remedy at law by which damages only can be recovered, equity will refuse this relief when such damages would be commensurate with the injury sustained; therefore, as a broad rule, performance of contracts affecting realty will be decreed; but not of contracts for the sale of stock, goods, or other things of a merely personal nature, because the damages which can be recovered at law for their breach will purchase other stock or goods. But equity will decree a specific performance of an agreement for the sale of a chattel which is unique, and cannot be replaced, as an original picture, etc.

Equity has never yet decreed the specific performance of the following contracts—viz. : common covenants in a lease, the proper remedy being at law; an agreement or covenant to refer a dispute to arbitration, it being contrary to public policy that private tribunals should adjudicate upon matters which ought to be publicly investigated (but an award respecting lands, and not merely for the payment of money, will be ordered to be specifically executed); an agreement to purchase the business of an attorney, for there are not any means of compelling the clients to retain the purchaser; an agreement for a partnership, unless it be for a given period, since it might be dissolved immediately afterwards, and equity does nothing in vain.

To the rule, however, of not decreeing the specific execution of mere personal contracts there are many exceptions; thus, agreements of a negative character, as not to build or not to carry on a trade, or negative covenants in a farming lease, are frequently enforced by injunction. So equity will sometimes secure the performance of a positive agreement by an injunction in a negative form, as to restrain a defendant from keeping possession of books, contrary to express covenant. Again, upon positive agreements as to personal acts, equity has jurisdiction to direct, by a simple mandatory order, those acts to be done which have been agreed to be done; thus the court decrees performance of a covenant for further assurance, should any subsequent right accrue to the person entering into such covenant; and more than this, if there is no such covenant, the court implies an agreement, that any subsequent right acquired by the vendor of an estate shall be conveyed to the purchaser. It may be stated generally, with respect to agreements to do personal acts, and with respect to other agreements, that if damages at law would be an inadequate remedy, and if the act is certain in its nature and capable of being performed, performance will be decreed.

As to the former power of the Court of Chancery to award damages, see 21 & 22 Vict. c. 27.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34, all causes and matters for the specific performance of contracts between vendors and purchasers of real estates, including contracts for leases, are assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. Specific performance may be obtained up to a limited amount in the County Courts, under 28 & 29 Vict. c. 99, and 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, s. 9.

Speedy execution. A plaintiff having obtained a verdict in a cause, was not entitled to issue execution until 14 days, unless a judge should order execution to issue at an earlier period, which was called 'speedy execution.'—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 120, and H. T. 1853, r. 57. Under the Jud. Acts, immediate execution is the rule. See EXECUTION.

Speedy Judgment Act, 1 Wm. IV. c. 7.

Spes recuperandi [Lat.], the hope of recovery.

Spigurnel [fr. spicurran, Sax., to shut up or inclose], the sealer of the royal writs.

Spinster, an unmarried woman, so called because she was supposed to be occupied in spinning.

In Scotland, the wife's or cognate side of the family was termed the 'spindle-side,' in contradistinction to the agnate or husband's side, which is denominated the 'spear' or 'sword-side.' The armorial bearings of the families of widows and spinsters are painted on this spindle, which is popularly termed a lozenge.

Spirits. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 114, and the Spirits Acts, 1880, 43 & 44 Vict. c. 24, the excise regulations relating to the distilling, rectifying, and dealing in spirits have been successively amended and consolidated.

As to licenses for the sale of spirits, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS; and as to barring of action for price of spirits sold in small quantities, see TIPPLING ACT.

Spiritual corporations, corporations the members of which are entirely spiritual persons, and incorporated as such, for the furtherance of religion and perpetuating the rights of the church.

They are of two sorts :

(1) Sole, as bishops, certain deans, parsons, and vicars; or

(2) Aggregate, as dean and chapter, prior and convent, abbot and monk.

Spiritual courts, ecclesiastical courts, which see.

Spiritual lords, the archbishops and bishops of the House of Peers.—1 Br. & Had. Com., 184, and 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 328.

Spiritualism, the pretending to hold communication with spirits. The pretender may be convicted as a rogue and a vagabond and imprisoned for three months; and upon a second conviction he may be whipped.—Monck v. Hilton, 2 Ex D. 268. (See VAGRANT.) Large gifts by an aged widow to a so-called 'Spiritual Medium' were set aside on the ground of undue influence in Lyon v. Home, L. R. 6 Eq. 655.

Spirituality, that which belongs to one as an ecclesiastic.

Spirituality of benefices, the tithes of land, etc.

Spital, or Spittle, a charitable foundation; a hospital for diseased people.—Cowel.

Splitting a cause of action, suing for only a part of a claim or demand, with a view to suing for the rest in another action. This is not permitted. See County Court Act, 1846, s. 63, and Grimbly v. Ackroyd, 1 Ex. 479.

Spoliation, a writ or suit for the fruits of a church or the church itself, to be sued in the spiritual and not in the temporal court. It lies for one incumbent against another, where they both claim by one patron, and the right of patronage does not come in question.—3 Bl. Com. 90; 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 312.

Spoliatus debet ante omnia restituui. 2 Inst. 714.—(A person who has been despoiled, ought to be restored to his former state before anything else.)

Sponsalia, or Stipulatio sponsalitia, espousals; mutual promises to marry.—Civ. Law.

Sponsio judicialis, the feigned issue of the Romans. See FEIGNED ISSUE.

Sponsions, agreements or engagements made by certain public officers, as generals or admirals in time of war, either without authority, or in excess of the authority under which they purport to be made.—Inter. Law.

Sponsor, a surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another, particularly a godfather in baptism.

Sponte oblata, a free gift or present to the Crown.

Sponte virum mulier fugiens et adultera facta, dotē suā careat, nisi sponsi sponte retracta. Co. Litt. 32 b.—(Let a woman leaving her husband of her own accord, and committing adultery, lose her dower, unless taken back by her husband of his own accord.)

Sportula, or Sportella, a dole or largess either of meat or money given by princes or great men to the poor. It was properly the pannier or basket in which the meat was brought, or with which the poor went to beg it, thence the word was transferred to the meat itself, and thence to money sometimes given in lieu of it.—Encyc. Lond.

Spousal, marriage-nuptials.

Spouse-breach, adultery, as opposed to simple fornication.—Cowel.

Spreading false news, to make discord between the Sovereign and nobility, or concerning any great man of the realm, is a misdemeanour, punishable at common law by fine and imprisonment.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 257.

Spring guns. The setting spring guns, etc., calculated to destroy life or inflict grievous bodily harm on a trespasser, is a misdemeanour.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 31.

Springing use, contingent use, which see.

Spuilzie [fr. spoliatio, Lat.], the taking away or meddling with moveables in another's possession, without the consent of the owner or authority of law.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Spurii [either fr. σποράδην, Gk., at hazard; or fr. sine patre, Lat., without a father], children conceived in prostitution.—Sand. Just., 5th ed., 366.

Squibs. The unlicensed making or selling or exposing to sale fireworks, or the throwing, casting, or firing squibs or other fireworks in or into any thoroughfare or public place, is an offence punishable by fine (see Explosives Act, 1875, ss. 48, 49, 80, replacing the repealed 23 & 24 Vict. c. 139, amended by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 130, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 98); and may be prosecuted by indictment, either under the statute or at common law. See also (as to the Metropolis) 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 52; and also the squib case, Scott v. Shepherd, 2 Bl. 892, and 1 Smi. L. C., 6th ed., 417.

Squire, contraction of esquire, which see; and see 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 616 et seq.

S. S., Collar of. Collars bearing these letters, or consisting of many of them linked together, have been much worn by persons holding great offices in the state, e.g., by the Lord Chief Justice of England. The signification is obscure.

Stabilia, a writ called by that name, founded on a custom in Normandy, that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the prince that it might be put into his hands till the right was decided, whereupon he had this writ.

Stabilitio venationis, the driving deer to a stand.

Stabit præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. Hob. 297.—(A presumption will stand good till the contrary is proved.)

Stablestand, one of the four evidences or presumptions whereby a man is convicted to intend the stealing of the royal deer in the forest; and this is when a man is found at his standing in the forest, ready to shoot with a cross-bow bent at any deer, or with a long bow, or else standing close by a tree with greyhounds in a leash ready to slip.—Cowel.

Stade, Stadium, a furlong.—Cowel.

Staff-herding, the following of cattle within a forest.

Stage coaches. As to the duty thereon, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 14, repealing various previous enactments.

Stage-play. See THEATRE.

Stagiarus, a resident.—Cowel.

Stagnum, a pool. By this name the land and water pass.—Co. Litt. 5 a.

Stake, a deposit made to answer an event.

Stakeholder, one with whom a stake is deposited. As to when money deposited in the hands of a stakeholder, to abide the event of a wager, may be recovered, see 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, and the title WAGER, post.

St. Alban's. The borough was disfranchised by 15 Vict. c. 9. As to the new see of St. Alban's, see 38 & 39 Vict. c. 34.

Stale, larceny.—Ang. Sax.

Stallage, the liberty or right of pitching, or erecting stalls in fairs or markets, or the money paid for the same.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 664.

Stallarius, a master of the horse; also the owner of a stall in the market.—Spelm.

Stamp duties, a branch of the revenue. They are a tax imposed on all parchment and paper whereon certain legal proceedings and certain private instruments are written; and on licenses for various purposes.

The consolidating 'Stamp Act, 1870' (33 & 34 Vict. c. 97), supersedes the very numerous older enactments (in great part repealed by the Inland Revenue Repeal Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 90) in regard to the duty on the various classes of instruments, but it is important to bear in mind that by s. 17 of the Stamp Act, 1870, reversing the former law (see Buckworth v. Simpson, 1 C. M. & R. 384), the stamp to be affixed to an unstamped document to render it admissible in evidence is not the stamp in accordance with the law at the time of affixing it, but the stamp in accordance with the law in force at the time when the document was first executed.

By s. 15 of the Stamp Act, 1870, 'except where express provision to the contrary is made by this or any other act' (i.e., in regard to bills of lading by s. 56, and appointment of proxies to vote at a meeting by s. 102, which sections are believed to be the only express provisions to the contrary), any unstamped or insufficiently stamped instrument may be stamped after the execution thereof, on payment of the unpaid duty, and a penalty of 10*l.*, 'and a further penalty where the unpaid duty exceeds 10*l.*, of 5 per cent. per annum on such duty, from the day upon which the instrument was first executed, up to the time when such interest is equal in amount to the unpaid duty.' By s. 16 an unstamped document may be given in evidence on payment of such penalty and a further penalty of 1*l.*, but 'save as aforesaid,' no unstamped document may be given in evidence, except in criminal proceedings.

Standard, that which is of undoubted authority, and the test of other things of the same kind; a settled rate. See 'the Weights and Measures Act, 1878.'

Standing by, sanctioning by silence and inaction. See LYING BY.

Standing mute. See MUTUS.

Standing orders, general regulations to be observed in passing private acts through parliament. An edition of the Standing Orders of both Houses of Parliament is published each year.

Stannary [fr. stannum, Lat.; stéan, Cornish, tin], a tin mine.

There are stannary courts in Devonshire and Cornwall for the administration of justice among the tanners therein. They are courts of record of the same limited and exclusive nature as those of the counties palatine. They are held before a judge called the vice-warden, in virtue of a privilege granted to the workers in the tin mines there, to sue and be sued only in their own courts, that they may not be drawn from their business, which is highly profitable to the public, by following their lawsuits in other courts. Error did not lie to the superior courts, but by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 32, s. 26, from all decrees and orders of the vice-warden on the equity side of his court, and from all judgments of the vice-warden on the common law side thereof, there was an appeal to the lord-warden and from the lord-warden a final appeal to the Judicial Committee. But now by the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 18, all the jurisdiction of the lord-warden is transferred to the Court of Appeal. See Jud. Act, 1875, s. 2. See also—

Staple. A public mart which anciently was appointed by law to be held in Westminster, Newcastle, Bristol, and other places. A court was held before the mayor of the staple, which court was governed by the law merchant. It appears from Statute 14 Ric. II., that the staple goods of England then were wool, woolfells, leather, lead, tin, cloth, butter, cheese, etc.

Star [fr. starrum, contr. fr. shetar, Heb., a deed or contract], the deeds, obligations, etc., of the Jews; also a schedule or inventory.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 309, n.

Star chamber [chambre des estoylles, Fr.], camera stellata, which see.

Stare decisis, to abide by authorities or cases already adjudicated upon.

Stare in judicio [Lat.], to sue; to litigate in a court.

Starrum. See STAR.

Statement of claim. The mode in which a plaintiff begins his pleading, substituted for the former Bill in Chancery or Declaration at Common Law, etc., by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXI., which provides, in ordinary cases, for the delivery of the statement of claim within six weeks from the time of the defendant entering an appearance.

Statement of Defence. This form of pleading is substituted for the former pleas and answers, by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXII., which provides, in ordinary cases, for the delivery of the statement of defence within eight days from the delivery of the statement of claim, Order XXIV. providing for the delivery of the reply within three weeks after the delivery of the statement of defence. See also title READING.

Statesman, a freeholder and farmer in Cumberland.

State Trials, a work in thirty-three volumes octavo (from which 'selections' were brought out by Mr. J. Willis-Band in 1880), containing all trials for offences against the State and others partaking in some degree of that character, from the 9 Hen. II. to the 1 Geo. IV.

Statham. The learning of the law was thrown into a more methodical form than it has ever yet received by this author, who was a baron of the Exchequer in the time of Edw. IV. This was in his Abridgment of the Laws, being a kind of digest containing most titles of the law arranged in alphabetical order, and comprising under each head adjudged cases, abridged from the Year-books in a concise manner.—4 Reeves, c. xxv. 117.

Statics [fr. στατική, Gk.; statique, Fr.], the science which considers the weight of bodies.

Stationarius, stagiarius, which see.

Stationers' Hall. The 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, authorizes, in every case of copyright, the registration of the title of the proprietor at Stationers' Hall, and provides that, without previous registration, no action shall be commenced, though an omission to register is not otherwise to affect the copyright itself. It was founded A.D. 1553.—2 Hall. Hist. Lit. pt. 2, c. viii., p. 366.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 37.

Stationery Office. A Government office established as a department of the Treasury, for the purpose of supplying Government offices with stationery and books, and of printing and publishing Government papers.. By the Documentary Evidence Act, 1882, 45 Vict. c. 9, documents printed under the superintendence of the office are receivable in evidence.

Statist, a statesman, a politician, one skilled in government.

Statistic, or Statistical, political.

Statistics, that part of political science which is concerned in collecting and arranging facts illustrative of the condition and resources of a state. The subject is sometimes divided into—1. Historical statistics, or facts which illustrate the former condition of a state. 2. Statistics of population. 3. Of revenue. 4. Of trade, commerce, and navigation. 5. Of the moral, social, and physical condition of the people. See Knights' Cyclopaedia.

It has been observed that neither the derivation of this word, the meanings of its collaterals (of statist especially), nor the wants of our language, which has no word comprehending the whole of political science, warrant this restriction.—Encyc. Lond.

Statu liber, a slave made free or enfranchised by testament conditionally.—Civ. Law.

Status. In Roman law this term indicated the position of a persona. A full Roman citizen must have possessed the status libertatis, familiae, and civitatis, which are sometimes called tria capita. See Sanders' Justinian, ed. 6, p. 18; Mackenzie's Roman Law, 4th ed., p. 81. The law of status thus classified men as slaves and free, citizens and aliens;—as equals and unequals, so that it may be called the law of inequality. Much in the same way the term status is used at the present time when we speak of the social status of any individual. The secondary meaning of status is that attached to it in connection with the law of contract, in which connection it signifies some disability. But whereas in Roman Law status indicated the delegation of the state rights to citizens, in modern times it is used to indicate the extension of the control of the state over the private affairs of its citizens, e.g., by the Truck Acts or Factory Act.

Status de manerio, the assembly of the tenants in the court of the lord of a manor, in order to do their customary suit.

Status of Irremovability, the right acquired by a pauper, after one year's residence in any parish, not to be removed therefrom. See SETTLEMENT.

Status quo, the existing state of things at any given date. Status quo ante bellum, the state of things before the war.

Statuta pro publico commodo late interpretantur. Jenk. Cent. 21.—(Statutes made for the public good ought to be liberally construed).

Statutable, according to statute.

Statute, a law, an edict of the legislature, an Act of Parliament. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT. Amongst collections of the public general statutes may be mentioned: The Revised Statutes (in fifteen volumes) from 1235 to 1861; The Statutes of the Realm, from Hen. III. to 13 Anne; The Statutes at Large, from Magna Charta to the Union with Ireland; and Chitty's Statutes of Practical Utility (in six volumes) from 1235 to 1880, and continued annually.

The civilians have divided statutes into three classes: personal, real, and mixed. By statutes they mean, not the positive legislation, which in England is known as Acts of Parliament, as contra-distinguished from common law; but the whole municipal law of a particular state, from whatever source arising. Sometimes the word is used by them in contradistinction to the imperial Roman law, which they are accustomed to style, by way of eminence, the common law, since it constitutes the general basis of the jurisprudence of all continental Europe, modified and restrained by local customs and usages, and positive legislation.

Statute fair, a fair at which labourers of both sexes stood and offered themselves for hire; sometimes called also Mop.

Statute Law Revision Acts. A number of general Acts were passed from the years 1861 to 1878 inclusive for the purpose of repealing Acts which, from various causes, have become obsolete. Particular Acts, passed for a similar purpose, are the Inland Revenue Acts Repeal Act, 1870; Promissory Oaths Act, 1871; and the Civil Procedure Acts Repeal Acts, 1879 and 1881. See ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

Statute-merchant, a bond of record under the hand and seal of the debtor, authenticated by the king's seal, which renders it of so high a nature that, on failure of payment on the day assigned, execution may be awarded, without any mesne process to summon the debtor, or the trouble or charges of bringing in proofs to convict him, and thus, it is presumed, it obtained the name of a 'pocket judgment.' It has fallen into disuse.—Coote on Mort. 74.

Statute of Frauds. 29 Car. II. c. 3. See FRAUDS.

Statute staple, a bond of record acknowledged before the mayor of the staple, in the presence of the constables of the staples, or one of them; the only seal required for its validity is the seal of the staple, and therefore if the statute be void for any cause, it cannot, as in the case of a statute-merchant, be proceeded on as a common obligation; and, wanting the sanction of the seal of the king, the sheriff, after the extent, cannot deliver the lands to the conusee, but must seize them into the king's hands; and in order to obtain possession of them, the conusee must sue out a writ of LIBERATE, which is a writ out of Chancery, reciting the former writ, and commanding the sheriff to deliver to the conusee all the lands, tenements, and chattels by him taken into the king's hands, if the conusee will have them, by the extent and appraisement made thereof, until he be satisfied his debt. It has grown obsolete.—Coote on Mort. 74.

Statuti, advocates, members of the college.—Civ. Law.

Statute mercatorio, an ancient writ for imprisoning him who had forfeited a statute-merchant bond, until the debt was satisfied.—Reg. Orig. 146.

Statutory exposition. When the language of a statute is ambiguous, and any subsequent enactment involves a particular interpretation of the former act, it is said to contain a statutory exposition of the former act.

Statutory release, a conveyance which superseded the old compound assurance by lease and release. It was created by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 21 (repealed, as being superseded by subsequent legislation by the Stat. Law Rev. Act, 1874, No. 2), which abolished the lease for a year.

Statuto stapulæ, the ancient writ that lay to take the body to prison, and seize upon the lands and goods of one who had forfeited the bond called statute-staple.—Reg. Orig. 151.

Statutum affirmativum non derogat communi legi. Jenk. Cent. 24.—(An affirmative statute does not derogate from the common law.)

Statutum Hiberniæ de cohæredibus, 14

Hen. III. The third public Act in the Statute book. It has been pronounced not to be a statute. In the form of it, it appears to be an instruction given by the king to his justices in Ireland, directing them how to proceed in a certain point where they entertained a doubt. It seems the justices itinerant in that country had a doubt, when land descended to sisters, whether the younger sisters ought to hold of the eldest, and do homage to her for their several portions, or of the chief lord, and do homage to him; and certain knights had been sent over to know what the practice was in England in such a case.—1 Reeves, 259.

Statutum de mercatoribus, the statute of Acton Burnell, which see.

Statum ex gratia regis dicitur, quando rex dignatur cedere de jure suo regio, pro commodo et quiete populi sui. 2 Inst. 378.—(A statute is said to be by the grace of the king, when the king deigns to yield some portion of his royal rights for the good and quiet of his people.)

Statutum generaliter est intelligendum quando verba statuti sunt specialia, ratio autem generalis. 10 Co. 101.—(When the words of a statute are special, but the reason of it general, it is to be understood generally.)

Statutum sessionum (the statute-sessions), a meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between masters and servants, rating of wages, etc.—5 Eliz. c. 4.

Statutum speciale statuto speciali non derogat. Jenk. Cent. 199.—(One special statute does not take from another special statute.)

Staunforde, the author of the 'Pleas of the Crown,' in the reign of Philip and Mary. This book is written in French; the method of it is perspicuous, and the matter disposed with learning and accuracy. The author is uncommonly full in his quotations, the statutes are generally given at length, and whole pages are frequently transcribed from Bracton. This is in general done with success and propriety, though sometimes his author has failed him; as, among other instances, may be observed Bracton's definition of larceny, which was not law at the time Staunforde wrote.

As Staunforde has the praise of being our earliest writer on pleas of the Crown, so has his merit been acknowledged by those who have followed him in the same walk; they having, in general, adhered to the arrangement and divisions of his work. He treats of his subject under three heads: first, of crimes; next, of the method of bringing delinquents to justice; and lastly, of trials and punishment. The several titles into which these are subdivided have furnished the heads of nearly every book which has been written since his time on the same subject.—4 Reeves, 564.

Staying proceedings. By the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 24 (5), the Courts have power to stay proceedings in cases where an injunction or prohibition could formerly have been obtained, but in which such course, by the consolidation of the Superior Courts, is now put an end to. See further the titles of the various proceedings in an action.

Stealing. See LARCENY.

Stealing children. See KIDNAPPING.

Steam engines. As to the negligent use of the furnaces of these, see 1 & 2 Geo. IV. c. 41; and as to damaging or obstructing them, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, ss. 29, 35, 36. As to their use on turnpike roads, see 27 & 28 Vict. c. 75. See also 8 Vict. c. 20, ss. 114—116.

Steam whistles. The use of steam whistles in certain manufactories is regulated by the 35 & 36 Vict. c. 61.

Steel-bow goods, corn, cattle, straw, and implements of husbandry, let or delivered by a landlord to a tenant, by which the tenant is enabled to stock and work a farm; in consideration of which he becomes bound to return articles, equal in quantity and quality, at the expiration of the lease.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Stellionate [stellionatus], a kind of crime which is committed by a deceitful selling of a thing; as if a man should sell as his own estate that which is another's.

In the Roman law, the making a second mortgage without giving notice of the first; but the crime was not committed if the land were equal in value to all the charges upon it.—Dig. 13. See the Clandestine Mortgage Act, 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 16.

Step-daughter [privigna, Lat.], step, i.e., vice, loco, in the place or stead of, e.g., the daughter of one's wife or husband.

Step-father [vitricus, Lat.], the husband of one's mother, who is not one's father.

Step-mother [noverca, Lat.], the wife of one's father, who is not one's mother.

Step-son [privignus, Lat.], the son of one's wife or husband by a former marriage.

Sterbreche, Strebrich, the breaking, obstructing, or straitening of a way.—Termes de la Ley.

Sterling, genuine; having passed the test; money; standard-rate. See MONEY.

Stet processus, an order of the court to stay proceedings. Strictly, it can only be made with the consent of the parties; but where the ends of justice will be better answered by this course, it is authoritatively recommended by the court. Each party pays his own costs. See 2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1507. See DISCONTINUANCE.

Stethe, or Stede, betokeneth properly a bank of a river, and many times a place—Co. Litt. 4 b.

Stevadore [fr. estivar, Sp., to stow], a person employed to stow a cargo on board a ship.

Steward [seneschallus, Lat.], a ward or keeper; one appointed in the stead of another. See HIGH STEWARD.

Steward of the household. See MARSHAL-SEA.

Steward of a manor, the lord's deputy, who transacts all the legal and other business connected with the estate, and takes care of the court-rolls. In the royal-manors, the steward is appointed by patent. See 10 Geo. IV. c. 40, s. 14. He may make voluntary grants, which will be valid, notwithstanding any subsequent disability of the person who appointed him.

Should there be joint stewards, one may act without the other (1 Scriv. 130). In other manors the chief steward is usually appointed by deed, though he may be appointed by parol; but corporations must always appoint by deed under their corporate seal.

The appointment of a steward is generally during the lord's pleasure; it may, however, be for years or for life, forfeitable by abuser, misuser, nonuser, or refuser. The steward's remedy for a disturbance of his office is an action on the case for consequential damages. The Court of Queen's Bench will, upon a proper case made out, grant a writ of mandamus to restore a steward to his office. A steward may depute or authorize another to hold a court; and the acts done in a court so holden will be as legal as if the court had been holden by the chief steward in person. So an under-steward or deputy may authorize another as sub-deputy, pro hac vice, to hold a court for him, such limited authority not being inconsistent with the rule 'delegatus non potest delegare.'

This deputy, or under-steward, may be appointed either in writing, or by parol, although the appointment of the chief steward do not contain an express authority for that purpose.

Stews, certain brothels anciently permitted in England, suppressed by Henry VIII. 2. Breeding places for tame pheasants.

Stickler, an inferior officer who cuts wood within the royal parks of Clarendon (Cowel); an arbitrator. 2. An obstinate contender about anything.

Stillicidium, the water that falls from the roof of a house in scattered drops.—Civ. Law.

Stint, Common without; common sans nombre, i.e., without number. See COMMON; and 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 653.

Stipend, a salary, settled pay; a provision made for the support of the clergy.

As to the payment of curates, see 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 696.

Stipendiary estates, i.e., feuds, estates granted in return for services, generally of a military kind.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 174.

Stipendiary magistrates, paid magistrates, appointed in the metropolis under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71; in municipal boroughs, on petition by the council to the Secretary of State, under the Municipal Corporations Acts, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 53, s. 161; in places of 25,000 inhabitants or more, on like representation by the local board, etc.; under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 97, and in some other places, e.g., Manchester, by special act of parliament. They must be barristers of at least seven years standing in the metropolis and municipal boroughs; under 26 & 27 Vict. c. 97, they may be of five years standing. By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 73 they may do alone all acts authorized to be done by two justices of the peace.

Stipendium [fr. stips, a piece of money, and pendo, to weigh, Lat.], wages; pay. Before silver was coined at Rome, the copper money in use was paid by weight, and not by scale.

Stipulated damage, liquidated damage, which see.

Stipulation, bargain; also, a recognizance of certain fidejussors in the nature of bail, taken in the Admiralty Courts.

It is the highest and most authentic contract known to the civil law, entered into before the magistrate or public officer, through the medium of interrogatories and answers calculated to explain the nature and extent of the undertaking, to put the parties entering into it on their guard, and to show it to be their mature and deliberate act. It could not be impeached except for fraud or deceit, and could not be released or discharged, except by an equally solemn proceeding, conducted by question and answer before the public functionary, called an acceptance.—Vinnius, 677; Sand. Just., 5th ed., 327.

Stiremannus, a pilot or steersman.—Domesday.

Stirpes. See PER STIRPES.

Stock, a race, lineage, or family; also, money, capital, or credit; also, the public funds, considered merely as perpetual annuities, redeemable at the pleasure of the Government. See FUNDS AND STOCK CERTIFICATES; CHARGING ORDER; DISTRINGAS; and STOP ORDER.

Stockbroker, one who buys and sells stock as the agent of others. The 7 Geo. II. c. 8 (known as Sir John Barnard's Act), required a stockbroker to keep a book called the broker's book, to enter all contracts for stock made by him on the same day, with the names of the parties and the day, and to produce such book when lawfully required; but this Act has been repealed by 23 Vict. c. 28. See BROKER.

Stock certificates. The Stock Certificate Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 28), has been repealed by the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 69. And by the National Debt Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71), it is provided that a stockholder may obtain a stock certificate, that is to say, a certificate of title to his stock or any part thereof, with coupons annexed, entitling the bearer of the coupons to the dividends on the stock (s. 26); that stock certificates shall be issued only in respect of Consols, Reduced Three per Cent. Annuities, and New Three per Cent. Annuities (s. 27); that a certificate shall not be issued in respect of any sum of stock not being 50*l.*, or a multiple of 50*l.*, or exceeding 1000*l.* (s. 28); that a trustee of stock shall not apply for or hold a stock certificate, unless authorized to do so by the terms of his trust (s. 29); that no notice of any trust in respect of any certificate or coupon shall be receivable (s. 30); that where a stock certificate is outstanding the stock represented thereby shall cease to be transferable in the Bank books (s. 31); that a stock certificate, unless a name is described thereon, shall entitle the bearer to the stock therein described and shall be transferable by delivery (s. 32). The Act also contains many other provisions in regard to stock certificates, see ss. 33—42.

As to the fraudulent sale of stock, etc., see 30 Vict. c. 29; and as to the forgery of stock certificates, and transfers of stock, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 58; and as to the personation of owners of stock, etc., see the last-mentioned Acts.

Stock Exchange, a society of stockbrokers and stockjobbers. In the transaction of business they are governed by certain usages, and by rules framed by the Committee of the Stock Exchange. Also, the place where they meet to transact business. See BROKER.

Stock-in-trade, exempted from rating to the relief of the poor by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 89,—a temporary act continued from time to time by successive 'Expiring Laws Continuance' Acts.

Stockjobber, a dealer in stocks, one who buys and sells stock on his own account on speculation.

Stockjobbing Act, 7 Geo. II. c. 8 (made perpetual by 10 Geo. II. c. 8), which was repealed by 23 and 24 Vict. c. 28. See Chitty on Contracts, 8th ed., 647.

Stocks. Two boards, each with semi-circular holes, fitting together within posts, and padlocked down so as to confine the legs of a person just above the feet, anciently maintained at a public spot in every parish as a mode of ignominious confinement for petty offences, such as drunkenness, for which it was prescribed as a punishment in default of distress for a fine, by 21 Jac. I. c. 7, s. 4 (not repealed until 1872 by the Licensing Act of that year). The punishment of the stocks began to be disused about the beginning of the nineteenth century, but has not been expressly abolished.

Stop order, if any person entitled, in expectancy or otherwise, to any share of any stocks or funds, standing in the name of the Paymaster General (formerly the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, see 35 & 36 Vict. c. 44) to the general credit of any cause, or to the account of any class or classes of persons, assign his interest in such stock or funds, the assignee (although not a party to the cause in which the fund is standing) may present a petition for a stop order to prevent the transfer or payment of such stock or funds, or any part thereof, without notice to him. And a person having a lien on a fund in court may obtain a stop order.

The petition must show generally the title of the assignor to the fund, and his assignment of it to the petitioner, which should be established by affidavit. The assignment, however, is generally proved by the assignor either joining in the petition, or appearing and admitting it. To obviate the cost of proving the deed, it is usual to give to the assignee power to use the name of the assignor, as a co-petitioner.

In all cases, where any stocks or funds are or shall be standing in the name of the Paymaster-General to the general credit of any cause, or to the account of any class of persons, and an order is made to prevent the transfer or payment of such stocks or funds or any part thereof, without notice to the assignee of any person or persons entitled, in expectancy or otherwise, to any share of such stocks or funds, the person by whom such order shall be obtained, or the shares of such stocks or funds affected by such order, shall be liable to pay any costs, which, by reason of any such order having been obtained, shall be occasioned to any party to the cause, or any person interested in any such stocks or funds; and any person presenting a petition for any such order, shall not be required to serve such petition upon the parties to the cause, or upon the persons interested in parts of the stocks or funds not sought to be affected by any such order. See Consol. Ord. 1860, xxvi. The assignor, however, must be served with a copy of the petition when it is necessary to prove the assignment.

The order being passed and entered, is delivered at the Paymaster-General's office, upon which the payment of the fund is stayed, until the order is discharged, or another order is made directing its payment, notwithstanding the stop order. The person putting on the stop order may appear at the hearing, or upon a petition being presented for the payment of the fund to a party in the cause, who claims it. The stop order will then be either discharged, or payment to the person who has obtained it will be ordered.

When the assignor and assignee concur, the stop order is obtainable at chambers.—Sm. Ch. Pr. 505; and Dan. Chan. Pr., 5th ed., 1537, 1543—47.

Stoppage, compensation or set-off.—Civ. Law.

Stoppage in transitu. An unpaid vendor may, in case of the vendee's insolvency, stop the goods sold, in transitu; but this right may be defeated by negotiating the bill of lading with a bonâ fide indorsee. The right of an allowed vendor to stop in transitu is to prevent the injustice which would take place, if, in consequence of the vendee's insolvency, while the price of the goods was unpaid, they were to be applied in satisfaction of his liabilities, and so the property of one man disposed of in payment of the debts of another. This stoppage is not a rescission of the contract, but merely replaces the vendor in the same position as if he had not parted with the goods; hence the vendor's right of lien on the part stopped is re-vested and no more. Stoppage in transitu, as its name imports, can only take place while the goods are on the way; if they once arrive at their journey's end, and come into the actual or constructive possession of the consignee, there is an end of the vendor's right. Therefore, in most of the cases, the dispute has been whether the goods had arrived at the end of their journey. The rule to be recollected is, that they are in transitu as long as they are in the hands of the carrier as such, whether he was or was not appointed by the consignee; and, also, so long as they remain in any place of deposit connected with their transmission. But, that, if after their arrival at their place of destination, they be warehoused with the carrier whose store the vendor uses as his own, or even if they be warehoused with the vendor himself, and rent be paid to him for them, that puts an end to the right to stop in transitu. See Lickbarrow v. Mason, 6 East 21; 1 Sm. L. C.; Houston on Stoppage in Transitu.

Stores, the supplies of different articles provided for the subsistence and accommodation of a ship's crew and passengers. As to Public Stores, see that title.

Stouthrieff, forcible depredation within or near a dwelling house.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Stowage, money paid for a room where goods are laid; housage; the mode of lading a ship. See Stevens on Stowage.

Stowe [Sax.], properly a bank of a river; a place.—Co. Litt. 4 b. See STETHE. Also a village.—Domesday.

Stradling v. Stiles. A burlesque report of an argument in banco, published in Martinus Scriblerius' works. It is, in part, the work of Fortescue, an eminent lawyer who subsequently became a baron of the Exchequer.

Straits Settlements. See 29 & 30 Vict. c. 115, and 37 & 38 Vict. c. 38.

Stramineus homo, a man of straw, one of no substance, put forward as bail or surety.

Stranding, the running of a ship on shore or on a beach. By reason of the memorandum always inserted in policies of insurance (see INSURANCE), it is of the greatest importance to define what is a stranding. On this much diversity of opinion has been entertained. It would appear that merely striking against a rock, bank, or shore is not a stranding; the ship must be upon the rock, etc., for some time.

Stratocracy [fr. στρατός, Gk., an army; and κράτος, power], a military government.

Strator, or Stretward, a surveyor of the highways.—Mon. Angl. tom. 2, p. 187.

Street Music (Metropolitan) Act. 27 & 28 Vict. c. 55, repealing 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 57.

Strict settlement. This limits an estate to the use of the husband for life, remainder to trustees to support contingent remainders, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to other trustees for raising portions for younger children, remainder to the first and other sons in tail-male, remainder to the daughters, as tenants-in-common, with cross-remainders between them, remainder to the husband in fee. The usual course with conveyancers, where property of the wife is settled, is to confer on the wife a power of appointment, in the event of there being no issue, so as to give her the option of defeating the limitations of her estate. The object of a strict settlement is to put it out of the power of parents to deal with the corpus of an estate to the prejudice of their issue.

Strictissimi juris [Lat.] (of the most strict law).

Strictum jus [Lat.] (mere law in contradiction to equity).

Striking off the roll. Removing the name of a solicitor from the rolls of the court, and thereby disentitling him to practise. This is done ordinarily for gross misconduct, but sometimes at the solicitor's own request.

Striking-out Defence. This may now be done as a punishment for default in making discovery or allowing inspection after an order to do so. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XXXI., r. 20.

Strumpet [meretrix, Lat.], a whore, harlot, or courtesan. This word was anciently used for an addition; it occurs to the name of a woman in a return made by a jury in the sixth year of Henry V.

St. Simonism, an elaborate form of non-communistic socialism. It is a scheme which does not contemplate an equal, but an unequal division of the produce; it does not propose that all should be occupied alike, but differently, according to their vocation or capacity; the function of each being assigned, like grades in a regiment, by the choice of the directing authority, and the remuneration being by salary, proportioned to the importance, in the eyes of that authority, of the function itself, and the merits of the person who fulfils it.—1 Mill's Pol. Eco. 258.

Stupation [fr. stupro, Lat.], rape, violation.

Stuprum, every union of the sexes forbidden by morality.—Civ. Law.

Sturgeon, a royal fish, which, when either thrown ashore or caught near the coast, is the property of the sovereign.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 19 n., 540.

Sturges Bourne's Act. The Select Vestry Act, 59 Geo. III. c. 12, by which the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled, were enabled to commit the management of its poor to a committee of the parishioners appointed for that purpose and called a select vestry, to whose orders the overseers were bound to conform.

Style (v.), to call, name, or entitle one; (n.s.), the title or appellation of a person.

Style. See OLD and NEW STYLE, and CALENDAR and NEW YEAR'S DAY.

Suable, that may be sued.

Subah, a province such as Bengal. A ground division of a country, which is again divided into circars, chucklas, porgunnahs, and villages.—Indian.

Subahdar, the holder of the subah, the governor or viceroy.—Ibid.

Subahdary, the officer or jurisdiction of a subahdar.—Ibid.

Sub-bois. Coppice-wood.—2 Inst. 642. See SYLVA CÆDUA.

Subinfeudation, where the inferior lords, in imitation of their superiors, began to carve out and grant to others minuter estates than their own, to be held of themselves, and were so proceeding downward in infinitum till they were stopped by legislative provisions. See TENURE.

Subject (logic), that concerning which the affirmation in a proposition is made; the first word in a proposition.—Mill's Logic. See PREDICATE.

Subjects, the members of a commonwealth under a sovereign.

Sublatâ causâ tollitur effectus. Co. Litt. 303.—(The cause being removed the effect ceases.)

Sublato fundamento cadit opus. Jenk. Cent. 106.—(The foundation being removed, the superstructure falls.)

Sublato principali tollitur adjunctum. Co. Litt.—(The principal being taken away, its adjunct is also taken away.)

Submission to arbitration. See ARBITRATION.

Submit, to propound, as an advocate, a proposition for the approval of the court.

Sub-modo, under condition or restriction.

Subnervare, to ham-string by cutting the sinews of the legs and thighs.

It was an old custom meretrices et impudicas mulieres subnervare.

Subordinate clause. See CO-ORDINATE.

Subnotation, a rescript, which see.

Suborn (v.a.), see next title.

Subornation, the crime of procuring another to do a bad action. See PERJURY.

Subpena [fr. sub, Lat., under, and pœna, penalty], a writ commanding attendance in a court under a penalty. It bears a close analogy to the citation, or vocatio in jus of the civil and canon laws. There are several kinds of subpena.

At common law there are two to compel the attendance of witnesses:—

(1) Subpena ad testificandum, the common subpena, which is personally served upon a witness, in order to compel him to attend the trial or inquiry, to give evidence.

(2) Subpena duces tecum: this is personally served upon a person, who has in his possession any written instrument, etc., the production of which in evidence is desired. See DUCES TECUM.

These subpoenas are also used in criminal proceedings; four witnesses can be included in one subpoena, whether in civil or criminal cases.

There are several subpoenas which have been in use in the course of a Chancery suit, but only three names can be included in one writ, husband and wife counting as one. They are the following:—

- (1) Subpoena ad testificandum.
- (2) Subpoena duces tecum.
- (3) Subpoena to hear judgment.
- (4) Subpoena for costs.
- (5) Subpoena served upon an infant on attaining majority, to give him an opportunity to show cause against a decree.
- (6) Subpoena to name a solicitor where the solicitor of a party has died, and such party refuses to appoint another.

The subpoena to rejoin has been abolished (see Consol. Ord. 1860, xvii. r. 2), and the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 2, abolished the subpoena to appear to and answer a bill.

Subpoena office in Chancery, abolished, and its duties transferred to Clerks of Records and Writs.—15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 28.

Sub pede sigilli [Lat.] (under the foot of the seal).

Subreption, the obtaining a gift from the Crown by concealing what is true.

Subrogation, substitution.

Subsequens matrimonium tollit peccatum præcedens. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(A subsequent marriage removes a previous criminality.) See LEGITIMATION.

Subsequent condition. See CONDITION SUBSEQUENT.

Subsidy, an aid, tax, or tribute granted to the Crown for the urgent occasions of the kingdom, to be levied on every subject of ability, according to the value of his lands or goods.

Sub silentio, in silence.

Substantial damages, a sum, assessed by way of damages, which is worth having; opposed to nominal damages where a small coin, which will not be paid, is assessed to satisfy a bare legal right. See also EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

Substituted Executor, one appointed to act in the place of another executor upon the happening of a certain event, e.g., if the latter should refuse the office.

Substituted Plaintiff. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XVI., rr. 2, 14. And see title PARTIES.

Substituted Service, of a writ of summons, service on some person representing the defendant, instead of on the defendant personally. See Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LX., r. 2, and Ord. X.

Substitution. In the civil law a conditional appointment of a hæres. For its three kinds, see Cum. C. L. 143; Sand. Just., 5th ed., 197.

In the Scotch law, the enumeration or designation of the heirs in a settlement of property. Substitutes in an entail are those heirs who are appointed in succession on failure of others.

Subtraction, neglecting or refusing to perform any suit, service, custom, or duty, or to pay rent, service, tolls, etc.—3 Bl. Com. 230.

Suburbani, husbandmen.

Succession, the power or right of coming to the inheritance of ancestors. See CANONS OF INHERITANCE; DISTRIBUTION.

Succession Duties Act. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51 (which came into operation on the 19th May, 1853), amended by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, ss. 12—15. See Hanson on Legacy and Succession Duties, and Trevor on Succession Duties; and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 92, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104, ss. 53—64.

Successor, one that follows in the place of another. The cor-relative of predecessor in 16 & 17 Vict. c. 51.

Succurritur minori: facilis est lapsus juventutis. Jenk. Cent. 47.—(A minor is assisted: a mistake of youth is easy.)

Sucken, the whole lands astricted to a mill, the tenants of which are bound to grind there.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Sudbury borough, disfranchised by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 53.

Sudder, the best; the fore-court of a house; the chief seat of government contradistinguished from mofussil, or interior of the country; the presidency.—Indian.

Sue, to prosecute by law, to claim a civil right by means of legal procedure.

Suez Canal. By agreement ratified by the Suez Canal Shares Act, 1876, 176,602 shares in the Suez Canal Company were acquired by the Crown by purchase from the Khedive of Egypt for about 4,000,000*l.* sterling.

Sufferance, Tenancy at. This is the least and lowest estate which can subsist in realty. It is in strictness not an estate, but a mere possession only. It arises when a person after his right to the occupation, under a lawful title, is at an end, continues (having no title at all) in possession of the land, without the agreement or disagreement of the person in whom the right of possession resides. Thus if A. is a tenant for years, and his term expires, or is tenant at will, and his lessor dies, and he continues in possession, without the disagreement of the person who is entitled to the same, in the one and the other of these cases he is said to have the possession by sufferance—that is, merely by permission or indulgence, without any right: the law esteeming it just and reasonable, and for the interest of the tenant, and also of the person entitled to the possession, to deem the occupation to be continued by the permission of the person who has the right, till it is proved that the tenant withholds the possession wrongfully, which the law will not presume. As the party came to the possession by right, the law will esteem that right to continue either in point of estate, or by the permission of the owner of the land, till it is proved that the possession is held in opposition to the will of that person.

An under-tenant, who is in possession at the determination of the original lease, and is permitted by the reversioner to hold over, is a quasi tenant at sufferance.

Lord Coke tells us (in 2 Inst. 134) this diversity is to be observed, that where a man cometh to a particular estate by the act of the party, there, if he hold over, he is a tenant at sufferance; but where he cometh to the particular estate by act of law, as a guardian, for instance, there, if he hold over, he is no tenant at sufferance, but an abator. The same doctrine is laid down in 1 Inst. 271.

This tenancy is created only by construction of law, and cannot originate in the agreement of the parties. For the agreement of the parties would pass either an estate at will, or from year to year, according to the interest of the parties. There exists no privity between the tenant at sufferance (who has but a mere possession, without privity) and the person entitled to the possession; yet such occupancy is not adverse to the title of the person who possesses the right of entry, unless he choose to consider it so; but an adverse possession will take place on an entry and perception of the profits of the land by a person, without the reversioner's consent, after the death of a tenant at sufferance. This estate cannot be the subject of conveyance or transfer.

Since laches or neglect can never be imputed to the sovereign, a lessee of crown lands, holding them over after the determination of his interest in them, is never considered a tenant by sufferance, but he is deemed a bailiff of his own wrong, and so accountable to the Crown, but after office found, he becomes an absolute intruder.

This estate is put an end to whenever the true owner actually enters upon the lands, by which he declares the continuance of the tenant tortious and wrongful, or demands possession, or brings his action of ejectment, to recover possession, which he may do without any previous demand. Prior to entry, an action of trespass cannot be maintained against the tenant, for his sufferance must be previously determined by entry, before this possessory action will lie.—Woodfall's Land. and Ten., 12th ed., 215, and 2 Br. & Had. Com. 288.

Sufferance wharves are wharves on which goods may be landed before any duty is paid. They are appointed for the purpose by the commissioners of the customs.—16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 13; 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 500 n.

Sufferentia pacis, a grant or sufferance of peace or truce.—Rot. Claus. 16 Edw. III.

Suffragan. Bishops are styled suffragan, a word signifying deputy in respect of their relation to the archbishop of their province. But formerly each archbishop and bishop had also his suffragan to assist him in conferring orders, and in other spiritual parts of his office within his diocese. These are called suffragan bishops, and resemble the chorepiscopi, or bishops of the country in the early times of the Christian church. How this inferior order of bishops may be elected and consecrated is regulated by 26 Hen. VIII. c. 14; but notwithstanding this statute, it is not usual to appoint them. They should not be confounded with the coadjutors of a bishop, the latter being appointed, in case of a bishop's infirmity, to superintend his jurisdiction and temporalities, neither of which was within the interference of the former.—Co. Litt. by Harg. 94 (a), note (3).

Suffrage [fr. suffragium, the etymology is uncertain, for the opinions of those who connect it with φράζεσθαι, or fragor, do not deserve notice. Wunder thinks that it may possibly be allied with suffrago, and signified originally an ankle-bone or knuckle-bone], vote; elective franchise; voice given in a controverted point; aid, assistance. See ELECTION.

Suggestio falsi [Lat., a representation of untruth], one of the branches of fraud. Consult Addison on Torts, 4th ed., 26.

Suggestion, a surmise or representing of a thing; an entry of a fact on the record.

Suicide. (1) Self-slaughter; (2) a self-slaughterer, commonly termed in law 'felo de se.' See FELONY.

Sui juris [Lat.] (of his own right). A person who is neither a minor nor insane, nor subject to any other disability, is said to be sui juris.

Suit, a following. It is used in divers senses:

(1) An action in the Supreme Court, or a proceeding by petition in the Divorce branch.

of that Court; a prosecution; a petition to a court, etc. See Jud. Act, 1873, s. 100.

(2) Suit of court, an attendance which a tenant owes to his lord's court.

(3) Suit Covenant, where one has covenanted to do suit and service in his lord's court.

(4) Suit-custom, where service is owed time out of mind.

(5) Swithold, a tenure in consideration of certain services to the superior lord.

(6) The following one in chase, as fresh suit.—Cowel, voce 'Suit.'

Suitor, or Suitor, one that sues; a petitioner; a suppliant; a wooer.

Suitor Fee Fund, a fund in the Court of Chancery into which the fees of suitors in that court were paid, and out of which were defrayed the salaries of various officers of that court. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87.

Suit-silver or Suter-silver, a small rent or sum of money paid in some manors to excuse the freeholders' appearance at the courts of their lord.—Cowel.

Sulh Ælmyssan, plough-arms.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Sullery, a plough-land.—1 Inst. 5.

Sumage, toll for carriage on horseback.—Cowel.

Summa ratio [lex] est, quæ pro religione facit. 5 Co. 14.—(The highest law is that which supports religion).

Summary, an abridgment, brief, compendium; also a short application to a court or judge, without the formality of a full proceeding. See PLENARY.

Summary Jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of a court to give a judgment or make an order itself forthwith, e.g., to commit to prison for contempt, to punish mal-practice in a solicitor, or, in the case of justices of the peace, a jurisdiction to convict an offender themselves instead of committing him for trial by a jury. The mode of exercising this latter jurisdiction, which is given in particular instances by very numerous particular statutes, is generally regulated by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43 (also called 'Jervis' Act, from having been carried through parliament by Jervis, C. J., when Attorney-General), and the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49.

Summer-hus silver, a payment to the lords of the wood on the Wealds of Kent, who used to visit those places in summer, when their under-tenants were bound to prepare little summer-houses for their reception, or else pay a composition in money. Customale de Newington juxta Sittingburn, M.S.; Cowel.

Summing up evidence. Upon the trial of any cause the addresses to the jury are regulated as follows:—The party who begins, or his counsel, is allowed (in the event of his opponent not announcing, at the close of the case of the party who begins, his intention to adduce evidence) to address the jury a second time at the close of such case, for the purpose of summing up the evidence; and the party on the other side, or his counsel, is allowed to open the case, and also to sum up the evidence (if any); the right to reply is as before.—C. L. P. Act, 1854, s. 18. The same rule now extends to criminal trials. See DENMAN'S ACT.

Summing up, a judge's exposition of evidence to a petty jury.

Summoneas, a writ-judicial of great diversity, according to the divers cases wherein it was used. Obsolete.

Summoners, petty officers, who cite and warn persons to appear in any court.—Fleta, l. ix.

Summonitiones aut citationes nullæ liceant fieri intra palatium regis. 3 Inst. 141.—(Let no summonses or citations be served within the king's palace.) See Att.-Gen. v. Dakin, 37 L. J. Ex. 150, and 39 L. J. Ex. 113.

Summonitores Scaccarii, officers who assisted in collecting the revenues by citing the defaulters therein into the Court of Exchequer.

Summons [fr. the writ called summoneas.—Pegge's Anecd. of the Engl. Lang., 2nd ed., 173], a call of authority, admonition to appear in court, a citation.

'Every action in the High Court shall be commenced by a writ of summons, which shall be indorsed with a statement of the nature of the claim made, or of the relief or remedy required in the action, and which shall specify the Division of the High Court to which it is intended that the action should be assigned.'—Jud. Act, 1875; Ord. II., r. 1.

(2) A summons issued from the Bankruptcy Court against a debtor, whereupon proceedings in bankruptcy may be founded, in pursuance of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 7. See ACT OF BANKRUPTCY.

Summonses in judges' or masters' chambers are the means by which one party brings the other before a judge (or a master) to settle matters of detail in the procedure of a suit; as, for time to plead, to modify pleadings when inconvenient, to require security for costs, to change the venue, etc., etc. There is an appeal from the decision of a master to the judge, and from the judge's decision to the court.

Summum jus, summa injuria. Summa lex, summa crux.—Hob. 125. (Extreme law is extreme injury. Strict law is strict punish-Sumner, or Sompnour, one who cites or summonses.—Cowel.

Sumptuary laws, those in restraint of luxury, excess in apparel, etc.; they are all repealed by 1 Jac. I. c. 25.—3 Hall's Mid. Ages, c. ix., pt. 2, p. 343.

Sunday [fr. sunnan daeg, Sax., the day of the sun], the first day of the week, the Lord's day, termed in 29 Car. II. c. 7, infra, 'the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday.' It is a dies non juridicus, but an arrest for crime can be effected on this day; and bail can arrest their principal, and a serjeant-at-arms can apprehend; but no other law proceedings can be taken. By 29 Car. II. c. 7, it is enacted that 'no tradesmen, artificers, workmen, labourers, or other person whatsoever, shall do or exercise any worldly labour, business, or work of their ordinary callings upon the Lord's day, or any part thereof (works of necessity and charity only excepted). By 'The Sunday Observation Prosecution Act, 1871' (34 & 35 Vict. c. 87),—a temporary Act, continued from time to time by successive 'Expiring Laws Continuance' Acts,—it is provided that prosecutions for offences under the Act of Charles II. shall only be commenced by the chief officer of police, or with the consent of two justices of the peace, or a stipendiary magistrate; and no such prosecution shall be heard before the justices of the peace or stipendiary magistrate by whom or with whose consent the same has been instituted. Sunday entertainments open to the public for money are forbidden under heavy penalties by 21 Geo. III. c. 49 (as to which see Warner v. Brighton Aquarium Co., L. R. 10 Ex. 291), amended by 38 & 39 Vict. c. 80, which allows the Crown to remit the penalties. As to the sale of liquors on Sundays, see SIX-DAY LICENSE. The Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, prohibits Sunday employment, with an exemption for Jews.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LVII., it is provided that where any limited time less than six days from or after any date or event is appointed or allowed for doing any act or taking any proceeding, Sunday, Christmas-day, and Good Friday shall not be reckoned in the computation of such limited time (r. 2); and that where the time for doing any act or taking any proceeding expires on a Sunday, or other day on which the offices are closed, and by reason thereof such act or proceeding cannot be done or taken on that day, such act or proceeding shall, so far as regards the time of doing or taking the same, be held to be duly done or taken if done or taken on the day on which the offices shall next be open (r. 3).

LXI., r. 4, Sunday is excepted from the days on which the several offices of the Supreme Court are open.

Sunday Schools are exempted from poor and other rates by the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 40, s. 1.

Sunnud, a prop or support, a patent, charter, or written authority, for holding either land or office.—Indian.

Sunrise. In Trutton v. Darke, 5 H. & N. 647, the question will be found raised whether the time of sunrise is to be reckoned from the first appearance of the beams of the sun above the horizon, or from the time when the entire sun has emerged.

Super altum mare [Lat.] (upon the high sea).

Superannuation Acts, for pensioning the civil servants of the Crown; 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 24; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 37; 22 Vict. c. 26; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 89; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 73; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 68; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 43; 35 & 36 Vict. c. 12; and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 23.

The principal Act is the Superannuation Act, 1859, 22 Vict. c. 26, which fixes the scale of pension at $\frac{1}{10}$ ths of the annual salary on retirement after ten years service, and gives an additional $\frac{1}{10}$ th for every additional year of service up to the fortieth year. See also PENSION.

Supercargo, an officer in a ship, whose business is to manage the trade. A person employed by commercial companies or private merchants, to take charge of the cargoes exported, to sell them abroad to the best advantage, and to purchase proper commodities to re-lade the ship homewards. He goes out and returns home with the ship, thus differing from factors, who have a fixed residence.

Superficiarius, a builder upon another's land under a contract.—Civ. Law.

Superficies, the alienation by the owner of the surface of the soil of all rights necessary for building on the surface, a yearly rent being generally reserved; also a building or erection.—Sand. Just., 5th. ed., 133.

Super fidem chartarum, mortuis testibus, erit ad patriam de necessitate recurrendum. Co. Litt. 6.—(The truth of charters is necessarily to be referred to a jury, when the witnesses are dead.)

Superfetation, the conception of a second embryo during the gestation of one already conceived, so that the two children may be born at the same or at different times.

This phenomenon is generally thought by the medical profession to be impossible, although it is not uncommon in the case of twins that one should be born prematurely, and the other go on to its full period. See further on this subject Beck's Taylor's Med. Jurisp. c. 50.

Superflua non nocent. Jent. Cent. 184.—
(Superfluities hurt not.)

Superfluous Lands, lands acquired by a public company under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, 8 Vict. c. 18, but not required for the purposes of the undertaking of the company. Such lands must, by s. 127 of the Act, be sold within ten years after the limit limited for the completion of the undertaking, and, if not so sold, become the absolute property of the adjoining owners, and the person entitled to the lands from which they were originally severed, or, if they refuse, the adjoining owners have a right of pre-emption within the ten years. The law of this subject has given rise to much litigation, the leading case being Great Western Railway Company v. May, L. R. 7 H. L. 283.

Super-institution, the institution of one in an office to which another has been previously instituted; as where A. is admitted and instituted to a benefice upon one title, and B. is admitted and instituted on the title or presentment of another.—2 Cro. 463.

A church being full by institution, if a second institution is granted to the same church this is a super-institution: concerning which two things have been resolved:—

(1) That the super-institution, as such, is properly triable in the spiritual court; (2) that it is not triable there, in case induction has been given upon the first institution.

The advantage of a super-institution is, that it enables the party who obtains it to try his title by ejectment, without putting him to his quære impedit; but many inconveniences thence following (e.g., the uncertainty to whom tithes shall be paid, and the like), this method has been discouraged.—Mirehouse on Advowsons, 189.

Superintendent Registrar, an officer who superintends the registers of births, deaths, and marriages. There is one in every poor law union in England and Wales. The office is filled as of right by the clerk to the guardians of the union, if he is duly qualified, and accepts it. He is under the Registrar-General. See 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 86; and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 25.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 234.

Superintending Constables, or Superintendents, those who have the charge of lock-up houses, etc.—13 & 14 Vict. c. 20, s. 6.

Superior, the grantor of a feudal right to be held of himself. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Superior Courts, the Courts of Chancery, Queen's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, at Westminster, were so called. See these courts treated of under the proper titles; and see titles HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE, and SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE.

Super-jurare, a term anciently used when a criminal endeavoured to excuse himself by his own oath, or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious that he was convicted on the oaths of many more witnesses.

Superoneratione pasturæ, a judicial writ that lay against him who was impleaded in the county court for the surcharge of a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause was removed into one of the superior courts. Obsolete.

Super prærogativâ regis, a writ which formerly lay against the king's tenant's widow for marrying without the royal license.—F. N. B. 174.

Supersedeas, a writ that lay in a great many cases; and signified in general a command, on good cause shown, to stay some ordinary proceedings which ought otherwise to proceed.—F. N. B. 236.

Super statuto, 1 Edw. III. c. 12, a writ that lay against the king's tenant holding in chief, who aliened the king's land without his license.

Super statuto de articulis cleri, a writ which lay against a sheriff or other officer who distrained in the king's highway, or on lands anciently belonging to the church.

Super statuto facto pour seneschal et marshal de roy, etc., a writ which lay against a steward or marshal for holding plea in his court, or for trespass or contracts not made or arising within the king's household.

Super statuto versus servantes et laboratores, a writ which lay against him who kept any servants who had left the service of another contrary to law.

Superstitious uses. See CHARITIES.

Supervisor, a surveyor or overseer.

Super visum corporis [Lat.] (upon view of the corpse). A coroner's inquest must be so held.

Supplemental answer, one which was filed in Chancery for the purpose of correcting, adding to, and explaining an answer already filed.—Smi. Ch. Pr. 334. See now STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Supplemental bill, an addition to an original bill in equity, in order to supply some defect in its original frame and structure. Facts occurring subsequently to the filing of an original bill might be added by amendment or supplemental statement.—15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 53; Consol. Ord. 1860, xxxii., r. 2; Smi. Ch. Pr. 737; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed.,

1396—1401. See now BILL IN CHANCERY and STATEMENT OF CLAIM.

Supplemental bill, Bill in the nature of a. This bill and the above-named bill were usually confounded together; but a prominent distinction between them seems to have been that a supplemental bill was properly applicable to those cases only where the same parties and the same interest remained before the court; whereas an original bill, in the nature of a supplemental bill, was properly applicable when new parties with new interests, arising from events which have happened since the institution of the suit, were brought before the court.—Story's Eq. Plead. 265; 2 Dan. Chan. Pr., 5th ed., 1396—1401.

Supplemental claim, a further claim which was filed when further relief was sought after the bringing of a claim.—Smi. Ch. Pr. 655.

Suppletory oath, the oath of a litigant party in the spiritual and civil-law courts.

Suppliant, the actor in, or party preferring, a petition of right. See PETITION DE DROIT.

Supplicavit, a writ which issued out of Chancery for taking surety of the peace, upon articles filed on oath, when one was in danger of being hurt in his body by another; it was addressed to the justices of the peace and sheriff of the county, and was grounded upon the 1 Edw. III. st. 2, c. 16, which ordained that certain persons should be appointed by the chancellor to take care of the peace, etc.—F. N. B. 80.

This writ has been of late years seldom used, for when application has been made to the superior courts, they have usually taken the recognizances there, under the 21 Jac. I. c. 8.

Supplicium, any corporal punishment; it included death.—Civ. Law.

Supply, Commissioners of, persons appointed to levy the land tax in Scotland, and to cause a valuation roll to be annually made up, and to perform other duties in their respective counties. See 19 & 20 Vict. c. 93; and Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Supply, Committee of. All bills which relate to the public income or expenditure must originate with the House of Commons, and all bills authorizing expenditure of the public money are based upon resolutions moved in a Committee of Supply, which is always a committee of the whole House.

Support (v. a.), to support a rule or order is to argue in answer to the arguments of the party who has shown cause against a rule or order nisi.

Support (n. s.), the help which every land-owner receives at the boundary of his land from his neighbour's land which his, and prevents its falling in and crumbling away, as it would do if his neighbour dug away the surface of his land to the very edge.—Goddard on Easements; and as to right of support for buildings, see Dalton v. Angus, 6 App. Cas. 740, in which it was held by the House of Lords, in the year 1881, that a right to lateral support for a building is acquired by twenty years' uninterrupted, peaceable, and open enjoyment of that building.

Suppressio veri [Lat.] (a suppression of truth), one of the classes of fraud. Consult Addison on Torts.

Supra, above, or after. This word occurring by itself in a book refers the reader to a previous part of the book, like ante.

Supra protest, after 'protest' (see PROTEST). There may be either acceptance or payment of a bill of exchange by a person other than the drawee or acceptor or other person liable, after it has been protested for non-acceptance or non-payment. The full term is 'acceptance (or payment) supra protest for honour,' i.e., for the honour or in relief of the person liable. The rights and liabilities of the parties are regulated by the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 61, ss. 65—8, and see Byles on Bills, chrs. xx., xxi.

Supremacy, sovereign dominion, authority, and pre-eminence.

Supremacy, Act of, 1 Eliz. c. 1.

Supremacy, Oath of, to uphold the supreme power of the kingdom in the person of the reigning sovereign. See now the Promissory Oaths Act, 1868, and title OATH.

Suprema potestas seipsam dissolvere potest. Bacon.—(Supreme power can dissolve itself.)

Supreme Court of Judicature. By the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), ss. 3 & 4 (amended by Jud. Act, 1875, s. 9), it has been enacted that from the commencement of that Act (November 1st, 1875; see Judicature Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, s. 2), the Court of Chancery of England, the Court of Queen's Bench, the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, the Court of Exchequer, the High Court of Admiralty, the Court of Probate, and the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, should be united and consolidated together, and should constitute one Supreme Court of Judicature in England; the said Supreme Court to consist of two permanent Divisions, being, 'Her Majesty's High Court of Justice,' 'Her Majesty's Court of Appeal.'

See further HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE and COURT OF APPEAL.

The Supreme Court of Judicature Acts, 1873 & 1875, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, and 38 & 39

Vict. c. 77, are commonly referred to as 'The Judicature Acts,' and are herein cited as 'Jud. Act, 1873,' and 'Jud. Act, 1875.'

The following are the more important provisions of these Acts, in addition to those constituting the High Court and Court of Appeal;—The High Court was divided into five divisions, representing the Courts whose jurisdiction was transferred thereto (see DIVISIONS); the Court of Appeal received jurisdiction to hear, with a few specified exceptions, appeals from any judgment or order of the High Court; power was given to each Division to administer law and equity concurrently, with preference for the rules of equity, where they should be found to be in conflict with the rules of law; 'district registries' were established in various parts of the country for the transaction of litigious business up to actual trial; counter-claims, and the power of a defendant to bring in 'third parties,' were introduced; new rules of pleading, intended to combine the brevity of the common law system with the specific character of equity drafting were substituted for those previously existing; special power was given under 'Order XIV,' to a plaintiff to sign judgment for a liquidated demand unless the defendant could obtain leave to defend; four 'official referees,' with power to report to the Court upon questions of fact, were appointed; and the Chancery practice of leaving costs (which at common law 'followed the event' of an action) was adopted for all the branches of the High Court.

The Act of 1875 contains a very lengthy schedule of Rules of Practice, taken, with many alterations and additions, from the Common Law and Equity Procedure Acts, the spirit of the two acts being to adopt for the one new practice what was best in the two old ones.

Supreme power, the highest authority in a state, all other powers in it being inferior thereto. See 2 Ruth. Nat. Laws, b. 2, c. iv., p. 67.

Surcharge, an overcharge of what is just and right; exceeding one's powers or privileges; also a second or further mortgage.

Surcharge and falsify, a mode of taking accounts in Chancery.

A surcharge is applied to the balance of the whole account, and supposes credits to be omitted which ought to be allowed. A falsification applies to a wrong charge in the debits, and supposes that the item is wholly, or in some part, false or erroneous.—2 Ves. 265.

Sur cui in vitâ. See CUI IN VITA.

Sur disclaimer, Writ of right of, abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

Surety, hostage, bondsman, one that gives security for another, one that is bound for another. A surety who discharges the liability of the principal debtor is entitled to an assignment of all the securities held by the creditor.—19 & 20 Vict. c. 97, s. 5. See SECURITY.

Surgeon [corrupted fr. chirurgion], is properly one who cures diseases or injuries by manual operation. See MEDICAL ACT and PHYSICIAN.

The Royal College of Surgeons in England was incorporated by charter of the 14th Sept. in the 7th year of Queen Victoria. It had, however, been previously incorporated. See 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 6, 205 et seq.

As to the power of the college to make by-laws, see 38 & 39 Vict. c. 43.

Surgeon of the Queen's Prison, used to be appointed by the Home Secretary during pleasure.—5 & 6 Vict. c. 22. See QUEEN'S PRISON.

Surname [fr. surnom, Fr. It is a great dispute whether we should write surname or surname; on the one hand, there are a thousand instances in court rolls and other ancient muniments, where the description of the person is written over the Christian name, this only being inserted in the line; and the French always write surnom. There is, however, no impropriety to say surname, since these additions are so apparently taken from our sires or fathers], the family name; the name over and above the Christian name.—Encyc. Lond. The part of a name which is not given in baptism; the last name; the name common to all members of a family. Surnames were originally acquired by accident and retained by custom. They may be changed in the same manner, or by the Royal license from the Herald's office. As to the surname of a divorced woman, see DIVORCE. A bastard can have a surname by custom or grant only. See NAME.

Surplice fees, fees payable on ministerial offices of the Church, such as baptisms, funerals, marriages, etc.—Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii., 740; iii., 312.

Surplusagium non nocet. 9 H. 626.—(Surplusage hurts not.)

Surplus, Surplusage, a supernumerary part, an overplus, what remains when everything is satisfied.

Surprise. When the evidence produced by the one side is such as from the nature of the circumstances could not have been reasonably expected by the other side, and there is reason to believe that this evidence, if foreseen, might have been rebutted, contradicted, or explained, the Court grants a new trial, on such conditions as to costs, as seems fit. See also NONSUIT and TRIAL.

Surrebutter. This was the last pleading bearing a name at common law; a plaintiff's answer to a defendant's rebutter. See now PLEADING and REJOINDER.

Surrejoinder, an answer to a rejoinder; a pleading by the defendant. See now PLEADING and REJOINDER.

Surrender [fr. sursum redditio], an assurance restoring or yielding up an estate, the operative verbs being 'surrender and yield up.' The term is usually applied to the giving up of a lease before the expiration of it.

The effect of a surrender is to pass and merge the estate of the surrenderor to, and into that of, the surrenderee.

By the combined operation of s. 3 of the Statute of Frauds, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 3, every express surrender must be in writing, and every express surrender of a more than three years' term must be by deed. But there may be an implied surrender, or, as it is called in the Statute of Frauds, a surrender 'by act and operation of law'—that is, as defined by Phene v. Popplewell, 12 C. B. N. S. 334, by anything which amounts to an agreement by the tenant to abandon and by the landlord to resume possession of the demised premises, e.g., by the delivery and acceptance of keys, by the entering of the parties into a new contract of tenancy, or by the landlord accepting a new tenant.

Surrender of copyholds. Copyholds are not, as a general rule, alienable by any of the common law assurances. A surrender (which is vocabulum artis) is the yielding up of a legal tenancy in a copyhold estate, either by express words or operation of law, by the tenant after admittance, or by his lawfully appointed attorney, either in or out of court, to the lord of the manor in person, his chief steward, or under-steward; or, by special custom to the bailiff, beadle, or reeve, or to certain tenants of the manor, either as a relinquishment or resignation of such estate, or as the medium of conveying or transferring it to another. Surrenders are made in various forms; in some manors by a rod, in others by a straw, in others by a glove, or some other symbol, which is delivered by the surrenderor to the steward, or other person taking the surrender or in the name of seisin. When a copyholder surrenders for a valuable consideration, the land is bound both at law and in equity, and he is prevented from surrendering to any other person, but the whole legal estate remains in him, and he has a right to retain the possession, subject to his accounting for the mesne profits should the surrenderee be afterwards admitted, and if the surrenderor die, the estate devolves upon his customary heir, but he is a trustee for the surrenderee. A surrender is not affected by the death of any of the parties to it, and the transfer may notwithstanding be completed.

Surrenders of copyholds are governed by the same rules as common law conveyances.

An equitable interest in copyholds is not the subject of surrender, except in the instance of a surrender for the purpose of barring an entail, but it is assignable. The assignee of an equitable estate, on taking a surrender from the person in whom the legal copyhold interest is vested, may compel an admission upon the payment of a single fine.

Surrender of fugitives. Penal laws of foreign countries are strictly local, and affect nothing more than they can reach, and can be seized by virtue of their authority. A fugitive who passes hither comes with all his transitory rights. He may recover money held for his use, and stock, obligations, and the like; and cannot be affected in this country by proceedings against him in that which he has left, beyond the limits of which such proceedings do not extend. 'The lex loci must needs govern all criminal jurisdiction, from the nature of the thing and the purpose of the jurisdiction.'—Warrender v. Warrender, 9 Bligh, 119. See EXTRADITION.

Surrenderee, SURRENDEROR, the persons to or by whom surrender is made.

Surreptitious, fraudulent, stealthy. For the distinction between surreptitious and obreptitious fraud, see Sanchez de Matrimonio.

Surrey, as to the Assizes for this county, see ASSIZES, and see Jud. Act, 1875, s. 23.

Surrogate, one that is substituted or appointed in the room of another, as by a bishop, chancellor, judge, etc., especially an officer appointed to dispense licenses to marry without banns.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 247.

By the Legal Practitioners' Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 62, any surrogates, not being 'a qualified practitioner,' i.e., a barrister, solicitor, etc., who for a fee prepares papers on which to found a grant of probate, etc., is liable to a penalty under s. 12 of the Attorneys' and Solicitors' Act, 1874 (as to which, see SOLICITORS).

Surrise, to forbear or neglect.—Bract. l. 5.

Sursumredditio [Lat.], a surrender.

Survey (ordnance). See ORDNANCE SURVEY.

Surveyor, one who has the overseeing or care of another person's land or works. See HIGHWAYS. As to county surveyors in Ireland, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 106.

A court of surveyors was erected by 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39, for the benefit of the Crown.

Survivorship, the living of one of two or more persons after the death of the other or others. See PRESUMPTION OF SURVIVORSHIP and JOINT TENANCY.

Suspeid, to forbid an attorney or solicitor or ecclesiastical person from practising for an interval of time.

Suspene, Suspension, a temporal stop or hanging up as it were of a right for a time; also a censure on ecclesiastical persons, during which they are forbidden to exercise their office or take the profits of their benefices.

Suspension, Pleas in, were those which showed some matter of temporary incapacity to proceed with the action or suit.—Steph. on Plead., 7th ed., 45. See ABATEMENT.

Sus. per col. On the trial of criminals, the usage is for the judge to sign the calendar or list of all the prisoners' names, with their separate judgments in the margin, which is left with the sheriff. In the case of a capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner's name, 'Hanged by the neck'; formerly in the days of Latin and abbreviation, sus. per coll. for suspendatur per collum.—4 Bl Com. c. xxii.

Suthdure, the south door of a church, where canonical purgation was performed, and plaints, etc., were heard and determined.

Swarf-money, warth-money, or guard-money, paid in lieu of the service of castleward.—Cowel.

Swear (v. a.), to put on oath, to administer an oath to. See OATH.

Swearing, the act of declaring upon oath. Profane swearing and cursing is an offence against God and religion, punishable summarily by fine under 19 Geo. II. c. 21, of 1s. for every day-labourer, soldier, or seaman; 2s. for every other person under the degree of a gentleman; and 5s. for every person of or above the degree of a gentleman.

There is also a penalty of 40s. for profane language in the streets, by the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, s. 28, and the Metropolitan Police Act, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 12. See R. v. Scott, 4 B. & S. 368. See OATH; AFFIRMATION.

Swearing the Peace, showing to a judge that one has just cause to be afraid of another in consequence of his menaces, in order to get him bound to keep the peace.

Sweinmote, Court of, one of the forest-courts, which was anciently held before the verderors as judges, by the steward, thrice in every year, the swains or freeholders within the forest composing the jury. The principal jurisdiction of this court was first to inquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forests; and secondly, to receive and try presentments, certified from the court of attachments, against offenders in vert and venison.—4 Inst. 289.

Swimming Baths may be provided by local authorities under the Baths and Washhouses Act, 1878, 41 Vict. c. 18, in the same manner as ordinary baths. See BATHS AND WASHHOUSES.

Swoling of land, so much land as one's plough can till in a year; a hide of land.—Cowel.

Sworn brothers [fratres jurati, Lat.], persons who, by mutual oaths, covenant to share in each other's fortunes. See Sedg. Edw. Conf. c. 35.

Sworn Clerks in Chancery. These offices are abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103.

Syb and Som, peace and security.—Termes de la Ley.

Syllogism, the full logical form of a single argument. It consists of three propositions (two premises and the conclusion), and these contain three terms, of which the two occurring in the conclusion are brought together in the premises of being referred to a common class. Consult Mill's Logic.

Sylva cædua [subbois, Fr.], wood under twelve years' growth.—45 Edw. III. c. 23.

Symbolic delivery. See LIVERY OF SEISIN.

Symbolæography, the art or cunning rightly to form and make written instruments. It is either judicial or extra-judicial; the latter being wholly occupied with such instruments as concern matters not yet judicially in controversy, such as instruments of agreements or contracts, and testaments or last wills.

Symbolum animæ [Lat.], a mortuary, or soul-scot.

Symond's Inn, formerly an Inn of Chancery.

Synallagmatical, that which involves mutual and reciprocal obligations and duties.

Synchronize, to concur in time.

Syncope, to cut short, or pronounce things so as not to be understood.—Cowel.

Syndic, an advocate or patron; a Burgess or recorder; an agent or attorney who acts for a corporation or university; an actor or procurator, an assignee.—Civ. Law. See In the Goods of Eliz. Darke (deceased), 29 L. J. (Prob. M. & A.) 71 (1860).

Syngraph, a deed, bond, or writing, under the hands and seals of all the parties.—Civ. Law.

Synod, a meeting or assembly of ecclesiastical persons concerning religion; being the same thing, in Greek, as convocation in Latin.

There are four kinds:—

(1) A general or universal synod or council, where bishops of all nations meet.

(2) A national synod of the clergy of one nation only.

(3) A provincial synod, where ecclesiastical persons of a province only assemble, being now what is called the convocation.

(4) A diocesan synod, of those of one diocese.

A synod in Scotland is composed of three or more presbyteries.

Synodal, a tribute or payment in money paid to the bishop or archdeacon by the inferior clergy, at the Easter visitation. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 10.

Synodales testes, synods-men (corrupted into sidesmen), were the urban and rural deans, now the churchwardens. See SIDESMEN.

T.

T, every person who was convicted of felony, short of murder, and admitted to the benefit of clergy, was at one time marked with this letter upon the brawn of the thumb. The practice is abolished.—7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 27. See BENEFIT OF CLERGY.

Tabard [fr. tabar, Wel.; tabardum, low Lat.], a short gown; a herald's coat; a surcoat.

Tabarder, one who wears a tabard or short gown; the name is still used as the title of certain bachelors of arts on the old foundation of Queen's College, Oxford.—Encyc. Lond.

Tabellio, a Roman officer who reduced contracts and wills into proper form, and attested their execution.

Table rents, payments which used to be made to bishops, etc., reserved and appropriated to their table or housekeeping.

Tabula in naufragio [Lat.] (a plank in a wreck). See TACKING and ATTENDANT TERM.

Tabulæ nuptiales, a written record of a marriage; or the agreement as to the dos.—Civ. Law.

Tabularius, a notary.—Civ. Law.

Tacfree, exempt from rent, payments, etc.

Tacita quedam habentur pro expressis. 8 Co. 40.—(Things unexpressed are sometimes considered as expressed.)

Tacite relocation, a silent or understood reletting of premises after the expiration of a lease, upon the same terms, etc., as those of such lease.—Scotch phrase.

Tack, a lease or contract of location; also an addition, supplement.

Tack duty, rent reserved upon a lease.

Tacking, the doctrine known by the name of tacking, i.e., consolidating and prioritizing two or more claims, applies in two cases: one, as against a mortgagor, the other, as between several incumbrancers.

It being deemed right that a mortgagee should not be deprived of his pledge without payment of all sums of money due to him from his mortgagor, which form a general or specific lien on the property mortgaged, if the mortgagee advance further sums of money to the mortgagor, expressly by way of surcharge, or on judgment, or recognizance, neither the mortgagor nor, generally speaking, any one claiming under him, is allowed to redeem without satisfying the whole amount.

A prior mortgagee may tack a subsequent judgment to his mortgage; and a prior judgment creditor, on getting in a subsequent mortgage, may tack to it his judgment, provided he have lent money on the security of such judgment, and it has been duly registered; but probably tacking would not be allowed where the judgment has been obtained for an antecedent debt.—2 Sp. Eq. Juris. 723. A bond debt cannot, although a simple contract debt can, be tacked to a mortgage in fee as against the mortgagor; but it appears that a bond debt can be tacked to a mortgage of leaseholds or personal chattels. See Coote on Mort. 391 et seq. As regards, however, the heir or devisee of the mortgagor, where there is a bond debt or simple contract debt, neither the heir nor the devisee is permitted to redeem without paying both the mortgage and such debt, and that whether the debt precede or follow the mortgage in order to avoid circuity of action. A mortgagee is entitled, under the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 104, which makes copyhold estates equitable assets for the payment of simple contract debts, to tack his simple contract debt to his mortgage, as against the customary heir, devisee, or executor coming to redeem; but not as against specialty creditors.—Rolfe v. Chester, 20 Bea. 610 (1856); and see Thomas v. Thomas, 22 Beav. 341.

It is a general rule that where there are several incumbrancers on the estate they should rank according to their dates, which constitute the order in which they are entitled to have their advances paid off and satisfied. It is, however, a maxim in deciding upon equitable claims connected with a legal title, that where the equity of two antagonistic parties is equal, he who has the legal title shall prevail; i.e., the equity of a person who has only a title in equity will be postponed to one who has an equal title in equity, and also a title at law. Pursuant to this doctrine, a subsequent mortgagee without notice of a mesne mortgage when he advanced his money, by purchasing the legal estate from the first legal mortgagee, can protect his estate against any person having a mortgage subsequent to such first incumbrance and squeeze him out, though he bought it after he had notice of the subsequent mortgage, or even pendente lite, provided he redeems the first mortgage before a decree to settle priorities. This is what Lord Hale called the creditor's tabula in naufragio.

—Marsh v. Lee, 2 Vent 337 (22 Car. II.), and 1 White & Tudor's Lead. Cas., 4th ed. And notice of his advance, given by the second to the first mortgagee, will not prevent the third mortgagee, who lends his money without notice of it, from tacking his mortgage to the first. If, however, a prior mortgagee take an assignment of a third mortgage, as a trustee only for another person, or a mortgagee of the equity of redemption come to him as executor, he will not be allowed to tack the two mortgages together to the prejudice of intervening incumbrancers; since, if this were permitted, a mere stranger purchasing the third mortgage, by declaring he bought it in trust only for the first mortgagee, might tack both together, and defeat all the other incumbrancers. If a first mortgagee lend a further sum to the mortgagor upon a statute or judgment, he may retain against a mesne mortgagee (provided he had no notice of such mesne mortgage) till both the mortgage and statute or judgment be paid. See 2 Sp. Eq. 720—752, and the cases there collected and criticised.

By the 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, s. 7, tacking was abolished, but that section was in the next session repealed by the 38 & 39 Vict. c. 87, s. 129.

Tail [fr. tailleur, Fr., to prune]. An estate-tail is a freehold of inheritance, limited to a person and the heirs of his body general or special, male or female, and is the creature of the Statute de Donis. The estate, provided the entail be not barred, reverts to the donor or reversioner, if the donee die without leaving descendants answering to the condition annexed to the estate upon its creation, unless there be a limitation over to a third person on default of such descendants, when it vests in such third person or remainderman.

In order to create an estate-tail by deed, the word 'heir' or 'heirs' must be used.—White v. Collins, Comyns' Rep. 289, 301; 2 Prest. Est. 475. In addition to this term, the deed must contain, either in direct terms or by reference, words of procreation, to describe the body from whom the heirs are to proceed, or the person by whom they are to be begotten.

In a will technical words of limitation are not necessary: thus a devise

To A. and his issue; or

To A. and his seed; or children; or sons; or

To A. and his heirs male; or

To A. and his heirs lawfully begotten; or

To A., and if he die before issue, or not having issue, or not having a son, then to another, will give estates-tail.

If a tenant-in-tail grant the fee-simple in the property to another person and his heirs, only a qualified or base fee will pass, commensurate with the estate-tail, capable, however, of being rendered absolute, by barring the entail, but until then defeasible by the entry not only of the reversioner, or remainderman, when he becomes entitled to enter into possession of the estate, but also of the issue-in-tail upon the death of the tenant-in-tail. It should be observed that an estate-tail cannot as such be conveyed to another.

This estate possesses the following incidents and privileges:—

(1) It is, like a fee-simple, subject to curtesy and dower (if not barred).

(2) The owner may commit all kinds of waste upon it without being impeachable for it, and so it is said may his grantee.—3 Leon. 121.

(3) It is liable to every kind of debt.

(4) It may be lost by escheat; by forfeiture for treason, or felony (but such forfeiture is now abolished by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23); or by extinguishment.

(5) The owner, having an inheritable freehold, has a right to the title-deeds which equity will secure to him.

(6) Although a tenant-in-tail must generally keep down the interest, yet, having only a particular interest, he is not bound to pay off any charge or incumbrance affecting the estate; if, however, he do so, the presumption is that he meant to exonerate the estate (for he might, if he pleased, have acquired the fee-simple), unless he evince the contrary intention by taking an assignment of the incumbrance to a trustee in trust for himself, or by some other express act.

(7) The donee may grant leases for 21 years out of it, under the Settled Estates Act. (See SETTLED LAND.)

(8) This estate cannot be merged, surrendered, or extinguished by the accession of the fee-simple to the tenant-in-tail.

(9) The issue-in-tail is not bound to complete, either at law or in equity, any contract made by his ancestor as tenant-in-tail, since he claims from the original grantor, and not from his immediate ancestor. If, however, he do any act towards completing such a contract, equity will then compel its performance.

(10) Neither is such issue bound to pay off his ancestor's incumbrances, nor to keep down the interest thereon; but he is liable to crown debts under 33 Hen. VIII. c. 39, s. 75.

(11) A tenant-in-tail may cut timber and dispose of it, without barring the entail; but if he sell the growing trees, the buyer must sever them during his life, otherwise the issue-in-tail will be entitled to them as part of the inheritance; and the buyer, though obliged to pay the purchase-money, will not then be allowed to sever them.

(12) If a tenant-in-tail grant estovers, or the vesture of his woods, to another, the grant determines with his death; for being a charge upon the inheritance, it necessarily ceases when his power is determined.

(13) It may be barred by the tenant-in-tail, though not by the issue-in-tail, under the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74; but the entail of offices or dignities cannot be barred.

Before the Statute de Donis Conditionalibus the donee could, after issue born, have alienated the land, whereby the issue would have been disinherited, and the donor deprived of his right of reversion. This being the case, the statute declared that the will of the donor should be observed; and that an estate granted to a man and the heirs of his body should descend to the issue (he not having power to alienate the estate), and that in default of issue, the land should revert to the donor or his heirs. Estates-tail were thus made inalienable, and neither the issue nor the remainder-man could be barred. And many other inconvenient consequences were produced, which quickened the ingenuity of the judicature, until it produced, at length (in its efforts to recover the liberty of alienation), the complicated machinery of fines and recoveries. See FINE and RECOVERY.

The modes, then, of barring an estate-tail were two, viz., a fine, according to the statute-law (which was a compromise of a fictitious action), giving a base fee commensurate with the existence of the issue upon whom the estate-tail would (if unbarred) have devolved, and a recovery at the common law (which was a real action carried on to judgment), giving the fee-simple absolute. These were abolished by 3 and 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, an analysis of which is here attempted in consequence of its importance.

The 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, entitled 'An Act for the Abolition of Fines and Recoveries, and for the substitution of more simple modes of Assurance,' which received the royal assent Aug. 28th, 1833, abolished all the fictions, together with their cumbrous technicality (see RECOVERY), which had been invented by legal artifice and judicial contrivance in contravention of the unrepealed Statute de Donis, and what the legislature could not do, in the reign of our second Edward, by reason of the mighty power of the barons,—the great proprietors of the soil,—it effected in the reign of our late Sovereign, viz., the virtual repeal of the Statute of Westminster 2, and the recognition of the right of barring estates-tail, prescribing and simplifying the mode of disposition.

The general enabling clause (s. 15) enacts, that 'after December 31st, 1833, every actual tenant-in-tail (consult the glossary clause), whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise, shall have full power to dispose of, for an estate in fee simple absolute, or for any less estate, the lands entailed, as against all persons claiming the lands entailed by force of any estate-tail which shall be vested in, or might be claimed by, or which, but for some previous act, would have been vested in, or might have been claimed by the person making the disposition, at the time of his making the same, and also as against all persons, including the king's most excellent majesty, his heirs and successors, whose estates are to take effect after the determination, or in defeasance of any such estate-tail; saving always the rights of all persons in respect of estates prior to the estate-tail in respect of which such disposition shall be made, and the rights of all other persons except those against whom such disposition is by this act authorized to be made.

In order to provide a check to the barring of estates-tail, so as to prevent a son tenant-in-tail, upon attaining his majority, defeating a strict family settlement, against the wish of his father, the tenant for life, the legislature has introduced a reasonable but unaccountable agent, denominated 'the protector of the settlement,' who is, in many respects, but not in all (as will presently be seen), analogous to the abolished 'tenant to the precept,' who was a more technical creature, and whose protection was both arbitrary and defective, besides being productive of numerous difficulties. The office of this novel conservative power (as it has been called) is to grant or withhold his consent, which is required to enable a tenant-in-tail in remainder, expectant on an estate of freehold, to bar as well his own issue as also those in remainder, to the same extent as might have been effected by a recovery. It is to be observed, that an expectant tenant-in-tail may bar his own issue only, under this act, without the consent of the protector. See PROTECTOR OF THE SETTLEMENT.

We will now consider the clauses substituting more simple modes of assurance.

Every disposition of lands by a tenant-in-tail is to be effected by some one of the assurances evidenced by deed (not being a will or a contract either expressed or implied) used for the conveyance of fee-simple estates. If the tenant-in-tail be a feme covert, her husband's concurrence is necessary, and her deed must be duly acknowledged (s. 40).

The tenant-in-tail, then, for the purposes of this act, is treated as having a legal estate of fee-simple in the land (no matter what his estate-tail may be), and he must, therefore, convey by one of those modes of assurance which the law has appropriated to the transfer of freehold interests. These modes of assurance are feoffment (at the common law), bargain and sale, covenant to stand seised, a release (under the Statute of Uses), or grant, which is the best mode of assurance, and which must be adopted, if the estate be incorporeal.

As to the protector's consent, it may either be given by the same assurance by which the disposition is effected, or by a deed distinct from the assurance, executed either on, or at any time before the day on which the assurance is made, otherwise the consent will be void; if the protector consent by a distinct deed, such consent will be deemed absolute and unqualified, unless he refer to the particular assurance, and confine his consent to the disposition thereby made. His consent once given cannot be revoked. A married woman, being a protector, gives her consent in the same manner as if she were a feme sole (ss. 42, 43, 44, 45). See 2 Br. & Had. Com. 218.

Tail after possibility of issue extinct, Tenant in. This estate arises out of a special entail as to the parentage of the issue, when the express condition has become impossible by reason of death. Thus, if an estate be granted to husband and wife, and their issue male or female, if either of them die without issue, the survivor is tenant-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct; and even if there have been issue, yet if the issue die without issue, then the surviving parent is also such a tenant; and also if an estate be entailed upon a man and his issue from a particular wife, if she die without issue, the interest of the husband becomes reduced to a tenancy-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct. Only a donee in tail-special can become such a tenant, for if the entail be general, such a tenancy can never arise; for whilst he lives he may have issue, the law not admitting the impossibility of having children at any age. As an estate-tail is originally carved out of a fee-simple, so this estate is carved out of a special entail.

There may be tenant-in-tail after possibility, etc., of a remainder as well as of a possession. And thus, if a lease for life be made, remainder to husband and wife in special tail, and the husband die without issue, now is the wife tenant-in-tail after possibility, etc., of this remainder; and if the tenant for life surrender to her, as he may (an estate for one's own life being greater than an estate for the life of another), now is she tenant-in-tail after possibility, etc., in possession.—Lewis Bowles's case, 11 Co. 81 a.

This estate must be created by death; it cannot arise out of any arrangement of parties, but ex dispositione legis, and not ex provisione hominis; if, therefore, an estate be given to husband and wife, and the heirs of their bodies, should they afterwards be divorced causa præcontractus vel consanguinitatis vel affinitatis, their estate is converted into a joint estate for life, and not into a tenancy-in-tail after possibility of issue extinct, because their estate has been altered by their own act, and not by the Act of God. Such a tenancy can endure only for the life of the surviving donee-in-tail, who has no power under the 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74, s. 18, to bar the remainders or reversion over, and if he convey his interest to another, such other will be only a tenant pur autre vie, and will be punishable for waste.

The attributes of this estate are these:—

- (1) The tenant is punishable for waste; he may, therefore, not only commit it, but also convert to his own use the property wasted. Equity, however, will restrain him from committing wilful waste.
- (2) The estate is liable to forfeiture.
- (3) It will merge in a fee-simple or fee-tail, immediately expectant thereon.
- (4) The reversioner or remainder-man shall be received upon the tenant's default.
- (5) An exchange with a tenant for life is good, the interest being deemed equal, and only differing in quality.
- (6) It is deemed a life estate only for the purposes of the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 1.

Tailage [fr. tailler, Fr.], a piece cut out of the whole; a share of one's substance paid by way of tribute; a toll or tax.—Cowel.

Taille, the fee which is opposed to fee-simple, because it is so minced or pared that it is not in the owner's free power to dispose of it, but it is, by the first giver, cut or divided from all other, and tied to the issue of the donee—in short, an estate-tail. See TAIL.

Tailzie, or Entail, an arbitrary line of succession laid down by a proprietor, in substitution of a legal line of succession.—Scotch term. A deed of tailzie creates a Scotch entail by which, until 11 and 12 Vict. c. 36, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 94, and 31 & 32 Vict. c. 84, an estate might be tied up for ever. See also 38 & 39 Vict. c. 61.

Tales de circumstantibus. If a sufficient number of jurors do not appear upon a trial, or if by means of challenges or exemptions a sufficient number of unexceptionable ones do not remain, either party may pray a tales; which is a supply of such men as are summoned upon the panel, in order to make up a deficiency. See 6 Geo. IV. c. 50, s. 37, and JURY.

Talesman, a person summoned to act as a juror from amongst the bystanders in the court.

Talfourd's Act (amending the law of copyright), 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45; see COPYRIGHT; (giving a mother the custody of children under seven), 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, repealed and replaced by 36 Vict. c. 12, which extends the age to sixteen; see INFANT.

Talion, law of retaliation. See LEX TALIONIS.

Talis interpretatio semper fienda est, ut evitetur absurdum, et inconveniens, et ne iudicium sit illusorium. 1 Co. 52.—Interpretation is always to be made in such a manner that what is absurd and inconvenient may be avoided, and the judgment be not illusory.)

Talis non est eadem; nam nullum simile est idem. 4 Co. 18.—(What is like is not the same; for nothing similar is the same).

Talis res, vel tale rectum, quæ vel quod non est in homine adtunc superstitie sed tantummodo est et consistit in consideratione et intelligentiâ legis, et quod alii dicerunt talem rem vel tale rectum fore in nubibus. Co. Litt. 342.—(Such a thing or such a right as is not vested in a person then living, but merely exists in the consideration and contemplation of law [is said to be in abeyance], and others have said that such a thing or such a right is in the clouds.)

Tallagers, tax or toll-gatherers; mentioned by Chaucer.

Tallagium facere, to give up accounts in the Exchequer, where the method of accounting was by tallies.

Talley, or Tally, a stick cut into two parts, on each whereof is marked, with notches or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor. It was the ancient mode of keeping accounts; one part was held by the creditor, and the other by the debtor. The use of tallies in the Exchequer was abolished by 23 Geo. III. c. 82, and the old tallies were ordered to be destroyed by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 15.

Tallia, commons in meat and drink.

Talliage. See TAILAGE.

Tally trade, a system of dealing by which dealers furnish certain articles on credit, upon an agreement for the payment of the stipulated price by certain weekly or monthly instalments.—McCull. Comm. Dict. (See PEDLAR.) A tally was a common security for money in the days of Edward I.—2 Reeves, c. xi., p. 253, n (b). See PEDLARS.

Talookdar, a holder of a talook, which is a small portion of land; a petty land agent.—Indian.

Tam quam, writ of error from inferior courts, when the error is supposed to be as well in giving the judgment as in awarding execution upon it. (Tam in redditione judicii, quam in adjudicatione executionis.)

Tangible property, corporeal property.

Tanistry, or Tanistria, an ancient municipal law or tenure, which allotted the inheritance of lands, castles, etc., to the oldest and most worthy and capable house of the deceased's name and blood, without any regard to proximity. This, in reality was giving it to the strongest, and naturally occasioned bloody wars in families; for which reason it was abolished in the reign of James I.—Encyc. Lond.; 3 Hallam's Const. Hist., c. xviii., p. 377.

Tannahdar, a petty police officer.—Indian.

Tarde venit [Lat.] (it came too late).

Tare and Tret. See ALLOWANCE.

Tariff [Span.], a cartel of commerce, a book of rates, a table or catalogue, drawn usually in alphabetical order, containing the names of several kinds of merchandize, with the duties or customs to be paid for the same, as settled by authority, or agreed on between the several princes and states that hold commerce together.—Encyc. Lond.

Tasmania, formerly called Van Diemen's Land. See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 13; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 95; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 57; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 56; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 52; and 29 & 30 Vict. c. 74.

Tath. In the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, the lords of manors anciently claimed the privilege of having their tenants' flocks or sheep brought at night upon their own demesne lands, there to be folded for the improvement of the ground, which liberty was called by the name of the tath.—Spelm.

Tau, a cross.—Selden.

Tauri liberi libertas, a common bull, because he was free to all the tenants within such a manor, liberty, etc.

Tautology, describing the same thing twice in one sentence in equivalent terms; a fault in rhetoric; it differs from repetition or iteration, which is repeating the same sentence in the same or equivalent terms: the latter is sometimes either excusable or necessary in an argument or address; the former (tautology) never.

Tax [fr. tdsg., Wel.; taxe, Fr. and Dut.], an impost; a tribute imposed on the subject; an excise; tallage.

The general principles of taxation are these:

(1) The subjects of every estate ought to contribute to the support of the government, as nearly as possible in proportion to their respective abilities; that is, in proportion to the revenue which they respectively enjoy under the protection of the state. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation.

(2) The tax which each individual is bound to pay ought to be certain and not arbitrary. The time of payment, the manner of payment, the quantity to be paid, ought all to be clear and plain to the contributor, and to every other person.

(3) Every tax ought to be levied at the time, or in the manner, in which it is most likely to be convenient for the contributor to pay it.

(4) Every tax ought to be so contrived, as both to take out and keep out of the pockets of the people as little as possible over and above what it brings into the public treasury of the state.

Taxes are either direct or indirect. A direct tax is one that is demanded from the very persons who are intended or desired to pay it. Indirect taxes are those which are demanded from one person, in the expectation and intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another: such as the excise or customs. Taxes may be laid on any one of the three sources of income (rent, profits, or wages); or a uniform tax on all of them.—3 Smi. Wealth of Nat., b. 5, c. ii., and 2 Mill's Pol. Eco., b. 5, cc. ii., iii.

The land tax, house duties, and property tax are collected under the consolidating 'Taxes Management, 1880,' 43 & 44 Vict. c. 19.

Taxatio Ecclesiastica, the valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, on occasion of Pope Innocent IV. granting to King Henry III. the tenth of all spirituals for three years. This taxation was first made by Walter, Bishop of Norwich, delegated by the Pope to this office in 38 Hen. III. and hence called Taxatio Norwicensis. It is also called Pope Innocent's Valor.

Taxation of Costs. The mode by which certain officers of the various courts allow or disallow the sums claimed by solicitors from their clients, or by the one party in an action from the other.

The charges which solicitors are allowed to make in actions are regulated by Order in Council of 12th August, 1875, called 'Rules of the Supreme Court (Costs)', and their charges in conveyancing, etc., business by the 'Solicitors' Remuneration Order' (see SOLICITOR). As between party and party a taxation of costs is always had, and the costs which are disallowed cannot be recovered by the successful from the unsuccessful party, but must be paid nevertheless by such successful party to his solicitor unless they be disallowed as between solicitor and client. Taxation as between solicitor and client, which may be had whether the business be transacted in court or not, is only had upon the application of the party chargeable by the signed bill of costs, until the expiration of a month from the delivery of which the solicitor is disabled, by the Solicitors' Act, 1843, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 43, s. 37, from suing the client upon such bill. The mode of taxation is pointed out by that enactment, and in particular it is provided (with an exception for 'special circumstances') that if the bill when taxed be less by a sixth part than the bill delivered, the solicitor must pay the costs of the taxation, but if otherwise, the party chargeable must pay them.

Taxers, two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge to see the true gauge of all the weights and measures.

Taxing-masters, officers of the Supreme Court, who examine and allow or disallow items in bills of costs. See OFFICERS OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Taxt-ward, an annual payment made to a superior in Scotland, instead of the duties due to him under the tenure of ward-holding. Abolished.

Team, or Theame [fr. tyman, Sax., to teem or bring forth], a royalty or privilege granted, by royal charter, to a lord of a manor, for the having, restraining, and judging of bondmen and villeins, with their children, goods, and chattels, etc.—Glan. 1, 5, c. ii.

Teamster, a waggoner who carries goods for hire.

Teding-penny, tething-penny, tithing-penny, a small duty or payment to the sheriff from each tithing, towards the charge of keeping courts, etc., from which some of the religious were exempted by royal charter.

Teep, a note of hand, a promissory note given by a native banker or money-lender to zemindars and others, to enable them to furnish government with security for the payment of their rents.—Indian.

Tehsildar, one who has charge of the collections; a native collector of a district acting under a European or zemindar.—Indian.

Teind-masters, those entitled to tithes.

Teinds, tithes.

Teinland, thaneland, which see.

Telegraphiæ, written evidence of things past.—Blount.

Telegraphs.—See ELECTRIC TELEGRAPHS, and POST OFFICE TELEGRAPHS.

Teller, one who numbers; a numberer; four officers in the Exchequer, whose offices were abolished by 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 15.

Telligraphum [fr. tellus, Lat., land; and γράφω, Gk., to write], an Anglo-Saxon charter of land.—1 Reeves' Hist. Eng. Law, c. i., p. 10.

Tellworc, that labour which a tenant was bound to do for his lord, for a certain number of days.

Tementale, or Tenementale, a tax of two shillings upon every ploughland; a decennary. See that title.

Temple, two inns of court, thus called, because anciently the dwelling-place of the Knights-Templars. On the suppression of that order, they were purchased by some professors of the common law, and converted into hospitia or inns of court. They are called the Inner and Middle Temple, in relation to Essex House, which was also a part of the house of the Templars, and called the Outer Temple, because situated without Temple-bar.—Encyc. Lond. See Addison's History of the Knights Templars.

Temporal lords, the peers of the realm; the bishops are not in strictness held to be peers, but merely lords of Parliament. 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 330, 345.

Temporality, or Temporals, secular possessions, as distinguished from ecclesiastical rights; such revenues, lands, and tenements as archbishops and bishops have had annexed to their sees by the kings and others, from time to time, as they are barons and lords of parliament.—Cowel.

Temporalty, the laity; secular people.

Temptatio, or Tentatio, a trial or proof.

Tempus personis, mast-time in the forest, which is about Michaelmas to St. Martin's Day, November 11.—Cowel.

Tempus semestre, half a year, and not six lunar months.—West. II. c. 5.

Tena, a coil worn by ecclesiastics.

Tenancy [fr. tenentia, law Lat.], the condition of a tenant; the temporary possession of what belongs to another.

Tenancy in common. This estate is created when several persons have several distinct estates, either of the same or of a different quantity, in any subject of property, in equal or unequal shares, and either by the same act or by several acts, and by several titles, and not a joint title.

A tenancy-in-common differs from a joint-tenancy in this respect, joint-tenants have one estate in the whole, and no estate in any particular part; they have the power of alienation over their respective aliquot parts, and by exercising that power, may give a separate and distinct right to their particular parts. Tenants-in-common have several and distinct estates in their respective parts; hence the difference in the several modes of alienation and assurance by them. Each tenant-in-common has, in contemplation of law, a distinct tenement and a distinct freehold.

Tenants-in-common hold by unity of possession, because neither of them knows his own severalty, and therefore they all occupy promiscuously. This is the only unity belonging to the estate; for since the tenants may hold different kinds of interest, so there exists no necessary unity of interest, and there is no unity of title, for one may claim by descent, and another by purchase; also the estate may vest in each tenant at different times. There being no entirety of interest among tenants-in-common, each is seised of a distinct though undivided share; they hold per my et non per tout, and consequently the jus accrescendi does not apply to them.

This estate is subject to curtesy and dower. It is dissolvable,

(1) By a voluntary deed of partition;

(2) By the union of all the titles and interests in one tenant by grant, devise, surrender, or otherwise, which reduces the whole estate to a severalty;

(2) By compulsory partition.

See PARTITION.

Tenancy, Joint. See JOINT TENANCY.

Tenant, one that holds land of any one inclusive of the sovereign; it is therefore applicable to every subject holding land in this country; but the word is always used relatively, and as the relation to the sovereign is seldom called in question, it more commonly signifies one who holds of another subject: the owner is seldom characterized as tenant except where it is necessary to particularize the quantity of his estate. 2. One that has temporary possession and use of the land of another, correlative to landlord.

Tenantable repair, such a repair as will render a house fit for present habitation.

Tenant-right, in England. (1) a custom ensuring to an outgoing tenant compensation from his landlord for not being able to reap the full benefit of labour or improvements expended or made during the tenancy; or (2) the money due in pursuance of the custom (see Faviell v. Gaskoin, 7 Ex. 273).

See also IMPROVEMENT, UNEXHAUSTED COMPENSATION FOR.

In Ireland, also a custom either ensuring a permanence of tenure in the same occupant without liability to any other increase of rent than may be sanctioned by the general sentiments of the community; or entitling a tenant of a farm to receive purchase-money, amounting to so many years' rent, on its being transferred to another tenant. It has long prevailed in Ulster.—1 Mill's Pol. Eco. 385. See 33 & 34 Vict. c. 46 (the Landlord and Tenant, Ireland, Act, 1870), and 44 & 45 Vict. c. 49 (the Land Law, Ireland, Act, 1881).

Tende, to tender or offer.—O. N. B. 123.

Tender, offer; proposal for acceptance.

A tender of satisfaction is allowed to be made in most actions for money demands. It need not be made by the debtor personally to the creditor personally; it may be made through an authorized agent, and a tender to one of several joint creditors is sufficient. A tender must be absolute and unconditional, and the money must be actually produced at the time of the tender, unless that be dispensed with by the creditor.

By the Coinage Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 10), s. 4, it is provided that a tender of payment of money, if made in coins legally issued by the Mint in accordance with the provisions of that Act, and not called in, and not become materially diminished in weight, or shall be a legal tender;—in the case of gold coins for a payment of any amount; in the case of silver coins for a payment of an amount not exceeding 40s., but for no greater amount; and in the case of bronze coins for a payment of an amount not exceeding 1s., but for no greater amount.

Bank of England notes are a legal tender for debts above 5l. (3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 98, s. 6). The 29 & 30 Vict. c. 65, authorises the Queen in Council to make gold coined in the Colonies legal tender in England.

Tender of Amends. See AMENDS.

Tenement [fr. teneo, Lat., to hold], in its vulgar acceptation, is only applied to houses and other buildings, but in its original, proper, and legal sense, it signifies everything that may be holden; provided it be of a permanent nature, whether it be of a substantial and sensible, or of an unsubstantial, ideal kind. Thus liberum tenementum, frank tenement, or freehold, is applicable not only to lands and other solid objects, but also to offices, rents, commons, advowsons, franchises, peerages, etc.—2 Bl. Com. 16.

Tenementary land, the outland of manors, granted to tenants by the Saxon thanes, under arbitrary rents and services.—Spelm.

Tenementis legatis, an ancient writ, lying to the City of London, or any other corporation (where the old custom was, that men might devise by will lands and tenements, as well as goods and chattels), for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same.—Reg. Orig. 244.

Tenendas, that clause of a charter by which the particular tenure is expressed.

Tenendum, that clause in a deed wherein the tenure of the land is limited and created. Its office is to limit and appoint the tenure of the land which is held, and how and of whom it is to be held. See DEED.

Tenens nil facere potest, propter obligationem homagii, quod vertatur domino ad exheredationem, vel aliam atrocem injuriam; nec dominus tenenti è converso. Quod si fecerint, dissolvitur et extinguitur homagium omnino, et homagii connexio et obligatio; et erit inde justum judicium cum venerit contra homagium et fidelitatis sacramentum, quod in eo in quo delinquent puniantur; scilicet, in personâ domini quod amittat dominium, et in personâ tenentis quod amittat tenementum. Co. Litt. 65.—(The tenant, by force of the obligation of homage, can do no action which may operate to the disinheriting his lord, or doing him any atrocious injury; and so conversely, cannot the lord, as against the tenant. For if they act in such a manner, they dissolve and extinguish altogether the homage and the connection and obligation of homage; and when anything is done contrary to the homage and the oath of fidelity, it is just that the parties be punished through that very thing with regard to which they are guilty; that is to say, that the lord lose his lordship; and the tenant his tenement [according as one or the other is guilty].

Tenentibus in assisâ non onerandis, a writ that formerly lay for him to whom a disseisor had alienated the land whereof he disseised another, that he should not be molested in assize for damages, if the disseisor had wherewith to satisfy them.—Reg. Orig. 214.

Tenheded, or Tienheofed [Sax.], a dean.—Covel.

Ten Hours Act. The popular name for 10 & 11 Vict. c. 29, which first limited the time of work for women and children in mills and factories, and is now repealed and replaced by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878. See FACTORY.

Tenmentale, or Tenmantale, the number of ten men, which number, in the time of the Saxons, was called a decennary; and ten decennaries made what we call a hundred. Also, a duty or tribute paid to the Crown, consisting of two shillings for each ploughland.—Encyc. Lond.

Tenne, tawny, orange, or brusk; orange colour.

In engravings it should be represented by lines in bend sinister crossed by others barways. Herald's who blazon by the names of the heavenly bodies, call it dragon's head, and those who employ jewels, jacinth. It is one of the colours called stainand.—Heraldic term.

Tennis, Game of, legalized by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109.

Tenor, sense contained; general course or drift. Tenor implies that a correct copy is set out, but the word effect alone implies that the substance only is set out.

Tenore indictamenti mittendo, a writ whereby the record of an indictment, and the process thereupon was called out of another Court into the Queen's Bench.—Reg Orig. 69. See CERTIORARI.

Tenor est qui legem dat feudo. Craig. Jus. Feud., 3rd ed., 66.—(It is the tenor of the feudal grant which regulates its effect and extent.)—Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 459.

Tenore præsentium, by the tenor of these presents, i.e., the matter contained therein, or rather the intent and meaning thereof.—Covel.

Tenserix, a sort of ancient tax or military contribution.

Tentates panis, the essay or assay of bread.—Blount.

Tenths [decimæ, Lat.], tithes; also the tenth part of the annual value of every spiritual benefice, according to the valuation in the king's books, being that yearly portion or tribute which all ecclesiastical livings formerly paid to the Crown.

Tenura est pactio contra communem feudi naturam ac rationem, in contractu interposita. Wright's Ten. 21.—(Tenure is a compact contrary to the common nature and reason of the fee, put into a contract.)

Tenure, the mode of holding property; it is the direct result of feudalism, which separated the dominium directum (the dominion of the soil), which it placed mediately, or immediately, in the Crown, from the dominium utile (the possessory title), the right to the use and profits in the soil, designated by the term seisin, which is the highest interest a subject can acquire.

Without tracing the origin of tenure back into remote antiquity, it is ascertained that there were originally two modes of holding land, viz.:—(1) Allodial (from los, signifying lot), over which the owner had entire and irresponsible dominion, which he could dispose of at his own pleasure, or transmit as an inheritance to his children. The land was also attachable to answer the owner's debts, and could also be made available for commercial enterprise. Such tenure was acquired upon the distribution of lands by lot, among the Franks. (2) Feudal (from od, possession, or estate, and feo, wages, pay), over which the owner had but a conditional dominion acknowledging a superior lord, upon whose pleasure the tenure precariously depended, and without whose consent nothing could be done. And this is the groundwork of the feudal system, which displaced the laws imposed upon this country by the Saxons and the Danes, who, migrating from the forests of Germany, had established themselves and their laws in this kingdom.

The principles of the feudal-system were based upon conquest, the hordes from Celtic Europe became soldiers of fortune, and, after subduing a country, instituted a plan of military confederation, the provisions of which had for their object the preservation of the spoils of war. Large districts of land were given to the superior officers by the conquering general, and these districts were granted in smaller allotments to the inferior officers and soldiers. The wisdom which the northern invaders evinced in these institutions, and their valour in the defence of their acquisitions, alarmed the princes of Europe, who, to preserve their dominions, adopted a similar policy. Their subjects fell in with these changes, because, by such arrangements, they acquired the protection of some powerful lord, without which, in those times, it was scarcely possible for an individual to preserve his liberty or his property. As allodial land was more desirable than feudal, such a conversion would appear surprising, unless for the above reason, and because the composition or fine for a crime against the feudatory was greater than that for an allodial owner. Thus nearly all allodial property was destroyed. Small tracts of allodial lands, however, are to be found in Germany, France, Holland, and even in Normandy, and some in Scotland. It should be remarked, that where allodial tenure was converted into feudal, such lands were from the beginning hereditary, which was not the case where the feudal law was established by the iron right of conquest.

Out of feudalism arose the maxim, that all lands in this kingdom were originally granted by our kings, and held mediately or immediately of the king, as lord paramount, in consideration of certain services to be rendered by the holder. There is then no allodial land in England. Those who held immediately from the king were called tenants in capite (in chief), which was the most honourable tenure. This was of two kinds, either ut de honore, where the land was held of the king as proprietor of some honour, castle, or manor; or ut de coronâ, where it was held of him in right of the Crown itself. When these tenants granted portions of their lands to inferior persons they were called mesne (middle) lords or barons, with regard to such inferior holders, who were styled tenants paravail, the lowest tenant, because they were supposed to make avail or profit of the land. The lands were called feuds (feoda), either proper, which were purely military, given militiæ gratiâ to persons qualified for military service; or improper, which did not, in point of acquisition, services, and the like, strictly conform to the nature of a mere military feud, such as those that were sold or bartered for any equivalent, or granted free from all circumstances, or in consideration of any certain services.

In modern phraseology, the thing holden is called a tenement, the holder of it a tenant, and the manner of holding it a tenure. Lay tenements were divided into two great classes, viz., frank tenement or freehold, and villenage.

Frank-tenements were subdivided into knight service and free socage.

Knight service proper, or tenure in chivalry, was the original and most honourable species of tenure created by a determinate quantity of land called a knight's fee. Its extent was twelve plough-lands, that is, as much land as could be reasonably ploughed in one year by twelve ploughs, or, according to other authorities, 800 acres of land, and others say 680, and its value in those times was 20*l.* per annum. This tenure was granted by words of pure donation, dedi et concessi (I have given and granted); transferred by investiture, i.e., by a solemn and public delivery of the very land itself by the lord to a vassal, in the presence of his other vassals, and perfected by homage and fealty; homage being the acknowledgment of tenure, and fealty the solemn oath made by the vassal of fidelity and attachment to the lord.

The owner of a knight's fee was bound to attend the lord to the wars on horseback, armed as a knight, for forty days in every year, if called upon, and this attendance was his rent or service for the land he held; but if he had only half a knight's fee, he attended only twelve days, and so on in proportion. Seven other services were afterwards super-induc'd upon this tenure, viz:—

(1) Aids, which were three,—to ransom the lord's person, if taken prisoner; to make the lord's eldest son a knight, attended with great pomp and expense, when he was fifteen years of age; and to marry the lord's eldest daughter, by giving her a portion.

(2) Relief, which was a fine or composition with the lord for taking up the tenure lapsed or fallen in by the death of the last tenant. The fine was 100*s.* payable if the heir at his ancestor's death were of age.

(3) Primer seisin was a right which the king had, when any of his tenants in capite died possessed of a knight's fee, to receive from the heir (if he were of age) a year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession, and half-a-year's profits if they were expectant on a life estate.

(4) Wardship of the heir, if under the age of twenty-one, being a male, or fourteen being a female, belonged to the lord, who was then called the guardian in chivalry. He had the custody of the heir, together with the lands (without accounting for the profits, and subject only to the infant's bare maintenance), till the age of twenty-one (males), and sixteen (females). The heir-male was supposed to be incapable of performing knight-service till twenty-one; but the female was supposed to be capable of marrying at fourteen, and then her husband might perform the service. When the heir-male attained twenty-one, or the female sixteen, he or she might sue out a writ of ouster-lemain (amovere manum, Lat.), in order to get the lands out of the guardian's hand, the fine upon which was one half-year's profits of the land. In order to ascertain these profits, which arose to the Crown, the court of awards and liveries was erected by the 32 Hen. VIII. c. 46.

(5) Marriage, which was the right of disposing of the infant ward in matrimony by the guardian in chivalry. If the infant refused the person tendered, he or she forfeited the value of the marriage, i.e., so much as a jury would assess, or any one would give to the guardian for such an alliance; or if the infant married without the guardian's consent, the fine was double the value of the marriage; but this last fine did not extend to heirs female.

(6) Fines due to the lord for every alienation, i.e., whenever the tenant had occasion to make over the land to another. One-third of the yearly value was paid for the lord's license; but if the tenant aliened without the lord's license, a full year's value was the fine.

(7) Escheat, which is a species of reversion; for if the tenant died without heirs of his blood, or if he had committed treason or felony, the mutual bond between the lord and such tenant was dissolved, and the tenure being determined the land resulted back to the lord who gave it. But the statute 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 106, s. 10, enacts, that after the death of a person attainted of treason or felony, the attainder (i.e., when sentence is pronounced upon the conviction) shall not prevent any person from inheriting land who would have been capable of inheriting the same by tracing his descent through such relation, if he had not been attainted, unless such lands shall have escheated in consequence of such attainder before the 1st of January, 1834, when the law was, that the attainder of a person abolished every inheritable quality, by which he was rendered not only incapable of himself inheriting, or transmitting his own property by heirship, but he also obstructed the descent of his lands to his posterity, in all cases where they were obliged to derive their title through him; and also by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, ss. 46—7. By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 23, escheat for treason or felony has been abolished.

Grand serjeanty was another species of tenure, which some writers think was superior to knight-service, whereby the tenant was bound instead of serving the king, generally in the wars, to do him some special, certain, and honorary service in person, as to be marshal of his host, or high steward of England, or to carry his banner or his sword, or to be his butler, champion, or other officer at his coronation. In most other respects it was similar to knight-service, only he was not bound to pay aid or escuage; and when a tenant by knight-service paid 5*l.* for a relief, a tenant by grand serjeanty paid one year's value of his land, were it much or little.

Cornage tenure was a species of grand serjeanty. The service was to wind a horn in order to warn and rouse the king's subjects to arms when the Scots or other enemies poured over the borders.

These tenures were held by personal and uncertain services, which, at length, becoming inconvenient and troublesome, were commuted into certain monetary assessments, called escuage or scutage, from scutum [Lat.], then a well-known denomination for money, as it had previously been for a shield. These scutages became the groundwork of subsidies, which were afterwards levied by our kings upon the people, to defray the expenses of their wars, out of which the land-tax of the present day sprung. Thus the gallant knight degenerated into the tame and overtaxed slave, the national militia into a band of mercenaries, and the nobles who fought for the sovereign into crafty adventurers, enriching themselves by means of systematic extortion, while, during peace, these feudal barons ravaged their neighbours, oppressed the commoners, and were, in fact, bandits and robbers.

At last these military tenures, together with all their grievances, were destroyed at the Restoration. The statute 12 Car. II. c. 24, enacted that the court of award and liveries, and all wardships, liveries, *primer seisin*s, and ouster-lemains, values, and forfeitures of marriage, by reason of any tenure of the king or others, be totally taken away. And that all fines for alienations, tenures by homage, knight-service, and escuage, and also aids for marrying the daughter or knight-ing the son, and all tenures of the king in capite, be likewise taken away; and that all sorts of tenures held of the king or others, be turned into free and common socage, save only tenures in frankalmoign, tenures by copy of court roll, and the honorary services of grand serjeanty; and that all tenures which shall be created by the king, his heirs or successors, in future shall be free and common socage.

The other subdivision of frank teneement is free socage [soca, Lat.], which, most probably, means plough-service. It is distinguished from knight-service in this respect, that it is held by a certain determinate but honourable duty; whereas we have seen, that the tenure in chivalry or knight-service was uncertain, precarious, and indeterminate. These free socage tenures are said by some persons to be the relics of Saxon liberty, which were left untouched by the oppressive hand of the Norman.

The three species of free socage tenures are petit serjeanty, tenure in burgage, and gavelkind.

(1) Petit serjeanty [parva serjeantia, Lat.], greatly resembles grand serjeanty, for as the latter is a personal service, the former is a rent or render, both tending to some purpose concerning the king's person. The service in petit serjeanty is the rendering annually to the king some small implement of war; as a sword, a buckler, a bow without a string, or the like. Both the tenures in serjeanty must be held from the Crown. The lands and property which were granted to the Dukes of Marlborough and Wellington for their brilliant military services are held in petit serjeanty, each rendering annually a small flag or ensign, which is deposited in Windsor Castle.

(2) Tenure in burgage [burgus, Lat.], is where houses or lands, which were formerly the site of houses in an ancient borough, are held of some lord by a certain rent. There are a great many customs affecting these tenures, the most remarkable of which is the custom of borough-English, evidently of Saxon origin, and so named to distinguish it from the Norman customs. See BOROUGH ENGLISH.

(3) Gavelkind [gyfe-eal-kyn, given to all the kindred]. See GAVELKIND.

The other great class of tenements is villengage, which is subdivided into pure and privileged villengage.

Pure villengage was the origin of the present copyhold tenures, or tenure by copy of court-roll, at the will of the lord. See MANOR; COPYHOLD; HERIOT.

Privileged villengage, sometimes called villein-socage, is where lands have been held of the Crown from the Conquest. This is an exalted species of copyhold, held according to custom, and not according to the mere will of the lord. It is still subsisting under the name of tenure in ancient demesne, which consisted of those lands or manors that appeared in Domesday Book to have been actually in the possession of the Crown in the reign of Edward the Confessor or William the Conqueror. These tenants, although their services were of a base origin, were esteemed highly-privileged villeins, for they could not be compelled to relinquish their lands at the will of their superior, et ideo dicuntur liberi. This tenure was not abolished by the 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Tenures in ancient demesne are of three kinds:—

(1) Tenures in ancient demesne (properly so called), which is a free holding by grant from the Crown. The tenants are bound, in respect of their lands, to perform some of the better sort of certain villein services, which are now commuted into money rents.

(2) Privileged copyholds, customary freeholds or free copyholds, are held of a manor, which is ancient demesne, according to the custom of the manor, but not of the lord's will. These lands are in fact copyholds, and therefore the term customary freeholds is not strictly correct; for although the tenants have an interest nearly as good as freehold, yet they have not a freehold interest.

(3) Copyholds of base tenure are lands of a manor, which is ancient demesne, but held merely at the lord's will.

The old Saxon ecclesiastical tenures, which were continued under the Normans, are these:

(1) Frankalmoigne [free alms], by which religious corporations and their successors held lands of the donor, without any service other than the praying for the souls of the donor and his heirs. See FRANKALMOIGNE.

(2) Tenure by divine service, to which was annexed some special divine service, as to sing so many masses, to distribute a certain sum in alms, etc., which were contradistinguished from free alms; for if unperformed the lord could distrain without complaining to the visitor.

The statute 12 Car. II. c. 24, excepts these spiritual tenures from abolition, so that many are now subsisting, but only the Crown can create them in the present day.

Tenures may be thus tabularized:—

LAY TENURES.

(I.) Franktenement or freehold.	{	(1) Military tenures (abolished, except grand serjeanty, and reduced to free socage tenures.)	{	(1) Knight service proper, or tenure in chivalry.
		(2) Free socage, or plough service.		(2) Grand serjeanty. (3) Cornage. (1) Petty serjeanty. (2) Tenure in burgage. (3) Gavelkind.
(II.) Villengage.	{	(1) Pure villengage (whence copyholds at the lord's (nominal) will, which is regulated according to custom.)	{	(1) Tenure in ancient demesne.
		(2) Privileged villengage, sometimes called villein socage (whence tenure in ancient demesne, which is an exalted species of copyhold, held according to custom, and not according to the lord's will), and is of three kinds.		(2) Privileged copyholds, customary freeholds, or free-copyhold. (3) Copyholds of base tenure.

SPIRITUAL TENURES.

(1) Frank almoigne, or free alms.

(2) Tenure by divine service.—See Reeves' History of the English Law.

Terce, thirds; dower.—Scotch term.

Terminating Building Societies, societies where the members commence their monthly contributions, on a particular day, and continue to pay them until the realization of shares to a given amount for each member, by the advance of the capital of the society to such members as required it, and the payment of interest as well as principal by them, so as to ensure such realization within a given period of years. See Building Societies Act, 1874, s. 5, and BUILDING SOCIETY.

Term fee, a certain sum, which a solicitor is entitled to charge to his client, and the client to recover, if successful, from the unsuccessful party who has to pay costs to him; it is payable for every term, commencing on the day the sittings in London and Middlesex of the High Court of Justice commence, and terminating on the day preceding the next such sittings, in which a proceeding in the cause or matter by or affecting the party, other than the issuing and serving the writ of summons, shall take place. See Order in Council, 12 August, 1875, Ord. VI., ad. fin.

Term in gross. See OUTSTANDING TERM.

Termor, he that holds lands or tenements for a given number of years or for life.

Terms, the periods during which the superior courts at Westminster were open.

The legal year consisted of four terms, Michaelmas, Hilary, Easter, and Trinity (which see), the year beginning with Michaelmas Term.

The commencement and duration of the terms were fixed by the statutes, 11 Geo. IV. & 1 Wm. IV. c. 70, s. 6, and 1 Wm. IV. c. 3, s. 3. By the first of these enactments Hilary Term began on the 11th and ended on the 31st of January; Easter Term began on the 15th of April and ended on the 8th of May; Trinity Term began on the 22nd of May, and ended on the 12th of June; and Michaelmas Term began on the 2nd and ended on the 25th of November. Vacations in the Equity Courts were regulated also by Cons. Ord. V.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 26, it is provided that the division of the legal year into terms shall be abolished so far as relates to the administration of justice; but in all other cases in which, under the law previously existing, the terms into which the legal year is divided were used as a measure for determining the time at or within which any act was required to be done, the same may continue to be referred to, for the same or the like purpose, unless and until provision is otherwise made by any lawful authority. The same section provides that 'subject to rules of Court,' the High Court and Court of Appeal may sit at any time. See therefore SITTINGS.

Our university terms are different from the law terms.

Terms for years. An estate for years is denominated a term, because its enjoyment is strictly fixed, for by 'term' is meant not only the interest which passes, but also the period for which it is held. It is a chattel real; chattel, because the estate passes to the owner's executors at his death, and not to his heir-at-law, and so far partakes of the nature of personalty; real, because it is an interest in lands, and therefore partakes of the nature of real property. An estate for years, then, is an interest in lands, tenements, and hereditaments for an ascertained period. Every estate of a determinate duration is a term, and of the nature of a term of years, though for a less period than a year, a year being the shortest time which the law in this case takes notice of. Hence every term must have a certain beginning from which the computation is to be made, and a certain point beyond which it cannot endure. It may be made determinable on a life, or on any other contingent event, before the effluxion of the time named, as, to A. for 99 years, if B. lives so long. Should B. die before the 99 years expire, the estate will cease, but though B. should survive the term, the estate, on the expiration of the 99 years, would be absolutely at an end, for the interest is an estate for years, determinable on a life.

A term is usually created by a deed or specialty contract, called a lease or demise under the common law (see LEASE), and the appropriate operative verbs therein are 'demise, or grant, lease, and to farm let'; but any words showing the intent of the parties that the one (the lessor) shall divest himself of the possession, and the other (the lessee) come into it for a determinate time, are generally sufficient for the purpose.

Terms (to be under terms), conditions on which indulgence is granted by the Court, as to take short notice of trial, etc., etc.

Termes (Les) de la Ley. See RASTELL.

"Terminum", a day given to a defendant.

Terminus ad quem, the terminating point.

Terminus annorum certus debet esse et determinatus. Co. Litt. 45.—(A term of years ought to be certain and determinate.)

Terminus a quo, the starting point.

Terminus et feodum non possunt constare simul in unâ eâdemque personâ. Plow. 29.—(A term and the fee cannot both be in one and the same person at the same time.)

Terra, arable land.—Kennet's Gloss.

Terra affirmata, land let to farm.

Terra boscalis, woody land.

Terra culta, cultivated land.

Terra debilis, weak or barren land.—Inq. 22 R. 2.

Terra dominica, or Indominicata, the demesne land of a manor.—Cowel.

Terra exultabilis, land which may be ploughed.—Mon. Angl. i. 426.

Terra extendenda, a writ addressed to an escheator, etc., that he inquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, etc., by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the chancery.—Reg. of Writs, 293.

Terra frusca, or frisca, fresh land, not lately ploughed.—Cowel.

Terra hydata, land subject to the payment of hydage.—Selden.

Terra lucrabilis, land gained from the sea or enclosed out of a waste.—Cowel.

Terra manens vacua occupanti conceditur. 1 Sid. 347.—(Land lying unoccupied is given to the first occupant.)

Terra Normanorum, land held by a Norman.—Paroch. Antiq. 197.

Terra nova, land newly converted from wood ground or arable.—Cowel.

Terra putura, land in forests, held by the tenure of furnishing food to the keepers therein.—4 Inst. 307.

Terra sabulosa, gravelly or sandy ground.

Terra Testamentalis, gavelkind land, being disposable by will.—Spelm.

Terra vestita, land sown with corn.—Cowel.

Terra wainabilis, tillable land.—Cowel.

Terra warrenata, land that has the liberty of free-warren.

Terra deminicales regis, the demesne lands of the Crown.

Terrages, an exemption from all uncertain services.—Cowel.

Terrarius, a landholder.—Leg. William I.

Terre-tenant, Tertenant, he who is in the actual possession and enjoyment of land.

Terrier, or Terrar, a register or survey of land. As to when it is evidence, see 3 Price, 380.

Terris bonis et catallis rehabendis post purgationem, a writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods, and chattels, formerly seised, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his ordinary to be purged.—Reg. Orig.

Terris et catallis tentis ultra debitum levatum, a judicial writ for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor who is distrained above the amount of the debt.—Reg. Judic.

Terris liberandis, a writ that lay for a man convicted by attaint, to bring the record and process before the king, and take a fine for his imprisonment, and then to deliver to him his lands and tenements again, and release him of the strip and waste.—Reg. Orig. 232. Also, it was a writ for the delivery of lands to the heir, after homage and relief performed, or upon security taken that he should perform them.—Ibid. 293.

Tertius interveniens, one who voluntarily interposes in a suit depending between others, with a view to the protection of his own interests.—Civ. Law.

Test, to bring one to a trial and examination; or to ascertain the truth.

Test Act, 25 Car. II. c. 2, by which it was provided that all persons having any offices, civil or military (with the exception of some few of an inferior kind), or receiving pay from the Crown, or holding a place of trust under it, should take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe a declaration against transubstantiation, and also receive the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper according to the usage of the Church of England. The provisions of the Test Act were afterwards extended by 1 Geo. I. st. 2, c. 13; 2 Geo. II. c. 31; and 9 Geo. II. c. 26. The Test Act was repealed by 9 Geo. IV. c. 17, which also repealed the Corporation Act, 13 Car. II. st. 2, c. 1. See 29 & 30 Vict. c. 22, and 4 Broom & Had. Com.

Testa de Nevil, an ancient document in two volumes, in the custody of the Queen's Remembrancer in the Exchequer, more properly called Liber Feodorum.

These books contain principally accounts (1) of fees holden either immediately of the king, or others who held of the king in capite, and if alienated whether the owners were infeoffed ab antiquo or de novo, as also fees holden in frank-almoigne, with the values thereof respectively; (2) of serjeanties holden of the king, distinguishing such as were rented or alienated, with the values of the same; (3) of widows, and heiresses of tenants in capite, whose marriages were in the gift of the king, with the value of their lands; (4) of churches in the gift of the king, and in whose hands they were; (5) of escheats, as well of the lands of Normans as others, in whose hands the same were, and by what services holden; (6) of the amount of the sums paid for scutage and aid, etc., by each tenant.

These volumes were printed in 1807, under the authority of the commissioners of the records of the realm.

Testament, a disposition of personal property to take place after the owner's decease, according to his desire and direction. See WILL.

As to the modes of making a testament according to the civil law, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 161 et seq., and Cum. C. L. 117.

Testamenta cum duo inter se pugnancia reperiuntur, ultimum ratum est; sic est, cum duo inter se pugnancia reperiuntur in eodem testamento. Co. Litt. 112.—(When two conflicting wills are found, the last prevails: so it is when two conflicting clauses occur in the same will.)

Testamenta latissimam interpretationem habere debent. Jenk. Cent. 81.—(Wills ought to have the broadest interpretation.)

Testamentary, given by will; contained in a will.

Testamentary causes, proceedings in the Probate Branch of the High Court of Justice relating to the proving and validity of wills and intestacies of personal property, over which it has acquired exclusive jurisdiction, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95. It also has jurisdiction (not exclusive) in certain cases to inquire into the validity of wills, which concern realty as well as personalty. See PROBATE COURT, 3 Broom & Had. Com. 424 et seq., and Cooté's Probate Court Practice. See also PLEADING.

Testamentary guardian, one appointed by a father's will over his child, pursuant to 12 Car. II. c. 24. See GUARDIAN.

Testamenti factio, the ceremony of making a testament, either as testator, heir, or witness.—Civ. Law.

Testamentum, i.e., testatio mentis, facta nullo presente metu periculi, sed cogitatione mortalitatis. Co. Litt. 322.—(A testament, that is, the witnessing of the mind, made under no present fear of danger, but in expectancy of death.)

Testamentum, omne morte consummatur. Ibid.—(Every will is perfected by death.)

Testate, having made a will.

Testation, witness, evidence.

Testator, a man who makes a will or testament. See WILL.

Testatoris ultima voluntas est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. Ibid.—(The last will of a testator is to be thoroughly fulfilled according to his real intention.)

Testatrix, a woman who makes a will.

Testatum, the witnessing part of a deed or agreement. See DEED.

Testatum writ, a process of execution which was issued into a different county than that in which the venue was laid in the declaration; it must have been founded on a writ ejusdem generis, issued into the county of the venue, and returned nulla bona, etc. It is abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 21. See GROUND WRIT.

Teste [being witness], the witnessing part of a writ, warrant, or other proceeding, which expresses the date of its issue.

Tested (to be), to bear the teste. A writ is issued in the name of the Sovereign, and the Lord Chancellor is supposed to witness it. All writs are, by Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. II., Rule 8, tested in the name of the Lord Chancellor. They were formerly tested in the name of the Lord Chancellor if issuing from the Court of Chancery, or of the Lord Chief Justice if issuing from the Queen's Bench, etc.

Testes ponderantur non numerantur.—(Witnesses are weighed, not numbered.)

Testes qui postulat debet dare eis sumptus competentes. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(Whosoever demands witnesses, must find them in competent provision.)

Testibus deponentibus in pari numero dignioribus est credendum. 4 Inst. 279.—(Where the number of witnesses is equal on both sides, the more worthy are to be believed.)

Testimoignes, witnesses.—Law French.

Testimonia ponderanda sunt, non numeranda. (Evidence is to be weighed, not enumerated.)

Testimonial proof, parol evidence.—Civ. Law.

Testimony, evidence given; proof by a witness. See EVIDENCE and PERPETUATING TESTIMONY.

Testis de visu praeponderat aliis. 4 Inst. 279.—(An eye-witness is preferred to others.)

Testis lupanaris sufficit ad factum in lupanari. Moor, 817.—(A lewd person is a sufficient witness to an act committed in a brothel.)

Testis nemo in sua causa esse potest. Reg. Jur. Civ.—(No one can be a witness in his own cause.) This disqualification of parties is removed, except as to criminal proceedings, by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99.

Testis oculatus unus plus valet quam auriti decem. 4 Inst. 279.—(One eye-witness is worth more than ten ear-witnesses.)

Tests. See UNIVERSITY.

Text book, a legal treatise which lays down principles or collects decisions on any branch of the law.

Thames Embankment, from Westminster Bridge to Blackfriars Bridge, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 93; 26 & 27 Vict. cc. 45, 75. As to the Southern Embankment of the Thames, see 26 & 27 Vict. c. 75; 27 & 28 Vict. c. xxxv. See also 31 & 32 Vict. c. cxi. (North and South Embankments); and 31 & 32 Vict. c. cxxxv. (Chelsea).

Thames Watermen. By 7 & 8 Geo. IV. c. 75, the watermen, wherry-men, and lighter-men of the Thames were consolidated into one body corporate, in the freemen and apprentices whereof is vested, subject to certain exceptions, the exclusive right of navigating that river for hire.

Thanage of the King, a certain part of the king's land or property, of which the ruler or governor was called thane.—Cowel.

Thane [fr. thegn, Sax., a servant], an Anglo-Saxon nobleman: an old title of honour, perhaps equivalent to baron. There were two orders of thanes, the king's thanes and the ordinary thanes. Soon after the Conquest this name was disused.—Cowel.

Thanelands, such lands as were granted by charter of the Saxon kings as to their thanes with all immunities, except the trinoda necessitas.—Cowel.

Thaneship, the office and dignity of a thane; the seigniorship of a thane.

Thavies Inn, an inn of Chancery. See INNS OF CHANCERY.

Theatre, a place kept for the public performance of stage-plays, which expression includes 'every tragedy, comedy, farce, opera, burletta, interlude, pantomime, or other entertainment of the stage.' By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 38, such a place may not be had or kept without a license from the Lord Chamberlain in the metropolis, and from the justices of the peace elsewhere. By s. 12 of the Act a copy of every new stage-play intended to be acted in any theatre must be sent to the Lord Chamberlain seven days at least beforehand, and if he disallow the same, or any part thereof, the same may not be acted contrary to the disallowance, under pain (s. 15) of a penalty not exceeding 50*l.* and absolute avoidance of the license of the theatre.

Theft, larceny, which see.

Theftbote [fr. theof, Sax., thief, and bote, compensation], compounding a felony. See COMPOUNDING, and 4 Broom. and Had. Com. 147. See also 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 102; and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 65.

Theftbote est emenda furti capta, sine consideratione curie domini reges. 3 Inst. 134.—(Theftbote is the paying money to have goods stolen returned, without having any respect for the court of the king.)

Thellusson's Act, 39 & 40 Geo. III. c. 98. See ACCUMULATION.

Thelonio irrationabili habendo, a writ that formerly laid for him that had any part of the king's demesne in fee-farm, to recover reasonable toll of the king's tenants there, if his demesne had been accustomed to be tolled.—Reg. Orig. 87.

Thelonium, an abolished writ for citizens or burgesses to assert their right to exemption from toll.—F. N. B. 226.

Thelonmannus, the toll-man or officer who receives toll.—Cowel.

Them, or Theme, the right of having all the generation of villeins, with their suits and cattle.—Termes de la Ley.

Themmagium, a duty or acknowledgment paid by inferior tenants in respect of theme or team.—Cowel.

Theoden, an under-thane; a husbandman or inferior tenant.—Spelm.

Theof [prædonēs, Lat.], offenders who joined in a body of seven to commit depredations.—Ang. Sax.

Theows, Theowmen, or Thews, slaves, captives, or bondmen.—Spelm. on Feuds, cap. 5.

Thesaurus, Thesaurium, the treasury.

Thesaurus competit domino regi, et non domino liberatis, nisi sit per verba specialia. Fitz. Coron. 281.—(A treasure belongs to the king, and not to the lord of a liberty, unless it be through special words.)

Thesaurus inventus, treasure-trove, which see.

Thesaurus inventus est vetus dispositio pecunie, etc., cujus non extat modo memoria, adeo ut jam dominum non habeat. 3 Inst. 132.—(Treasure-trove is an ancient hiding of money, etc., of which no recollection exists, so that it now has no owner.)

Thesaurus non competit regi, nisi quando nemo scit qui abscondit thesaurum. Ibid.—(Treasure does not belong to the king, unless no one knows who hid it.)

Thesaurus regis est vinculum pacis et bellorum nervus. Godb. 293.—(The king's treasure is the bond of peace and the sinew of wars.)

Thesmothete [fr. θεσμοθέτης, Gk.], a law-maker; a law-giver.

Thethinga, a tithing.

Thingus, a thane or nobleman; knight or freeman.—Cowel.

Things, the subjects of dominion or property, as distinguished from persons. They are distributed into three kinds: (1) things real or immoveable, comprehending lands, tenements, and hereditaments; (2) things personal or moveable, comprehending goods and chattels; and (3) things mixed, partaking of the characteristics of the two former, as a title-deed, a term for years. The civil law divided things into corporeal (tangi possunt) and incorporeal (tangi non possunt). See CHOSE.

Thirdborough, or Thirdborow, an under constable.—Cowel.

Thirdings, the third part of the corn growing on the land, due to the lord for a heriot on the death of his tenant, within the manor of Turfat in Hereford.—Blount.

Third-night-awn-hinde [trium noctium hospes, Lat.]. By the laws of St. Edward the Confessor, if any man lay a third night in an inn, he was called a third-night-awn-hinde, and his host was answerable for him if he committed any offence. The first night, for-man-night, or uncuth (unknown), he was reckoned a stranger; the second night, twa-night, a guest; and the third night, an agen-hinde, a domestic.—Bract. l. 3.

Third party. The phrase used to introduce any one, into a scene already occupied by two in a definite relation to one another, as principal and agent, guardian and ward, attorney and client. See AS AGAINST, AS BETWEEN.

'A Third party' may be introduced into an action by a defendant claiming an indemnity, or any other remedy over against him, under Jud. Act, 1873, s. 24, sub. 3, and Order XVI., Rules 17, 19.

Third denny. See DENARIUS TERTIUS COMITATUS.

Thirlage, a servitude or tenure in Scotland, by which the possessor of certain lands is bound to carry his grain to a certain mill to be ground, for which he is bound to pay a portion of the flour or meal, varying from a thirtieth to a twelfth part, which is termed multure. This servitude is now commuted for an annual payment in grain by 39 Geo. III. c. 55. See Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

This day six months, or three months. Fixing 'This day six months or three months' for the next stage of a bill, is one of the modes in which the House of Lords and the House of Commons reject bills of which they disapprove. A bill rejected in this manner cannot be re-introduced in the same session. See AVOIDANCE OF A DECISION.

Thistle-take. It was a custom within the manor of Halton, in Chester, that if, in driving beasts over a common, the driver permitted them to graze or take but a thistle, he should pay a halfpenny a-piece to the lord of the fee. And at Fiskerton, in Nottinghamshire, by ancient custom, if a native or a cottager killed a swine above a year old, he paid to the lord a penny, which purchase of leave to kill a hog was also called thistle-take.—Cowel.

Thornton (C. J.), author of a summa or abridgment of Bracton, containing most of the titles of the law in a concise form. Though a professed epitomiser, he omits many things in that author, and does not adhere to his method.—2 Reeves, c. xi., p. 281.

Thorp, Threp, Trop [villa, vicus, Lat.], either in the beginning or end of the names of places, means a street or village.

Thrave, or Threave [Nor.-Fr.], twenty-four sheaves or four shocks of corn; a certain quantity of straw; also a herd, a drove, a heap.

Threats, or menaces of bodily hurt, through fear of which a man's business is interrupted, are civil injuries affecting the right of personal security. The remedy for this species of injury is in pecuniary damages.

Threatening to accuse of certain crimes, or threatening by letter to murder or to burn a house, is felony under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 46, 47; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 16; and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 50.

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, if any person shall threaten to publish or purpose to abstain from publishing any matter or thing touching any other person with intent to induce any person to confer upon, or procure for, any person any appointment or office of profit or trust, he may be imprisoned with hard labour for any term exceeding three years.

The Act 34 & 35 Vict. c. 32, entitled 'An Act to amend the Criminal Law relating to violence, threats, and molestation,' contained various provisions for preventing the molestation of masters and workmen, to induce them to yield to particular combinations or associations. This has been repealed by the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86, which, amending the law as to conspiracy and breach of contract by workmen in certain cases, also, by s. 7, makes it an offence for any person with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing or to do any act, which such person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority.

1. To use violence to, or intimidate such other person, or his wife or children, or injure his property; or

2. To persistently follow such other person about from place to place; or

3. To hide any tools, clothes, or other property owned or used by such other person, or deprive him of, or hinder him in the use thereof; or

4. To watch, or beset the house, or other place where such other person resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place; or

5. To follow such other person with two or more other persons, in a disorderly manner, in or through any street or road.

It further provides that on conviction thereof by a court of summary jurisdiction (defined in s. 13), or on indictment (as mentioned in s. 9), be liable either to pay a penalty not exceeding 20*l.*, or to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour. Attending at or near the house or place, where a person resides or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place, in order merely to obtain or communicate information, shall not be deemed a watching or besetting within the meaning of the 7th section, above referred to. See also MASTER AND SERVANT.

Threnges, vassals, but not of the lowest degree, of those who held lands of the chief lord.

Threshing Machines. Steam threshing machines must be fenced, see 41 Vict. c. 12.

Thrithing, a division consisting of three or four hundreds.

Throw out (v. a.), to ignore (a bill of indictment).

Thrymsa, a Saxon coin worth fourpence.—Du Fresne.

Thude-weald, a woodward, or person that looks after a wood.

Thwertnick, the custom of giving entertainments to a sheriff, etc., for three nights.

Tickets of leave, licenses to be at large, granted to convicts for good conduct, but recallable upon subsequent misconduct. See 6 & 7 Vict. c. 7; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, s. 9; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 5; 27 & 28 Vict. c. 47, ss. 4—10; and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 112.

Tidesman, a tidewaiter or custom house officer, who watches on board of merchant ships till the duty on goods be paid, and the ships unladen.

Tiel, or Tel [Nor.-Fr.], such. See NUL TIEL RECORD.

Tierce, the third part of a pipe, or forty-two gallons.

Tigh [fr. teag, Sax.], a close or inclosure.

Tigni immittendi, a servitude which is the right of inserting a beam or timber from the wall of one house into that of a neighbouring house, in order that it may rest on the latter, and that the wall of the latter may bear this weight.—Civ. Law.

Tignum, any material for building.—Ibid.

Tihler [Sax.], an accusation.

Timber, wood felled for building or other suchlike use; in a legal sense it generally means oak, ash, and elm, but in some parts of the country is used in a wider sense, which is recognised by the law.—1 Roll. Abr. 649. See St. Leon. V. and P. 26, and Br. & Had. Com. ii. 190, 234; iv. 284, 318; and also 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 11.

Timberlode, a service by which tenants were bound to carry timber felled from the woods to the lord's house.—Cowel.

Time. Before 1751, the legal year in England began on the 25th March, therein differing from the common usage in the whole kingdom, and the legal method in Scotland. In 1751 the Gregorian or present calendar was substituted for the Julian Calendar by 24 Geo. III. c. 23. Time in acts of parliament (see, e.g., the definition of night in the Larceny Act) and legal instruments means, in Great Britain, Greenwich mean time, and in Ireland, Dublin mean time, by virtue of 43 & 44 Vict. c. 9. The computation, etc., of time for purposes of procedure in the Supreme Court is regulated by Ord. LVII., which provides that a Court or a judge may enlarge or abridge the time appointed by the Rules of Court, or fixed by any order enlarging time, for doing any act or taking any proceeding, upon such terms (if any) as the justice of the case may require, and any such enlargement may be ordered although the application for the same is not made until after the expiration of the time appointed or allowed' (r. 6).

Time bargains, contracts for the sale of a certain amount of stock at a certain price at a future day, sometimes called puts and refusals, which see; and see also STOCKBROKER.

Time immemorial, from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary. See MEMORY, TIME OF LEGAL.

Timocracy [Gk.], an aristocracy of property.

Timores vari sunt aestimandi qui non cadunt in constantem virum. 7 Co. 17.—(Fears which do not assail a resolute man are to be accounted vain.)

Tinel le roy, the king's hall, wherein his servants used to dine and sup.—13 Rich. II. st. 1, c. 3.

Tineman, or Tienman, a petty officer in the forest, who had the care of vert and venison at night, and other servile duties.—Cowel.

Tinet, brushwood and thorns.—Cowel.

Tinewald, the ancient parliament or annual convention of the people in the Isle of Man.

Tinkermen, fishermen who destroyed the young fry on the river Thames, by nets and unlawful engines.—Cowel.

Tinpenny, a tribute paid for the liberty of digging in tin mines.—Cowel.

Tinsel of the Feu, the loss of an estate held in feu in Scotland, from allowing two years' feu-duty to remain unpaid.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Tippling Act, 24 Geo. II. c. 40, s. 12, enacted that no person shall be entitled unto or shall maintain any action or suit for any debt 'for any spirituous liquors, unless such debt shall have really been contracted at one time, to the amount of 20s., nor shall any particular article or item in any account or demand for spirituous liquors be allowed or maintained where the liquors delivered at one time, and mentioned in such article or item, shall not amount to the full value of 20s.'

By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 38, the above enactment is repealed, so far only as relates to spirituous liquors sold to be consumed elsewhere than on the premises where sold, and delivered at the residence of the purchaser thereof in quantities not less at any one time than a reputed quart.

By the County Court Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 142, it is provided that no action shall henceforth be brought or be maintainable in any court to recover any debt or sum of money alleged to be due in respect of the sale of any ale, porter, beer, cider, or perry, consumed on the premises, where sold or supplied.

Tipstapps, or Tipstaves, constables attending courts. See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 22, s. 23; and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 7, s. 5.

Tisri, the first Hebrew month of the civil year, and the seventh of the ecclesiastical, answering to a part of our September and a part of October.

Tithe Commissioners for England and Wales. This board is consolidated with that of the Inclosures Commissioners, and that of the Copyhold Commissioners.—14 & 15 Vict. c. 53; continued by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 53, and other Acts. See COPYHOLD COMMISSIONERS.

Tithe Commutation Acts, 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 71, amended by 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 69; 1 & 2 Vict. c. 64; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 62; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 15; 5 & 6 Vict. c. 54; 9 & 10 Vict. c. 73; 10 & 11 Vict. c. 104; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 93; 31 & 32 Vict. c. 89; and 36 & 37 Vict. c. 42. See Chitty's Statutes, vol. vi., tit. 'Tithes.'

Tithe-free, exempted from the payment of tithes.

Tither, one who gathers tithes.

Tithes [fr. teotha, Sax.], a species of incorporeal hereditaments, being the tenth part of the increase yearly arising and renewing from the profits of lands, the stock upon lands, and the personal industry of the inhabitants; the first species being usually called predial, the second mixed, the third personal.

The following persons are exempt from the payment of tithes by personal privilege: the sovereign, rectors, vicars. All spiritual persons and corporations have been always capable of having their lands discharged of tithes in various ways—as by real composition, by the pope's bull of exemption, by unity of possession, by prescription, by virtue of their order. All persons spiritual and lay may claim an exemption from tithes, either partial or total, by a real composition, or a partial exemption by custom (see MODUS), or by long usage, in pursuance of 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 100.

Tithes are now commuted into a rent-charge, the amount of which is annually adjusted, according to the average price of corn. See TITHE COMMUTATION ACTS.

The commutation may be affected in one of two ways; either by a voluntary parochial agreement, confirmed by the commissioners, or by the compulsory award of the commissioners. The value, either voluntarily agreed upon or awarded by the commissioners, is to be considered as the amount of the total rent-charge to be paid in respect of the tithes in that parish, and to be afterwards apportioned among the lands of that parish, having regard to their average titiable produce and productive quality; and after the apportionment shall have been confirmed, such lands are to be absolutely discharged from the payment of all tithes, and, instead thereof, shall be subject to their portion of the rent-charge which shall be thenceforth payable to the former tithe-owner, by two half-yearly payments, which are to fluctuate according to the price of corn. An advertisement is inserted by authority in the London Gazette, in January in every year, stating the average price of wheat, barley, and oats for seven years, ending on the Thursday before Christmas then next preceding; every rent-charge then is deemed of the value of as many bushels of wheat, barley, and oats in equal quantities, as it would have been competent to purchase according to the prices contained in such advertisement; and after every first of January it varies so as always to consist of the price of the same quantities, according to the advertisement then next preceding.

A tithe rent-charge varies in amount, and no person being personally liable to its payment, it differs from a rent-charge generally. When the rent-charge is in arrear for twenty-one days, the remedy is by distress on the land, as in the case of landlord and tenant; but if it be in arrear for forty days, and there be no sufficient distress, a writ may then be obtained from one of the judges at Westminster to assess the arrears, after which the owner of the rent-charge may sue out a writ of execution for taking possession of the lands, and holding them till his debt and costs be fully satisfied. But neither a distress nor writ of execution can be resorted to for more than two years' arrears at any one time.

In some cases lands may obtain an exemption under the Commutation Acts from all liability either to tithe or rent-charge. For to the extent of twenty acres in the same parish, land is allowed to be given to the tithe-owner as an equivalent; and any person seized in possession of an estate in fee-simple, or fee-tail, of any tithe or rent-charge, may dispose of the same so that it shall be merged in the inheritance of the land charged.—2

Steph. Com., 7th ed., 722 et seq.; 2 Hall. Mid. Ages, c. vii., pt. 1, p. 144.

Tithing, the number or company of ten men, with their families, knit together in a society, all of them being bound to the king for their peaceable and good behaviour, the chief of whom was called the tithing-man.—Cowel.

Tithing-man, a peace-officer, an under constable. See preceding title.

Tithing-penny. See TEDING-PENNY.

Title, a general head, comprising particulars, as in a book; 2, an appellation of honour or dignity; 3, a claim of right. It is the means whereby an owner possesses his property justly, or the evidence of ownership.

. As to title to realty:—

There are several stages and degrees requisite to form a complete title to lands and tenements.

The lowest and most imperfect degree of title consists in the mere naked possession, or actual occupation of the estate, without any apparent right or any shadow of pretence of right to hold and continue such possession.

The next step to a good and perfect title is the right of possession, which may reside in one man, while the actual possession is in another.

The last step is the right of property (jus proprietatis), without either possession or even the right of possession. This is frequently styled mere right (jus merum), and the estate of the owner is in such cases said to be totally divested and put to a right.

The principal circumstances to be attended to in drawing conclusions as to title are—

1st. That there be a deduction of title to the legal estate for a period formerly of sixty years, but now in ordinary circumstances of forty years (see the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874); 37 & 38 Vict. c. 71, s. 1.

2ndly. That the legal estate can be obtained free from any equities affecting it;

3rdly. That all the particular estates either are determined, or can be conveyed to the purchaser or his trustee;

4thly. That no reversion or remainder is outstanding in the Crown, or in any stranger; and 5thly. That there are not any incumbrances by way of condition, or limitation over, mortgages, Crown debts, judgments, statutes, decrees, lites pendentes, annuities, rents, legacies, portions, charges, dower, courtesy, forfeitures (now abolished for treason or felony by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23), leases, etc., or any outstanding term of years, which the purchaser cannot procure either to be extinguished or assigned.

There are at least three species of doubtful titles: 1st, where the title is doubtful by reason of some uncertainty in the law itself; 2ndly, where the doubt is as to the application of some settled principle or rule of law; and 3rdly, where a matter of fact upon which a title depends is either not in its nature capable of satisfactory proof, or, being capable of such proof, is yet not satisfactorily proved.

It may be safely asserted that there is no defect which more frequently renders it impossible for a person who has a good title to prove it, and enables a party who has a bad title fraudulently to exhibit a colourable ownership than the want of evidence of the identity of the parcels.

A good title is produced whenever it appears that upon certain acts being done, the legal and equitable estates in the property contracted for will become vested in the purchaser, those acts being such as the vendor can either himself perform or cause to be performed.

The title to things personal may be acquired or lost by—(1) Occupancy. (2) Invention. (3) Prerogative. (4) Forfeiture. (5) Custom. (6) Succession. (7) Marriage. (8) Judgment. (9) Gift or grant. (10) Contract. (11) Bankruptcy or insolvency. (12) Testament. (13) Administration. See DECLARATION OF TITLE.

Title, Covenants for. In every conveyance made on or after the 1st January, 1882, certain 'covenants for title' (being for the most part usually expressed in the conveyance before that date), of which the following is an abstract, are implied by virtue of the 7th section of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41:—

(A) In a conveyance for valuable consideration (other than a mortgage) by a person expressed to convey as beneficial owner:—That the person conveying has the right to convey:—That the person to whom the conveyance is made shall 'quietly enjoy' the subject matter of the conveyance without disturbance by the person conveying or any person claiming by, through, under, or in trust for the person conveying:—That the subject matter of the conveyance is discharged from encumbrances, except as expressly mentioned in the conveyance:—And that the person conveying, and every person claiming through him otherwise than by purchase for value will execute all such 'further assurances' for more perfectly assuring the subject matter of the conveyance to the person to whom it is made, as from time to time may reasonably be required.

(B) In a conveyance of leasehold property for valuable consideration other than a mortgage, the further covenant, by a person expressed to convey as beneficial owner:—That the lease creating the term is valid, 'unforfeited, unsundered, and in nowise become void or voidable.'

(C) In a conveyance by way of mortgage by a person expressed to convey as beneficial owner, the same covenants for right to convey and quiet enjoyment as in (A), with the addition that if default be made in payment of the money intended to be secured or interest thereon, the person to whom the conveyance is made may enter upon and enjoy the subject matter of the conveyance, and enjoy the same with the benefit of the same covenants for 'freedom from incumbrance,' and 'further assurance' as in (A).

(D) In a conveyance by way of mortgage of leasehold property by a person expressed to convey as beneficial owner the same covenants for validity of the lease as in (B), and also a covenant that the person conveying or the persons deriving title under him will pay the rent and perform the covenants under the lease, and will keep the person to whom the conveyance is made indemnified against actions for non-payment of rent or breach of covenant.

The same section of the Act also implies a limited covenant for further assurance in a conveyance by way of settlement by a person expressed to convey as settlor, and against incumbrances in a conveyance by a trustee or mortgagee, expressed to convey as trustee or mortgagee.

Title of clergymen (to orders), some certain place where they may exercise their functions; also, an assurance of being preferred to some ecclesiastical benefice.—2 Steph. Com.

Title to Lands, Document of. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, 'Whosoever shall steal, or shall, for any fraudulent purpose, destroy, cancel, obliterate, or conceal the whole or any part of any document of title to lands shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for the term of three (now five) years; or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement' (s. 28).

The term, 'document of title to lands,' includes any deed, map, paper, or parchment, written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, being or containing evidence of the title, or any part of the title, to any real estate, or to any interest in or out of real estate (s. 1).

Title deeds, the muniments or evidences of ownership. See preceding title.

Titles (Ecclesiastical). By the Act 14 & 15 Vict. c. 60, the assumption of the title of archbishop or bishop of a pretended province or diocese or archbishop or bishop of a city, place, or territory in England or Ireland, not being the see, province, or diocese of an archbishop or bishop, recognised by law, was prohibited under penalties; but this Act (which was passed after great public excitement, in consequence of the division of England into Roman Catholic dioceses by Pope Pius IX., under Cardinal Wiseman, as Archbishop of Westminster') was never enforced, and has been repealed by the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 53.

Titulars of Erection. See LORDS OF ERECTION.

Tolia, a towel. There is a tenure of lands by the service of waiting with a towel at the king's coronation.—Cowel.

Tobacco Duties Act, 26 Vict. c. 7.

Tobago and Trinidad. See 11 & 12 Vict. c. 22; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 107.

Toft, a place where a messuage has stood.—Cowel; 2 Br. & Had. Com. 17.

Toftman, the owner or possessor of a toft.

Togati, Roman advocates.

Togati, a sign of the existence of a fact; 2, private money.

Toleration Act, 1 W. & M. st. 1, c. 18, confirmed by 10 Anne c. 2, by which all persons dissenting from the Church of England (except Papists and persons denying the Trinity) were relieved from such of the acts against Nonconformists as prevented their assembling for religious worship according to their own forms, or otherwise restrained their religious liberty, on condition of their taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribing a declaration against transubstantiation; and in the case of dissenting ministers, subscribing also to certain of the Thirty-nine Articles. The clause of this Act, which excepted persons denying the Trinity from the benefits of its enactments, was repealed by 53 Geo. III. c. 160.—4 Br. & Had. Com. 67.

Toll [fr. tollo, Lat.], to bar, defeat, or take away, as to toll an entry, is to deny and take away the right of entry. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

Toll [fr. tol, Sax. and Dut.; told, Dan.; toll, Wel.; taille, Fr.], an excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.

It has two significations:—

(1) A liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of the manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market.

(2) A tribute or custom paid for passage.—Cowel.

Tollage, any custom or imposition.

Tollbooth, a prison, a custom-house, an exchange; also the place where goods are weighed.

Tolldish, a vessel by which the toll of corn for grinding is measured.

Toller, one who collects tribute or taxes.

Tollgatherer, the officer who takes or collects toll.

Toll-thorough, when a town prescribes to have toll for such a number of beasts, or for every beast that goes through the town, or over a bridge or ferry belonging to it.—Com. Dig., tit. 'Toll' (C).

Toll-traverse, or Travers, toll taken for every beast driven across a man's land. He may prescribe and distrain for it viâ regidâ.—Cro. Eliz. 710.

Tolsester, an old excise; a duty paid by tenants of some manors to the lord for liberty to brew and sell ale.—Cowel.

Tolsey, the same as Tollbooth, which see. Also, a place where merchants meet; a local tribunal, usually spelt 'Tolzey,' for small civil causes held at the Guildhall, Bristol.

Tolt, a writ whereby a cause depending in a court-baron was taken and removed into a county-court.—O. N. B. 4.

Tolta, wrong, rapine, extortion.—Cowel.

Ton, twenty hundred-weight of 112 lb. avoirdupois each.

Tonnage, the estimated number of tons burden that a ship will carry. See 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, ss. 20, 21.

Tonnage duties, those imposed on wines imported, according to a certain rate per ton. This, with poundage, was formerly granted to the sovereign for life by acts of parliament, usually passed at the beginning of each reign; but by 9 Anne c. 6; 1 Geo. I. c. 12; and 3 Geo. I. c. 7, they were made perpetual, and mortgaged for the public debt. See 1 Br. & Had. Com. 376.

Tontine, a life-annuity, or a loan raised on life-annuities, with benefit of survivorship. The term originated from the circumstance that Lorenzo Tonti, an Italian, invented this kind of security in the seventeenth century, when the governments of Europe had some difficulty in raising money in consequence of the wars of Louis XIV., who first adopted the plan in France. A loan was obtained from several individuals on the grant of an annuity to each of them, on the understanding that, as deaths occurred, the annuities should continue payable to the survivors, and that the last survivor should take the whole. This mode of raising money has more than once been adopted by the English Government (see, e.g., 29 Geo. III. c. 41, amended by 30 Geo. III. c. 45), and also for the purpose of private speculations, but it has almost entirely fallen into disuse, and it may be doubted whether it is not prohibited by the Lottery Acts. As to the formation of such a scheme, see Stone's Benefit Build. Soc. 78.

Tools, Exportation of. This was formerly a criminal offence, but it is no longer so, since the restrictions upon trade are removed.—4 Steph Com., 7th ed., 267, n.

Tor, Toira, or Tyrra, a mount or hill.

Tora Garas Huk, an annual payment or rent-charge of a fixed nature on a village jampa, made by the Bombay Government through their collectors in the different zillahs of Guzerat.—Indian.

Tort [fr. tortus, Lat.], injury or wrong. Actions are divided into actions in contract and actions in tort, and a mixed class consisting of torts arising out of contract. Consult Addison on Torts.

Tort à le ley est contrarie. Co. Litt. 158.—(Tort is contrary to the law.)

Tortfeasor, a wrongdoer; a trespasser.

Tortious, anything done by wrong; an act involving a forfeiture of property. See INNOCENT CONVEYANCES.

Torture. See RACK.

Tory, originally a nickname for the wild Irish in Ulster. An Act of the Irish Parliament for 'better suppressing Tories, robbers, and rapparees,' 7 Wm. III. c. 21, is repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1878. Afterwards given to, and adopted by, one of the two great parliamentary parties which have alternately governed Great Britain since the Revolution in 1688. See WHIG.

Totidem verbis [Lat.] (in so many words).

Toties quoties (as often as occasion shall arise).

Totted, a good or separate debt to the Crown.—Cowel.

Totum præfertur unicuique parti. 3 Co. 41.—(The whole is preferable to any single part.)

Toutjours et encore presz [Nor.-Fr.] (always and still ready).

Tourn, the sheriff's tourn or rotation. See SHERIFF'S TOURN.

Tout temps presz et encore est [Nor.-Fr.] (always was and is at present ready).

Towage, money paid for towing.

Town [fr. tun, Sax.], a tithing or vill; any collection of houses larger than a village. See 1 Br. & Had. Com. 136.

Towns are either corporate, that is, having a corporation to transact their business, or not corporate. Some have the liberty or franchise of a market, others have not. Towns are usually divided into cities, boroughs, or common towns.

Town Clerk, a fit person (usually, but not necessarily, a solicitor) from time to time appointed by the council of a municipal borough to manage their legal business. He may not be a councillor, and holds office during the pleasure of the council. In case of his illness or absence, the council may appoint a deputy.—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 17.

Town Council, the council of a municipal borough, elected by the burgesses, to act for the corporation. See MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

Town Crier, an officer in a town, whose business it is to make proclamations.

Town-hall, the hall where the public business of a town is transacted, and on or near the door of which public notices are fixed.

Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 89. The provisions of this Act as to 'obstructions and nuisances in the streets,' 'fires,' 'places of public resort,' 'hackney carriages,' and 'public bathing,' are, 'for the purpose of regulating such matters in urban districts,' incorporated with the Public Health Act, 1875, by s. 171 of that Act.

Township, the corporation of a town; the district belonging to a town.

Towns Improvement Clauses Act, 1847, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 34. The provisions of this Act as to 'naming streets and numbering houses,' 'improving line of streets,' etc., 'ruinous and dangerous buildings,' and 'precautions during construction and repair of sewers, streets, and houses,' are, 'for the purpose of regulating such matters in urban districts,' incorporated with the Public Health Act, 1875, by s. 160 of that Act.

Toxical, poisonous; containing poison.

Toxicology [fr. τοξικόν, Gk., poison; and λόγος, discourse], the science of poisons. Consult Christison or Taylor on Poisons.

Trade [fr. trutta, Ital.], traffic; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money. All wholesale trade, all buying in order to sell again by wholesale may be reduced to three sorts: the home trade, the foreign trade of consumption, and the carrying trade.—2 Smi. Wealth of Nat., b. 2, c. v.

Offences against trade are—

- (1) Smuggling.
- (2) Frauds by bankrupts.
- (3) Cheating.
- (4) Monopoly.

Trade Marks. The Merchandise Marks Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 88, makes it a misdemeanour to forge or counterfeit any trade mark (defined by the 1st section), or falsely to apply any such trade mark, with intent to defraud, to any article, or to any wrapper, etc., in which any commodity is sold (ss. 2, 3).

The vendor of an article with a trade mark is deemed to warrant that the mark is genuine unless the contrary be expressed in writing signed by or on behalf of the vendor, and delivered to or accepted by the vendee (s. 19).

By the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 91, a register of trade marks is established under the superintendence of the Commissioners of Patents; and it is provided that after the 1st of July, 1876 [a time afterwards extended till 30th of June, 1878, by Order in Council under 40 & 41 Vict. c. 37], a person shall not be entitled to institute any proceeding to prevent the infringement of any trade mark as defined by the Act until and unless such trade mark is registered in pursuance of the Act (s. 1). Provisions are made for carrying that object into effect (ss. 2—9). And by s. 10, a trade mark for the purposes of the Act consists of one or more of the following essential particulars; that is to say, a name of an individual or firm printed, impressed, or woven in some particular and distinctive manner; or a written signature or copy of a written signature of an individual or firm; or a distinctive device, mark, heading, label, or ticket; and there may be added to any one or more of the said particulars, any letters, words, or figures, or combination of letters, words, or figures; also any special and distinctive word or words, or combination of figures, or letters, used as a trade mark before the passing of this Act, may be registered as such under this Act. For the Rules issued under this Act, see 'Weekly Notes,' Jan. 8th, 1876, and see Daniell on Trade Marks; Chitty's Statutes, tit. 'Trade Marks.'

Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, 38 & 39 Vict. c. 91. See last title.

Trade, Restraint of. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Trader, one engaged in merchandise or commerce. See BANKRUPT. As to who are traders within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, see Schedule I. of that Act.

Trades Unions. The Acts 30 & 31 Vict. cc. 8 and 74, provided for facilitating the proceedings of a commission appointed by the Queen to inquire into and report on the organisation and rules of trades unions and other associations of employers and workmen. The Trades Union Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 31, provides that the purposes of any trade union shall not by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade be deemed unlawful so as to render any member of the union liable to criminal prosecution, or as to render void or voidable any agreement or trust. The Act of 1871, which was amended as to insurance of children's lives, the membership of minors, the local jurisdiction of justices, and other matters, by the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876, 39 & 40 Vict. c. 22, provides for the registration of Unions by the Registrar of Friendly Societies, but excludes the operation of the Friendly Societies Acts, the Industrial and Provident Societies Acts, and the Companies Acts. By s. 6 any seven or more members may register, but the registration is void if any of the purposes of the Union is unlawful. See further titles MASTER AND SERVANT, and THREATS.

Trading or farming, by clergymen, restrained by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, ss. 28—30.

Traditio loqui facit chartam. 5 Co. 1.—(Delivery makes the deed speak.)

Tradition, the act of handing over; delivery.

Trailbaston, Court of, erected by Edward I., by the statute of Ragman. This was a commission of oyer and terminer of an unusual kind, and was issued in the fulness of zeal for the correction of public disorders. The rigour, however, with which this was executed, creating some discontents, it was thought expedient, in course of time, to discontinue it.—2 Reeves, p. 277.

Trainbands, the militia; the part of a community trained to martial exercises.

Training military, without full authority, illegal, by 60 Geo. III. & 1 Geo. IV. c. 1.

Traitor [fr. traditor, Lat.], one who being trusted betrays; one guilty of treason. See TREASON.

Traitorously, in a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.

Tramways, rails for conveyance of traffic along a road not owned, as a railway is, by those who lay down the rails and convey the traffic. The construction and regulation of tramways is provided for by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 78. As to the metropolis, see also 35 & 36 Vict. c. 43. See also as to Ireland, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 152; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 102; and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 114; and as to Scotland, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 69.

Transcript, a copy; anything written from an original.

Transcriptio pedis finis levati mittendo in Cancellarium, a writ which certified the foot of a fine levied before justices in eyre, etc., into the Chancery.—Reg. Orig. 669.

Transcriptio recognitionis factæ coram iusticiariis itinerantibus, etc., an old writ to certify a cognizance taken by justices in eyre.—Reg. Orig. 152.

Transfer, to convey; to make over to another.

Transfer of cases. By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 36, power is given to transfer causes from one Division of the High Court to another. This is regulated by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LI.

Transfer of Land Acts. To facilitate the proof of title to, and the conveyance of, real estates, the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53 was passed. The Act was confined to England, and divided into four parts. Part I., headed 'As to the Registration of Real Estates and the Title thereto,' established a registry, which was to be confined to a registration of the titles to estates of freehold tenure, and leasehold estates in freehold lands.

In 1875 a similar Act was passed 'to simplify titles and to facilitate the transfer of land in England,' under the short title of The Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), which came into operation on the 1st January, 1876. By s. 125 it is provided that application for the registration of an estate under the Act 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53 shall not for the future be entertained.

But neither under this Act, nor under the Act of 1862, has any appreciable number of titles been registered, and this Act has 'become, for all practical purposes, a dead letter.' See Report of Select Committee of House of Commons on Land Titles and Transfers, 1879.

See also DECLARATION OF TITLE.

Transferuntur dominia sine titulo et traditione, per usucapationem, scil. per longam continuam et pacificam possessionem. Co. Litt. 113.—(Rights of dominion are transferred without title or delivery, by usucaption, to wit, long and quiet possession.)

Transgressio est cum modus non servatur nec mensura, debet enim quilibet in suo facto modum habere et mensuram. Co. Litt. 37.—(Transgression is when neither mode nor measure is preserved, for every one in his act ought to have a mode and measure.)

Transgressione, a writ or action of trespass.

Transire, a warrant or permit from the custom-house to let goods pass.

Transit terra cum onere. Co. Litt. 231, a.—(Land passes subject to any burden affecting it. Consult Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 495, 706.

Transitory actions were those in which the venue might be laid in any county.

Transitus. See STOPPAGE IN TRANSITU.

Translation, the removal from one place to another; the removal of a bishop to another diocese. As to copyright in translated books, see COPYRIGHT.

Transportation, the banishing or sending away a criminal into another country; also, the carriage of property.

This punishment was introduced in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, 39 Eliz. c. 4. The word is first used in the 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 23. The punishment was chiefly regulated by 5 Geo. IV. c. 84. Returning from transportation before the expiration of the term of punishment was an offence against public justice, and punishable by transportation for life.—4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 67. This punishment has been superseded by penal servitude under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3. See PENAL SERVITUDE.

Transshipment, the taking of the cargo out of one ship, and loading another with it.

Transumps. An action of transumpt is an action competent to any one having a partial interest in a writing, or immediate use for it, to support his title or defences in other actions. It is directed against the custodier of the writing, calling upon him to exhibit it, in order that a transumpt, i.e., a copy, may be judicially made and delivered to the pursuer. The action is now of very rare occurrence.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Traveller. Under the Licensing Acts, 1874 (see INTOXICATING LIQUORS), intoxicating liquors may not be sold at certain hours except to 'bonâ-fide travellers,' and by s. 10 of that Act, a person is not to be deemed a 'bonâ-fide traveller unless the place where he lodged, during the preceding night, is at least three miles distant from the place where he demands to be supplied with liquor'; but although a man is not a bonâ-fide traveller unless he has travelled the three miles, he does not necessarily become so by merely having travelled the three miles. The expression bonâ-fide, which appears to owe its origin to the Scotch Forbes Mackenzie Act, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 67, seems merely intended to point the distinction between those who travel to drink, and those who drink to travel. See Lely and Foulkes' Licensing Acts, 2nd ed., p. 104.

Traverse, the denial of some matter of fact alleged in a pleading, whether in an action or in criminal prosecutions. See PLEADING; STATEMENT OF DEFENCE.

Traverse (v. a.), to deny.

Traverse of an office, proof that an inquisition made of lands or goods by the escheator is defective and untruly made.

Traverser, in Ireland, a prisoner.

Traversing indictment, postponing the trial of it.

The 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 16, repeals 60 Geo. III. and 1 Geo. IV. c. 4, as to the traverse of indictments in cases of misdemeanour, and provides, by s. 27, that no person prosecuted shall be entitled to traverse or postpone the trial of any indictment found against him at any session of the year, before session of oyer and terminer, or session of gaol delivery; but, if the court, upon the application of the person so indicted or otherwise, thinks that he ought to be allowed a further time to prepare for his defence or otherwise, such court may adjourn the trial to the next session, upon such terms as to bail, etc., as shall seem meet, and may respite the recognizances of the prosecutor and witnesses; the prosecutor and witnesses to be bound to attend and prosecute and give evidence, without entering into fresh recognizances.

Traversing note. In equity a plaintiff, after an appearance had been entered, might, in default of answer to interrogatories which had been filed for the examination of the defendant, proceed with his cause by filing a traversing note as to such defendant. A traversing note appears in practice to have been required in all cases where a defendant had been served with interrogatories to answer, and had not answered, before a certificate to set down the cause could be obtained. It was, however, unnecessary to file a traversing note in order to set down a cause on motion for decree, although interrogatories might have been filed for the plaintiff if the time for answering such interrogatories had expired, and no replication had been filed.—1 Dan. Ch. Pr., 5th ed.

Traversum, a ferry.—Mon. Angl.

T. R. E., the initials of the phrase, tempore regis Edwardi.

Treacher, Trechetour, or Treachour, a traitor.

Treadmill, an instrument of prison discipline. It is composed of a large revolving cylinder, having ledges or steps fixed round its circumference; the prisoners walk up these ledges, and their weight moves the cylinder round.

Treason [fr. trahir, Fr., to betray; proditio, Lat.], or lese-majesty, an offence against the duty of allegiance, and the highest known crime, for it aims at the very destruction of the commonwealth itself. Five species of treason are declared by 25 Edw. III. st. 5, c. 2, as follows:—

(1) When a man doth compass or imagine the death of our lord the king (a queen regnant is within these words), of our lady his queen, or of their eldest son and heir.

(2) If a man do violate the king's companion (i.e., his wife), or the king's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the king's eldest son and heir.

(3) If a man do levy war against our lord the king in his realm. (After a battle has taken place, it is termed bellum percutsum; before it, bellum levatum.)

(4) If a man be adherent to the king's enemies in his realm, giving to them aid or comfort in the realm or elsewhere.

(5) If a man slay the chancellor, treasurer, or the king's justices of the one bench or the other, justices in eyre or justices of assize, and all other justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places doing their offices.

The following species have been created by subsequent statutes :—

If any person shall endeavour to deprive or hinder any person, being the next in succession to the crown, according to the limitations of the Act of Settlement (12 & 13 Wm. III. c. 2), from succeeding to the crown, and shall maliciously and directly attempt the same by any overt act.—1 Anne, st. 2, c. 17, s. 3.

If any person shall maliciously, advisedly, and directly, by writing or printing, maintain and affirm that any other person hath any right or title to the crown of this realm, otherwise than according to the Act of Settlement, or that the kings of this realm, with the authority of Parliament, are not able to make laws and statutes, to bind the crown and the descent thereof.—6 Anne c. 7.

As to Treason-Felony, see next title.

Treason must be prosecuted within three years from its commission, if committed within the realm, except in the case of a designed assassination of the sovereign.—7 & 8 Wm. III. c. 3. Information for open and advised speaking must have been given within six days after its utterance, and a warrant for the apprehension of the offender must have been issued within ten days after, and within two years from April 22nd, 1848.—11 Vict. c. 12, s. 4.

The punishment of a convicted traitor is death by hanging, the ignominious adjuncts of drawing on a hurdle and quartering, etc. (as to which see 54 Geo. III. c. 146), having been abolished by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23, s. 31. By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51, treason consisting in the imagining bodily harm to Queen Victoria, and misprision of treason in that kind is triable just as murder is; but the sentence is to be as for high treason. By the same Act, firing at the present Queen or striking her is punishable with whipping.

Forfeiture and attainder for treason has now been abolished by the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23.

Treason-Felony. By the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, s. 3, it is provided, that 'If any person shall, within the United Kingdom or without, compass to depose the Queen, or to levy war against Her Majesty, within any part of the United Kingdom, in order by force or constraint to compel her to change her ministers or in order to put any force or restraint upon, or in order to intimidate or overawe both houses, or either house of parliament, or to move or stir any foreigner or stranger with force to invade the United Kingdom, or any other Her Majesty's dominions, and such compassings shall express by publishing any printing or writing, or by open or advised speaking, or by any overt act he shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported beyond the seas for life, or for any term not less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, as the court shall direct.' Penal servitude has now taken the place of transportation beyond seas. See PENAL SERVITUDE.

Treasonable, having the nature or guilt of treason.

Treasurer, one who has the care of money or treasure.

There was a Lord High Treasurer of England, but the duties are now executed by commissioners. The Prime Minister generally fills the office of First Lord of the Treasury.

Treasurer of a county, he that keeps the county stock. There are two of them in each county, chosen by the major part of the justices of the peace, etc., at the Easter-sessions; they must have 10*l.* a year in land, or 150*l.* in personal estate, and may not continue in their office above a year; they are to account yearly at the Easter-sessions, or within ten days after, to their successors, under penalties.

Treasurer's remembrancer, he whose charge was to put the Lord Treasurer and the rest of the judges of the Exchequer in remembrance of such things as were called on and dealt in for the sovereign's behoof. There is still one in Scotland.

Treasure-trove [thesaurus inventus, Lat.], money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion found hidden in the earth or other private place, the owner thereof being unknown or unfound; in which case it belongs to the crown. Bracton defines it, vetus depositio pecuniæ. Concealing treasure-trove is punishable by fine or imprisonment.—Br. & Had. Com. i. 358; iv. 120.

Coroners ought to inquire of treasure-trove, being certified thereof.—4 Edw. I. s. 2.

As to the Roman law on this subject, see Sand. Just., 5th ed., 110.

Treasury, the place where treasure is deposited. (2) The department of state which manages the Royal Public Revenue. The Lord High Treasurer is properly the head of this department; but, in practice, the functions of this great official are discharged by several commissioners. The chief of these is called First Lord; and he is, by custom, the head of the Cabinet (see CABINET), and of the whole executive, for which he is responsible in every department. The Chancellor of the Exchequer is the second commissioner, and there are three others. There are also three secretaries to the treasury.

Treasury-bench, the front seat on the right hand of the Speaker of the House of Commons, upon which the members of the ministry who have seats in that house sit.

Treasury Chest Fund. A fund originating in the unusual balances of certain grants of public money, and which is used for banking and loan purposes by the Commissioners of the Treasury. Its amount was limited by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 127, and has been further reduced to one million pounds, the residue being transferred to the Consolidated Fund, by 36 & 37 Vict. c. 56; and see CONSOLIDATED FUND.

Treasury Solicitor. Constituted a Corporation Sole by 'Treasury Solicitor Act, 1876,' 39 & 40 Vict. c. 18.

Treating. The temporary Corrupt Practices Prevention Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, s. 4, amended by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 17, and continued from time to time by Expiring Laws Continuance Acts, enacts that every candidate who corruptly by himself, or by or with any person or otherwise before, during, or after election, directly or indirectly gives or provides, or causes to be given or provided, or is accessory to giving or providing, or pays wholly or in part, expenses for meat, drink, entertainment, or provision, for any person, in order to be elected, or for being elected, or for corruptly influencing any person, to give or refrain from giving his voice, or on account of having voted or refrained from voting, or being about to vote or refrain from voting, is guilty of treating, and forfeits 50*l.* to any informer with costs. Every voter who corruptly accepts any meat, drink, entertainment, etc., shall be incapable of voting at such election, and his vote shall be utterly void. As to the origin of treating at elections, see 3 Hallam's Const. Hist. c. xxi., p. 302, n. (g). See also 31 & 32 Vict. c. 125, s. 6.

Treaty, negotiation, act of treating, a compact between nations. It is the sovereign's prerogative to make treaties, leagues, and alliances with foreign states and princes.

Treble costs. See DOUBLE OR TREBLE COSTS.

Treble damages. See DOUBLE OR TREBLE DAMAGES.

Trebucket, a tumbrel, castigatory, or cuck-ing-stool. See CASTIGATORY.

Treet [fr. triticum, Lat.], fine wheat.—51 Hen. III.

Tremagium, Tremesium, Termissium, the season or time of sowing summer-corn, being about March, the third month, to which the word may allude.—Cowel.

Tremellum, a granary.

Tresayle, an abolished writ sued on ouster by abatement, on the death of the grandfather's grandfather.

Trespass [fr. transgressio, Lat.], any transgression of the law, less than treason, felony, or misprision of either.

The action of trespass lies where a trespass has been committed either to the plaintiff's person or property. A trespass is an injury committed with violence, and this violence may be either actual or implied; and the law will imply violence, though none is actually used, where the injury is of a direct and immediate kind, and committed on the person or tangible and corporeal property of the plaintiff. Of actual violence, an assault and battery is an instance; of implied, a peaceable but wrongful entry upon the plaintiff's lands.—Steph. Plead., 7th ed., 11, 37, 154. As to trespass on the case, see CASE.

Trespass, quare clausam fregit. See QUARE CLAUSAM FREGIT.

Trespasser, one who commits a trespass.

Trestonare, to turn or divert another way.—Cowel.

Tret. See ALLOWANCE.

Trethings [fr. trethu, Welsh, to tax], taxes, imposts.

Treyts, taken out or withdrawn, as withdrawing or discharging a juror.

Trial, the examination of a cause, civil or criminal, before a judge who has jurisdiction over it, according to the laws of the land.—1 Inst. 124.

At a trial by jury now, as formerly in the Common Law Courts, the cause is called on, or the prisoner arraigned, before the jury is sworn. The parties may then challenge the jury. See CHALLENGE. The pleadings are then (in civil causes and misdemeanours) opened by the junior counsel for the plaintiff; and if it appear that the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, his senior counsel states the case to the jury; after which the witnesses for the plaintiff are examined by his counsel, the cross-examination being generally conducted by the senior counsel for the defendant. If the defendant's counsel object to any question or any document, all the defendant's counsel are entitled to be heard on the objection, and all the plaintiff's counsel on the other side, and the senior counsel for the defendant in reply; and so if the plaintiff's counsel object mutatis mutandis. If the plaintiff have evidence to rebut the issues of which the burden of proof lies on the defendant, he may either produce it at the same time as his other evidence, or reserve it until after the defendant has given affirmative evidence on the issue. At the end of the plaintiff's evidence, the defendant's counsel declares whether he will call witnesses; and if he does not, the plaintiff's senior counsel sums up his evidence, and the defendant's senior counsel next addresses the jury, and the judge sums up. If the defendant's counsel calls evidence, he immediately opens his case to the jury, and the witnesses are called and examined as in the plaintiff's case. The plaintiff is, in general, entitled to call witnesses to rebut the evidence of the defendant, if he has not already given all his evidence, which is more generally the case. Then the defendant's senior counsel sums up, and the senior counsel for the plaintiff replies upon the whole case. The judge then sums up. By consent of both parties the verdict may be taken by the associate in the absence of the judge; but in a criminal trial he must be present.

In a criminal trial the effect of the pleadings is stated to the jury by the clerk of the court, except in case of a misdemeanour, where that is done by counsel, as in a civil cause. In other respects the order of proceeding is the same. After a conviction for misdemeanour the counsel for the defendant may address the court in mitigation, and the counsel for the prosecution in aggravation, of his sentence. Sentence may be deferred to a future day.—Consult Chit. Arch. Prac., as to trial in civil causes; and Arch. Crim. Prac. as to trial in criminal cases.

In the Chancery Division of the High Court when the trial is by affidavit, it is commonly called a hearing, and all the counsel on both sides are heard in order, the senior counsel for the party first heard (plaintiff or petitioner) being heard in reply. When an issue is tried by oral evidence before the court itself, the common law practice is followed. The trial in the ecclesiastical courts mostly resembles the former course of an ordinary trial in chancery.

The rules with regard to trials in the High Court of Justice are to be found in the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI. (as amended by the Rules of the Court of Dec. 1st, 1875).

Trial at bar. See BAR.

Tribunal, the seat of a judge, a court of justice.

Tribute, payment made in acknowledgment; subjection.

Tricesima, an ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called, because thirty burgesses paid 1*d.* rent for their houses to the bishop, who was lord of the manor.—Lib. Nrk. Heref.

Tridingmote, the court held for a triding or trithing.—Cowel.

Triennial Act, 6 W. & M. c. 2, which provides that there shall be no longer intermissions of parliament than three years, following, in this respect, 16 Car. II. c. 1, which repealed another Triennial Act more properly so called, 16 Car. I. c. 1. This other Triennial Act limited the duration of parliament to three years. See also SEPTENNIAL ACT.

Triens, a third part; also dower.

Triers, see TRIGORS.

Trinepos, the male descendant in the 6th degree in direct line.—Civ. Law.

Trinity House, a society at Deptford Strond, incorporated by Hen. VIII. in 1515, for the promotion of commerce and navigation by licensing and regulating pilots, and ordering, and erecting beacons, lighthouses, buoys, etc.

The Trinity House, by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, appoints and licenses pilots for the following limits:—(1) 'The London District,' comprising the waters of the Thames and Medway, as high as London Bridge and Rochester Bridge, and the seas and channels leading thereto or therefrom, as far as Orfordness to the north, and Dungeness to the south, but so that no pilot shall be licensed to conduct ships both above and below Gravesend. (2) 'The English Channel District,' comprising the seas between Dungeness and the Isle of Wight. (3) 'The Trinity House Outports Districts,' comprising any pilotage district for the appointment of pilots, within which no particular provision is made by Act of Parliament or charter. And, in general, the employment of pilots, in the first and third of these districts, is compulsory. But the following ships, when not carrying passengers, shall be exempted from compulsory pilotage in the London District and the Trinity House Outports Districts. (1) Ships employed in the coasting trade of the United Kingdom. (2) Ships of not more than sixty tons burden. (3) Ships trading to Boulogne, or to any place in Europe north of Boulogne. (4) Ships from Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark, or Man, which are wholly laden with stone, the produce of those islands. (5) Ships navigating within the limits of the ports to which they belong. (6) Ships passing through the limits of any pilotage district on their voyage between two places, both situate out of such limits, and not being bound to any place within such limits nor anchoring therein (ss. 369—388).

Trinity Sittings of the Court of Appeal and of the High Court of Justice in London and Middlesex commence on the Tuesday after Whitsun week, and terminate on the 8th of August (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LXI., r. 1). See SITTINGS.

Trinity Term, one of the four legal terms, beginning on the 22nd May, and ending on the 12th of June. See TERMS, and last title.

Trinobantes, Trinonantes, or Trinovantes, inhabitants of Britain, situated next to the Cantii northward, who occupied, according to Camden and Baxter, that country which now comprises the counties of Essex and Middlesex, and some part of Surrey. But if Ptolemy be not mistaken, their territories were not so extensive in his time, as London did not then belong to them. The name seems to be derived from the three following British words:—Tri, now, hant, i.e., inhabitants of the new city (London).—Encyc. Lond.

Trinoda necessitas. Under this denomination are comprised three distinct imposts, to which all landed possessions, not excepting those of the church, were subject, viz.:—(1) Bryge-bót, for keeping the bridges and high roads in repair.—(Pontis constructio.) (2) Burg-bót, for keeping the burghs or fortresses in an efficient state of defence.—(Arcis constructio.) (3) Fyrd, or contribution for maintaining the military and naval force of the kingdom.—Anc. Inst. Eng.

Triors, Triours, or Triers, such as were chosen by the court to examine whether a challenge made to the panel of jurors, or to any of them, be just or not.—Brook's Abridg. 122.

Tripartite, divided into three parts, having three correspondent copies; a deed to which there are three distinct parties.

Triplicatio, a rebutter.

Tristis, a forest immunity.—Manw. 1, 86.

Tritavia, a great-grandmother's great-grandmother; the female ascendant in the 6th degree.—Civ. Law.

Tritavus, a great-grandfather's great-grandfather; the male ascendant in the 6th degree.—Ibid.

Trithing, the third part of a hire or province; a riding.—Cowel.

Trithing-reeve, a governor of a trithing.

Triumvir, a trithing man or constable of three hundred.—Cowel.

Triverbial days [dies fasti, Lat.], judicial days, when the courts are open for business; so called from the three words do, dico, and addico.

Tronage, a customary duty, or toll for weighing wool.—Cowel.

Tronator, a weigher of wool.—Cowel.

Trophy money, money formerly collected by Martial Law.

and raised in London, and the several counties of England, towards providing harness, and maintenance for the militia, etc.

Trover [fr. trouver, Fr., to find]. This was a special action upon the case, properly called the action of trover and conversion, which might be maintained by any person who had either an absolute or special property in goods, for recovering the value of such goods, against another, who having or being supposed to have obtained possession of such goods by lawful means, had wrongfully converted them to his own use. It originally lay only where the goods have been lost by the plaintiff and found (whence the name) by the defendant, but it was in course of time allowed to be brought as above upon a fictitious allegation of the finding not required to be proved, but not formally abolished until 1852 by the C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 49.

The action was also termed one of conversion, but 'wrongfully depriving' is the term now used.

Troy weight [pondus Trojæ, Lat.], a weight of twelve ounces to the pound, having its name from Troyes, a city in Aube, France.

Truchman, an interpreter.

Truck Act, 1 & 2 Wm. IV. cc. 36, 37. See next article.

Truck system, the payment of wages in goods instead of money. The plan has been for masters to establish warehouses or shops, and the workmen in their employ have either had their wages accounted for to them by supplies of goods from such depôts, without receiving any money, or they have had the money given them with an express understanding that they were to resort to the warehouses or shops of their masters for the articles of which they stood in need. This system was abolished by 1 & 2 Wm. IV. cc. 36, 37. See Archer v. James, 31 L. J. (Q. B.) 153. By 33 & 34 Vict. c. 105, commissioners were appointed to inquire into the alleged prevalence of the system, and the disregard of the acts of parliament prohibiting such system.

True bill [billā vera, Lat.], the endorsement which the grand jury makes upon a bill of indictment when, having heard the evidence, they are satisfied of the truth of the accusation.

Trust. See TRUSTEE and CESTUI QUE TRUST.

True, Public, and Notorious. These three qualities used to be formally predicted in the libel in the Ecclesiastical Courts, of the charges which it contained, at the end of each Trustee, one entrusted with property for the benefit of another, called cestui que trust, which see.

Any trustee may apply to a judge of the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34), for the opinion, advice, or direction of such judge, on any question respecting the management or administration of the trust property and the trustee, etc.; bond-fide acting upon the opinion, etc., given by the said judge is deemed to have discharged his duty in the subject-matter of the application.—22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 30, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 9. Powers for the appointment of new trustees in the room of incapable or retiring trustees, etc., are provided by ss. 31—34 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, replacing similar sections of Lord Cranworth's Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, ss. 27, 30.

Trustees may sue and be sued without joining the persons beneficially interested (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XVI., r. 7). See further title PARTIES.

No claim of a cestui que trust against his trustee for any property held on an express trust, is barred by any statute of limitation (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 25 (2)).

Trustee Acts, statutes providing, for the benefit of cestui que trust, that new trustees may be appointed in the place of absent, lunatic, or defaulting trustees, etc.—13 & 14 Vict. c. 60; 15 & 16 Vict. c. 55; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91, s. 10; and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, ss. 17, 36. As to gratuitous trustees in Scotland, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 84; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 115.

Trustee Relief Acts, statutes providing for the relief of trustees, e.g., that they may discharge themselves of their trust by paying the trust funds into the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice.—10 & 11 Vict. c. 96; 12 & 13 Vict. c. 74; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 43, s. 12; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, ss. 26, 33; 23 & 24 Vict. ss. 9, 12. As to costs under these Acts, see the Order in Council of August 12th, 1875, Ord. VI.

Trustees, fraudulent, Punishment of. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 80, it is enacted, that 'Whosoever, being a trustee of any property for the use or benefit, either wholly or partially of some other, or for any public or charitable purpose, shall, with intent to defraud, convert, or appropriate the same or any part thereof to or of his own use, or the use or benefit of any other person, or for any purpose other than such public or charitable purpose, or otherwise dispose of or destroy such property or any part thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and liable to penal servitude for any term not more than seven nor less than three (now five) years; or imprisonment for not more than two years. But no proceeding or prosecution for any such offence shall be commenced without the sanction of the Attorney-General, or if that office be vacant, the Solicitor General; and where any civil proceeding shall have been taken against any person to whom these provisions may apply, no person who shall have taken such proceeding shall commence any prosecution under this section without the sanction of the court before whom such proceedings shall have been had or shall be pending.'

Truster, the creator of a trust.

Trust Funds Investment. See INVEST; and 4 & 5 Wm. IV. c. 29; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 35, s. 32; Ibid. c. 38, ss. 10, 12; Ibid. c. 145, s. 25; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 132; 33 & 34 Vict. c. 34; 34 & 35 Vict. c. 27.

Trusts. A trust is simply a confidence, reposed either expressly or impliedly in a person (hence called the trustee), for the benefit of another (hence called the cestui que trust, or beneficiary), not, however, issuing out of real or personal property, but as a collateral incident accompanying it, annexed in privity to (i.e., commensurate with) the interest in such property, and also to the person touching such interest, for the accomplishment of which confidence, the cestui que trust or beneficiary has his remedy in equity only; the trustee himself likewise being aided and protected in the proper performance of his trust, when he seeks the court's direction as to its management.

Every kind of property in which a legal interest may be given, whatever may be its quantity or quality, if it will yield a profit, may be impressed with a trust, which equity will carry out without regard to form, provided its purpose do not contravene the policy of the law, or the principles governing the rights of property; for qui hæret in litera hæret in cortice.

Trusts may be classed thus:—

(I.) Express, divided into—

(a.) Trusts executed, perfect, complete, or constituted.

(b.) Trusts executory, imperfect, incomplete, or directory.

(II.) Arising by operation of law, divided into—

(a.) Constructive.

(b.) Resulting.

(c.) Implied.

Trusts are also divisible into (1) permanent, when there is a continuing duty to be performed for the benefit of several persons in succession; and (2) temporary, when there is one particular duty only to perform. Again, trusts may be general, where a trustee's duty is passive; and special, where it is active.

A trust being, in contemplation of equity, the substantial ownership of property, its legal possessor can create a trust in relation thereto, co-extensive with his ability to dispose of it at law.

The Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 7, requires that 'all declarations or creations of trusts or confidences of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments shall be manifested and proved by some writing, signed by the party who is by law enabled to declare such trust, or by his last will in writing, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect.' This provision does not include declarations of trusts affecting chattels personal, which may be created by parol, provided they are to take effect during the life of their creator.

Since it is not necessary that a trust be declared in writing, but only so manifested and proved, no form is requisite either as regards the nature of the instrument or the language; the statute will be satisfied if the trust can be established by any subsequent acknowledgment of the trustee, however informally or indirectly made, as by a letter under his hand, by his statement of defence in an action, or by a recital in a deed, provided it relate to the subject-matter, and the precise nature and object of the trust can be ascertained. A trust cannot be engrafted upon a will unless by a testamentary or codicillary paper executed with the statutory formalities, but if a devise or bequest of the legal estate be accompanied with any mala fides in the devisee or legatee, as if there be an express or implied undertaking to execute the intent of making a provision for third persons, the court will certainly establish such a trust.

A trust may be declared either directly or indirectly:—

To create a trust by a direct or formal declaration, a person need only make his meaning clear as to the interest he intends to give, without regarding the technical terms of the common law in the limitation of legal estates. An equitable fee may be granted without the word 'heirs,' and an equitable entail without the word 'heirs of the body'; but, though technical terms be not absolutely necessary, yet no rule is better established than that where technical terms are employed, they shall be taken in their legal and special sense. A distinction, however, must be drawn between trusts executed and trusts executory.

A constructive trust is properly a trust declared by a person indirectly, and construed by the court in favour of the intention. Thus when property is given absolutely to any person, and he is recommended, or entreated, or wished, by the donor having power to command, to dispose of such property in favour of another, the recommendation, entreaty, or wish creates a trust provided the words are so used that, upon the whole, they ought to be construed as imperative; and also provided that the subject of the recommendation or wish, as well as the objects or persons intended to have the benefit of such recommendation or wish, be certain and definite. There is not any inclination to extend the rule of construction, which gives an imperative effect to precatory or recommendatory words.

Where, from the different parts of the instrument, it appears that the words are expressive of a mere expectation or wish, no trust will arise; as where the words are, that the donee will be kind to, or remember certain objects or classes, or the like; or where the donor uses such expressions as, trusting to the justice of his successors, and it is to be inferred that it is their own sense of justice on which he relies. When the testator recommends, but adds that he does not absolutely enjoin, it is clear that the expressions are to be taken as precatory only, and not imperative. If it appear from the context that the first taker was intended to have a discretionary power to withdraw the whole or any part of the subject from the object of the wish or request, or if there are any words by which it is expressed or from which it can be implied that the first taker may apply any part of the subject to his own use, it will not be held that a trust is created.

If a testator in one part of his will give property unfettered, the legatee is not generally bound to comply with a subsequent recommendation. So, where a father devised an estate to his daughter, as a reward for her affectionate, unwearied, and unexampled attention to him, superadded words of recommendation were held not to create a trust.

In recommendatory trusts, if the words for any reason do not amount to a trust, or the intended trust fail in the whole or in part, the absolute interest remains in the donee; or if the trust established do not exhaust the property given, the donee retains, in virtue of the gift, so much of the property as is not affected with the trust; but if property be given to a person as trustee only, if no trust be declared, or the trust declared or purporting to be declared should fail, then there is a resulting trust for the donor or those claiming under him, and the donee can claim nothing beneficially, nothing being given to him but as trustee.

Any person may be appointed a trustee except a criminal attainted. Formerly an alien could not be a trustee of realty; but see now ALIEN. A corporation may be constituted a trustee of personalty and also of realty upon charitable trusts; but not upon private trusts by reason of the statutes of mortmain. Equity will, however, supply a trustee where realty is so devised to a corporation. It was formerly never advisable to select a married woman to be a trustee, on account of her inability to join in the requisite assurances without her husband's concurrence; but now by the 'Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874' (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), s. 6, 'when any freehold or copyhold hereditament shall be vested in a married woman as a bare trustee, she may convey or surrender the same as if she were a feme sole.' Nor should an infant be appointed a trustee, on account of his legal disability. If a trust involve the receipt and custody of money, the safeguard of at least two trustees ought rarely to be dispensed with.

In order to vest the legal state of a simple trust in a trustee, it should be conveyed or devised 'to the trustee and his heirs to the use of the trustee and his heirs,' or 'unto and to the use of the trustee and his heirs,' then superadding the trusts. Should, however, the trusts be special, imposing an agency upon the trustee, then by a limitation to A. and his heirs, upon trust to pay the rents or to permit and suffer a person to receive and take the net rents and profits, or to convey the estate; or if any control is to be exercised, or duty to be performed, as upon trust to apply the rents to a person's maintenance, or in making repairs, or to hold for the separate use of a feme covert, or to permit a feme covert to receive the profits for her separate use, or to preserve contingent remainders, and à fortiori to raise a sum of money, or to dispose of by sale, the operation of the Statutes of Uses is effectually excluded, and the trustee takes the legal estate. But if the trust is simply to 'permit and suffer A. to receive the rents,' or the legal estate be limited to the trustees charged with debts, and subject thereto in trust for A., and no direction is given to the trustees personally to pay the debts, then, as the trustees have no agency assigned to them, but merely stand seised in trust, the Statute of Uses will operate, and execute the possession in A.

Any person who can purchase and hold a legal estate may become a beneficiary of the equitable interest in property.

By the 'Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874' (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), the legal presentative of a mortgagee may convey the mortgaged estate (s. 4); and by s. 48 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), repealing s. 5 of the above Act, upon the death of a bare trustee intestate as to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament of which such trustee was seised in fee-simple, such hereditament shall rest like a chattel real in the legal personal representative of such trustee. This latter section, however, does not apply to lands registered under the Land Transfer Act, 1875.

A trust will be enforced wherever there is a valuable consideration; but, if it be merely voluntary, the equitable interest will not be enforced, unless an actual trust be created, and no act remains to be done to complete the title of the trustees, for then a consideration is not essential. An agreement founded on a meritorious consideration (i.e., a secondary valuable consideration, as in favour of a wife or children) will not be executed as against the settlor himself, but as between parties claiming under the settlor, if the court can act in favour of the meritorious consideration without inflicting a hardship on persons peculiarly entitled to protection, the voluntary agreement will in such a case be specifically executed.

The rule is to carry into effect the object proposed by the trust, unless it is in contravention of the public policy of the law; as, for instance, seeking to create a perpetuity, or accumulating annual income beyond the statutory limits. See PASSIVE TRUST. Consult Lewin on Trusts.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 34, the execution of trusts, charitable or private, is assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice. See also SUMMONS and PLEADING.

Tub, 60 lb. of tea.

Tub-man, a barrister who had a pre-audience in the Court of Exchequer, and also in the Exchequer Division of the High Court, and also a particular place in court.

Tumbrell, a castigatory, or dung cart.

Tumultuous petitioning. By 13 Car. II., st. 1, c. 5, it is enacted, that not more than twenty names shall be signed to any petition to the crown or either house of parliament for any alteration of matters established by law in church or state: unless the contents thereof be previously approved in the country by three justices, or the majority of the grand jury at the assizes or quarter-sessions; and in London by the lord mayor, aldermen, and common council; and that no petition shall be delivered by a company of more than ten persons, on pain of incurring a penalty not exceeding 100*l.* and three months' imprisonment. See also 57 Geo. III. c. 19, s. 23; Br. & Had. Com., i. 170; iv. 171; and 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 255.

Tun, four hogsheads.

Tuncaw, Tunkha, an assistant of the revenue for personal support or other purposes.—Indian.

Tungreve, a town-reeve or bailiff.—Cowel.

Turbary [fr. turbus, or turba, obs. Lat., turf, or Saxon, meaning either the right of taking turf, or the ground whence it is taken], the liberty of digging turf upon another man's ground. It may be either by grant or prescription, and either appurtenant or in gross. It can be appurtenant only to a house, and can only be a right to take turf for fuel for such house.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 653.

Turn, or Tourn, the great court-leet of the county, as the old county-court was the court baron; of this the sheriff is judge, and the court is incident to his office; wherefore it is called the sheriff's tourn; and it had its name originally from the sheriff making a turn of circuit about his shire, and holding this court in each respective hundred.—2 Hawk. P. C. c. x.

Turner's (Sir George) Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, providing for the statement of a special case in equitable matters, abolished by Rule of Court in 1880.

Turnkey, a gaoler.

Turnpike-roads, ways maintained out of tolls paid by passengers. These do not fall within the operation of the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 50, but are regulated primarily by the local Acts relative to each particular road, which, though temporary, were, until about the middle of the present century, almost invariably renewed by the legislature from time to time as they were about to expire; and in the next place by statutes of a general description, of which the principal is the consolidating 3 Geo. IV. c. 126, applicable (with very few exceptions) to all turnpike-roads, that is, all roads maintained by tolls, and placed under the management of trustees or commissioners for a limited period of time. There were at one time many thousand turnpike trusts. In 1864 they numbered above a thousand, but in 1879 they had been reduced to little more than two hundred, by expiration in accordance with 'Annual Turnpike Continuance' Acts. (See Chit. Stat., vol. iii., tit. 'Highways' (Turnpike)); of which the latest is 45 & 46 Vict. c. 52.

Turpis causa, a base or vile consideration on which no action can be founded.

Turpis est pars quæ non convenit cum suo toto. Plow. 161.—(That part is bad which accords not with its whole.)

Tuta est custodia quæ sibi met creditur. Hob. 340.—(That guardianship is secure which is entrusted to itself alone.)

Tutelage, guardianship; state of being under a guardian.—Sand. Just., 5th ed., 52, 70.

Tutius erratur ex parte mitiore. 3 Inst. 220.—(It is safer to err on the gentler side.)

Tutius semper est errare acquitando quam in puniendo, ex parte misericordie quam ex parte justitie. H. H. P. C. 290.—(It is always safer to err in acquitting than in punishing: on the side of mercy than of strict justice.)

Tutor, a guardian; a protector; an instructor.

Tutorship, the office and power of a tutor.

Tutrix, a female tutor.

Twanight geste, a guest at an inn a second night.—Cowel. See THIRD-NIGHT-AWN-HINDE.

Twelfthindi, the highest rank of men in the Saxon government, who were valued at 1200s. If any injury were done to such persons, satisfaction was to be made according to their worth.—Cowel.

Twelve-day-writ. A writ issued under the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 67, for summary procedure on bills of exchange and promissory notes, abolished by Rule of Court in 1880.

Twelvemonth (sing.), a year; but twelve months (plur.) are computed according to twenty-eight days for each month.—6 Rep. 62.

Twyhindi, the lower order of Saxons valued at 200s. in the scale of pecuniary mulcts inflicted for crimes.—Cowel.

Tyburn ticket, a certificate which was given to the prosecutor of a felon to conviction.

Tyhtlan, an accusation, impeachment, or charge.—Cowel.

Tylwith, a tribe, house, or family.—Cowel.

Tyrannicide, the slaughter of a tyrant.

Tythe, tithe, or tenth part.

Tything, a company of ten; a district; a tenth part. See TITHING.

Tzar, Tzarina, the Emperor and Empress of Russia. See CZAR.

Ubi nullum matrimonium ibi nulla dos. (Without matrimony there is no dower.) As to the application of this maxim see Co. Litt. 32.

Ubi quid generaliter conceditur, inest hæc exceptio, si non aliquid sit contra jus fasque. 10 Co. 78.—(Where a thing is conceded generally this exception arises, that there shall be nothing contrary to law and right.)

Ubi verba conjuncta non sunt sufficit alterutrum esse factum. D. 50, 17, 110, s. 3.—(Where words are not conjoined, it is enough if one or other be complied with.)

Udal, allodial, which see.

Ukaas, or Ukase, a Russian law or ordinance.

Ullage [fr. uligo, Lat., oozyiness], the quantity of fluid which a cask wants of being full, in consequence of the oozing of the liquor.—Malone.

Ulnage, alnage, which see.

Ulna ferrea, the standard ell of iron, which was kept in the Exchequer for the rule of measure.—Mon. Angl. ii. 383.

Ulpian, a great Roman jurist. He flourished in the time of Alexander Severus, about A.D. 222. The Code of Justinian is in great part founded on his works.

Ultimatum, or Ultimation, the last offer, concession, or condition.

Ultima voluntas testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. Co. Litt. 322.—(The last will of a testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.)

Ultimum supplicium, the last or extreme punishment; death.

Ultimus hæres, the last or remote heir, that is, the sovereign, who succeeds, failing all relations.—Scotch Law phrase.

Ultrâ; damages ultra, damages beyond a sum paid into court.

Ultrâ vires [Lat.] (beyond their powers), said of a company or corporation, etc., when exceeding the authority imparted thereto by Act of Parliament. Consult Brice on the Doctrine of Ultra Vires, and Ashbury Railway Carriage and Iron Co. v. Riche, L. R. 7 H. L. 653.

Umpirage, friendly decision of a controversy; arbitration.

Umpire [fr. imperator or impar, Lat.]. A submission to arbitration usually provides that in case of arbitrators not agreeing in an award the matters should be decided by a third person, who is called an umpire. The submission either provides that the arbitrators shall appoint the umpire, or he is named therein. This appointment should always be made a condition precedent to the proceeding at all in the reference. The appointment of an umpire must be the act of the will and concurring judgment of both the arbitrators. The umpire's authority commences when arbitrators are unable to agree, but if there be a time limited for the award, his authority absolutely commences from such time. The umpire, when called upon to act, is generally invested with the same powers as the arbitrators, and bound by the same rules, and has to perform the same duties. Consult Russell on Awards.

Umquhile, deceased.

Una persona vix potest supplere vices duarum. 7 Co. 118.—(One person can scarcely supply the places of two.) Vide Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. L. Cases, 274.

Unâ Voce [Lat.] (with one voice, i.e., unanimously).

Unceasesath [fr. ceas, Sax., prosecution, un, without, and ath, oath], an oath by relations not to avenge a relation's death.—Blount.

Uncertainty. Where the words of a deed or will are so vague that no meaning with definite limits can be assigned to them, the grant or gift is void for uncertainty: as if one bequeath 'some of his property' to A., or all his property 'to one of my sons.'

Unclaimed dividends in the public funds. See National Debt Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 71, s. 51 et seq. (replacing the repealed 56 Geo. III. c. 60, and 8 & 9 Vict. c. 62), by which if no dividend is claimed on stock for ten years, the stock is transferred to the National Debt Commissioners, but may be re-transferred at any time afterwards to a person showing title. As to Ireland, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 71. And as to bankruptcy, see 32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, s. 116; Ibid. c. 83, s. 19; and Jud. Act, 1875, s. 32.

Uncle and Nephew. A nephew, the son of a deceased elder brother, is preferred in the inheritance to his uncle, a younger brother of the deceased.

Uncore prist, the plea of a defendant in the nature of a plea in bar, where being sued for a debt due on bond at a day past, to save the forfeiture of the bond, he says that he tendered the money at the day and place, and that there was none there to receive it, and that he is also still ready to pay the same.—Cowel.

Uncuth [Sax.], unknown.—Cowel.

Unde nihil habet. See DOWER.

Under chamberlains of the Exchequer, two officers who cleaved the tallies written by the clerk of the tallies, and read the same, that the clerk of the pell and comptrollers thereof might see their entries were true. They also made searches for records in the treasury, and had the custody of Domesday-Book. Abolished.

Under-lease, a grant by a lessee to another of a part of his whole interest under the original lease, reserving to himself a reversion; it differs from an assignment, which conveys the lessee's whole interest, and passes to the assignee the right and liability to sue and be sued upon the covenants in the original lease. An under-lease for the whole term of the original lease amounts to an assignment thereof.—Beardman v. Wilson, L. R. 4 C. P. 57.

Under Secretary of State Indemnity Act, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 21.

Under Sheriff [sub vicecomes, Lat.], the sheriff's deputy. See SHERIFF.

Undertaking to appear by a solicitor for a defendant in an action. A solicitor not entering an appearance in pursuance of his written undertaking to do so, is liable to an attachment (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XII., r. 14).

Under-tenant, one who holds by under-lease, from a lessee. Between the original lessor and an under-tenant there is neither privity of estate nor privity of contract, so that these parties cannot take advantage, the one against the other, of the covenants, either in law or in deed, which exist between the original lessor and lessee.—Watk. Conv. 308.

Under Treasurer of England [vice-treasarius Angliæ, Lat.], he who transacted the business of the Lord High Treasurer.

Under-writer, an insurer of ships, so called from his writing his name under the policy of insurance. See INSURANCE.

Undres, minors or persons under age not capable of bearing arms.—Fleta, l. 1, c. ix.—Cowel.

Undue influence, any improper pressure whereby the party pressed is induced to benefit the party pressing. Both a gift (see Lyon v. Home, L. R. 6 Eq. 655) and a will (see Parfitt v. Lawless, L. R. 2 P. & M. 462) may be set aside on the ground of undue influence, but the natural influence, the exertion of which would justify the setting aside of a gift, may be lawfully exercised to obtain a will or legacy (Parfitt v. Lawless, ubi sup.; in this case a will in favour of a Roman Catholic priest, who was confessor of the testatrix, was upheld).

In election matters, undue influence is any force, violence, or restraint, or the infliction, or threat to inflict, any injury, or the practice of any intimidation, in order to induce any person to vote, or refrain from voting, or on account of his having done so; every person so offending is guilty of a misdemeanour, and forfeits the sum of 50*l.*; and if a candidate for election, disqualified from sitting in parliament for the same constituency, in the parliament then in existence.—17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, ss. 5, 36; and other acts. See Chit. Stat., vol. iv., tit. 'Parliament' (Corrupt Practices).

Unfrid [Sax.], one who has neither peace nor quiet.

Ungeld, an outlaw.

Unica taxatio, the obsolete language of a special award of venire, where, of several defendants, one pleads, and one lets judgment go by default, whereby the jury, who are to try and assess damages on the issue, are also to assess damages against the defendant suffering judgment by default.

Uniformity, Act of, which regulates the terms of membership in the Church of England and the colleges of Oxford and Cambridge, 13 & 14 Car. II. c. 4. See 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59. The Act of Uniformity has been amended by the 35 & 36 Vict. c. 35, which inter alia provides a shortened form of Morning and Evening Prayer. See ACT OF UNIFORMITY.

Uniformity of Process Act, 2 Wm. IV. c. 39, by which personal actions, theretofore commenced by different processes in the Courts of King's Bench, Exchequer, and Common Pleas, were first commenced by one process applicable to all three Courts alike. See LATITAT, QUOMINUS.

Unigeniture, the state of being the only begotten.

Unilateral, one-sided.

Unilateral contract. When the party to whom an engagement is made makes no express agreement on his part, the contract is called unilateral, even in cases where the law attaches certain obligations to his acceptance. A loan of money and a loan for use are of this kind.—Civ. Law.

Unity of possession, where one has a right to two estates, and holds them together in his own hands, as if a person takes a lease of lands from another at a certain rent, and afterwards buys the fee-simple, this is an unity of possession by which the lease is extinguished, because that he who had before the occupation only for his rent, is now become lord and owner of the land.—Termes de la Ley. See JOINT-TENANCY.

Universal agent, one who is appointed to do all the acts which the principal can personally do, and which he may lawfully delegate the power to another to do. Such an universal agency may potentially exist, but it must be of the rarest occurrence. And indeed it is difficult to conceive of the existence of such an agency practically, inasmuch as it would be to make such an agent the complete master, not merely dux facti but dominus rerum, the complete disposer of all the rights and property of the principal. The law will not from general expressions, however broad, infer the existence of any such universal agency; but it will rather construe them as restrained to the principal business of the party, in respect to which it is presumed his intention to delegate the authority was principally directed.—Story's Agency, 18.

Universal legacy, a testamentary disposition by which the testator gives to one or more persons the whole of the property which he leaves at his decease.—Civ. Law.

Universal partnership, a species of partnership, by which all the partners agree to put in common all their property, universorum bonorum, not only what they then have, but also what they shall acquire.—Civ. Law.

Universities and College Estates Act, 1858, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 44, extended by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 59. See next title.

University, a corporation forming one whole out of many individuals; a school where all kinds of literature are taught. The English Universities are those of Oxford, Cambridge, Durham, and London; the Scotch, those of Aberdeen, St. Andrew's, Edinburgh, and Glasgow; the only Irish University is the University of Dublin.

The 34 Vict. c. 26, proceeding on the preamble that it is expedient that the benefits of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, and Durham, and of the colleges and halls now subsisting therein as places of religion and learning should be rendered freely accessible to the nation, and that by means of divers restrictions, tests, and disabilities many of Her Majesty's subjects are debarred from the full enjoyment of the same, makes various provisions for the removal of religious tests. See Reg. v. Hertford College, 3 Q. B. D. 693, in which it was held that the Act applies only to colleges subsisting before it was passed. The 36 & 37 Vict. c. 21 has made similar alterations in the law with regard to the University of Dublin and Trinity College. The College Charter Act, 1871, 34 & 35 Vict. c. 63, provides that a copy of any application for a charter for a new college or university shall be submitted to Parliament as well as to the Sovereign in Council.

In 1854, by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 81, commissioners were appointed with powers to frame statutes for the better government, etc., of Oxford University, and the colleges therein; and in 1856, by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 88, other commissioners with the like powers as to Cambridge. In 1877, by 40 & 41 Vict. c. 48, commissioners were appointed with the like powers as to both Oxford and Cambridge.

Uses. The austere and unbending rules of our common law were, at a very early period of our history, found to be altogether unfit for those intricate arrangements of realty which family settlements, commercial speculations, and the multiplied relationships amongst individuals in society required. The common law, in its pure but inflexible strictness, treated the actual possession of property, and the abstract right to it, as one and inseparable. In order to have ascertained the owner of a landed estate, the question was, 'Who was in possession of it?' The person who satisfied this inquiry was to all intents and for all purposes the owner of the property. Nor was it difficult to find him out, since the possession of his estate was conferred upon him by a formal and notorious ceremony, technically called livery of seisin, which was performed openly and in the presence of the people of the locality.

It soon became evident that the iron rules of the common law were unfit for an age in anywise advanced beyond barbarism, and guided by reason. An inflexible tenure and a difficult alienation were stumbling blocks to the increasing transfer of property, the career of commerce, the untrammelled dominion of one's own rights, and the complicated wants of an enterprising and refined people. As speculation expanded and the efforts of competitive industry multiplied, pressing emergencies and transitory difficulties sought accommodation and supply from landed property, and thence ingenuity was excited and experience sharpened to hit upon a device which should set at nought the sternness of existing law and the hardship of rigid ceremony.

A scheme was invented by the monastic jurists upon a model furnished to them by the civil law, which, by a nice adaptation, evaded, without overturning, the common law. Thus two methods of transferring realty began to co-exist in this country—the ancient common law system, and the later invention, which is denominated Uses.

Thus a novel contrivance, which was at first but a trivial innovation, treated with contempt and indifference, has become, in its progress, a gigantic system, which having superseded the doctrines and practice of feudal law, is in fact the foundation of modern conveyancing.

Before the Statute of Uses, a use was in its nature equitable, and it may be defined to have been a right in Chancery to the beneficial ownership of an estate, the possession of which was vested, through confidence, in another. The person enjoying the beneficial right was called the cestui que use, or he to whose use the land was conveyed, and the person in possession the feoffee to uses. Thus A. conveyed an estate to F. to his (A.'s) own use or to the use of C.; F. was the feoffee to uses, and A. or C., as the case may be, the cestui que use.

The use consisted of three parts:—(1) That the feoffee to uses should suffer the cestui que use to take the profits; (2) that the feoffee to uses, upon the request of the cestui que use, or notice of his will, would convey the estate to the cestui que use or his heirs, or any other person by his direction; and (3) that if the feoffee to uses had been deprived; and so the cestui que use disturbed, the feoffee to uses would re-enter or bring an action to recontinue his possession.

The following were the requisites to be observed in raising uses:—

(1) There should have been a person capable of standing seised to a use.

(2) There should have been a person capable of receiving or taking the use.

(3) There should have been either a consideration to raise, or a declaration of, the use.

(4) There should have been a sufficient substance or hereditament out of which the use might have arisen.

The properties of uses were these:—

(1) They were descendible according to the rules of the common law relating to the inheritable estate of intestates: and the special customs of gavelkind, borough English, and copyholds, determined the particular descent of uses. This is an illustration of the well-known maxim, Æquitas sequitur legem.

(2) They were devisable even before the Statute of Wills, 32 Hen. VIII. c. 1.

(3) They were transferable, although at law they were mere choses in action.

(4) A cestui que use in possession of the land was deemed a tenant at will only, for he had neither jus in re, i.e., an estate, nor jus ad rem, i.e., a demand, and therefore he could bring no action, having neither title nor legal estate in the property.

(5) Neither could a widow be endowed, nor could a husband have his curtesy of a use, because the cestui que use had no legal seisin of the land.

(6) The cestui que use might have been impannelled on a jury.—2 Hen. V. c. 3.

(7) The feoffee to uses, being complete owner of the land at law, performed the feudal duties, had power to sell, brought actions, his widow became entitled to dower, and his estate was subjected to wardship, relief, and forfeiture for treason or felony. In fact, he was treated at common law as the absolute tenant of the fee.

(8) A use, being but the creature of equity, could not have been taken in execution for the debts of the cestui que use; for there was no process at common law but against legal estates.

(9) A use, not being an object of tenure, was therefore exempt from the oppressive burdens of the feudal system. It was not forfeitable for treason or felony, because it was not held of any person. This was afterwards broken in upon by statute 12 Ric. II. c. 3.

(10) A use was neither a chattel nor an hereditament; it was not then assets either for the executor or heir-at-law.

There were two kinds of uses, viz :

- (1) Official or active ;
- (2) Permissive or passive.

Uses were also distributable into—

- (1) Express ;
- (2) Constructive ; and
- (3) Resulting.

There appears to have been a distinction between a use and a trust, even before the Statute of Uses. The use was an equitable interest general and permanent in the land, but an equitable interest which was either special or transitory was strictly a trust. Let us give an illustration of the difference : suppose a feoffment in fee, which transferred the possession to the feoffee, in whom a confidence was placed, to pay to some other person and his heirs the rents and profits, and to make such transfers as he or they should direct, this confidence was clearly the use, commensurate with the legal estate ; the feoffee's permanent fee being subject to the distribution of the profits, and the direction of the cestui que use and his heirs. A trust, however, did not divide the property into possession and use, for in such a case they were both transferred to the feoffee, in whom a confidence was placed that he would retain both for some given purpose ; ex. gra., a feoffment made by A. to B. in trust or to the intent to re-infeoff A., or that B. should convey to a third person : the trusts or intents were not uses, for the feoffee was not to pay over the profits merely but to dispose of the profits and also the possession. This was not deemed a use, but a special trust lawful, in contradistinction to the special trust unlawful, which was created for fraudulent purposes, as to defraud creditors, to defeat the Statute of Mortmain, and the like.

If the two following statutes be compared it will be manifest that parliament did not consider the use and special trust to be the same : the 50 Edward III. c. 6, subjected the special trust to an execution by a creditor of the cestui que trust ; while the 19 Hen. VII. c. 15, extended, for the first time, the estate of the cestui que use.

It is, therefore, important clearly to distinguish these three interests—(1) The use, properly so-called (which we have tried to explain) ; (2) the special trust lawful ; and (3) the special trust unlawful. See TRUSTS.

'Though these uses,' remarks Lord C. B.

Gilbert (Uses, c. i. s. 8), 'had a very equitable beginning, yet like all new models and general schemes of ordering property, it introduced a great many unforeseen inconveniences, and subverted in many instances the institution and policy of the common law.

'First. Estates passed by way of use, from one to another, by bare words only, without any solemn ceremony or permanent record of the transaction, whereby a third person that had right knew not against whom to bring his action.

'Secondly. Uses passing by will, the heirs were disinherited by the inadvertent words of dying persons.

'Thirdly. Lords lost their wardships, reliefs, marriages, and escheats ; the trustees letting the cestui que use continue the possession, whereby the real tenants that held the lands could not be discovered.

'Fourthly. The king lost the estates of aliens and criminals ; for they made their friends trustees, who kept possession, and secretly gave them the profits so that their use was undiscovered.

'Fifthly. Purchasers were insecure ; for the alienation of the cestui que use in the possession was at common law a disseisin, and 1 Ric. III. c. 1, gave him power to alien what he had ; yet the feoffees may still enter to re-vest a remainder or contingent use, which were never published by any record or livery, whereby the purchaser could know of them.

'Sixthly. The use was not subject to the payment of debts.

'Seventhly. Many lost their rights by perjury in averment of secret uses.

'Eighthly. Uses might be allowed in mortmain.'

These grievances led to the passing of the Statute of Uses.

The Act 27 Hen. VIII. c. 10, which transferred the equitable use into the legal estate by executing it in possession, is known by several names : It is usually called the Statute of Uses ; its title on the parliament roll is, 'An Act concerning Uses and Wills,' and in pleading it used to be described as Statutum de usibus in possessionem transferendis. It is the Magna Charta of English conveyancing.

It has been generally said that the object aimed at by the passing of this statute, which entirely revolutionised the system of the transfer of real property, was the total destruction of the use, by effecting an amalgamation of the legal and equitable interests ; but, however this might be, it is certain that such an object has been signally defeated by the creation of the modern trust, which sprang from the judicial interpretation by the common law judges of the meaning of this celebrated statute.

There are six circumstances necessary to the execution of uses under the statute, viz. :—

- (1) A person seised to the use.
- (2) A cestui que use in esse.
- (3) A use in esse in possession, reversion, or remainder.
- (4) Every species of realty, except copyholds, whether corporeal or incorporeal, in possession, reversion, or remainder, may be conveyed to uses, but it must be in esse.
- (5) There must be a seisin in the grantee, or feoffee, to uses at the time of the execution of the use.
- (6) The use may be raised by a conveyance operating either by transmutation or non-transmutation of possession.

A classification of uses may be thus arranged :—

I. Present or executed; distributable into:
(a) Those arising by act of parties, which are created either

- (1) By express declaration in a deed ;
- (2) By presumed intention in a will ;
- (3) By certain considerations.

(b) Those arising by act of law, which are either

- (1) Resulting ;
- (2) Implied.

II. Future or executory (so called because they are not executed into legal estates by the statute, till they arise), distributable into :—

- (a) Shifting or secondary ;
- (b) Springing ;
- (c) Contingent.

The following interests have been adjudged to be unaffected by the Statute of Uses :—

(1) Uses limited of copyholds : since no person can be introduced into the estate without the lord's consent ; for if uses were permitted, there would then be effected a transmutation of the possession by operation of law, which would be contrary to the peculiarity of this kind of tenure.

Yet shifting or springing uses may be limited by copyhold surrenders, so as to have the effect of divesting prior vested estates.

(2) Leaseholds for years and chattel interests. It is said that the statute contemplated freeholds only, and therefore employed the word SEISED ; now a tenant is only possessed of a leasehold for years.

(3) Active and constructive uses. When the use involves a direction to sell the estate and then divide the proceeds of the sale, or to pay debts, or to pay over the profits, or to convey to a child on attaining majority, or to re-convey on the repayment of a mortgage-loan, the statute was precluded from the very nature of the transaction from converting such a use into a legal right to the land, and equity, therefore, compels the trustee, who retains the legal estate notwithstanding the statute, to perform the duty confided in him.

And the trustee has the legal estate in the following cases :—A trust to permit a feme covert to receive the profits for, or to pay the same to, her separate use ; and so of a trust to permit and suffer a party to receive and take the net rents and profits.

(4) A second use, or a use upon a use. The common law judges determined that the statute could only operate upon one use, and where another use was superadded, it was a mere nullity, so that in a grant to A. to the use of B., to the use of C., the statute transferred A.'s possession to B., and turned B.'s use into the legal estate, and having done this, it went no farther, but stopped short and could not meddle with C.'s use ; which was an interest unknown before the statute. Upon this, equity interfered, and resuming her old dominion, treated C., the person having the second use, as the beneficiary, and compelled B., having the statute-use, to deal with the estate for C.'s benefit as a trustee, and then giving the technical term of 'trust' to C.'s second use, deprived the use properly so called of its beneficial interest, which was its very essence before the statute, and revived the twofold system of one person holding the legal estate in the land, while the equitable estate or the usufructuary right therein was actually enjoyed by another. So that the old scheme of things was recurred to, whilst the terms were somewhat changed, for uses executed by the statute still retained their name, the cestui que use being called the legal owner ; but, uses not so executed, i.e., secondary uses, or a use upon a use, took the appellation of trusts, while the holder of such uses is commonly denominated the cestui que trust or beneficiary ; and thus the Court of Chancery regained its jurisdiction over uses under the name of trusts.

Although for the sake of distinction, and in practice, the first use, executed by the statute, is called a use, and the second use, not executed by the statute, a trust, yet this phraseology is altogether arbitrary, for either word may be applied indiscriminately and convertibly to either estate, since the particular interests enjoyed by the parties depend upon their position with regard to one another, and not upon the term employed in their denomination. The usual and strictly technical form is :—

To F. to the use of C. in trust for E. ; but it is immaterial whether it is in this form ; or,

To F. to the use of C. to the use of E. ; or,

To F. in trust for C. to the use of E. ; or,

To F. in trust for C. in trust for E. ; the effect in any of the above formule being precisely the same, for C. would be the legal owner and E. the beneficial ; so that a trust in name may be a use in effect, and è converso.

(5) Contingent uses, during the suspense of the contingency, cannot be executed by the statutes, because the requisites to execute the use cannot concur.

(6) It is said that devises are not within the Statute of Uses, because it was passed before the Statute of Wills (32 Hen. VIII. c. 1, A.D. 1540). But this is of no practical importance, since the courts, in their decisions, are entirely guided by a testator's intention, and it has been always held, that if A. devise to B. and his heirs, to the use of or in trust for C. and his heirs, or in trust to permit C. and his heirs to take the profits, it shows that the testator intended that C. should have the legal estate in fee, and so the law decides. And if there be a devise to the use of A. for life, with remainder over, although it cannot take effect by way of a use executed by the statute, because there is no seisin to serve the use, yet A. will have the legal estate. Indeed uses will be executed in a will as if they were limited by deed, if such be the testator's intent.

Conveyances to uses legalise many dispositions, which are altogether void at the common law, for uses may be suspended, revived, postponed, and accelerated in a way altogether opposed to the rules of the ancient feudal law. Amongst the most important relaxations thus introduced are the following :—

(1) A person can convey to himself, which he could not at the common law, as it would have been absurd to give possession by livery of seisin to one's self. This is found to be convenient, especially in the following example :—

It frequently happens, that upon the death or removal of trustees, it becomes necessary to fill up their number pursuant to a power for that purpose, usually introduced into settlements of real property. In order to effect this, it is now the practice for the old trustees to make a conveyance, which operates by way of transmutation of possession (either by release or grant), to the new trustees and their heirs, to the use of the old and new trustees and their heirs. Without the assistance, therefore, of the Statute of Uses, it would have been necessary in the above case, that the old trustee should have first enfeoffed A., who would have re-enfeoffed the old and new trustees jointly: thereby making two conveyances necessary. Indeed, in the case of terms of years, and other personal property, two assignments were required for this purpose, until 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 21.

(2) A conveyance could not have been made by a husband to his wife, but now by limiting a seisin to the grantee or releasee, the husband may declare the use to his wife, which the statute will execute.

(3) A man could not make his own heir a purchaser, even of an estate tail, for filius est pars patris—haeres est pars antecessoris : but now a man may limit the use so as to make his heirs special take, either by purchase or descent.

(4) No person could take a present interest in the habendum of a deed who was not named in the premises. But in a case where A. enfeoffed B., habendum to the said B. and C., their heirs and assigns, to the use and behoof of the said B. and C., their heirs and assigns ; it was resolved, that as C. was not named in the premises, he could take no possession originally by the habendum ; and that the livery, made according to the intent of the indenture, did not give anything to C., because as to him it was void ; but though the feoffment did not give any seisin to C., yet it did to B. and his heir, which seisin was sufficient to serve the use declared to C. Therefore the use limited to B. and C. was good, and the statute executed it. But this limitation of the use in a bargain and sale to a person not named in the premises, after a previous disposition of it to the bargainee, would be void, for the reasons before mentioned.

(5) So it is a rule of law, that if an estate be conveyed to two, the one being capable and the other incapable at the time of the grant, he who is capable shall take the whole ; and that joint tenants cannot take at different periods. But since the introduction of uses, if A. make a feoffment in fee, to the use of B. and his wife that shall be, though the whole estate will vest in B. at first, yet upon his marriage the wife shall take jointly with him. So if a disseisin be had to the use of two, and the one agrees to it at one time, and the other at another, they shall be joint tenants.

(6) An estate of freehold cannot be granted at the common law, to commence in futuro, nor can a contingent remainder be supported, without an express particular estate of freehold ; but by a conveyance under the Statute of Uses, a freehold can be created to commence in futuro, and future limitations will be supported, when no particular estate has been made, either as remainders or springing uses.

(7) An estate cannot at the common law be limited upon a fee-simple, i.e., a fee-simple cannot be made to cease as to one, and take effect by way of limitation upon a contingent event, in favour of another person; but such a limitation may take effect by way of shifting or springing use. A shifting or springing use, after a previous limitation of the fee, cannot be barred by the cestui que use by any kind of conveyance, but where it is limited upon an estate-tail the tenant-in-tail may bar it.

(8) Every remainder, at the common law, must be limited, so as to await the determination of the particular estate, before it can take effect in possession; but an abridgment of the particular estate, upon a certain condition, can be effected by a conveyance to uses, so as to accelerate the expectant estate into possession.

There are three conveyances, viz., Appointment to uses, Bargain and Sale, and Covenant to stand seised, which do not transmute the possession; and three, viz., Feoffment, Grant, and Release, which do transmute the possession. The following examples point out the peculiar operation of these two classes of transfers, as to the vesting of the legal and equitable estates:—

An Appointment, Bargain, and Sale, or Covenant to stand seised	{ to D. and his heirs	To the use of T. and his heirs	To the use of, or in trust for, S. and his heirs
---	--------------------------------	--	--

vests the legal estates or use in D. and the equitable estate in S., T. not taking anything. But

A Feoffment, Grant, or Release	{ to D. and his heirs	To the use of T. and his heirs	To the use of, or in trust for, S. and his heirs gives D. but a seisin, and vests the use or legal estate in T., and the equitable estate in S. See Gilbert on Uses.
--------------------------------------	--------------------------------	--	--

Use and Occupation, Action for, an action for damages due on an implied agreement to pay for the use of a landlord's property; it lay at common law (Gibson v. Kirk, 1 Q. B. 850), except where there had been an actual demise.

And by 11 Geo. II. c. 19, s. 14, it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for the landlord, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the lands, tenements, or hereditaments held or occupied by the defendant in an action on the case, for the use or occupation of what was so held or enjoyed; and if in evidence on the trial of such action, any parole demise, or any agreement (not being by deed) whereon a certain rent was reserved, shall appear, the plaintiff in such action shall not therefore be non-suited, but may make use thereof as an evidence of the quantum of the damages to be recovered.—Woodf. Land. & Ten., 12th ed., ch. xiv.

User de action, the pursuing or bringing an action in the proper county, etc.—Broke 64.

Usher [fr. huis, Fr., a door], a door-keeper, an officer who keeps silence in a court. The office of Usher of the Court of Chancery is abolished by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 27.

Usque ad filum aquæ, or viæ [Lat.] (even to the middle of the stream or road).

Usual Covenants, covenants usually inserted in deeds having a similar scope to that in respect of which a question arises. The phrase occurs most frequently in connection with agreements for leases stipulating that the lease when granted shall contain 'all usual covenants.' What these are is a question of fact, but it may perhaps be laid down that at the present day covenants by the lessee to pay rent, to pay taxes, and to repair, and a qualified covenant by the lessor for quiet enjoyment (see that title), are usual, but that no others are, and in particular that the covenant not to assign or underlet without the leave of the lessor is not. See the question discussed by Jessel, M. R., in Hampshire v. Wickens, 7 Ch. D. 555.

A proviso for re-entry on breach of covenants generally is not 'usual,' but a proviso for re-entry on breach of the covenant to pay rent is. See per James, L. J., in Hodgkinson v. Crowe, L. R. 10 Ch. 222.

Usual terms, a phrase in the common law practice, which meant pleading issuably, re-joining gratis, and taking short notice of trial. When a defendant obtained further time to plead, these were the terms usually imposed.

Usucapio, the enjoying, by continuance of time, a long possession or prescription; property acquired by use or possession.—Civ. Lav.

Usucapio constituta est ut aliquis litium finis esset.—(The object of usucapio (title by quiet possession) is to put an end to litigation.) See Sand. Just., 5th ed., 134, and Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 894 r., and 3 Br. & Had. Com., 270—1.

Usufruct, the right of reaping the fruits (fructus) of things belonging to others, without destroying or wasting the subject over which such right extends.—Ibid.

Usufructuary, he who enjoys the usufruct. See preceding title.

Usura est commodum certum quod propter usum rei (vel ceris) mutuata recipitur; sed, secundariò sperare de aliquâ retributione, ad usum rei, non est. Eius qui mutuatus est, hoc non est vitiosum. 5 Co. 70.—(Usury is a certain benefit which is received for the use of a thing (or of money) lent; but, secondly, to hope for a certain return, at the option of the party who borrowed, this is not vicious.) See USURY.

Usura maritima [ſœnus nauticum, Lat.], interest taken on bottomry or respondentia bonds, which is proportioned to the risk, and was not affected by the abolished usury laws.—19 Geo. III. c. 37; 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 93.

Usurpation, a keeping or holding by using that which is another's; an interruption of usucapio, or disturbing a man in his right and possession, etc. It is called intrusion in the civil and canon laws.—Sand. Just., 5th ed., 144.

Usury, any reward taken for the use of money. The term is usually applied to the taking of exorbitant interest, or of interest to a greater amount than is allowed by law. The many statutes at different times passed fixing the legal rates of interest were all repealed by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90, but the interest which pawnbrokers may take is still restricted by law. See PAWNBROKERS.

Usus est dominium fiduciarium. Bacon's Read. Stat. Uses.—(Use is a fiduciary dominion.)

Usus et status sive possessio potius differunt secundum rationem fori, quam secundum rationem rei. Ibid.—(Use and estate, or possession differ more in the rule of the court than in the rule of the matter.)

Utas [octaves, Fr.], the eight days following any term or feast. See, e.g., 2 Hen. IV.

Uterine brother [uterinus frater, Lat.], a brother born of the same mother; frater consanguineus, is the son of the same father.

Utero-gestation, pregnancy.

Utfangethef. See OUTFANGTHEF.

Utile per inutile non vitiatur. Dyer, 392.—(The useful is not vitiated by the useless.)

Uti possidetis [Lat.] (as you possess).

Utlagatus est quasi extra legem positus: caput gerit lupinum. 7 Co. 14.—(An outlaw is, as it were, put out of the protection of the law: he bears the head of a wolf.)

Utlagatus pro contumaciâ et fugâ, non propter hoc convictus est de facto principali. Fleta.—(One who is outlawed for contumacy and flight, is not on that account convicted of the principal fact.)

Utlagus [fr. utlagatus, Lat.], an outlaw.

Utesse, an escape of a felon out of prison.

Ut pœna ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat. 4 Inst. 6.—(So that punishment may fall on few, the fear of it on all.)

Ut summæ potestatis regis est posse quantum velit, sic magnitudinis est velle quantum possit.

3 Inst. 236.—(As the highest power of a king is to be able to do all he wishes, so the highest greatness of him is to wish all he is able to do.)

Utter barristers, barristers who plead without the bar; all such counsel as are not either Queen's Counsel or Serjeants-at-law. See the explanation given by Cowel.

Uttering, tendering; selling; putting in circulation; publishing. Knowingly uttering counterfeit coin is a misdemeanour, and after two prior convictions a felony, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 21.

Uxor furi desponsata non tenebitur ex facto viri, quia virum accusare non debet, nec detegere furtum suum, nec feloniam, cum ipsa sui potestatem non habet, sed vir. 3 Inst. 108.—(A woman married to a thief shall not be bound by his actions, for she cannot accuse her husband, nor discover the robbery or felony, since she has no power over herself, but her husband has power over her.)

Uxor non est sui juris, sed sub potestate viri, cui in vitâ contradicere non potest.—(A wife has no power of her own, but is under the government of her husband, whom in his lifetime she cannot contradict.)—See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

V.

Vacant possession. See EJECTMENT.

Vacant succession, an inheritance, the heir to which is unknown.

Vacantia bona, things without an owner; the goods of one dying without successors.—Civ. Law.

Vacation, the intervals between the sitting of the Supreme Court.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. LXI., it is provided that 'the vacations to be observed in the several courts and offices of the Supreme Court shall be four in every year—viz., the Long vacation, the Christmas vacation, the Easter vacation, and the Whitsun vacation. The Long vacation shall commence on the 10th of August and terminate on the 24th of October. The Christmas vacation shall commence on the 24th of December and terminate on the 6th of January. The Easter vacation shall commence on Good Friday and terminate on Easter Tuesday; and the Whitsun vacation shall commence on the Saturday before Whitsunday and shall terminate on the Tuesday after Whitsunday' (r. 2).

And by Ord. LVII., rr. 4 and 5, it is further provided that no pleadings shall be amended or delivered in the long vacation, unless directed by a court or a judge; and that the time of the long vacation shall not be reckoned in the computation of the times appointed or allowed by the rules of the Act of 1875, for filing, amending, or delivering any pleading, unless otherwise directed by a Court or a judge. See further titles, HOLIDAY; LONG VACATION; SITTINGS.

Vacation sittings. Under the Jud. Act, 1873, s. 28, and Jud. Act, 1875, Order LXI., Rule 5, two 'vacation judges' of the High Court sit during vacations for the hearing of such applications as may require to be immediately or promptly heard.

Vacatura, an avoidance of an ecclesiastical benefice.—Cowel.

Vaccaria, a dairy.—Co. Litt. 5 b.

Vaccination. The various enactments on this subject prior to 1867 were repealed by the Vaccination Act of that year (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84), by which it is provided inter alia that the parent of every child born in England shall, within three months after the birth of such child, or where by reason of the death, illness, absence, or inability of the parent or other cause, any other person shall have the custody of such child, such person shall, within three months after receiving the custody of such child, take it, or cause it to be taken to the public vaccinator of the vaccination district in which it shall be then resident, to be vaccinated, or shall within such period as aforesaid cause it to be vaccinated by some medical practitioner (s. 16). See also 34 & 35 Vict. c. 98; 37 & 38 Vict. c. 75; Fry's Vaccination Acts, and Chit Stat., vol. vi., tit. 'Vaccination.'

Vackeel, Vakeel, Vaqueel, one endowed with authority to act for another; ambassador; agent sent on a special commission, or residing at a court; also a native law pleader or attorney.—Indian.

Vadiare duellum (to wage combat), where two contending parties, on a challenge, do give and take a mutual pledge of fighting.—Cowel.

Vadium [fr. vas vadis, Lat.], a pledge or surety.—Civ. Law.

Vadium mortuum, a mortgage or dead-pledge.

Vadium ponere, to take bail or pledges for a defendant's appearance.

Vadium vivum, a vifgage or living pledge. See VIVUM VADIUM.

Vadlet, the king's eldest son—hence the valet or knave follows the king and queen in a pack of cards.—Barr. on Stat. 344.

Vagabond, a wanderer; an idle fellow. See 23 Edw. III. c. 7; 12 Ric. II. c. 7; 11 Hen. VII. c. 2; 19 Hen. VII. c. 12; 22 Hen. VIII. c. 12; 27 Hen. VIII. c. 25; 1 Edw. VI. c. 3; 3 & 4 Edw. VI. c. 16; 5 & 6

Vagrants, sturdy beggars; vagabonds.

The Act which is now in force, embodying and extending numerous former provisions, is 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, extended by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 38, and the Casual Poor Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 36 (see CASUAL PAUPER). It points out three classes of persons:—

1st, Idle and disorderly persons; 2nd, rogues and vagabonds; 3rd, incorrigible rogues.

First. Idle and disorderly Persons.—The following are, under 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 3, to be deemed 'idle and disorderly persons,' so that any justice of the peace may commit them (being convicted before him) to the house of correction to hard labour for not more than one month, subject to an appeal to the sessions, viz.:—(1) Every person able wholly or in part to maintain himself or herself, or his or her family, and wilfully refusing or neglecting so to do, by which he or she or any of his or her family whom he or she is bound to maintain, shall become chargeable to any parish, township, or place. (2) Every person returning to and becoming chargeable in any parish, etc., whence he, etc., shall have been removed, by order of two justices, unless he, etc., produce a certificate of the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of some other parish, etc., acknowledging him, etc., to be settled in such parish, etc. (3) Every pedlar wandering abroad, and trading without license. (4) Every common prostitute wandering in the public streets or public highways, or in any place of public resort, and behaving in a riotous and indecent manner. (5) Every person wandering abroad, or placing himself or herself in any public place, street, highway, court, or passage, to beg (with exceptions (see ss. 15, 16) for discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, having 'certificates' under 41 Geo. III. c. 61), or gather alms, or causing, procuring, or encouraging children so to do. (6) Every person relieved in a workhouse, and refusing or neglecting while therein to perform the task prescribed by the guardians of the parish or union, if suited to his age and strength, or wilfully destroying or injuring his clothes, or damaging property of the guardians. (7) Every woman neglecting to maintain her bastard child, being able wholly or in part so to do whereby it becomes chargeable to any parish or union. It is also provided that every poor person returning and becoming chargeable in the asylum of any district, after removal from any parish in such district, shall be deemed to have returned and become chargeable without certificate to the parish whence he has been legally removed.

Secondly. Rogues and Vagabonds.—The following are, by 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 4, to be deemed as 'rogues and vagabonds,' whom it is lawful for any justice to commit (being convicted before him) to the house of correction, to hard labour for not more than three months, subject, as in the case of idle and disorderly persons, to an appeal to the sessions, viz. :

(1) Every person committing any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned, after having been convicted as an idle and disorderly person. (2) Every person pretending to tell fortunes, or using any craft or device by palmistry, or otherwise (this includes 'Spiritualism'—Monck. v. Hilton, 2. Ex. D. 268), to deceive and impose on any of Her Majesty's subjects. (3) Every person wandering abroad, or lodging in any barn or outhouse, or in any deserted or unoccupied buildings, or in the open air, or under a tent, or in any cart or waggon, not having any visible means of subsistence, and not giving a good account of himself or herself. (4) Every person unlawfully exposing to view in any street or shop in any street, road, highway, or public place, any obscene print, picture, or other indecent exhibition. (5) Every person wilfully exposing his person in any street, etc., or in any place of public resort, with intent to insult any female. (6) Every person wandering abroad, and endeavouring by the exposure of wounds or deformities to obtain alms. (7) Every person endeavouring to procure charitable contributions of any kind, under any false pretence. (8) Every person running away and leaving his wife, or his or her child or children, chargeable, or whereby they become chargeable to any parish, etc. (9) Every person playing or betting in any street, road, highway, or other open or public place, at or with any table or instrument of gaming, at any game or pretended game of chance. (10) Every person having in his possession any pick-lock, etc., or other implement, with intent feloniously to break into any dwelling-house, etc., or being armed with any gun, etc., or other offensive weapon, or having upon him any instrument with intent to commit any felonious act. (11) Every person being found in any dwelling-house, etc., or in any enclosed yard, garden, or area, for any unlawful purpose. (12)

Every suspected person or reputed thief, frequenting any river, canal, etc., or any street, highway, etc., or any place of public resort, with intent to commit felony. (13) Every person apprehended as an idle and disorderly person, and violently resisting any constable or other peace officer, so apprehending him, and being subsequently convicted thereof.

Thirdly. Incorrigible rogues.—The following persons are by 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 5, to be deemed 'incorrigible rogues' under the act:—(1) Every person escaping out of any place of legal confinement before the expiration of the term for which he shall have been committed thereto by the act. (2) 'Every person committing any offence against this act, which shall subject him or her to be dealt with as a rogue and vagabond, such person having been at some former time adjudged so to be and duly convicted thereof.' (3) And every person apprehended as a rogue and vagabond, and violently resisting any constable apprehending him, and subsequently convicted of the offence for which he was so apprehended. As to incorrigible rogues it is enacted, that it shall be lawful for any justice to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him) to the house of correction, there to remain until the next general or quarter-sessions of the peace, at which sessions the justices may examine into the case, and order that such offender be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for one year or less; and further, that such offender (not being a female) be punished by whipping, at such time during his imprisonment, and at such place within their jurisdiction, as they deem expedient.

By 36 & 37 Vict. c. 38, s. 3, persons gaming with coin, etc., in streets, or public places, are to be deemed rogues and vagabonds, and may be punished under the Act 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, or by a penalty for the first offence not exceeding 40s.; and for the second or any subsequent offence not exceeding 5*l.*; and by the Casual Poor Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 36 (see CASUAL PAUPER), any person making a false statement for the purpose of obtaining relief out of the poor is to be deemed an 'idle and disorderly person.'

Valeat quantum, let it have its weight, small or great.

Valec, Valect, or Vadelet, a young gentleman; also a servitor or gentleman of the chamber.—Cowel.

Valentia, the value or price of anything.

Valesheria, the proving by the kindred of the slain, one on the father's side, and another on that of the mother, that a man was a Welshman.

Valor beneficiorum, the value of every ecclesiastical benefice and preferment, according to which the first-fruits and tenths are collected and paid. It is commonly called the King's books, by which the clergy are at present rated.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 533.

Valor maritagii (the value of marriage). See TENURE.

Valuable consideration. See CONSIDERATION.

Valuation List, a list of all the rateable hereditaments in a parish, showing the names of the occupier, the owner, the property, the extent of the property, the gross estimated rental, and the rateable value;—prepared by the overseers of each parish in a union under s. 14 of the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 103, for the purposes of the poor rate. The list is revised by an 'assessment committee' appointed by the board of guardians of each union. In the metropolis, by s. 43. of the Metropolis Valuation Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 67, a valuation list (subject as in the act mentioned) lasts for 5 years from its approval by the assessment committee, and by s. 45 is conclusive for the purposes of rates (not including water rates) and taxes and property qualifications generally.

Value, a relative term. The value of a thing means the quantity of some other thing, or of things in general, which it exchanges for. The value of all things can never, therefore, rise or fall simultaneously. There is no such thing as a general rise or a general fall of values. Every rise of value supposes a fall, and every fall a rise.

The temporary or market value of a thing depends on the demand and supply—rising as the demand rises, and falling as the supply rises. The demand, however, varies with the value, being generally greater when the thing is cheap than when it is dear; and the value always adjusts itself in such a manner that the demand is equal to the supply.

Besides their temporary value, things have also a permanent, or, as it may be called, a natural value, to which the market value, after every variation, always tends to return; and the oscillations compensate for one another, so that on the average, commodities exchange at about their natural value.

The natural value of some things is a scarcity value, but most things naturally exchange for one another, in the ratio of their cost of production, or at what may be termed their cost value.

The word 'value,' when used without adjunct, always means, in political economy, value in exchange; or, as it has been called by Adam Smith and his successors, exchangeable value, a phrase which no amount of authority, that can be quoted for it, can make other than bad English. Mr. De Quincey substitutes the term exchange-value, which is unexceptionable.—1 Mill's Pol. Eco. 528, 578.

The word 'value,' it is to be observed, has two different meanings, and sometimes expresses the utility of some particular object, and sometimes the power of purchasing other goods which the possession of that object conveys. The one may be called 'value in use'; the other 'value in exchange.' The things which have the greatest value in use have frequently little or no value in exchange; and, on the contrary, those which have the greatest value in exchange have frequently little or no value in use. Nothing is more useful than water; but it will purchase scarce anything; scarce anything can be had in exchange for it. A diamond, on the contrary, has scarce any value in use; but a very great quantity of other goods may frequently be had in exchange for it.—1 Smi. Wealth of Nat. 37.

Valued policy, a policy of insurance in which the sum at which the subject of the policy is insured is expressed instead of being left in blank (as in the case of an open policy), and so the value in case of loss need not (as a general rule) be proved.—See Arnould on Marine Insurance, 4th ed., 217, 283.

Value received, a phrase generally inserted in bills of exchange, but which is not necessary, since value is implied in every bill, as much as if expressed in totidem verbis.—White v. Ledwick, 4 Doug. 247; Byles on Bills, 11th ed., 85.

Valuer, a person whose business is to appraise, or set a value upon property.

Valvasors, or Vidames, an obsolete title of dignity next to a peer.—2 Inst. 667; 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 612.

Vana est illa potentia quæ nunquam venit in actum. 2 Co. 51.—(Vain is that power which never comes into play.)

Vancouver's Island. See 12 & 13 Vict. c. 48; 21 & 22 Vict. c. 99, s. 6; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 67; and 33 & 34 Vict. c. 66.

Van Diemen's Land. See TASMANIA.

Vang [Sax.], to stand for one at the font.—Blount.

Vani timores sunt aestimandi, qui non cadunt in constantem virum. 7 Co. 27.—(Those fears are to be counted vain which affect not a resolute man.)

Vantarius, a precursor.—Cowel.

Variance, difference between the statements in the pleadings and the evidence adduced in proof thereof.

The courts are now very liberal in permitting variances in proceedings to be amended, especially where parties will suffer no prejudice. As to amendments at Nisi Prius, see 1 Chit. Arch. Pr., 12th ed., 400. See also title AMENDMENT.

Vassal [fr. vassallo, Ital., a dim. of vassus, low Lat. Wachter refers it to the Gallic gwaz, a servant], one who holds of a superior lord; a subject; a dependant; a tenant or feudatory.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 174.

Vassalage, the state of a vassal; tenure at will; slavery.

Vasseleria, the tenure or holding of a vassal.—Cowel.

Vasto, a writ against tenants for term of life or years committing waste.—F. N. B. 55.

Vastum, a waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have a right of commoning.—Cowel.

Vastum forestæ vel bosci, that part of a forest or wood wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed, that it lay, in a manner, waste.—Paroch. Antig. 351.

Vauderie, sorcery; witchcraft; the profession of the Vaudois.—3 Hallam's Mid. Ages, c. ix., pt. 2, p. 386 n.

Vavasory, lands held by a vavasor.—Cowel.

Vavasour, one who, himself holding of a superior lord, has others holding under him; a person magne dignitatis, so called tanquam Vas sortitum ad valetudinem.—Camden. See, too, Reeves, c. v., p. 26; and Cowel.

Veal-money. The tenants of the manor of Bradford, in the county of Wilts, paid a yearly rent by this name to their lord, in lieu of veal paid formerly in kind.—Bract.

Vectigal judicarium, fines paid to the Crown to defray the expenses of maintaining courts of justice.—3 Salk. 33.

Vectigal, origine ipsâ, jus Caesarum et regum patrimoniale est. Dav. 12.—(Tribute, in its origin, is the patrimonial right of emperors and kings.)

Vejours [visores, Lat.], persons sent by a court to take a view of any place in question, for the better decision of the right thereto; also, persons appointed to view the result of an offence.—O. N. B. 112.

Veltraria, the office of dog-leader or coursor.—Cowel.

Veltrarius [fr. welter, Germ.], one who leads greyhounds.—Blount.

Venaria, beasts caught in the woods by hunting.

Venatio, hunting.—Cowel.

Vendee, one to whom anything is sold.

Vendition, sale, the act of selling.

Venditioni exponas, a judicial writ addressed to the sheriff, commanding him to expose to sale goods which he has already taken into his hands, to satisfy a judgment creditor.—Reg. Judic. 33. After delivery of this writ, the sheriff is bound to sell the goods, and have the money in court on the return-day of the writ.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 585.

By the Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. XLIII., r. 2, this writ may be issued and executed in the same cases and in the same manner as theretofore.

Vendor, one who sells anything.

Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 78), as amended by ss. 48 & 129 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), reciting that it is expedient to facilitate the transfer of land by means of certain amendments in the law of Vendor and Purchaser, provides that in the completion of any contract of sale of land made after the 31st December, 1874, and subject to any stipulation to the contrary in the contract, 40 years is to be substituted for 60 years as the period of commencement of title which a purchaser may require, saving those cases in which an earlier title than 60 years might formerly have been required (s. 1).

The act also provides certain rules by which, subject to stipulations in the contract, the obligations and rights of vendors and purchasers are to be regulated, and especially that documents twenty years old shall be prima facie proof of facts stated in them (s. 2); and trustees are allowed to sell or buy without excluding the application of those rules (s. 3). The legal personal representative of a mortgagee is allowed to convey the mortgaged estate (s. 4); on the death of a bare trustee intestate, any hereditament of which he was seised in fee simple is to vest in his legal personal representative, like a chattel real (s. 5).

The act also contains provisions for curing the non-registration of wills in Middlesex and Yorkshire in certain cases (s. 8); and for allowing a vendor or purchaser to obtain the decision of a judge in chambers on questions arising from the contract of sale (s. 9). See further, CONDITIONS OF SALE; CONVEYANCING ACT; TRANSFER OF LAND ACTS; and consult Dart on Vendors and Purchasers.

Vendue master, an auctioneer.

Venella, a narrow or strait way.—Monast. i., 488.

Venia, a kneeling or low prostration on the ground by penitents; pardon.

Venice facilitas incentivum est delinquendi. 3 Inst. 236.—(Facility of pardon is an incentive to crime.)

Venia ætatis, a privilege granted by a prince or sovereign, in virtue of which a person is entitled to act, sui juris, as if he were of full age.—Story's Conf. of Laws, 74.

Venire facias, a judicial writ awarded to the sheriff to summon a jury for the trial of a cause, but abolished by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 104. It is the first process in outlawry, when a person charged with a misdemeanour absconds.—4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 383, 388.

Venire facias tot matronas, a writ to summon a jury of matrons to execute the writ de ventre inspiciendo.

Venire facias de novo, a second writ to summon another jury for a new trial.

The venire de novo was the old common law mode of proceeding to a second trial, and differed materially from granting a new trial, inasmuch as it was awarded from some defect appearing upon the face of the record, while a new trial was granted for matter entirely extrinsic. Where a verdict could have been amended, a venire de novo was never awarded. If awarded, the party succeeding at the second trial was not entitled to the costs of the first. It has since been superseded by a trial de novo.—2 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 1549. See also NEW TRIAL.

Venter, womb.

Ventre inspiciendo. See DE VENTRE INSPICIENDO.

Venue [fr. vicinetum visnetum, Lat.], the place whence a jury are to come for trial of causes.

Local actions must, before the Jud. Act, have been brought in the county in which the cause of action arose; but transitory actions in any county at the plaintiff's option; and no venue could be changed without a special order of the court or a judge, unless by consent of the parties.—H. T. 1853, r. 18.

It is, however, provided by the Judicature Act, 1875, Ord. XXXVI., r. 1, that there shall be no local venue for the trial of any action, but when the plaintiff proposes to have the action tried elsewhere than in Middlesex, he shall in his statement of claim name the county or place in which he proposes that the action shall be tried, and the action shall, unless a judge otherwise orders, be tried in the county or place so named.

In criminal cases, the rule of the common law is that the venue shall be co-extensive with the jurisdiction of the court. By the common law the grand jury could not indict or present any offence which did not arise within the county or the precincts for which they were returned, but their jurisdiction has been extended by several modern statutes. It is provided by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 23, that the name of the county, city, or other jurisdiction, shall be stated in the margin of the indictment, and that the name so stated shall be taken to be the venue of all the facts stated in the body of such indictment, unless the contrary shall expressly appear in the indictment.

cases where local description is necessary, this provision does not dispense with such description, and by s. 24 no indictment shall be held insufficient for want of a proper or perfect venue. Local description is necessary in the following offences:—Nuisance to highways, keeping disorderly houses, arson, burglary, house-breaking, stealing in a dwelling-house, forcible entry, being armed at night in a close for the purpose of killing game, etc., and certain offences against 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19.

As to the venue in proceedings against persons for anything done in pursuance of the Larceny Act, see s. 113 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, or of the Malicious Injuries to Property Act, see s. 71 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, or of the Coinage Act, see s. 33 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99.

By the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 23 (4), the Queen may by Order in Council from time to time provide for the regulation, so far as may be necessary for carrying into effect any order made under the other parts of that section, of the venue in all cases, civil and criminal, triable on any circuit or elsewhere.

Verbal note, a memorandum or note, in diplomacy, not signed, sent when an affair has continued a long time without any reply, in order to avoid the appearance of an urgency which, perhaps, is not required; and, on the other hand, to guard against the supposition that it is forgotten, or that there is an intention of not prosecuting it any further.

Verderor, an officer in the royal forest, whose office is properly to look to the vert, and see it well maintained; and he is sworn to keep the assizes of the forest, and view, receive, and enrol the attachments, and presentments of trespasses of vert and venison, etc.—Manw. 332.

Verdict [fr. vere dictum, Lat.], the determination of a jury declared to a judge.

The verdict is either general or special. A general verdict is given, viva voce, by the jury, thus, 'we find for the plaintiff, damages —,' or, if for the defendant, then, 'we find for the defendant.' If there be several issues, the verdict may be distributed, some issues being found for the plaintiff and others for the defendant. A verdict must comprehend the whole issues submitted to a jury in the particular cause, otherwise the judgment founded upon it may be reversed. A special verdict must state the facts proved at the trial, and not merely the evidence given to prove those facts, otherwise it will be insufficient, and the court will award a trial de novo.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 447 et seq.

Verdicts in criminal cases may be either general, as guilty or not guilty; or special, setting forth all the circumstances, and praying the judgment of the court, whether, upon the facts stated, there exists a crime in law.—4 Steph Com., 7th ed., 433.

The jury is entitled to return an absolute verdict for the plaintiff or for the defendant, simpliciter, and cannot be compelled to give the grounds or reasons. See PERVERSE VERDICT. In a civil case the verdict may, with consent of the parties, be taken by the associate; otherwise the judge, if he has retired, must be sent for. See further titles, TRIAL; NEW TRIAL.

Versus [Lat.], abbrev. v. (against).

Vert [fr. verd, Fr.; viridis, Lat.], otherwise called greenhue, everything that bears a green leaf within a forest that may cover a deer; but especially great and thick coverts.

Manwood (part 2, p. 33) divides vert into overt-vert and nether-vert; the overt-vert is that which is termed haut-boys, and nether-vert, sub-boys; and into special vert, which is, all trees growing within the forest that bear fruit, to feed deer, because the destroying of it is more grievously punished than of any other vert. See 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 317, n.; Cowel.

Also, that power which a man has, by royal grant, to cut green-wood in a forest.

Also green colour, called Venus in the arms of princes, and Emerald in those of peers, and expressed in engravings by lines in bend.—Heraldic term.

Very lord and very tenant [verus dominus et verus tenens, Lat.], they that are immediate lord and tenant one to another.—Broke.

Vest. 1. (v. a.), to place in possession; to make possessor of; to give an interest in property when a named period or event occurs. 2. (v. n.) (of a right or interest) to come into the possession of any one; to enure to the benefit of any one.

Vesta, the crop on the ground.—Cowel.

Vested in interest, a legal term applied to a present fixed right of future enjoyment, as reversions, vested remainders, such executory devises, future uses, conditional limitations, and other future interests as are not referred to, or made to depend on, a period or event that is uncertain.

Vested legacy. See LEGACY.

Vested in possession, a legal term applied to a right of present enjoyment actually existing.

Vested remainder, an expectant estate, which is limited or transmitted to a person who is capable of receiving the possession, should the particular estate happen to determine; as a limitation to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs; here, as B. is in existence he is capable (or his heirs, if he die) of taking the possession whenever A.'s death may occur. A vested estate may take effect though the preceding estate be defeated, as when an infant makes a lease for life with a remainder over, and on majority he disposes of the estate for life, yet the remainder is good, having been duly vested by a good title.—Fearne, C. R. 308; 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 326.

The person who is entitled to a vested remainder having a present vested right of future enjoyment, i.e., an estate in presenti, to take effect in possession and pernanity of the profits in futuro, can transfer, alien, and charge it much in the same manner as an estate in possession.—2 Cru. Dig. 204.

Vesting order. The Court of Chancery had, and the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice now has, the power of granting an order passing the legal estate in lieu of a conveyance. Also commissioners appointed by several modern statutes have the powers, by vesting order, to transfer legal estates without the necessity of a deed of transfer.

As to vesting orders under the Charitable Trusts Act, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 137, ss. 48—50; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 124, ss. 15, 19; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 136, s. 2. Under the Land Registry Act, see 25 & 26 Vict. c. 53, s. 45 et seq. Under the Trustee Acts, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 55. Under the titles of Religious Congregations Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 28.

Vestry, or Vestuary, a place or room adjoining to a church, where the vestments of the minister are kept; also, a parochial assembly, commonly convened in the vestry, to transact the parish business. By custom in some parishes, and by the 'Adoptive' Act, 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 60 in others, a select number of parishioners is chosen yearly to manage the concerns of the parish for that year. They are called a select vestry. See Chitty's Statutes, vol. vi., tit. 'Vestry'; and Steer's Parish Law.

In the Metropolis, the Act 1 & 2 Wm. IV. c. 60 does not apply, the vestries being elected under the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120.

Vestry Cess, a rate levied in Ireland for parochial purposes, abolished by 27 Vict. c. 17.

Vestry clerk, an officer appointed to attend vestries, and take an account of their proceedings, etc. See 13 & 14 Vict. c. 57, ss. 6—8.

Vestura, a crop of grass or corn.—Cowel. Also a garment metaphorically applied to a possession or seisin.

Vetera Statuta, the ancient statutes commencing with Magna Charta, and ending with those of Edward II., including also some which, because it is doubtful to which of the three reigns of Hen. III., Edw. I., or Edw. II. to assign them, are said to be incerti temporis.—2 Reeves, c. viii., p. 85.

Veterinary Surgeon [fr. veterinarius, concerned with veterinum, a beast of burden]. A person who treats the diseases or injuries of animals. A Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons was incorporated in 1844, and supplemental charters were granted thereto in 1876 and 1879. The charter of 1876 directed a register of veterinary surgeons to be kept. The Veterinary Surgeons Act, 1881, 44 & 45 Vict. c. 62, regulates the correction of the register, enacts that examinations shall be held in accordance with the charters, and distinguishes between qualified and unqualified practitioners by enacting (sect. 17) that no person not qualified by registration, etc., may recover in any court any charge for performing any veterinary operation, or for giving any veterinary advice.

Vetutum namium, or Repetitum namium, a second or reciprocal distress, in lieu of the first, which has been eloiigned.

Veto, a prohibition, or the right of forbidding; especially applied to the royal power of refusing assent to a bill in parliament passed by the two houses: 'Le Roy' or 'La Reine,' s'avisera. See 2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 503.

Vexata quæstio [Lat.], an undetermined point, which has been often discussed.

Vexatious Indictments. In order to prevent these, it is provided, by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, commonly called the Vexatious Indictments Act, amended by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 35, ss. 1, 2, that no bill of indictment for perjury, conspiracy, indecent assault, or certain other misdemeanours therein named, be presented to a grand jury, unless the prosecutor shall have been bound over by recognizance to prosecute, or unless the person accused has been committed to or detained in custody, or unless the indictment be preferred with the written consent of the Attorney-General.

Vexatious suit, one brought without probable cause, for the purpose of annoyance or oppression.

V. G., verbi gratia, for the sake of example.

Via, the right to use a way for any purpose.—Cum. C. L. 83.

Viability, a capability of living after birth; extra-uterine life.

Viæ servitus (servitude of way), a right of way over another's land.

Via Regia, the highway or common road, called the Queen's way, because under her protection it was sometimes called viâ militaris.—Bract. l. 4.

Via trita est tutissima. 10 Co. 142.—(The trodden path is the safest.)

Via trita via tuta.—(The trodden path is the safe path.) See Broom's Leg. Max., 5th ed., 134.

Vicarius non habet vicarium.—(A delegate cannot have a delegate.) See Broom's Leg. Maxims, 5th ed., 839.

Vicar, one who performs the functions of another; a substitute. Also, the incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice, as distinguished from the incumbent of a non-appropriated benefice, who is called a rector. See RECTOR.

Vicarage, the benefice of a vicar; (2) his house. See 31 & 32 Vict. c. 117, s. 2.

Vicar-general, an ecclesiastical officer who assists the archbishop in the discharge of his office.

Vicarial tithes, petty or small tithes payable to the vicar.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 681.

Vicario, etc., an ancient writ for a spiritual person imprisoned, upon forfeiture of a recognizance, etc.—Reg. Orig. 147.

Vice-Admiral, an under-admiral at sea, or admiral on the coasts; a naval officer of the second rank.

Vice-Admiralty Courts, tribunals established in Her Majesty's possessions beyond the seas, with jurisdiction over maritime causes, including those relating to prize. See 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 345.

The Vice-Admiralty Courts Act, 1863 (26 Vict. c. 24), repeals 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 51, and other acts. Section 10 enacts that the matters in respect of which the vice-admiralty courts shall have jurisdiction are as follow:—

(1) Claims for seaman's wages. (2) Claims for master's wages and for his disbursements on account of the ship. (3) Claims in respect of pilotage. (4) Claims in respect of salvage of any ship or of life or goods therefrom. (5) Claims in respect of towage. (6) Claims for damage done by any ship. (7) Claims in respect of bottomry or respondentia bonds. (8) Claims in respect of any mortgage where the ship has been sold by a decree of the vice-admiralty court, and the proceeds are under its control. (9) Claims between the owners of any ship registered in the possession in which the court is established touching the ownership, possession, employment, or earnings of such ship. (10) Claims for necessities supplied in the possession in which the court is established to any ship of which no owner or part owner is domiciled within the possession at the time of the necessities being supplied. (11) Claims in respect of the building, equipping, or repairing, within any British possession, of any ship of which no owner or part owner is domiciled within the possession at the time of the work being done.

The 11th section enacts that the vice-admiralty courts shall also have jurisdiction: (1) In all cases of the breach of the regulations and instructions relating to Her Majesty's navy at sea. (2) In all matters arising out of droits of admiralty. A schedule to the act contains a list of the existing vice-admiralty courts to which the act applies. They are :—

By 30 & 31 Vict. c. 45, the Act of 1863 is amended and its provisions considerably extended. See also (as to Zanzibar) 32 & 33 Vict. c. 75.

Vice-Chamberlain, a great officer next under the Lord Chamberlain, who, in his absence, has the rule and control of all officers appertaining to that part of the royal household which is called the chamber above stairs.

Vice-Chancellor [fr. vice-cancellarius, Lat.], a sub-chancellor.

Vice-Chancellors in Equity. One was appointed by 53 Geo. III. c. 24, and two more by 5 Vict. c. 5, s. 19. One of them was at one time called Vice-Chancellor of England. Each of them sat separately from the lord chancellor and lords justices, to whom an appeal lay from their decisions. See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 4, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, ss. 52—58. They became judges of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 5), retaining their titles, but it was enacted that on the death or retirement of any one of them his successor will be styled a 'Judge' (Ibid., s. 5). See HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE; JUDGES.

Vice-Chancellor of the Universities. See CHANCELLOR OF THE UNIVERSITIES.

Vice-comes, a viscount; a sheriff.

Vicecomes dicitur quod vicem comitis suppleat. Co. Litt. 168.—('Vicecomes' (sheriff), is so called, because he supplies the place of the 'comes' (earl).)

Vice-comes non misit breve [Lat.] (the sheriff has not sent the writ). This continuance is abolished by r. 31, H. T. 1853.

Vice-Constable of England, an ancient officer in the time of Edward the Fourth.

Vice-Consul, one who acts for a consul; a sheriff. See CONSUL.

Vice-dominus, a sheriff.—Ingulpus.

Vice-dominus episcopi, the vicar-general or commissary of a bishop.—Blount.

Vice-gerent, a deputy or lieutenant.

Vice-marshal, an officer who was appointed to assist the Earl Marshal.

Vice-roy, the sovereign's lord-lieutenant over a kingdom, such as Ireland.

Vice-Treasurer. See UNDER-TREASURER.

Vicinage [fr. voisinage, Fr.], neighbourhood, or near dwelling; places adjoining. As to common because of vicinage, see 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 656.

Vicini viciniore præsumuntur scire. 4 Inst. 173.—(Persons living in the neighbourhood are presumed to know the neighbourhood.)

Vicious intromission, a meddling with the moveables of a deceased, without confirmation or probate of his will, or other title.—Scotch phrase.

Vicis et venellis mundandis, an ancient writ against the mayor or bailiff of a town, etc., for the clean keeping of their streets and lanes.—Reg. Orig. 267.

Vicountiel, or Vicontiel, anything that belongs to the sheriffs, as vicontiel writs, i.e., such as are triable in the sheriff's court. As to vicontiel rents, see 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 99, ss. 12, 13, which places them under the management of the commissioners of the woods and forests.—Cowel.

Vicountiel jurisdiction, that jurisdiction which belongs to the officers of a county, as sheriffs, coroners, etc.

Victoria Colony. See 13 & 14 Vict. c. 59; 18 & 19 Vict. cc. 55, 56; and 22 & 23 Vict. c. 12.

Victor Townley Act, 27 & 28 Vict. c. 29, amending 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54. This Act was passed (in consequence of the escape from justice of the notorious criminal whose name it has acquired) to require more strict proof of the condition of prisoners (especially those under sentence of death) who are supposed insane.

Victualling Houses. See PUBLIC-HOUSES.

Vidame, a vavasar, which see.

Videbis ea sæpe committi quæ sæpe vindicantur. 3 Inst. Epil.—(You will see these things frequently committed which are frequently punished.)

Vide, a word of reference; vide ante, or vide supra, refers to a previous passage; vide post, or vide infra, to a subsequent passage in a book.

Videlicet (to wit), a word used in pleading to precede the specification of particulars which need not be proved. See SCILICET.

Vidimus, an inseximus, which see.—Barr. on Stat. 5.

Viduitatis professio, the making a solemn profession to live a sole and chaste woman.

Viduity, widowhood.

Vi et armis [Lat.] (with force and arms), words formerly inserted in pleadings to characterise a trespass directed to be omitted by C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 49.

View, an inspection of property in controversy, or of a place where a crime has been committed, by the jury previously to the trial.

A writ of view shall not be used, but, whether the view is to be had by a common or special jury, it shall suffice to obtain a rule of the court or judge's order, directing a view; and the proceedings upon the rule for a view shall be the same as under a writ of view; and the sheriff, upon request, shall deliver to either party the names of the viewers, and return their names to the associate to be called as jurymen.—C. L. P. Act, 1852, s. 114. The rule for a view may be drawn up by the officer of the court on the application of the party without motion.—H. T. 1853, r. 48. Upon application for a view, there shall be an affidavit stating the place at which the view is to be made, and the distance thereof from the office of the under-sheriff, and the sum to be deposited with the under-sheriff shall be 10*l.* in the case of a common jury, and 16*l.* in case of a special jury, if such distance do not exceed five miles; and 15*l.* in the case of a common jury, and 21*l.* in case of a special jury, if it be above five miles. And if such sum shall be more than sufficient to pay the expenses of the view, the surplus shall be returned to the attorney of the party who obtained the view; and if such sum shall not be sufficient to pay such expenses, the deficiency shall be paid by such attorney to the under-sheriff (r. 49). Where a view has been had, the jurors who had it are to be called first upon the trial; and then other jurors must be called to make a complete jury.—1 Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., 371—2, 382.

View of frankpledge. See LEET.

Vifgage, vivum vadium, which see.

Vigil, the eve or next day before any solemn feast.

Vi laicâ removendâ, a writ that lies where two persons contend for a church, and one of them enters into it with a great number of laymen, and holds out the other vi et armis; and he that is holden out shall have this writ addressed to the sheriff, that he remove the lay force; but the sheriff ought not to remove the incumbent out of the church, whether he is there by right or wrong, but only the force.—F. N. B. 54.

Vill, or Village, a manor; a parish; the out-part of a parish.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 125.

The following is the difference between a mansion, a village, and a manor; namely, a mansion may be of one or more houses; but it must be of one dwelling-house, and none near to it; for if other houses are contiguous, it is a village; and a manor may consist of several villages, or one alone.—Fleta, l. 6, c. li.

Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus vicinata et collata ex pluribus vicinis, et sub appellatione villarum continentur burghi et civitates. Co. Litt. 115.—Vill is a neighbourhood of many mansions, a collection of many neighbours, and under the term of vills, boroughs and cities are contained.)

Villa regia, a manor held by the Crown.

Villain, or Villein [fr. vilis, Lat.], a man of base or servile condition; a bondman or servant; one who held by a base service.—1 Hallam's Mid. Ages, c. ii. pt. 2, p. 199; and 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 215.

Villanis regis subtractis reducendis, a writ that lay for the bringing back of the king's bondmen, that had been carried away by others out of his manors whereto they belonged.—Reg. Orig. 87.

Villein in gross, one annexed to the person of the lord, and transferable by deed from one owner to another.—1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 216; 2 Br. & Had. Com., 183.

Vir et uxor sunt quasi unica persona, etc. Co. Litt. 112.—(Man and wife are, as it were, one person, etc.) See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Virga, a rod or ensign of office.—Cowel.

Virgate, a yard-land.

Virge, Tenant by, a species of copyholder, who holds by the verge or rod.

Virgo intacta, a pure virgin.

Vir militans Deo non implicetur secularibus negotiis. Co. Litt. 70.—(A man fighting for God must not be involved in secular business.)

Viridario eligendo, a writ for the choice of a verderer in the forest.—Reg. Orig. 177.

Virilia, the privy members of a man, to cut off which was felony by the common law, though the party consented to it.—Bract. l. 3, 144; Cowel.

Virtute ejus. This was the clause in a pleading justifying an entry upon land, by which the party alleged that it was in virtue of an order from one entitled that he entered.

Vis [Lat.], any kind of force, violence, or disturbance to person or property. It was a vis armata, i.e., vis cum armis, or vis simplex, i.e., vis sine armis.—1 Reeves, c. vi., p. 322.

Visa, a register; the authentication of a passport by a foreign authority.

Viscount, or Vicount [fr. vicecomes, Lat.], an arbitrary title of honour, without any office pertaining to it, created by Henry VI.—2 Inst. 5. See Bar. on Stat. 409. A peer of the fourth order, between earl and baron.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 604.

Visitation, judicial visit or perambulation; the periodical visit of a bishop or archdeacon to his clergy at the principal church of the diocese or archdeaconry, when he delivers a hortatory address called a charge.

Visitation books of heralds, compilations, when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to inquire into the state of families, to register marriages and descents, which were verified to the heralds upon oath, they are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees.—3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 335, n.

Visitor, an inspector of a college or corporation or hospital. The Court of Chancery has exercised the right of visitation on behalf of the Crown. As to visitors of lunatic asylums, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 22; 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, ss. 61, 62; and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 111, s. 30; and 3 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 27, 115, 119. Any jurisdiction exercised by the Lord Chancellor in right of or on behalf of Her Majesty as visitor of any college, or of any charitable or other foundation, is not transferred to the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 17). See also title IDIOTS AND LUNATICS.

Visitor of manners, the regarder's office in the forest.—Manw. i. 195.

Vis legibus est inimica. 3 Inst. 176.—(Violence is inimical to the laws.)

Vis major, inevitable accident, irresistible force. See ACT OF GOD.

Visne [visnetum, Lat.], a neighbourhood.

—Cowel.

Visus, view or inspection.—Cowel.

Vitilitigate, to litigate cavillously.

Vitium clerici nocere non debet. Jenk. Cent. 23.—(A clerical error ought not to hurt.)

Vitium est quod fugi debet, nisi rationem non invenias, mox legem sine ratione esse clames. Elles. Postn. 86.—(It is a fault which ought to be avoided, that if you cannot discover the reason, you should presently exclaim that the law is without reason.)

Viva pecunia [Lat.], cattle which obtained this name from being received during the Saxon period as money upon most occasions, at certain regulated prices.—Cowel.

Vivary or Vivarye [fr. vivarium, Lat.], a place where animals are preserved; a park, warren, piscary, etc.—2 Inst. 100; Cowel.

Vivâ voce (by word of mouth).

Vivisection, the dissecting of animals alive, for the purpose of scientific experiments, may only be practised by persons holding a license from a Secretary of State, and subject to the restrictions imposed by the 'Cruelty to Animals Act, 1876,' 39 & 40 Vict. c. 77.

Vivum vadium Vifgage, or Living Pledge, when a person borrows money of another, and grants to him an estate to hold till the rents and profits shall repay the sum borrowed with interest. The estate is conditioned to be void as soon as the sum is realised. See WELSH MORTGAGE, and 2 Br. & Had. Com., 299.

Vix ulla lex fieri potest quæ omnibus commoda sit sed si majori parti prospiciat utilis est. Plow. 369.—(Scarcely any law can be made which is beneficial to all; but it is useful if it benefit the greater majority.)

Vocabulum artis, a word of art.

Vocatio in jus, a citation to law.—Civil Law.

Vociferatio, an outcry; hue and cry, q. v.

Void and Voidable. There is this difference between these two words: void means that an instrument or transaction is so nugatory and ineffectual that nothing can cure it; voidable, when an imperfection or defect can be cured by the act or confirmation of him who could take advantage of it. Thus, while acceptance of rent will make good a voidable lease, it will not affirm a void lease.

The Court of Chancery has drawn this distinction between voidable and void contracts: with regard to the former, they will be decreed to be delivered up, since their retention is liable to be employed to improper purposes, such as future litigation, when lapse of time may have weakened or destroyed the means of defence; or since their existence uncanceled may cloud a title, or diminish its value and security; but as to void instruments, the illegality of which appears upon their face, equity does not interpose its authority, since their production at any period of time will plainly establish their nullity. Of marriages, those which are defective by reason of want of form in the celebration, are void, ab initio, and may be declared void at any time before or after the death of the parties. So are marriages in which one party is insane. Marriages defective from immaturity of age are voidable by merely failing to ratify them by cohabitation when the parties come to the age. Marriages defective by reason of impotency are voidable only, must be impeached in the lifetime of the parties, and can be impeached only by the person not impotent. Consult 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 474; & 2 Br. & Had. Com., 469, 471, 507.

Voidance, the act of emptying; ejection from a benefice.

Voir dire [veritatem dicere, Lat.], examining a witness before he gives evidence in the cause, as to whether he be competent in respect of religious belief, etc., or not. (See Maden v. Catanach, 31 L. J. Ex. 118.) Lord Kenyon said that objections to the competency of witnesses never come too late, but may be made at any stage of the cause. (Stone v. Blackburne, 1 Esq. 37.) Witnesses are not incompetent on the ground of interest or infamy.—6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

Voiture, carriage, transportation by carriage.

Volenti non fit injuria. (Where the sufferer is willing no injury is done.)—Plow. 501.

Volumus (we will), the first word of a clause in the royal writs, of protection and letters-patent.

Voluntary, acting without compulsion; doing by design. When applied to a conveyance, it means that it is made merely on a good, and not on a valuable consideration. See FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Voluntary answer, one which was filed by a defendant to a bill in equity, without being called upon to answer by the plaintiff.

Voluntary deposit, such as arises from the mere consent and agreement of the parties.—Story on Bailments, 47.

Voluntary jurisdiction, one exercised in matters admitting of no opposition or question, and therefore cognisable by any judge and in any place, and on any lawful day.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Voluntary oath, an oath administered in a case for which the law has not provided. See 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 62; 4 Br. & Had. Com. 154; 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 244. See OATH.

Voluntary waste, that which is the result of the voluntary act of the tenant of property, as where he pulls down a wall, or cuts timber; opposed to permissive waste. See WASTE.

Voluntas donatoris in chartâ doni sui manifeste expressa observetur. Co. Litt. 21.—(The will of the donor manifestly expressed in his deed of gift is to be observed.)

Voluntas facit quod in testamento scriptum valeat. D. 30, 1, 12, s. 3.—(It is intention which gives effect to the wording of a will.)

Voluntas in delictis, non exitus spectatur. 2 Inst. 57.—(In crimes the will, and not the consequence, is looked to.)

Voluntas reputatur pro facto. 3 Inst. 69.—(The intention is to be taken for the deed.)

Voluntas testatoris est ambulatoria usque ad extremum vitæ exitum. 4 Co. 61.—(The will of a testator is ambulatory until the latest moment of life.)

Voluntas testatoris habet interpretationem latam et benignam. Jenk. Cent. 260.—(The intention of a testator has a broad and benignant interpretation.)

Voluntas ultima testatoris est perimplenda secundum veram intentionem suam. Co. Litt. 322.—(The last will of the testator is to be fulfilled according to his true intention.)

Volunteer, a person who receives a voluntary conveyance.

Also, a person who has voluntarily joined a corps raised either for home or foreign service; or for the purpose of being trained to act with the regular troops and the militia and yeomanry in defending the country in the event of invasion. The name of the Volunteer force is now generally applied to the body raised for the latter purpose in Great Britain. The laws relating to the Volunteer force in Great Britain have been consolidated and amended by the Volunteer Act, 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. 65), which repealed the statutes on the subject previously in force. This Act is divided into seven parts:—

Part 1. The organisation of the Volunteer force.

Part 2. Actual military service.

Part 3. Discipline.

Part 4. Rules and property of corps.

Part 5. Acquisition of land for ranges.

Part 6. Exemptions.

Part 7. Miscellaneous provisions.

This Act has been followed by the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 81, and the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 67. See also 34 & 35 Vict. c. 86.

As to the raising and establishing a reserve Volunteer force of seamen, see RESERVE FORCE.

Voluntarius dæmon, a drunkard.—Co. Litt. 247 a.

Vote, suffrage, voice given. See title BALLOT.

Voter, one who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Voting Papers. The Act 24 & 25 Vict. c. 63, provided that votes at parliamentary elections for the universities may be recorded by means of voting papers. See also 31 & 32 Vict. c. 65. These provisions have been extended to the Scotch universities by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 48, s. 39.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 371 et seq.

Votum, a vow or promise. Dies votorum, the wedding-day.—Fleta, l. 4.

Vouch, to give testimony, to obtest, to answer for.

Vouche [fr. voco, Lat.], to call one to warrant lands.

Vouchee, the person vouched in a writ of right.

Voucher, a witness, testimony; 2, acquittance, or receipt.

Vraic, seaweed. It is used in great quantities by the inhabitants of Jersey and Guernsey for manure, and also for fuel by the poorer classes. In Benest v. Pipon, on appeal from Jersey to the Privy Council, it was ruled that the lord of a manor cannot establish a claim to the exclusive right of cutting seaweed on rocks situate below low-water mark, except by a grant from the Crown, or by such long and undisturbed enjoyment of it as to give him a title by prescription.—1 Knapp's P. C. Rep., 60, A.D. 1829.

Vulgaris opinio est duplex, viz., orta inter graves et discretos, quæ multum veritatis habet, et opinio orta inter leves et vulgares homines absque specie veritatis. 4 Co. 107.—(Common opinion is of two kinds, viz., that which arises among grave and discreet men, which has much truth in it, and that which arises among light and common men, without any appearance of truth.)

Vulgaris purgatio, Judicium Dei, which see.

W.

Wadset, a kind of mortgage in Scotland. The lender is called the wadsetter, and the borrower the reverser.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Wadsetter, a mortgagee. See WADSET.

Waftors, conductors of vessels at sea.—Cowel.

Wage [fr. vador Lat.; gage, Fr.], the giving of a security for the performance of anything.

Wager, a contract by A. to pay money to B. on the happening of a given event in consideration of B. paying money to him on the event not happening.

It was well established at common law, that a wager was a legal contract, which the courts were bound to enforce, so long as it was not against morality, decency, or sound policy.—Johnson v. Lumley, 12 C. B. 468. But by statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, ss. 17—19, wagers are irrecoverable at law. They are not, however, made illegal, so that money paid by an agent in discharge of lost bets may be recovered by the agent from his principal, although money paid to a stakeholder may be recovered by the loser if he countermand the authority to pay before the stakes are paid to the winner.—Hampden v. Walsh, 1 Q. B. D. 189. See also FEIGNED ISSUE.

Wager of battel. See BATTEL.

Wager of law [fr. vadatio legis, Lat.], a proceeding which consisted in a defendant's discharging himself from the claim, on his own oath, bringing with him at the same time into court eleven of his neighbours (compurgatores) to swear that they believed his denial to be true. It was abolished after long disuse (see, however, a revival of it in 1824 in King v. Williams, 2 B. & C. 638) by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 42, s. 13.

Wagering policies, those effected for gambling purposes, which are void by 14 Geo. III. c. 48. See 19 Geo. III. c. 37. See DOUBLE INSURANCE.

Wages, the compensation agreed upon by a master to be paid to a servant, or any other person hired to do work or business for him.

An infant can recover wages under 50*l.* in the County Court, without a next friend.—9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 64.

Wages of any 'servant, labourer, or workman' cannot be 'attached' to satisfy judgments.—Wages Attachment Abolition Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 30.

As to the requirements before a warrant of arrest can be issued in an action, in the Admiralty branch of the High Court of Justice, for wages, see Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. V., r. 11, as amended by r. 3 of the rules of court of December, 1875. See also title MASTER AND SERVANT.

Waggesum, a doubtful word, perhaps Mussel Ouze. See Re Alston's estate, 5 W. R. 189.

Waggonage, money paid for carriage in a waggon.

Waif or Waift, Weif or Weft [waiviatum, law Lat.], goods found but claimed by nobody; that of which every one waives the claim. 2. Goods stolen and waived, or thrown away by the thief in his flight, for fear of being apprehended. These are given to the sovereign by the law, as a punishment upon the owner for not himself pursuing the felon and taking away his goods from him.—Cro. Eliz. 694.

Wainable, land that may be ploughed, manured, or tilled.—Chart. Antiq.

Wainagium, or Wonogium, the countenance of a villein; that which is necessary for the cultivation of land.—Barr. on Stat. 12; 4 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 446 n. See CONTENEMENT.

Wain-bote, timber for waggons or carts.

Waiting-clerks in Chancery. Their offices were abolished by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 103.

Waive, to forego, decline to take advantage of; to put a woman out of the protection of the law. See OUTLAWRY.

Waiver, the passing by of an occasion to enforce a legal right whereby the right to enforce the same is lost; a common instance of this is where a landlord waives a forfeiture of a lease by receiving rent, or discharging for rent, which has accrued due after the breach of covenant causing the forfeiture became known to him. See Davenport v. The Queen, 3 App. Cas. 115. Mere lying by is no waiver for this purpose; there must be some positive act on the part of the landlord, which act, however, if done, is a waiver in law, notwithstanding any protest. 2. Declining to take advantage of irregularities in proceedings. Consult Bullen and Leake on Plead.

Wakeman [quasi, watchman], the chief magistrate of Ripon, in Yorkshire.—Camden.

Wakening, a citation narrating that a complainant has raised a summons which he had let sleep for a year and a day, concluding that all persons cited on the first should compare, hear, and see the aforesaid action called, awakened, and debated, till sentence be given.—Bell's Scotch Law Dict.

Wales. After Edward I. conquered Wales, the line of their ancient princes was abolished, and the King of England's eldest son was created their titular prince, and the territory of Wales was then entirely annexed to the British Crown. The 27 Hen. VIII. c. 26, confirmed by 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 36, gave the utmost advancement to their civil prosperity, by admitting them to a thorough communion of laws with the subjects of England. By 20 Geo. II. c. 42, it is declared that where England only is mentioned in any Act of Parliament, it shall be deemed to comprehend the dominion of Wales and town of Berwick-upon-Tweed. By 1 Wm. IV. c. 70, the jurisdiction of the court of Great Sessions was abolished, and assizes are now held there as in England. See 5 & 6 Vict. c. 32. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 11, the manner of assigning sheriffs in Wales is regulated by and assimilated to that of England. See 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 84 et seq. The 26 & 27 Vict. c. 82, empowers the Bishops of Welsh dioceses to facilitate the making provision for English services in certain parishes in Wales.

Wales, Prince and Princess of. See PRINCE AND PRINCESS.

Wales, Statute of, 12 Edw. I., A.D. 1284.—2 Reeves, c. ix., 95.

Waleschery, the being a Welshman.—Spelm.

Waliscus [servus, Lat.], a servant, or any other ministerial officer.—Leg. Jud., c. 34.

Walkers, foresters who have the care of a certain space of ground assigned to them.—Cowel.

Waltham Black Act, 9 Geo. I. c. 22. As to setting fire to houses, mills, etc., see BLACK ACT.

Waltham Forest. See 12 & 13 Vict. c. 81, and see EPPING FOREST.

Wanlass, an ancient customary tenure of lands, i.e., to drive deer to a stand that the lord may have a shot.—Blount's Tenures, 140.

Wanton and furious driving, an offence against public health, punishable under 6 Wm. IV. c. 50, s. 78; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 54; and 10 & 11 Vict. c. 89, s. 28.

Wapentake, or Wapentachium, a hundred; as, upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons in token of their fidelity and allegiance. Others think that it was ten hundreds or boroughs.—Encyc. Lond.; Ellis's Domesday, 182; 1 Br. & Had. Com. 137.

War. The sovereign has the sole prerogative of making war or peace.

War, Articles of, see ARMY.

War, levying against the Sovereign, a species of treason. See TREASON.

Ward, a child under guardianship. A ward of court is an infant under the protection of the Court of Chancery. See INFANT.

Also, a division of the larger municipal boroughs for the purpose of election of councillors, or of a parish for the purpose of election of guardians. The numbers of Borough Wards (if any) and of Councillors for each, are fixed by the schedules to the Municipal Corporation Act, 1835, or by charter granted after that Act, or Order in Council altering them, but the number of councillors in each ward is always divisible by three. Where a borough has wards, the burgess roll is made up in separate rolls called ward rolls, and a burgess may not be enrolled in more than one ward roll.—Municipal Corporation Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 45. There is a separate election of councillors for each ward (Ib., s. 50), and no person may subscribe a nomination paper for more than one ward, or vote in more than one ward (Ib., s. 51). Also see WATCH AND WARD.

Warda, the custody of a town or castle; which the inhabitants were bound to keep at their own charge.—Mon. Angl. i., 372.

Wardage, money paid and contributed to watch and ward.—Domesday.

Warden, guardian or keeper. The Lord Warden of the Cinque Ports is prohibited from recommending members of Parliament to those places by 2 W. & M. sess. 1, c. 7. As to wardens of the society of Apothecaries, see 55 Geo. III. c. 194; 3 Steph. Com.

Ward-holding, the ancient military tenure in Scotland. Abolished by 20 Geo. II. c. 50.

Wardmote, a court held in every ward in London.

The wardmote inquest has power to inquire into and present all defaults concerning the watch and police doing their duty, to see that engines, etc., are provided against fire, that persons selling ale and beer be honest and suffer no disorders, nor permit gaming, etc., that they sell in lawful measures; searches are to be made for beggars, vagrants, and idle persons, etc., who shall be punished.

Wardpenny, wardage, which see.

Wards and Liveries, Court of, a court erected by Hen. III. and abolished by 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Wardship, pupilage, guardianship; and incident to tenure in socage. See TENURE.

Wardship in chivalry, an incident to the tenure of knight-service. See Ibid.

Wardship in copyholds, the lord is guardian of his infant-tenant by special custom.

Wardship of Infants. The wardship of infants and the care of infants' estates is assigned to the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice (Jud. Act, 1873, s. 34). See INFANT.

Wardstaff, a watchman's staff.—Cowel.

Wardwrit, the being quit of giving money for the keeping of wards.—Spelm.

Warectare, to plough up land designed for wheat in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for better improvement, which in Kent is called summer-land.

Warehousing system, the allowing of goods imported to be deposited in public warehouses, at a reasonable rent, without payment of the duties on importation if they are re-exported; or if they are ultimately withdrawn for home consumption, without payment of such duties until they are so removed, or a purchaser found for them.—2 Steph. Com.

Wargus, a banished rogue.—Leg. Hen. I. c. 83.

Waring Ex parte, Rule of. The principle established in Ex parte Waring, 19 Ves. 345, that securities held by a banker against his acceptances, are available to the bill holders, if both acceptor and drawer are insolvent.

Warning of a caveat, a notice to a person who has entered a caveat in the Probate branch of the High Court to appear and set forth his interest. Consult Cooté on Probate.

Warnicistura, garniture, furniture, provision, etc.—Cowel.

Warnoth, an ancient custom, that if any tenant holding of the castle of Dover failed in paying his rent at the day, he should forfeit double, and for his second failure treble; and the lands so held are called terre culte et terre de warnoth.—Mon. Angl., ii. 589.

War Office, a department of State from which the sovereign issues orders to his forces. This department was formerly united with the Colonial Office; but an additional secretary of state was appointed, for affairs of war solely, in the year 1854. See HORSE GUARDS; and the War Office Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 17.

Warping. A mode of fertilising land by the 'warp' or deposit of flooded or tidal rivers artificially let in over the land and let off from it. Warping is a 'first-class improvement' within the Agricultural Holdings Acts, and an improvement upon which a tenant for life may expend the proceeds of the sale of the settled land under the Settled Land Act.

Warrandice, warranty.—Scotch Term.

Warrant, a precept under hand and seal, to some officer to arrest an offender, to be dealt with according to due course of law; also, a writ conferring some right or authority, a citation or summons.

Warrant of Attorney, a written authority addressed to an attorney of the court in which it is intended that a judgment shall be entered up, authorizing him to appear and receive a statement for him in an action brought or to be brought against him, at the suit of a person named, and to confess the same, or suffer judgment to pass by default; it also authorizes him to execute a release of errors touching the judgment. The instrument must then be under seal, which is not necessary where it merely authorizes a judgment to be confessed. A release of errors must be by deed, and an agent to execute a deed must be appointed by deed. A warrant of attorney may be executed as a security for the performance of any agreement between the parties: but it does not extinguish an original debt, or affect the right to sue upon it, unless judgment has been signed, for until this is done it is merely a collateral security. If an infant or feme covert, or other incapacitated person, execute a warrant of attorney jointly with others, it can only be set aside as against the incapacitated person. It is usual to make the warrant subject to be defeated, on the performance of certain conditions, and when this is the case, they are set forth in an agreement, hence called the defeasance. By the Practice Rules of the Common Law Courts, H. T., 1853, r. 27, every person who prepares a warrant of attorney to confess judgment which is to be subject to any defeasance shall write the defeasance or a memorandum of its effect on the same paper as the warrant. By 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, s. 24, it is provided that 'after the commencement of this act, a warrant of attorney to confess judgment in any personal action on cognovit actionem given by any person, shall not be of any force unless there is present some attorney of one of the superior courts, on behalf of such person, expressly named by him, and attending at his request to inform him of the nature and effect of such warrant or cognovit before the same is executed, which attorney shall subscribe his name to the due execution thereof, and thereby declare himself to be attorney for the person executing the same and state that he subscribes as such attorney'; and by sec. 25, it is provided that a warrant of attorney to confess judgment or cognovit actionem not executed in manner aforesaid, shall not be rendered valid by proof that the person executing the same did, in fact, understand the nature and effect thereof and was duly informed of the same. These provisions come in place of those contained in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, ss. 9—10, which are repealed by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 83. The 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, also contains various provisions in regard to the filing of warrants of attorney, cognovits, and judges' orders.

The death of either party generally revokes the warrant, but the court may order judgment to be entered up after the death of the plaintiff by his representatives, if the warrant authorize it. If one or more of several plaintiffs die, judgment may be signed by the survivors. But the warrant cannot authorize signing judgment against the defendant's executors, for the warrant then stands revoked. If one of several joint defendants die, the warrant is wholly revoked; but if they be joint and several, judgment may be signed against the survivors. If a feme sole give a warrant of attorney, and afterwards marry, the court will allow the judgment against husband and wife. If a warrant of attorney be given to a feme sole, and she marry, the judgment will be allowed to be entered by husband and wife; but a warrant to a feme covert is utterly void. If the warrant of attorney be obtained by fraud, duress, or misrepresentation, or upon illegal consideration, the court will order it to be delivered up to be cancelled, and will set aside all proceedings upon it, and so, if a material alteration be made in it. If the warrant is good in part and bad in part, the court will sustain it quoad the good part. If the fact of the consideration be doubtful, the court may direct an issue to try it.

Warranty, a person to whom a warranty is made.

Warrantia chartæ, a writ, where one was enfeoffed of lands with warranty, and then he was sued or impleaded in assize or other action in which he could not vouch or call to warranty.—F. N. B. 134. Abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 27.

Warrantia diei, an ancient writ, where one having a day assigned personally to appear in court to any action, is in the meantime employed in the royal service, so that he cannot come on the day appointed; it was addressed to the justices to this end, that they neither take nor record him in default for that time.—F. N. B. 17.

Warrantizare est defendere et acquietare tenentem, qui warrantum vocavit, in seisinâ suâ; et tenens de re warranti excambium habebit ad valentiam. Co. Litt. 365.—(To warrant is to defend and insure in peace the tenant, who calls for warranty, in his seisin; and the tenant in warranty will have an exchange in proportion to its value).

Warranty of lands is abolished.—3 & 4 Wm. IV. cc. 27, 74.

Warrantor, a person who warrants; the heir of one's husband.

Warrantor potest excipere quod querens non tenet terram de quâ petit warrantiam, et quod donum fuit insufficiens. Hob. 21.—(A warrantor may object, that the complainant does not hold the land of which he seeks the warranty, and that the gift was insufficient).

Warranty, a guarantee or security; also a promise or covenant by deed by the bargainer for himself and his heirs to warrant and secure the bargainee and his heirs against all persons for the enjoying of the thing granted.—3 Br. & Had Com. 174—176.

Warranty of lands is altogether superseded in practice by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. cc. 27, 74.

The general rule of law applicable to all sales of goods is, that the buyer buys at his own risk; caveat emptor; unless the vendor give an express warranty, or unless the law imply a warranty from the nature of the thing sold, and the circumstances of the sale; or unless the vendor have been guilty of a fraudulent representation or concealment in regard to the thing sold.

Express Warranty.—Every affirmation made by the vendor at the time of the sale in relation to the goods, amounts to a warranty, provided it be so intended. Where an express warranty is couched in technical terms, it is to be interpreted according to their technical signification, unless they be manifestly used in a different sense, and differently understood by the buyer. A general warranty does not extend to patent defects which are apparent upon due inspection, or to defects which are at the time known to the buyer.

Implied Warranty.—A warranty is implied in five cases:—(1) A warranty of title will be presumed when the goods sold are, at the time of the sale, in the possession of the vendor or of a third person, unless the contrary be then expressed; (2) when an examination of goods is, from their nature or situation at the time of the sale, impracticable, a warranty will be implied that they are merchantable; (3) upon an executory contract of sale, where goods are to be manufactured, or to be procured for a particular use or purpose, a warranty will be implied that they are reasonably fit for such purpose or use, as far as goods of such a kind can be; (4) a warranty will be implied against all latent defects in two cases: 1st, when the seller knew that the buyer did not rely on his own judgment, but on that of the seller, who knew at the time, or might have known, the existence of the defects; 2nd, where from the situation of the parties (as in the case of a manufacturer or producer), the seller might have provided against the existence of defects; or where a warranty may be presumed from the very nature of the transaction; (5) where goods are sold by sample, a warranty is implied that the bulk corresponds to the sample in nature and quality.—Consult Story's Contracts, 329; and Addison on Contracts.

Warren [fr. waerande, Dut.; guerenne, Fr.], a franchise or place privileged by prescription or grant from the Crown, for the keeping of beasts or fowls of warren.—1 Inst. 233.

Warscott, a contribution usually made towards armour in the time of the Saxons.

Warth, a customary payment for castle guard.—Cowel.

Wash, a shallow part of a river or arm of the sea.

Washhouses, Public. See PUBLIC BATHS.

Washing-horn [fr. corner l'eau, Fr.], the sounding of a horn for washing before dinner. The custom was formerly observed in the Temple.

Washington, Treaty of. A treaty signed on May 8th, 1871, between the Queen and the United States of America, with reference to the differences arising out of the war between the Northern and Southern States of the Union, the Canadian Fisheries, and other matters. See 35 & 36 Vict. c. 45.

Waste [fr. vastum, Lat.], any spoil or destruction in houses, gardens, trees, etc., by a tenant, to the prejudice of the expectant in fee. It is either (1) legal, subdivided into (a) voluntary or commissive, as where the tenant pulls down a house or a part thereof, or ploughs up ancient meadow, and (b) permissive or omissive, as where a tenant suffers a house to fall out of repair; and (2) equitable, which comprehends acts not deemed waste at the common law. Both for voluntary and permissive waste an action lies against a tenant, whether for life or years, by virtue of the Statute of Gloucester, 6 Ed. I. c. 5. A tenant from year to year is liable for voluntary waste only. An injunction will be granted to restrain voluntary waste, as by ploughing up ancient meadow. See Woodfall, L. & T. Ch. XVI. s. 5. A mortgagor in possession will be restrained from cutting down timber; for as the whole estate is the security for the money advanced, the mortgagor ought not to be suffered to diminish it; but he may cut underwood of a proper growth at seasonable times. Trustees to preserve contingent remainders must enjoin a tenant for life from waste to the prejudice of the cestui que trust in remainder.

Equitable waste (which is voluntary only) is an unconscientious abuse of the privilege of non-impeachability for waste at common law, whereby a tenant for life without impeachment of waste, will be restrained from committing wilful, destructive, malicious, or extravagant waste, such as pulling down houses, cutting timber of too young a growth, or trees planted for ornament, or for shelter of premises; for, though in some cases fortior est dispositio legis quam hominis, yet that shall not extend to encumber or spoil estates.—Vane v. Lord Barnard, 2 Vern. 738 (1716), Baker v. Sebright, 13 Ch. D. 179.

By the Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25 (3) it is provided that an estate for life, without impeachment of waste, shall not confer upon the tenant for life any legal right to commit waste of the kind known as equitable waste, unless an intention to confer such right shall expressly appear by the instrument vesting such estate. In actions for special injunctions to restrain the commission or continuance of waste, solicitors may charge costs on the higher scale (Ord. in Council, Aug. 12th, 1875, Ord. VI., r. 3).

Wastors, thieves.—Cowel.

Watch, the, a body of constables on duty on any particular night.

Watch and Ward. Ward [Anglicized Lat.]

is chiefly applied to the daytime, in order to apprehend rioters and robbers on the high-ways. Watch [fr. wacht, or wacta, Teut.] is applicable to the night only, and begins at the time when ward ends.—1 Bl. Com. 356.

Watch Committee, a committee of the town council of a municipal borough, not exceeding one-third of the council in number, having the appointment and control of the borough constables.—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, ss. 5, 190, 191. Prior to this Act, it was a common custom for a town council to constitute the whole of their number the watch committee.

Watching and Lighting. See 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 90, and the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 163.

Watch Rate, a rate leviable in many municipal boroughs by order of the council. It is carried to the borough fund, and must not exceed 8d. in the pound.—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, ss. 197—200.

Water. In the language of the law the term land includes water.—2 Bl. Com. 18. An action cannot be brought to recover possession of a pool or other piece of water by the name of water only, but it must be brought for the land that lies at the bottom, e.g., 'twenty acres of land covered with water.'—Brownl. 142. See Pool. By granting a certain water, though the right of fishing passes, yet the soil does not. Water being a moveable wandering thing, there can only be a temporary transient usufructuary property therein. Consult Gale on Easements and Angell on Watercourses. 'Water' does not include the land on which it stands; unless perhaps in the case of salt pits or springs, where the interest of each owner is measured by ballaries or buckets of brine.—Burt. Comp. pl. (550). As to the supply of water to their districts by local authorities, see the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 51—68, and as to obligation of owners of houses to provide water supply, see Public Health (Water) Act, 1878, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 25. See WATERWORKS.

Water and Gas Works Facilities Act, 1870, 33 & 34 Vict. c. 70 (am. 36 & 37 Vict. c. 89).

Water-bailiff, an officer in port-towns, whose duty is to search ships; also an officer appointed under the Salmon Fishery Acts to enforce the provisions of those acts by searching for illegal engines, etc. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, s. 34; 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, s. 27 (appointment); 36 & 37 Vict. c. 71, s. 36 (general powers).

Watercourse, a species of incorporeal hereditament, being a right which a man has to the benefit of the flow of a river or stream, such right commonly referring to a stream passing through a man's own land, and the banks of which belong either to himself on both sides, or to himself on one side, and to his neighbour on the other, in which latter case (unless the stream be navigable, for then the bed of it, so far at least as the tide of the sea flows, presumably belongs to the Crown) the proprietor of each bank is considered as primâ facie the proprietor also of half the land covered by the stream, i.e., usque ad medium filum aquæ.

A prescriptive primâ facie right to water-courses and ways is gained by twenty years' uninterrupted enjoyment, and an indefeasible right after forty years; and when the land over which such rights as these are claimed has been held for term of life, or a term exceeding three years, such term shall be excluded from the computation of the forty years, in the event of the person who may be entitled in reversion resisting the claim within three years after the term determines.—2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71. See Gale on Easements, and Angell on Watercourses.

Water-gage, a sea-wall or bank to restrain the current and overflowing of the water; also an instrument to measure water.—Cowel.

Water-gang, a trench or course to carry a stream of water.—Cowel.

Water-gavil, a rent paid for fishing in, or other benefit received from, some river.—Cowel.

Water-measure, a greater measure than the Winchester, formerly used for selling coals in the pool, etc.—22 Car II. c. 11.

Watermen. See THAMES WATERMEN.

Water-Ordeal. See COLD-WATER-ORDEAL, and HOT-WATER-ORDEAL.

Waterscape, an aqueduct or passage for water.

Water supply to metropolis. See 15 & 16 Vict. c. 84; and 34 & 35 Vict. c. 113.

Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1863, 10 & 11 Vict. c. 17; 26 & 27 Vict. c. 93. By the Gas and Waterworks Facilities Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 70, amended by 36 & 37 Vict. c. 89), provision is made whereby such undertakings may be sanctioned by Provisional Orders.

Waveson, goods swimming upon the waves after a shipwreck.—Cowel.

Wax scot [fr. cerarium, Lat.], duty anciently paid twice a year towards the charge of wax candles in churches.—Spelm.

Way [fr. wæg, Sax.; weigh, Dut.; vig or wig, M. Goth.], road made for passengers.

There are three kinds of ways:—1st, a foot-way (iter); 2nd, a pack and prime way, which is both a horse and footway (actus); 3rd, a cart way (via or aditus), which is called via regia, if it be common to all men; and communis strata, if it belong to only some town or private person.—Co. Litt. 56 a.

All ways are divided into highways and private ways. A right of way strictly means a private way, i.e., a privilege which an individual or a particular description of persons may have of going over another's ground. Such a right is an incorporeal hereditament.

A highway is a public passage for the Sovereign and all her subjects, and it is commonly called the Queen's public highway. Besides the ordinary highways, turnpike roads have been created, and regulated by specific Acts of Parliament. See TURNPIKE-ROADS. Highways generally become so by what is called a dedication of them to the public by the owner of the soil, but the public may also acquire the use of a highway by Act of Parliament.

As highways are for public service, if they are so out of repair that the usual track is impassable, people may pass, by going out of the track, upon the land of the owners of the adjoining closes; but this privilege is confined to highways; for as private ways are presumed to have originated in grants from the owner of the soil, the want of repair, amounting to a foundrous state, does not authorize passengers to go out of the way upon the adjacent land.

The inhabitants of a parish are primâ facie bound to repair a highway of common right; unless by prescription they can throw the burden on particular persons by reason of their tenure; and if the inhabitants of a township, bound by prescription to repair, be expressly exempted by an Act of Parliament from repairing the roads to be made within the township, it falls on the rest of the parish.

By the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 50, power is given to stop up and divert highways, and the mode of proceeding to effect this object is pointed out. Parties grieved have a right of appeal to the sessions.

Bridges are public highways. See BRIDGE.

A navigable river is esteemed to be a highway; and if the water, which is the highway, change its course and flow upon the land of another, the highway extends over the place where the water newly flows, in like manner as it existed over the ancient course, so that the owner may not disturb it. With respect to navigable rivers there is this difference, however, between them and highways, that the right to the soil of a navigable river is not, by presumption of law, in the owners of the adjoining lands.

Ferries may be said to be common highways, as they are a common passage over rivers. They differ, however, in some measure, as they are the private property of individuals, who may maintain an action for the disturbance of their rights.

A private right of way may be claimed by prescription and immemorial usage; thus, where the inhabitants of a particular hamlet, or the owners or occupiers of a particular close or farm, have immemorially been used to cross a particular piece of land, a right of way is created by the immemorial usage, which supposes a grant. By 2 & 3 Wm. IV. c. 71, s. 2, it is enacted, that no claim by custom, prescription, or grant to any way or other easement, or to any watercourse, or the use of any water which has been enjoyed twenty years without interruption, shall be defeated by showing the commencement of the right within the time of legal memory; and where the right shall have existed forty years, it shall be absolute and indefeasible, unless it appear to have been enjoyed by license, by deed, or writing. The right must be proved by user down to the time of the commencement of the action; and therefore, if there be no proof of user for the last four or five years, it is insufficient. Unity of possession operates as an extinguishment of a right of way by prescription.

A private right of way may also be grounded on a special permission; as when the owner of lands grants to another a liberty of passing over his grounds, to go to church, market, or the like, in which case the gift or grant is particular and confined to the grantee alone; it dies with the person; the grantee cannot assign it, or justify taking another person in his company.

A right of way may also arise by act and operation of law: for if a man grant a piece of ground in the middle of his field, he at the same time tacitly and impliedly gives a way to come at it, and the grantee may cross the grantor's land without being a trespasser. A way of necessity is limited by the necessity which created it; and when such necessity ceases, the right of way also ceases.

Disturbance of way happens when a person, who has a right of way over another's grounds, by grant or prescription, is obstructed by inclosures or other obstacles, or by ploughing across it, by which means he cannot enjoy the right of way, or at least not in so commodious a manner as he might have done. The remedy is usually by action on the case for damages. A right of way is often contested in an action of trespass. The remedy for the want of repair or obstruction to public highways is by indictment.—Consult Gale on Easements.

Way-bill, a writing in which is set down the names of passengers who are carried in a public conveyance, or the description of goods sent with a common carrier by land.

Way-going crops. See AWAY-GOING CROPS.

Waynagium, implements of husbandry.—1 Reeves, c. v., 268.

Ways and Means, Committee of. As the Committee of Supply in the House of Commons relates to the expenditure of the nation, so the functions and duties of a Committee of Ways and Means have reference to the funds by which such expenditure is to be sustained. Loans, duties, taxes, tolls, and every kind of means for raising revenue, are submitted to a Committee of Ways and Means (which is always one of the whole House). The propositions of Government on these subjects are reduced to the form of resolutions, considered, decided on, and, such as are agreed to, reported to the House. Those which may be there adopted are embodied into bills, and in due course become law. As in the case of supply, the Lords may reject, but cannot modify, neither can their lordships insert pecuniary penalties in any bill whatever.—Dod's Par. Comp.

Weald, Wald, Walt [Sax.], a wood or grove.—Cowel.

Wealreaf, the robbing of a dead man in his grave.

Wealth, all useful or agreeable things which possess exchange-value, or, in other words, all useful or agreeable things except those which can be obtained in the quantity desired without labour or sacrifice.—1 Mill's Pol. Eco. 10.

Wear, or Weir, a great dam or fence made across a river, or against water, formed of stakes interlaced by twigs of osier, and accommodated for the taking of fish, or to convey a stream to a mill.—Cowel. Prohibited by Magna Charta and other early statutes in navigable rivers.—Lord Leconfield v. Earl of Lonsdale, L. R. 5 C. P. 657. Prohibited for the purpose of catching salmon, by the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109, unless 'lawfully in use at the time of the passing of that Act by virtue of a grant or charter or immemorial usage.'

Wed [Sax.], a covenant or agreement.—Cowel.

Wedbedrip, the customary service which inferior tenants paid to their lords in cutting down their corn, or doing other harvest duties.—Cowel.

Wedding-rings. As to the assaying and marking of gold wedding-rings, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 60, s. 1.

Weighage, a toll or duty paid for weighing merchandise.

Weight of evidence, such superiority in the evidence for one side over that for the other as calls for a verdict for the first. When a new trial is asked for on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence, the judge who tried the cause is consulted, and it does not very often happen that a new trial is ordered if he reports that he is satisfied with the verdict. When the sum in dispute is under 20*l.*, in an action ex contractu, a new trial is not granted on this ground, and the court is generally indisposed to take this step unless the amount at issue is considerable or the moral interest great.

Weights and measures, instruments for reducing the quantity and price of merchandise to a certainty, that there may be the less room for deceit and imposition. See AVOIRDUPOIS and TROY WEIGHT.

The adjustment of weights and measures is a prerogative of the Crown, and has from an early date been regulated by statute. The Weights and Measures Act, 1878, 41 & 42 Vict. c. 49, consolidates and repeals twenty-two prior enactments on the subject, the more important of which were 5 Geo. IV. c. 74; 5 & 6 Wm. IV. c. 63; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 29; 22 & 23 Vict. c. 56; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 75, s. 6 (as to the appointment of inspectors of weights and measures in municipal boroughs); 25 & 26 Vict. c. 76, as to Ireland; and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 117, by which the use of metric weights and measures was legalised and rendered permissive.

Weights of auncel. See AUNCLE WEIGHT.

Welch mortgage [now rare], a conveyance of an estate redeemable at any time by the mortgagor, on payment of the loan; the rents and profits of the estate being received in the meantime by the mortgagee, in satisfaction of interest, subject, however, to an account in Chancery. There is no covenant for the repayment of the loan, and the mortgagee cannot compel either redemption or foreclosure. A Welch mortgage differs from a vivum vadium or vif-gage, which is a conveyance of property to the creditor and his heirs, until out of the rents and profits of the estate he has satisfied the debt with interest: it was so called because neither debt nor estate was lost. The distinction between these securities is, that in the vif-gage the profits are applied in the periodical reduction of the debt, while in the Welch mortgage they are applied in satisfaction of the interest, the principal remaining undiminished.

neither, however, is the estate ever forfeited. See 2 Br. & Had. Com. 299.

Wend, a certain quantity or circuit of land.—Cowel.

Were [capitis aestimatio], a pecuniary compensation for any injury. See WITE.

Werelada, a purging from a crime by the oaths of several persons, according to the degree and quality of the accused.—Cowel.

Wergild, Weregild, Weregildum [fr. wer, man, and geld, satisfaction, Ang.-Sax.], the price of homicide or other enormous offences, paid partly to the Crown for the loss of a subject, partly to the lord whose vassal he was, and partly to the party injured or the next of kin of the party slain. This is the earliest award of damages in our law.—4 Bl. Com. 188. Obsolete Saxon custom.

Westminster, a city by express creation of Henry VIII. It was dissolved as a see and restored to the bishopric of London by Edward VI., and turned into a collegiate church, subject to a dean, by Queen Elizabeth. The Superior Courts sat here until 1822 in Westminster Hall itself, and after 1822 in courts opening into it; the Court of Chancery only upon the first day of certain sittings, after which it sat at Lincoln's Inn. The same course was observed under the Judicature Act by the Divisions representing the respective Courts, until the opening of the Royal Courts of Justice (see that title).

ment,—e.g., by the County Court Act, 1850, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 61, s. 14,—which gives an appeal from a county court, that certain jurisdiction shall be exercised by the courts 'at Westminster.' All such acts are, by s. 18 of the Courts of Justice Building Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 48, to be construed as if the Royal Courts of Justice had been referred to therein instead of the Courts at Westminster.

Westminster Confession, a document containing a statement of religious doctrine, concocted at a conference of British and Continental Protestant Divines at Westminster in the year 1643, which subsequently became the basis of the Scotch Presbyterian Church.

Westminster the First, 3 Edw. I. A.D. 1275. This statute, which deserves the name of a Code rather than an Act, is divided into fifty-one chapters. Without extending the exemption of churchmen from civil jurisdiction, it protects the property of the Church from the violence and spoliation of the king and the nobles, provides for freedom of popular elections, because sheriffs, coroners, and conservators of the peace were still chosen by the freeholders in the county court, and attempts had been made to influence the election of knights of the shire, from the time when they were instituted. It contains a declaration to enforce the enactment of Magna Charta against excessive fines, which might operate as perpetual imprisonment; enumerates and corrects the abuses of tenures, particularly as to marriage of wards; regulates the levying of tolls, which were imposed arbitrarily by the barons, and by cities and boroughs; corrects and restrains the power of the king's escheator and other officers; amends the criminal law, putting the crime of rape on the footing to which it has been lately restored, as a most grievous but not capital offence, and embraces the subject of procedure, civil and criminal matters, introducing many regulations to render it cheap, simple, and expeditious.—Lord Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, v. i., p. 167; 2 Reeves, c. ix., p. 107. Certain parts of this Act are repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1863, 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125.

Westminster the Second, 13 Edw. I. st. 1, A.D. 1285; otherwise called the Statute De donis conditionalibus; see TAIL. 2 Reeves, c. x., p. 163. Certain parts of this act are repealed by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 64, and 26 & 27 Vict. c. 125.

Westminster the Third, 18 Edw. I. st. 1, A.D. 1290; otherwise called the Statute Quia emptores terrarum.

Westmoreland, the shrievalty of, was hereditary in the family of the Earl of Thanet, and descended to females as well as males. Anne, Countess of Pembroke, exercised this office in person, and, at the assizes at Appleby, sat with the judges on the bench.—Co. Litt. 326 n. After the death of the Earl of Thanet, in 1849, without issue, an act was passed abolishing all hereditary claims and titles to the office, and empowering Her Majesty to appoint as in other countries. See 13 & 14 Vict. c. 30.

West-Saxon-lage, the laws of the West Saxons.—Cowel.

Whale, a royal fish, the head being the King's property, and the tail the Queen's.

Wharf, a broad plain place, near some creek or haven, to lay goods and wares on, that are brought to or from the water.

There are two kinds:—1st, legal, which are certain wharves in all seaports, appointed by commission from the Court of Exchequer, or legalised by Act of Parliament: 2nd, sufferance, which are places where certain goods may be landed and shipped, by special sufferance granted by the Crown for that purpose.—2 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 501. As to larcenies from, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 63, 64.

Wharfage, money paid for landing goods at a wharf, or for shipping and taking goods into a boat or barge thence.

Wharfinger, he that owns or keeps a wharf, and takes care of goods for shipment or delivery. He has a general lien for the balance of his account. In some cases, as where he conveys goods from his wharf to vessels in lighters, he is a common carrier. Consult Chitty or Addison on Contracts.

Wheelage, duty or toll paid for carts, etc., passing over certain ground.—Cowel.

Whereas, a word which implies a recital of a past fact. The word whereas, when it renders the deed senseless or repugnant, may be struck out as impertinent, and shall not vitiate a deed in other respects sensible. See Platt on Coven. 35.

Whichwood Forest. As to the disafforesting of this, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 36, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 32.

Whig, sour milk. The name was applied in Scotland, A.D. 1648, to those violent covenanters who opposed the Duke of Hamilton's invasion of England in order to restore Charles the First.

The appellation of Whig and Tory to political factions was first heard of in A.D. 1679, and though as senseless as any cant terms that could be devised, they became instantly as familiar in use as they have since continued.—2 Hallam's Const. Hist., c. xii.

Whig and Tory differed mainly in this, that to a Tory the constitution, inasmuch as it was the constitution, was an ultimate point, beyond which he never looked, and from which he thought it altogether impossible to swerve; whereas a Whig deemed all forms of government subordinate to the public good, and, therefore, liable to change when they should cease to promote their object.

Whipping, a punishment inflicted for many of the smaller offences. By 5 & 6 Vict. striking or firing at the present Queen is punishable with whipping thrice or fewer times; and by 5 Geo. IV. c. 83, s. 10, an 'incurable rogue' (see VAGRANT) may be whipped.

The punishment of whipping was inflicted at common law on persons of inferior condition, guilty of petty larceny and other smaller offences. But it seems that, in the earliest periods, by the usage of the Star Chamber, it was never inflicted on a gentleman.

By 1 Geo. IV. c. 57, no female shall be whipped.

The Criminal Law Consolidation Acts, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. cc. 96, 97, 98, 99, and 100), authorise the punishment of whipping to be inflicted upon males below 16 who have been convicted of various offences. The court must specify the number of strokes and the instrument; and the whipping must be private, and only once. The 25 Vict. c. 18 enacts, that where the punishment is awarded by order of a justice by summary conviction, the order shall specify the number of strokes and the instrument; and for one under 14, the number shall not exceed twelve with a birch rod; and no one shall be whipped more than once for the same offence. In Scotland no offender above 16 shall be whipped for theft or crimes against person or property (s. 2).

By 26 & 27 Vict. c. 44, robbery with violence within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 43, and attempting to choke with intent to commit any indictable offence within the meaning of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 21, may be punished by whipping in addition to existing punishments.

White Friars, a place in London between the Temple and Blackfriars, which was formerly a sanctuary, and therefore privileged from arrest. See ALSATIA.

Whitehart silver, a mulct on certain lands in or near to the forest of Whitehart, paid into the Exchequer, imposed by Henry III. upon Thomas de la Linda, for killing a beautiful white hart which that king before had spared in hunting.—Camd. Brit. 150.

White meats, milk, butter, cheese, eggs, and any composition of them.—Cowel.

White rents [reditus albi, Lat.], payments received in silver or white money.—2 Br. & Had. Com. 54; 1 Steph. Com., 7th ed., 676.

White spurs, a kind of esquires.—Cowel.

Whit-monday. See next title.

Whitsuntide, the feast of Pentecost, being the fiftieth day after Easter, and the first of the four cross-quarter days of the year.

Whit Monday is, by the 34 & 35 Vict. c. 17, and 38 & 39 Vict. c. 13, made a holiday in banks, custom-houses, docks, inland revenue offices, and bonding-warehouses. Whit Monday is a holiday in the several Courts and offices of the Supreme Court (Jud. Act, 1875, Ord. LXI., r. 4).

Will, 'the legal declaration of a man's intentions, which he wills to be performed after his death' (see 2 Bl. Com. 499). It is said by Lord Coke that 'in law most commonly ultima voluntas in scriptis is used when lands or tenements are devised, and testamentum when it concerneth chattels (Co. Litt. 111 a). Swinburne defines a last will and testament to be 'the just sentence of our will touching what we would have done after our death.' The law as to wills made before 1st of January, 1838, is regulated by 7 Wm. IV. and 1 Vict. c. 26, commonly called the Wills Act, which does not extend to Scotland.

This important and comprehensive statute deals with four classes of subjects touching wills, viz.:—

- (1) Who may execute a will.
- (2) What may be the subject matter of wills.
- (3) What are the formalities required in the execution of a will.
- (4) How wills are to be construed.

These subjects are not dealt with by the statute exactly in the above order, the second being taken first (sec. 3).

The first section enacts, that the word 'will' shall extend to a testament, and to a codicil, and to an appointment by will or by writing in the nature of a will in exercise of a power, and to a disposition by will and testament or devise of the custody and tuition of any child, by virtue of the 12 Car. II. c. 24, or of 14 & 15 Car. II. (Ireland), and to any other testamentary disposition, and also defines the meaning of the words 'real estate' and 'personal estate' as used in the Act.

The second section repeals (amongst others) the following acts relating to Wills:—32 Hen. VIII. c. 1; 34 & 35 Hen. VIII. c. 5; ss. 5, 6, 12, 19, 20, 21, and 22 of the 29 Car. II. c. 3, commonly called the Statute of Frauds, and 25 Geo. II. c. 6 (except as to the Colonies). Statutes on this subject which remain in force are the 12 Car. II. c. 24, ss. 8, 9, 10, relative to the appointment of testamentary guardians by parents; and the Statute of Charitable Uses and Fraudulent Devises, and the Registry Acts, relating to those matters that are not within the scope of this Act; and the Navy and Marines (Wills) Act, 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 72, replacing 11 Geo. IV. and 1 Wm. IV. c. 20 (repealed by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 112, and 29 & 30 Vict. c. 109, s. 85), makes special regulations as to the execution and attestation of wills and letters of attorney of seamen, marines, and petty officers of the navy, and non-commissioned officers of marines.

The third section, termed the 'general enabling clause,' enacts that it shall be lawful for every person to devise, bequeath, or dispose of real estate, and all personal estate which he shall be entitled to, either at law or in equity, at the time of his death, and the power given shall extend to all real estate of the nature of customary freehold or tenant-right, or customary or copyhold, notwithstanding that the testator may not have surrendered the same to the use of his will, or that being entitled as heir, devisee, or otherwise, to be admitted thereto, he shall not have been admitted, or that the same, in consequence of the want of a custom to devise or surrender to the use of a will, or otherwise, could not at law have been disposed of by will, or that the same in consequence of there being a custom that a will, or a surrender to the use of a will, should continue in force for a limited time only, or any other special custom, could not have been disposed of by will according to the powers contained in this act, if this act had not been made; also all estates pur autre vie, all contingent interests, and all rights of entry and property acquired even subsequently to the execution of his will.

The fourth and fifth sections relate to dispositions of copyhold estates.

The sixth section enacts, that if no disposition by will be made of any estate pur autre vie of a freehold nature, the same shall be chargeable in the hands of the heir, if it come to him by reason of special occupancy; as assets by descent, as in the case of freehold land in fee simple; and in the case of there being no special occupant of any estate pur autre vie, whether freehold or customary freehold, tenant-right, customary or copyhold, or of any other tenure, and whether a corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, it shall go to the executor or administrator of the party that had the estate thereof by virtue of the grant, and if it come to the executor or administrator either by reason of a special occupancy, or by virtue of this act, it shall be assets in his hands, and shall be applied and distributed in the same manner as the personal estate of the testator or intestate. See SPECIAL OCCUPANCY.

These sections enact what property is disposable by will, but inasmuch as the old law is applicable where the law was made before January 1st, 1838, and has not since been republished or revived by any codicil executed as required by the Wills Act, it is necessary to state wherein the new law differs from the old.

Personal chattels, then, of every kind, and leasehold for years, were always disposable by will. The same may be said generally of freeholds, customary freeholds, and copyholds; with the exception (now repealed) of the legal estate in such customary freeholds as were not directly devisable. Customary estates and copyholds were not under the old law devisable, without surrender to the use of the will, or without admittance of the devisor, except when the estate was equitable or came to the devisor by descent, but under the new law they may be devised. (The rights of the lord are preserved by the fourth section, and the fifth provides for the registration of wills affecting copyholds; under the old law a mere recital on the admittance was all that was necessary.) Rights of action and of entry which could not have been devised under the old law are now devisable. Contingent estates and possibilities of every kind are now devisable; they were not devisable under the old law, with the exception of estates contingent as to the person, e.g., a joint-tenant's chance of survivorship, and an expectant heir's chance of inheritance. Estates pur autre vie of every kind, except estates quasi in tail, are now devisable, but under the old law no such estates were devisable unless by special custom, except pur autre vie in copyholds not specially limited.

Formerly no real estate which the testator had not at the date of the will would pass by it without republication, although personal property would, if the words of the will were sufficiently comprehensive. But now the power of disposing by will is extended to all such real as well as personal estate as the testator may be entitled to at the time of his death (see sect. 24).

An estate tail, or an estate quasi in tail, i.e., an estate limited to a person, and the heirs of his body, so long as another person or persons named shall live, cannot be devised.

As to the persons who may make wills:—

The seventh section enacts, that no will made by any person under the age of twenty-one years shall be valid. Under the old law, an infant of the age of fourteen years, if a male, or of twelve years if a female, could make a valid will of personalty, although not of realty. Infants could also by will execute powers simply collateral, i.e., not coupled with an interest, and appoint guardians of their children.

At common law, idiots, lunatics (except during lucid intervals), persons imbecile from disease, old age, or drunkenness, are incapable of making a will. One who is born deaf and dumb is presumed by the law to be an idiot; but such presumption may be rebutted; and if it can be proved that he understands the nature of the act, and desires to make a will, he may declare his will by signs and tokens. In the case of a blind testator, it is necessary to prove his knowledge and approval of the contents of the will he has executed. Wills made under mistake, or obtained by fraud, or by undue influence, are inoperative. See MISTAKE; FRAUD; UNDUE INFLUENCE.

The disabilities under which aliens were according to the old law, have now been removed by the 33 Vict. c. 14, which gives to aliens the same capacity for the acquisition, holding, and disposal of real and personal property, as British subjects enjoy. See EXECUTION OF WILLS, and PUBLICATION.

By section eight, no will made by any married woman shall be valid, except such a will as might have been made by a married woman before the passing of the Act; but this section is impliedly repealed by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. See MARRIED WOMEN'S PROPERTY.

3rdly. As to how wills are to be executed: The fourteenth section enacts, that if any person, who shall attest the execution of a will, shall, at the time of the execution, or at any time afterwards, be incompetent to be admitted a witness to prove the execution thereof, such will shall not on that account be invalid.

The fifteenth section enacts, that if any person who shall attest the execution of any will, to whom or to whose wife or husband any beneficial devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift, or appointment, of or affecting any real or personal estate (other than and except charges and directions for the payment of any debt or debts), shall be thereby given or made, such devise, etc., shall, so far only as concerns such person attesting the execution of such will, or the wife or husband of such person, or any person claiming under such person or wife or husband, be utterly null and void, and such person, so attesting, shall be admitted as a witness to prove the execution of such will, or to prove the validity or invalidity thereof, notwithstanding such devise, etc.

The sixteenth section enacts, that in case by any will any real or personal estate shall be charged with any debt or debts, and any creditor, or the wife or husband of any creditor whose debt is so charged, shall attest the execution of such will, such creditor shall be admitted a witness to prove the execution of such will, or to prove the validity or invalidity thereof.

The seventeenth section enacts, that no person shall, on account of his being an executor of a will, be incompetent to be admitted a witness to prove the execution of such will, or a witness to prove the validity or invalidity thereof.

The ninth section enacts, 'that no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned; (that is to say) it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the testator or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time, and such witnesses shall attest and shall subscribe the will in the presence of the testator; but no form of attestation shall be necessary.' See further EXECUTION OF WILLS.

The eleventh section excepts from the rule that all wills must be in writing, wills of personal estate made by soldiers in actual military service, or seamen at sea. This exception includes military and naval officers of all ranks.

Nuncupative wills were formerly valid; but the Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3) laid them under many restrictions (except when made by soldiers and sailors), of which Blackstone gives the following summary: 'The statute enacts: (1) That no written will shall be revoked or altered by a subsequent nuncupative one, except the same be in the lifetime of the testator reduced to writing and read over to him, and approved, and unless the same be proved to have been so done by the oaths of three witnesses at the least, who by statute 4 & 5 Anne c. 16, must be such as are admissible upon trials at common law. (2) That no nuncupative will shall in any wise be good where the estate bequeathed exceeds 30*l.*, unless proved by three such witnesses present at the making thereof (the Roman law requiring seven), and unless they or some of them were specially required to bear witness thereto by the testator himself, and unless it was made in his last sickness in his own habitation or dwelling-house, or where he had been previously resident ten days at the least, except he be surprised with sickness, on a journey, or from home, and dies without returning to his dwelling. (3) That no nuncupative will shall be proved till fourteen days after the death of the testator, nor till process hath first issued to call in the widow or next of kin to contest it, if they think proper. Thus hath the legislature provided against any frauds in setting up nuncupative wills, by so numerous a train of requisites, that the thing itself has fallen into disuse, and is hardly ever heard of, but in the only instance where favour ought to be shown to it, when the testator is surprised by sudden and violent sickness.'—2 Bl. Com. 500.

Before the passing of the Wills Act, no solemnities of any kind were necessary to make a valid will of personal estate. The signature and attestation required by the Statute of Frauds to render valid a devise of lands were not essential to the validity of wills of personalty. We have already mentioned the restrictions placed upon the making of nuncupative wills. It was not necessary that a will in writing should be either signed or sealed by the testator, whether it was in his own handwriting or in that of another man. As to wills of realty, it was enacted by 22 Car. II. c. 3 (Statute of Frauds), that all devises of lands and tenements should not only be in writing, but should also be signed by the party so devising the same, or by some other person in his presence and by his express direction, and should be witnessed and subscribed, in the presence of the person devising, by three or more credible witnesses, or else the devise should be entirely void, and the land should descend to the heir-at-law.

With regard to the revocation of wills, it is enacted by the eighteenth section, 'that every will made by a man or woman shall be revoked by his or her marriage, except a will made in exercise of a power of appointment, when the real or personal estate thereby appointed would not, in default of such appointment, pass to his or her heir, customary heir, executor, or administrator, or the person entitled as his or her next of kin under the Statute of Distributions'; by the nineteenth section, 'that no will shall be revoked by any presumption of an intention on the ground of an alteration in circumstances'; by the twentieth section, 'that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, shall be revoked otherwise than as aforesaid, or by another will or codicil executed in the manner hereinbefore required, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same, and executed in the manner in which a will is hereinbefore required to be executed, or by the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction, with the intention of revoking the same'; and by the twenty-third section, 'that no conveyance or other act made or done subsequently to the execution of a will of or relating to any real or personal estate therein comprised, except an act by which such will shall be revoked as aforesaid, shall prevent the operation of the will with respect to such estate or interest in such real or personal estate as the testator shall have power to dispose of by will at the time of his death.'

Under the old law wills might be revoked either expressly or by implication. An implied revocation might be effected by a change of circumstances, such as the marriage of the testator and the birth of a child capable of benefiting by the revocation, or by alterations of or attempted dealings with the property; but the presumption of revocation which arose from such change of circumstances was capable of being rebutted by evidence of an intention to adhere to the will. Wills were also revoked by destruction, cancellation, etc., with intention to revoke.

The twenty-first section relates to obliterations, interlineations, and other alterations in wills, and enacts, 'that no obliteration, interlineation, or other alteration made in any will after the execution thereof shall be valid or have any effect except so far as the words or effect of the will before such alteration shall not be apparent, unless such alteration shall be executed in like manner as hereinbefore is required for the execution of the will, but the will with such alteration as part thereof shall be deemed to be duly executed if the signature of the testator and the subscription of the witnesses be made in the margin or on some other part of the will opposite or near to such alteration, or at the foot or end of or opposite to a memorandum referring to such alteration, and written at the end of some other part of the will.'

With regard to the revival of a revoked will, provided for by the twenty-second section, see REPUBLICATION OF WILLS.

4thly. As to the Construction of Wills :—

As to the time from which a will speaks, the twenty-fourth section enacts, 'that every will shall be construed, with reference to the real estate and personal estate comprised in it, to speak and take effect as if it had been executed immediately before the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will.'

Formerly a will spoke and took effect as to personal property from the date of the death of the testator, except where specific legacies were given, and as to freehold property from the date of the will.

No alteration is made by the twenty-fourth section in the old rules of construction with regard to the persons to whom property is given by will; those rules are that legacies and bequests to persons named or described in the will speak and take effect as to such persons from the date of the execution, but legacies and bequests to classes of persons speak and take effect as to such classes from the date of the death of the testator, unless a contrary intention appear.

As a general rule, gifts to persons fail by their death in the testator's lifetime, notwithstanding a declaration that they shall not lapse, but to this rule there are the following exceptions :—In the case of gifts in joint-tenancy to several, of whom one at least survives the testator; in the case of a gift to a person in tail, or quasi in tail, who leaves issue who would be inheritable under such entail surviving the testator; and also in the case of a gift of an absolute or transmissible interest to a child or other issue of the testator, who leaves issue surviving the testator. The question then occurs, for whose benefit do such gifts lapse? A share in the residue lapses according to the nature of the property for the benefit of the real or personal representatives of the testator. A specific gift lapses for the benefit of the residuary devisee or legatee (ss. 25, 32, & 33). Under the old law, a specific gift of freehold or copyhold estate lapsed for the benefit of the heir, but a mere charge on the land lapsed for the benefit of the residuary or specific devisee of that land; a specific gift of personalty lapsed for the benefit of the residuary legatee. See LAPSED DEVISE and LAPSED LEGACY.

As to the expressions necessary to execute a general power, the twenty-seventh section enacts, that a devise or bequest in general terms, of real or personal property, shall be construed to include any property, coming within the description, which the testator may have power to appoint in any manner he may think proper, unless a contrary intention shall appear. Under the old law it was necessary that such a devise or bequest should refer either to the power or to the specific property which was the subject of it, in order that it might have that effect.

As to the devise of a fee, the twenty-eighth section enacts, 'that where any real estate shall be devised to any person without any words of limitation, such devise shall be construed to pass the fee-simple, or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will.' Under the old law only a life estate passed, unless words were used to show an intention to pass the fee.

A general bequest of personalty, including leaseholds, without words of limitation, passed the whole interest before the Wills Act, which has made no alteration in this rule.

The twenty-ninth section enacts, 'that in any devise or bequest of real or personal estate, the words "die without issue," or "die without leaving issue," or "have no issue," or any other words which may import either a want or failure of issue of any person in his lifetime or at the time of his death, or an indefinite failure of his issue, shall be construed to mean a want or failure of issue in the lifetime or at the time of the death of such person, and not an indefinite failure of his issue, unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, by reason of such person having a prior estate-tail, or of a preceding gift, being, without any implication arising from such words, a limitation of an estate-tail to such person, or issue, or otherwise; provided, that this act shall not extend to cases where such words as aforesaid import if no issue described in a preceding gift shall be born, or if there shall be no issue who shall live to attain the age, or otherwise answer the description required for obtaining a vested estate, by a preceding gift to such issue.' The construction of this section is that such words mean a failure of issue at the death of the ancestor named, unless a contrary intention appear; whereas, under the old law, they meant an indefinite failure of issue, unless expressions or circumstances indicated a contrary intention.

As to the estate of trustees under a general devise the thirtieth section enacts, that 'where any real estate (other than or not being a presentation to a church) shall be devised to any trustee or executor, such devise shall be construed to pass the fee-simple or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate, unless a definite term of years, absolute or determinable, or an estate of freehold, shall thereby be given to him expressly or by implication.'

The thirty-first section enacts, that 'where any real estate shall be devised to a trustee, without any express limitation of the estate to be taken by such trustee, and the beneficial interest in such real estate, or in the surplus rents and profits thereof, shall not be given to any person for life, or such beneficial interest shall be given to any person for life, but the purposes of the trust may continue beyond the life of such person, such devise shall be construed to vest in such trustee the fee-simple, or other the whole legal estate which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate, and not an estate determinable when the purposes of the trust shall be satisfied.'

It will have been remarked how very nearly the conditions or postulates necessary to bring these two clauses into operation are identical. They differ but in these four respects. The first clause embraces all real estates, except presentations, the second contains no such exception. The first extends to devises to executors, the second does not, though this is a nominal difference. The first permits implied limitations to prevent its operation, the second does not. The second does not apply where the beneficial interest is given to a person for life, and the trustee has no duty which may extend beyond the life of that person; the first does apply to such a case, being irrespective of all trusts, except such as may raise an implication of estate against it. But what do they effect when in action? They give the fee to the trustee, while, under the old state of things, such an estate passed as was commensurate with the trusts.

Will, Estate at. This estate entitles the grantee or lessee to the possession of land during the pleasure of both the grantor and himself, yet it creates no sure or durable right, and is bounded by no definite limits as to duration. It must be at the reciprocal will of both parties (for if it be at the will of the lessor only, it is a lease for life), and the dissent of either determines it. The grantee cannot transfer the estate to another, although after he has entered into possession he may accept a release of the inheritance from the grantor, for there exists a privity between them. It must end at the death of either party, for death deprives a person of the power of having any will. If a lessee for years accept an estate at will in the property leased, his term of years would in law be surrendered.

An estate at will is created either by the stipulation or express agreement of the parties, or by construction of law.

The Statute of Frauds (29 Car. II. c. 3, s. 1), enacts that a lease by parol for a longer term than three years, shall have the force and effect of an estate at will only.

A tenant-at-will is entitled to emblements where his estate is determined by the lessor or by his death, and his personal representatives are entitled to them where the estate is determined by his own death; but if the lessee forfeit or determine the estate himself he is not then entitled to them. It is to be remarked that a tenant from year to year has not the same advantage if his tenancy expire before the harvest, as he must yield up possession at the regular expiration of the notice to quit without any reference to the then state of the crops. He is not bound to maintain or repair the premises, but is liable for wilful waste.

We have seen that either party may determine this estate. The lessor can do so by an express declaration that the lessee shall hold no longer, which should either be made on the land or notice of it served upon the lessee. But if he exercise any right of ownership, unless it be with the lessee's consent, inconsistent with the enjoyment of the estate, as entering upon the land, cutting down trees demised, making a transfer or lease for years to commence immediately, the estate will be determined. So also if the lessee commit an act of desertion or do anything inconsistent with his estate, as assigning it to another person or committing waste; but a verbal declaration that he will hold the lands no longer does not determine his estate unless he at the same time waive possession. Neither party can determine this estate at a time when it would be beneficial to the other, and six months' notice must be given before bringing an action of ejectment.

If a tenant-at-will rendering rent quarterly determine his will in the middle of a quarter he must pay a quarter's rent.

If the lessor determine his estate, the lessee shall have reasonable ingress and egress to take away his goods and chattels. This is simply common justice. See Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant.

Wite [Sax.], a punishment, pain, penalty, mulct, or criminal fine.—Cowel.

The Wite was a penalty paid to the Crown by a murderer. The were was the fine a murderer had to pay to the family or relatives of the deceased, and the wite was the fine paid to the magistrate who presided over the district where the murder was perpetrated. Thus, the wite was the satisfaction to be rendered to the community for the public wrong which had been committed, as the were was to the family for their private injury.—Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Dict.

Witekdēn, a taxation of the West Saxons, imposed by the public council of the kingdom.

Witena-gemot, or Wittena-gemote [fr. witta, Sax., a wise man, a gemot, a synod or council, conventus, sapientum, Lat.], a convention or general assembly of great and wise men to advise and assist the sovereign in the time of the Saxons, answering to our parliament.—2 Hallam's Middle Ages, c. viii., pt. 1, 279. See FOLK MOTE, and PARLIAMENT.

Witens, the chiefs of the Saxon lords or thanes, their nobles and wise men.

Withdrawal of juror, when a jury cannot agree upon a verdict, one of them is often withdrawn by consent of the litigants, so as to put an end to the proceedings, each party paying his own costs.—Chit. Arch. Prac., 12th ed., i. 408, ii. 1383, 1386.

Withernam [fr. wieder, Sax., other, and naam, a taking], reprisals. See LETTERS OF MARQUE; REPLEVIN; CAPIAS IN WITHERNAM.

Withersake, an apostate, or perfidious renegade.—Cowel.

Without impeachment of waste. See ABSQUE IMPETITIONE VASTI.

Without prejudice, a phrase used in negotiations of compromise, or offers to settle differences causa pacis, in order to guard against any waiver of right should they be ineffectual and go off.

Without recourse to me [sans recours], a phrase used by an agent who endorses a bill or note for his principal, which protects him from liability.—Byles on Bills, 10th ed., 38, 152.

Without reserve. When property is thus announced to be sold, a puffer ought not to be appointed.—St. Leon. V. & P. 8.

Witness, one who gives evidence in a cause.

A witness must attend in court according to the requirement of his subpoena. If he has not been paid his lawful expenses, he may refuse to be sworn; but if he be once sworn, he must give his evidence. See OATH and AFFIRMATION.

A witness is not obliged to answer any question which tends to criminate him.

On the application of either party, all the witnesses on both sides are ordered to leave the court until called; and each is only called when his evidence is actually required. If a witness who has been ordered out of court remains, it is a contempt, if wilful, and may be treated as such; but his evidence is not rejected. Each witness remains in court after he has given his evidence, and is expected not to communicate with those outside.

But every party to the cause is entitled to be present throughout; though he be about to give evidence. The application is made either before the opening of the case, or before the first witness is called.

A witness cannot leave the precincts of the court without leave after the evidence on his side is over, nor even when the judge has begun to sum up, for any witness may at the discretion of the judge be recalled at any time before the verdict is given. See especially EVIDENCE; and see also SUBPŒNA; VOIR DIRE; SECONDARY EVIDENCE; PERJURY; TRIAL; CONTEMPT; VIATICUM. As to witnesses to character, see CHARACTER.

Wittena-gemote. See WITENA-GEMOT.

Wold [Sax.], a down or open country.—Cowel.

Wolfeshead, or Wolferhefod [Sax.], the condition of such as were outlawed in the time of the Saxons, who if they could not be taken alive to be brought to justice might be slain, and their heads brought to the king; for they were no more accounted of than a wolf's head.—Bract, 1, 3.

Woman [A. S., wif-man, man being a general term to include each sex, the name wif-man was given to the female from her employment at the woof.—Rich. Dict.], the female of human kind. By 13 & 14 Vict. c. 21, s. 4, which applies to all acts of parliament passed in subsequent sessions, words importing the masculine gender shall include females unless the contrary is expressly provided. As to employment of women in factories, see Factory and Workshop Act, 1878; and 35 & 36 Vict. cc. 76 & 77, as to employment in Coal and Metalliferous Mines; and Agricultural Gangs Act, 1867, 30 & 31 Vict. c. 130, s. 4, as to employment in Agricultural Gangs. A woman may be elected to the office of sexton (Olive v. Ingram, 7 Mod. 263); or governor of a workhouse (Anon. 2 Lord Raym., 1014); or overseer (R. v. Stubbs, 2 T. R. 395); or guardian of the poor; and she may be a member of a school board; she is also entitled, if unmarried (Reg. v. Harrauld, L. R. 7, Q. B. 361), to vote at municipal elections (Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 50, s. 63, replacing the repealed 32 & 33 Vict. c. 55, s. 9), but not at elections for members of parliament.—Chorlton v. Lings, L. R., 4 C. P. 374.

As to the professions, qualifications for registration under the Medical Act may be granted without distinction of sex by 39 & 40 Vict. c. 41, and a woman may practise as a conveyancer, but not, it is conceived, as a barrister or solicitor.

Wong [Sax.], a field—Spelman.

Wood-corn, a certain quantity of grain paid by the tenants of some manors to the lord for the liberty to pick up dried or broken wood.—Cowel.

Wood-geld, the cutting of wood within the forest, or rather the money paid for the same.—Cowel.

Woodmote, the forty-days' court, which see.

Wood-Plea-Court, a court held twice in the year in the forest of Clun in Shropshire, for determining all matters of wood and agistments.—Cowel.

Woodwards, officers of the forest, whose duty consists in looking after the wood and vert and venison, and preventing offences relating to the same.—Manw. 189.

Woolmer Forest, as to disafforesting it, see 18 & 19 Vict. c. 46. See also as to leasing, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 16; and as to timber, 52 Geo. III. c. 71, and 18 & 19 Vict. c. 46.

Woolsack, the seat of the Lord Chancellor in the House of Lords. When, in the reign of Elizabeth, an Act of Parliament was passed to prevent the exportation of wool, to keep in mind this source of our national wealth, woolsacks were placed in the House of Lords, whereon the judges sat.

Wort, or Worth [fr. weorth, Sax.], a curtilage or country farm.

Worthing of land, a certain quantity of land so called in the manor of Kingsland in Hereford; the tenants are called worthies.

Worts (export of).—29 & 30 Vict. c. 64.

Wound, any lesion of the body, whether cut, bruise, contusion, fracture, dislocation, or burn. In surgery it is confined to a solution of continuity in any part of the body suddenly caused by anything that cuts or tears with a division of the skin.

The judicial questions which arise in cases of wounding (which is an aggravated species of battery) where death ensues are:—How far has the person who caused the injury contributed to the death of the deceased, or to the lesion of the functions of the body? And to what is a certain wound to be referred? Circumstances as well as accident have a considerable effect on wounds:—(1) The constitution and age of the patient, and his antecedent as well as co-existent maladies may exercise a baneful influence on the injury received. (2) The passions of the patient, and his negligence or delay, or that of his attendants, may render slight wounds dangerous, or dangerous wounds mortal. (3) Insalubrity of the atmosphere. (4) The ignorance or negligence of the surgeon may aggravate or endanger the condition of a wounded patient.—Beck's Med. Jur. c. xv. See MAYHEM; and Steph. Com., 7th ed., iii. 373; iv. 81.

Wreccum maris significat illa bona quæ naufragio ad terram pelluntur.—(A wreck of the sea signifies those goods which are driven to shore from a shipwreck).

Wreck, such goods as after a shipwreck are cast upon the land by the sea, and left there within some county, for they are not wrecks as long as they remain at sea in the jurisdiction of the Admiralty.—2 Inst. 167. If any live thing escape, or if proof can be made of the property of any of the goods or lading, which come to shore, they shall not be forfeited to the Crown as wreck. The sheriff of the county is bound to keep the goods a year and a day, that if any man can prove a property in them, either in his own right or by right of representation, they shall be restored to him without delay; but if no such property be proved within that time, they shall then go the Crown. If the goods be of a perishable nature, the sheriff may sell them, and the money shall be liable in their stead.—1 Bl. Com. 292; Stat. West. 1st, 3 Edw. I. c. 4. And see 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, pt. viii., ss. 432—457, 471—479, 500; 17 & 18 Vict. c. 120; 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91, ss. 19, 20; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 10, s. 9; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63, ss. 49, 53; 27 & 28 Vict. cc. 24, 25; 1 Br. & Had. Com., 361—65; and Steph. Com., 7th ed., ii. 544—45, and iv. 124.

This revenue of wrecks is frequently granted to lords of manors as a royal franchise. It is a branch of the coroner's office to inquire concerning shipwrecks and certify whether there has been a wreck or not, and who is in possession of the goods.

The offence of plundering or stealing any part of vessels wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or any goods, etc., belonging to such vessel, is a felony (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 64). Persons in possession of shipwrecked goods, who cannot satisfy a justice that they came by them lawfully, may be imprisoned or forfeit 20*l.* beyond the value (s. 65). A similar punishment is attached to the offence of offering or exposing shipwrecked goods for sale which have been, or shall reasonably be suspected to have been taken from the wreck, if the person offering or exposing them do not satisfy a justice that he came by them lawfully (s. 66). The offence of unlawfully and maliciously destroying any part of a wreck, or any goods, etc., belonging to it, is a felony (24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 49).

As to impeding a person saving his own or another's life from a wreck, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 17. As to assaulting a magistrate, officer, etc., engaged in preserving a wreck or goods cast on shore, see s. 37 of that Act.

The Removal of Wrecks Act, 1877, 40 & 41 Vict. c. 16, gives power to harbour and conservancy authorities to remove wrecks obstructing navigation.

Wreck-free, exemption from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels, which the Cinque Ports enjoy by a charter of Edward I.

Writ [fr. breve, Lat.], a judicial process, by which any one is summoned as an offender; a legal instrument to enforce obedience to the orders and sentences of the courts. For the particular writs see their distinctive names, as assistance, capias, etc.

Yard [fr. geard, Sax.], an enclosed space of ground, generally attached to a dwelling-house, etc.; also a measure of three feet, or thirty-six inches in length.

Yarland [virgata terræ, Lat.], a quantity of land differing in extent in different parts of the country.—Cowel.

Year [fr. gear, Sax.], the period in which the revolution of the earth round the sun is completed. Generally, when a statute speaks of a year, it must be considered as twelve calendar and not lunar months.—Bishop of Peterborough v. Catesby, Cro. Jac. 166.

The year is either astronomical, ecclesiastical, or regnal, beginning on the 1st of January, or Advent Sunday, or the day of the Queen's accession, respectively.—Dug. Chron. Jur. Pref. 2. See CALENDAR.

The division of the year into term and vacation has been the joint work of the Church and necessity. The cultivation of the earth was deemed to require a time of leisure from all attendance on civil affairs; and the laws of the Church had, at various times, assigned certain seasons of the year to an observance of religious peace, during which time all legal strife was strictly interdicted. What remained of the year not disposed of in this manner, was allowed for the administration of justice. The Anglo-Saxons had been governed by these two reasons, in distinguishing the periods of vacation and term; the latter they called dies pacis regis; the former dies pacis Dei et sanctæ ecclesiæ. The usages of the Saxons were adhered to by the Normans.—1 Reeves, c. iv., p. 191. See TERM.

Year-books, or Books of years and terms, reports, in a regular series, from the time of King Edward II. to Henry VIII. which were taken by the prothonotaries or chief scribes of the courts, at the expense of the Crown, and published annually; hence their denomination. The year-books are rather curious from their antiquity than valuable for their contents, which are undigested and loosely revised.—Hale's Hist., p. 198; 2 Reeves, 357; 4 Ibid., 414. See REPORTS.

Year and day [annus et dies, Lat.], a time that determines a right or works a prescription, etc., in many cases; e.g., unless a party die of a stroke inflicted within a year and a day, it is not killing by the striker.—Russell on Crimes, 5th ed., p. 673.

Year, Day, and Waste [annus, dies, et vastum, Lat.], a part of the royal prerogative, whereby the Crown had, for a year and a day, the profits of lands and tenements of those that were attainted of petit treason or felony, whosoever was lord of the manor whereto the lands or tenements belonged; and the right to cause waste to be made on the tenements by destroying the houses, ploughing up the meadows and pastures, rooting up the woods etc. (unless the lord of the fee agreed for the redemption of such waste), afterwards restoring them to the lord of the fee.—Staund. Prærog. 44. This prerogative was abolished by the 54 Geo. III. c. 145. See ESCHEAT.

Year to year, Tenancy from.

This estate arises either expressly, as when land is let from year to year, or by a general parol demise, without any determinate interest, but reserving the payment of an annual rent; or impliedly, as when property is occupied generally under a rent payable yearly, half-yearly, or quarterly; or when a tenant holds over, after the expiration of his term, without having entered into any new contract, and pays rent (before which he is tenant on sufferance).

A demise by a tenant from year to year to another, also to hold from year to year, is in legal operation a demise from year to year during the continuance of the original demise to the intermediate landlord. When a tenant goes into possession of property under a void lease, a tenancy from year to year is created, by entry and payment of rent.

If a mortgagee accept a person as his tenant to whom the mortgagor has granted a lease for years after the mortgage, that makes him only tenant from year to year to the mortgagee.

This tenancy consists, in the first instance, of a certain term of one year, which, upon the expiration of the first half-year, unless notice be given by one of the parties to the other of his contrary intention, becomes an equally assured term of two years, reckoning from the commencement of the tenancy, and thus a new year is continually added to the term, as often as the half-year's previous notice, which would secure its expiration, is omitted to be given. In short, a tenancy from year to year is considered as re-commencing every year.

The distinction taken between a tenant from year to year, and a tenant for a term of years, is rather a distinction in words than in substance, for they both possess the same advantages, the estates partaking of nearly the same attributes.

The qualities that distinguish it from proper terms for years, and from estates at will, are that it may now be raised by construction of law alone, instead of an estate at will in every instance where a possession is taken with the consent of the legal owner, and where an annual rent has been paid, but without there having been any conveyance or agreement conferring a legal interest; and that, whether it arises from express agreement, or by implication of law, it may, unless surrendered or determined by a regular notice to quit, subsist for an indefinite period, if the estate of the lessor will allow of it, or for the whole term of his estate, where it is of a limited duration, unaffected by the death either of the lessor or lessee, or by a conveyance of their estate by either of them; and the assigns, or real or personal representatives, of the former, according to the quantity of his estate, and the assignee, or personal representatives, of the latter, still continue the tenancy upon the original terms, and subject to the same conditions which the law, or the express agreement of the parties, has attached to it. But it is liable at any time to be determined by a notice to quit, from either party, which, where there is no agreement, or where the agreement is silent on that point, must be at least half a year's (not merely six months'), or where the Agricultural Holding Act applies, one year's notice to give up possession at the expiration of the year, computing from the time when the tenancy commenced. A parol notice is sufficient, unless the agreement requires it to be in writing (per Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in Doe v. Crick, 5 Esp. N. P. C. 197); but for the sake of evidence it is always advisable to give a written notice. And where the commencement of the tenancy is not known, and the lessor cannot, from the objection of the tenant to the notice, or any other cause, avail himself of the periods of the payment of the rent as presumptive evidence of the commencement of it, a notice from him requiring the tenant to quit, at the expiration of the current year of the tenancy, which shall expire next after the end of half a year from the date of the notice, will be sufficient. But it seems advisable in such a case to give the notice on one of the quarter days on which the rent is payable, and not to bring an ejectment before the expiration of a year and a quarter from the date of the notice, in order to be certain that the year of tenancy has expired.

The incidents of this estate are these:—

(1) The owner may assign or underlet the property unless expressly restricted.

(2) He is entitled to emblements when his estate ends by the happening of an uncertain event over which he has no control.

(3) He is liable for injuries arising from voluntary negligence.

(4) He is bound to fair and tenantable, but not to substantial and lasting, repairs.
